The Tryals of ROBERT CHARNOCK, EDWARD KING, and THOMAS KEYES, at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily.

Die Mercurii 11° Martii, 1695. Anno Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii, Octavo.

Publiſhed by AUTHORITY.

THIS Day the Tryals of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, who were Indicted at Hicks's Hall on this Day ſevenight, upon a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer for High Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King by a barbarous Aſſaſſination, in order to further and aſſiſt an Invaſion into this Kingdom from France, and Subverſion of the Government, were proceeded upon in Manner following.

After opening of the Court, at which were preſent a great many of the Nobility, Members of Parliament, aud other Perſons of Quality, the Petty Jury returned by the Sheriff of Middleſex to try the Priſoners, were all call'd over, being in number above Eight-ſcore, and conſiſting of Baronets, Knights, Eſquires, and Gentlemen, and the Appearances of thoſe who anſwered to the Call were Recorded; and Six of the Judges, viz. The Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Juſtice Nevill, Mr. Juſtice Powell, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby, being upon the Bench, the Priſoners were called for to the Bar, and there Arraigned upon the ſaid Indictments.

Clerk of Arraignments. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand: (Which he did.) Edward King, hold up thy Hand: (Which he did.) Thomas Keyes, hold up thy Hand: (Which he did.) You ſtand Indicted in the County of Middleſex by the Names of Robert Charnock, late of the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes in the County of Middleſex, Gent. Edward King of the ſaid Pariſh and County, Gent. and Thomas Keyes of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman, for that You the Fear of GOD in your Hearts not having, nor the Duty of your Allegiance weighing, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of GOD, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. your Supreme, True, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord, the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of Our Lord the King that now is, towards him Our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh intending and contriving, and with all your Strength purpoſing, deſigning and conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England under him Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is of Right happily and duly Eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change and alter; as alſo Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring, his Faithful Subjects and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England into intolerable and miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King to ſubdue and ſubject, the 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe, deſign and intend Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to Slay, Kill, and Mur-

Murder, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Faithful Subjects of Our Lord the King throughout this whole Kingdom of England to make and cauſe. And the ſame moſt abominable, wicked and deviliſh Treaſons and traiterous Contrivances, Intentions and Purpoſes of yours aforeſaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, you the ſaid Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, and very many others, falſe Traytors to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſaid 10th Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, clandeſtinely, traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, &c. did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent and agree our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King by lying in wait, to Aſſaſſinate, Kill and Murder: And that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing the ſooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day, Year and Place laſt mentioned, traiterouſly did treat, propoſe, and conſult of the Ways, Manner and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what Manner Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait the more eaſily you ſhould Kill, and did conſent, agree and aſſent, that Forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, of you the ſaid Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, and the ſaid other Traitors unknown, and others by them to be hired, procured and paid, with Guns, Carbines and Piſtols with Gun-Powder and leaden Bullets charged, and with Swords and other Arms armed, ſhould lie in Wait, and be in Ambuſh, Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King in his Coach being when he ſhould go abroad to ſet upon, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed upon the Guards of Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King then and there attending upon him, and being with him, ſhould attack, and ſhould overcome and ſubdue them, whilſt others of the ſaid Men ſo armed Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ſhould Aſſaſſinate, Kill, Slay and Murder: And alſo that You the ſaid Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, your Treaſons and Traiterous Intentions, Deſigns and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, and fully to bring to Effect afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid at the Pariſh aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, warlike Matters, and military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly and traiterouſly did Obtain and Buy, Collect and Procure, and cauſe to be Bought, Obtained, Collected and Procured with that Intention, the ſame in and about the deteſtable, horrid and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing and Murdering of Our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, as aforeſaid, to be Uſed, Employed and Beſtowed againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of Our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as alſo againſt the Form of the Statutes in ſuch Caſes made and provided.

How ſay you Robert Charnock, are you Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted or not Guilty?

Charnock. My Lord, I deſire, I may have a Copy of this Indictment; that I may adviſe with Council upon it before I plead.

* Lord Chief Juſtice Holt.

* L. C. J. Pray Mr. Charnock, will you ſpeak out, that we may hear what you ſay.

Charnock. My Lord, I find here is a very bad Crime that is laid to my Charge; I deſire that I may have a Copy of the Indictment, to adviſe with Council upon. And that I may have Council to aſſiſt me in my Tryal, and to direct me, who am an ignorant Man in theſe Matters, how to manage my ſelf according to the New Act made this Seſſions of Parliament, for regulating Tryals in Caſes of High Treaſon.

L. C. J. Have you not had Council already to adviſe and direct you, Mr. Charnock?

Char. My Lord, I had Notice on Wedneſday that I ſhould be tried this Day, and it was Saturday laſt before I could get my Council to come to me.

L. C. J. And what did your Council adviſe you? Did they tell you, you were to have a Copy of your Indictment, by virtue of the late Act of Parliament?

Char. My Lord, though the Act does not take force as to ſome things till the 25th of this Month, yet the Equity of that Act, it being now reduced into a Law, is conceived to reach to Caſes of the like Nature before the 25th, and I deſire the Act may be read.

L. C. J. You ſhall have it read if you will, but of what Avail or Benefit it will be to you I cannot tell; for you your ſelf take Notice that it is an Act of Parliament made this Seſſion, and is not to take Effect until the 25th of this Month. You now here ſtand indicted before the 25th, and for a Treaſon committed before, and therefore you can't claim, nor have any Benefit or Advantage by this Act; but you are to be proceeded againſt according to the Law before, and the Practice uſed in all Proceedings againſt other Perſons in your Circumſtances. And it is the known Practice and received for Law, in all Times before this New Act was made, That no Copy of an Indictment for High Treaſon ſhould be granted, nor Council aſſigned, or permitted to aſſiſt the Priſoner in making his Defence: True it is, a Copy of the Indictment has been often deſired, but as true that it has as often been denied Char. My Lord, the Equity of this Act (it being now an Act of Parliament) is now in force, as much before the 25th of this Month as after.

L. C. J. Equity is nothing in theſe Caſes: You are here tried by the Law, and we are bound to go in all ſuch Caſes according to the Rules of Law, and are not to be guided by any equitable Conſideration, further than the Law it ſelf does allow us.

Char. But, my Lord, the Ground of that Act which is the Reaſonableneſs and Equity that all Priſoners ſhould be made capable of fairly defending themſelves is now in force, I ſay: And I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will look upon it to be reaſonable that I ſhould have the Benefit of that Equity.

L. C. J. I tell you we are not here in a Court of Equity, but muſt proceed according to the Rules of Law; and the Law you now ſpeak of does not yet commence.

Char. My Lord, I am informed, for I am very ignorant in theſe Matters my ſelf, that there is nothing that I now deſire which is contained in this Act, but what was Law before the making of this Act, though the Practice may have been otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Then I muſt tell you, Mr. Charnock, you have been very much miſinformed; for if all

all that is contained in this Act of Parliament that you mention was Common-Law before, there would have been no Occaſion for the making a new Act of Parliament.

Char. My Lord, I do not ſay that all Things in this Act of Parliament were Law before, becauſe there are ſeveral Things in it that have not been Law before. But, my Lord, there are ſeveral Things beſides; and particularly thoſe two Things which I now deſire, a Copy of the Indictment and Council to aſſiſt me, were things that were agreeable to Law before; and I muſt take the liberty to appeal to a Judge that I ſee upon the Bench, my Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, as to his own Opinion, and deſire he would pleaſe to declare whether formerly in a Conference between the Lords and the Commons he did not deliver his Opinion, That it was the Common Law, that a Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment and Council to aſſiſt him.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, you had beſt to apply your ſelf to him for his Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray Sir, What is your Queſtion you would ask me?

Char. My Lord, I am here for my Life, and muſt take all the Advantages that I can; I am here Arraigned for a very grievous Offence, I deſire I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and Council to aſſiſt me in my Defence. Here is an Act of Parliament, out of the Equity of which I apprehend, I ought to have ſome Advantage; for I am informed that what I deſire was Common Law before the making of the Act; and particularly that your Lordſhip's Opinion in a Conference between the two Houſes was, that the Priſoner ought to have thoſe Advantages by the Common-Law.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, Sir, I take your Queſtion to be this; You would have my Opinion to be declared, That this Act which was lately paſs'd for regulating Tryals in Caſes of High Treaſon, and all the Particulars in that Act were Common-Law before.

Char. No, My Lord, I do not ſay that all the Particulars in the Act were Common Law before.

L. C. J. Treby. Then pray, Sir, name your Particulars, and I will endeavour to give you an Anſwer.

Char. My Lord, the Particulars that I do ask are theſe, Firſt, that I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and Council to adviſe me, becauſe it is a grievous Crime I ſtand here accuſed of, and that I may have them to aſſiſt me at my Tryal in Court: This I do inſiſt upon from the Equity of the Act of Parliament, and your Lordſhip's Opinion at the Conference that it was Common Law before.

L. C. J. Treby. As to my Opinion about the having a Copy or Council, I do not think or believe, that I ever ſaid that it was Common Law.

Char. My Lord, I beg your Pardon; I was informed your Lordſhip had delivered ſuch an Opinion, at a Conference between the Lords and the Commons: But I deſire the Aſſiſtance of Council, becauſe I my ſelf am ignorant of the Law; and particularly as to this Point, whether I am not entitled to the Equity of this Act of Parliament; for it now having paſs'd both Houſes of Parliament, and had the Royal Aſſent, it is a good Law; and though it be to take its Commencement on the 25th of this Month, yet that which is the Law of all Laws, the Reaſon and Equity of it is, and always will be the ſame.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Charnock, that does not follow, that becauſe the Wiſdom of the Law-makers has thought it to be equitable de futuro, therefore it ſhould be Law now; which as I told you before, is the Rule that we are to go by; it is Equity and Juſtice, that the Proceedings be according to this Act of Parliament, from and after the 25th of this Month; but it is not Juſtice that ſuch Proceedings ſhould be till then, becauſe not according to Law.

Char. My Lord, the Ground of all Laws is Equity, and certainly it cannot be Equity, that a Priſoner ſhould make his Defence againſt an Accuſation in Writing, without having a Copy of it.

L. C. J. The time of the Court muſt not be ſpent in this Manner, you have been already told, that by Law you are not to have a Copy of the Indictment; but you are to plead without having any Copy; for there is no Law now in being that allows the giving of ſuch a Copy, and 'tis but a ſhort Queſtion that you are asked in Order to your Tryal; viz. Are you Guilty or not Guilty?

Char. My Lord, it is impoſſible for me to go to Tryal preſently, and without the Aſſiſtance of my Council.

L. C. J. Why, had you not Notice of your Tryal?

Char. My Lord, I confeſs, I had notice upon Wedneſday laſt.

L. C. J. Had you not your Council with you ſince that?

Char. Yes, my Lord, I had on Saturday laſt; but from that time I have not been able to prepare my ſelf, as I think I ought; and I cannot conceive but that I ſhould have the Aſſiſtance of ſome Council to direct me in my Tryal; for here is a very great Crime, and hainous Charge laid againſt me in this Indictment, and I am very ignorant in all Law Proceedings.

L. C. J. It is very reaſonable that there ſhould be convenient Notice given to all Perſons in your Circumſtances; and truly this Day Sevenight, is a very convenient Notice; eſpecially you having had, by your own Confeſſion and Acknowledgment, Council with you in the mean time.

Charnock. But, my Lord, what is the Advantage of having Notice, if one have not Privilege of Pen, Ink and Paper, and one's Council and Friends coming to them, and Privacy without the preſence of the Jaylor.

L. C. J. What ſay you that are of the King's Council, Was there Council allow'd to come to them?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, there was Order given that their own Council that they deſired ſhould come to them. Sir Thomas Trevor.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, as ſoon as ever they deſired Council there was an Order for it, and left with the Jaylor, that he ſhould permit the Council to come to them and be with them in private.

L. C. J. Then though you had not your Council come to you till Saturday, it was your own Fault, for you had an Order for Council, as ſoon as you deſired it; and even from Saturday, is a reaſon-able Time enough to prepare for anſwering the Queſtion, whether Guilty or not Guilty.

Char. I ſuppoſe Mr. Bale is in Court, who gave notice on Wedneſday, and I acknowledge he came upon the Thurſday, and asked if I would have any Body come to me; and he took then the Names of the Council that I deſired might come to me; and told me he would carry them to Mr. Attorney General, and ſee what his Opinion was of them; I ſuppoſe he did ſo: For upon Friday he came again, and brought me an Order for it; but when that Order was brought, the Council that was deſired was not to be had, or at leaſt with very great Difficulty, becauſe it was the time of the Aſſizes, or very near it, and Council were gone or going out of Town; ſo that we could not have the Advantage of the Order for Council.

L. C. J. Look you Sir, We think you have had convenient Notice, with Liberty of conſulting whom you had a mind to; if you have neglected your Opportunity of conſulting them, you muſt blame your ſelf, and no Body elſe; we muſt go on according to Law.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they had the Liberty of naming their own Council, and the Names were brought to me, and as ſoon as ever they were ſo brought, thoſe that were named had Leave to go to the Priſon to them, and they had a further Order than the firſt, which was, that their Friends ſhould be permitted to come to them; but that was not, as it was not convenient to be, in private; but the other Order was, that the Council ſhould ſpeak with them in private, and not in the Preſence of the Jaylor.

L. C. J. Pray hear what Mr. Attorney ſays, that your Council was ordered to be with you in private.

Char. But there was no Order, my Lord, for my Sollicitor to be with me in the abſence of the Jaylor, who is the only proper Perſon for the conſulting with, and for going about to ſummon the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. We think you have had convenient Notice, and all the Allowances that can be in ſuch a Caſe. Ask him to plead.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Charnock, Are you Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or not Guilty?

Char. My Lord, I hope you will give me ſome more Time to get my Witneſſes, that are now abſent; ſeveral of them are Ten Miles out of Town; and therefore, I would beg your Lordſhip to give me ſome time.

L. C. J. Why, is Ten Miles ſuch a Diſtance, that you could not have your Witneſſes between this Day Seven-night and this Day? but beſides, Mr. Charnock, what you now urge is out of time, you ſpeak too ſoon to put off the Tryal, for there can be no Tryal till Iſſue joined; and that cannot be till Plea pleaded.

Char. My Lord, I was never inſtructed in Querks of Law, nor bred up to the Law; and I hope your Lordſhips will take care that I be not hurt for Want of Knowledge in the Forms of Law.

L. C. J. You may aſſure your ſelf, Mr. Charnock, you ſhall not be hurt by your Ignorance in the Law: All the Harm you will receive will be for having done contrary to the Law, and there is none of your Council, if they have been faithful to you, but muſt tell you the ſame Things that we tell you now.

Char. My Lord, if I am to have no Council, I muſt deſire that the Court would be pleaſed to take the greater Care of me: For, as I have been informed, that was the Reaſon of the Practice of denying Council, that the Court ſhould be of Council for the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Mr. Hardeſty, ask him whether he be Guilty or not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Charnock, Are you Guilty, or not Guilty?

Char. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how will you be Try'd?

Char. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance. Edward King, How ſay you, Are you Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or not Guilty?

King. My Lord, I beg the ſame Favour that Mr. Charnock has done, that I may have ſome more time to prepare for my Tryal, and a Copy of the Indictment, and Council aſſigned.

L. C. J. But you hear what has been ſaid to Mr. Charnock upon thoſe Points, and the ſame Rule that was given in his Caſe, you muſt expect will be in your Caſe.

Cl. of Ar. What ſay you, Are you Guilty or not Guilty?

King. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be Try'd?

King. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee good Deliverance. Thomas Keyes, are you Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon or not Guilty?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Council at all.

L. C. J. But you might have had if you would; you had an Order for it as well as the others.

Keyes. My Lord, I was a Servant to Captain Porter, I was not able to Fee any Council.

L. C. J. But you can tell whether you are Guilty or not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Art thou Guilty or not Guilty?

Keyes. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tryed?

Keyes. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Charnock. My Lord, I deſire I may have the Favour of Pen, Ink and Paper, upon my Tryal.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you ſhall have it; and if you have a mind to it, you ſhall have the Indictment read to you in Latin.

Char. My Lord, my Ignorance in Forms of Law made me not ask that before, becauſe I did not know whether I ſhould properly ask it or not: And I do not know whether I ſhould ask it properly now.

L. C. J. Yes, it is a very proper time to ask it, and you ſhall have it, if you have a mind to it.

Char. My Lord, I do really deſire it, if it be a proper time for me to have it.

L. C. J. Read the Indictment in Latin.

Char. And now my Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe that I ſhall have Pen, Ink, and Paper, that I may make the beſt Obſervations I can, ſince I cannot have a Copy.

Char. What Word was that last, Sir?

Cl. of Ar. Murdrare.

Char. That is an odd Word, I can't understand what it means.

L. C. J. It is a Term of Art, the Signification of it is to Murder: ——Go on Mr. Hardesly.

Char. My Lord, I desire the Indictment may be read again, for there is so great a Noise in the Court, and that Gentleman has not the most perfect delivery; he is more used to Law Latin than to any other. But I beg I may have it read again, that I may as perfectly as I can understand it.

The Indictment was read again in Latin.

L. C. J. Look ye, you that are the Prisoners, every one of you has the Liberty to Challenge 35 of those that are returned to serve upon the Jury, that is to try you, without shewing any Cause; now if you will all joyn in the same Challenge, then we can Try you all together, as ye are altogether jointly in the Indictment; and save the Time and Trouble that will otherwise be unavoidable. But if you will not joyn in the same Challenge, but every Man challenge for himself, as by Law he has Liberty to do, we must be forced to try you single, and therefore we would know of you, whether you design to joyn in your Challenge or not.

Char. My Lord, I hope the Court will give me leave to have my Sollicitor by me during my Tryal, that I may be instructed in some Measure how to manage my self, and when it is proper for me to speak, and what.

L. C. J. No, we can order no such Thing, you must speak for your self.

Char. My Lord, I am Ignorant of the Methods of Law, and may make a great many Mistakes and Slips, and omit what may be material to be observed for my Defence, and therefore shall the more need a Friend or Sollicitor to be by me, to mind me of it.

L. C. J. No, we cannot direct any such Thing by Law. What say you as to your Challenges?

Char. As to the Jury, I had not a Copy of the Pannel till Yesterday, and I have been informed, that it is usual to have a Copy of the Pannel Ten Days before the Tryal; they are Gentlemen that I have no Knowledge of, nor can come at any Account of their Qualifications, so as to make proper Challenges.

L. C. J. You have the same Priviledge that is ordinarily given to Persons in your Condition.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was Order given for a Copy of the Pannel to be delivered.

L. C. J. That was not of Right, but of Favour; and it is a Practice that has of late obtained; but for what you talk of 10 Days, that never was in any Caſe, nor is it practicable; you have the ſame Favour ſhewn you, that all other Priſoners have, and you can expect no more: But you do not anſwer the Queſtion, whether you will joyn in your Challenges or not.

Char. It is an indifferent Thing to me my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you agree to it, Mr. King?

King. My Lord, I do not well underſtand it, I am ready to do any Thing I ſhould.

L. C. J. What ſay you Keys?

Keys. My Lord, I have had no Council at all, to adviſe me about any Thing.

L. C. J. I tell you what the Law is in ſuch Caſes; You may every Man of you Challenge 35 peremptorily without Cauſe, but if you do not all agree in the ſame Challenges, ye cannot be tryed together by the ſame Jury: But the Court muſt ſeparate you, and try you every one ſingle.

Char. My Lord, I have got a Copy of the Pannel, if theſe Gentlemen that are by me do agree to joyn in the Challenge, I am very well content; it is indifferent to me.

L. C. J. Do you underſtand what is ſaid to you, Mr. King, and Mr. Keys? Every one of you may without ſhewing any Cauſe, except againſt 35 of thoſe that are returned of the Jury, which are to try you, if you have no Mind that thoſe ſhould be Sworn; but then if each of you do ſeverally Challenge 35, ye cannot be tried by the ſame Jury.

Char. I hope, my Lord, if I do Challenge, as I do not know how I ſhall be enabled without knowing their Qualifications, the Court will put me in mind when I come near the Number, that my challenging may not injure me; becauſe I am ignorant in the Law, and perhaps may ſlip in point of Number; and therefore, I would beg that your Lordſhips would allow me a Sollicitor to aſſiſt me, and put me in Mind, that I may not run into Errors.

L. C. J. You have been told over and over, that we cannot do that, the Court will take care that you be informed in Time, that you do not exceed in challenging a greater Number than you ought: What ſay you, Mr. King? Do you agree that one ſhall make challenges for you all?

King. I do agree, that whatſoever Exception Mr. Charnock makes, I will abide by.

Char. My Lord, I cannot but think it hard, that I have not either Council or Sollicitor; my Council that I had are out of Town.

L. C. J. Why, was there no Council but thoſe that are gone the Circuit?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he had Order firſt for one Council and then for another, and whomſoever he named he had Order for.

L. C. J. If you will chuſe none but thoſe you cannot have, that is your own Fault; You Mr. Keys, will you joyn in the Challenge?

Keyes. Yes, with all my Heart.

Cl. of Ar. Then you the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Tryal of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Then thoſe of the Pannel that had appear'd were called, and the Priſoners challeng'd 33. And the Names of thoſe that were Sworn are as follows.

Samuel Harwer,	Simon Smith,
Jonas Morley,	Thomas Dunck,
Anthony Nurſe,	Richard Heath,
Jaſper Hodgsden,	John Mills,
William Farnborough,	James Ketwitch and
William Bird,	Chriſtopher Redknap.

Then Proclamation for Information, and the Witneſſes appearing, was made in uſual Form.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand, (which he did;) Edward King, hold up thy Hand, (which he did;) Thomas Keys, hold up thy Hand, (which he did;) You Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Cauſe; They ſtand Indicted by the Names of, &c. (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis) ——— And againſt the Form of the Statutes in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty, and for their Tryal have put themſelves upon God and their Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to Enquire of them, and every of them, whether they be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof they ſtand Indicted, in manner and form as they ſtand Indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had, at the Time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince. If you find them, or any of them Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether they fled for it; if you find that they, or any of them fled for it, you are to inquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them Guilty; if you find them not Guilty, nor that they did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury; The Record that has been now read unto you, is an Indictment of High Treaſon, which charges the Three Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keys, with a Traiterous Conſpiracy, and Deſign to Subvert the Government of this Kingdom, and to Murder the King, and to bring the Subjects and Freemen of this Kingdom into Slavery and Subjection to the French King; and to this End the Indictment ſets forth; That upon the Tenth of February laſt, and divers other Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes, in the County of Middleſex, theſe Three Priſoners at the Bar, with divers other Traytors unknown, did Conſult and Agree, to Aſſaſſinate the Perſon of Our Sovereign Lord the King, as he was riding in his Coach; and did likewiſe agree, that Forty Horſemen of which they themſelves were to be Part of the Number, ſhould lye in Ambuſh, and ſet upon the King, ſo being in his Coach, and upon the Guards that were to attend him: And it likewiſe Charges them with buying Horſes and Arms, for the Execution of this Wicked and Villainous Intention; to this they have pleaded Not Guilty. we ſhall call our Witneſſes and prove this Matter upon them; and then we doubt not, but you Gentlemen will do Juſtice according to your Evidence.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe Gentlemen at the Bar ſtand Indicted for a moſt Horrid and Barbarous Conſpiracy, to Aſſaſſinate, and Murder his Majeſty's Royal Perſon; Gentlemen, this Aſſaſſination was to be ſeconded with an Invaſion from France, where Troops lay ready at Calais, as ſoon as the diſmal Stroke was given, to have Landed upon our Coaſts; which if it had taken effect, we had not only ſuffered that moſt unſpeakable Loſs of the King, but it would have made an End of all our Liberties and Laws at once.

Gentlemen, This Offence in its Nature, is ſo Horrid and Barbarous, that as it needs no Aggravation, ſo it is incapable of having any, by any Words that can be uſed; for the very Naming of an Aſſaſſination of a King, carries ſuch Horror and Deteſtation in its ſelf, to all honeſt People, that it is impoſſible to aggravate it by any Expreſſions that can be uſed about it. But there is this peculiar Conſideration to be had, by all Engliſh Men, who love their Country, that this deſigned Aſſaſſination upon the Perſon of His Preſent Majeſty, was to take away the Life of a King, who every Body knows firſt ventured his own Life, to reſtore our Religion, Laws and Liberties, when they were juſt Expiring under the Oppreſſion of Popery and Tyranny. And as he ventured his Life firſt to Reſtore 'em; ſo he has ſince upon all Occaſions, with the utmoſt Hazard, expoſed His Royal Perſon to the moſt imminent Dangers, for the preſerving and maintaining our Religion, Laws and Liberties, againſt the Power and Violence of the Common Enemy; this Conſideration to all true Engliſh Men muſt have a very great Weight, and create the greateſt Horror and Deteſtation, both of the barbarous Deſign, and of all thoſe who had any Concern or Hand in it, to attempt upon the Life, not only of a King, but of ſuch a King.

Gentlemen, when you hear the Evidence that we ſhall offer to you, to prove this bloody Conſpiracy againſt theſe Priſoners, I doubt not but that there will be enough, and more than enough, to ſatisfie all true hearted Engliſh Subjects, and all People that have a Deſire to preſerve our Conſtitution and Government, in what Danger we and our Poſterity were of being utterly ruined, and involved in a Common Deſtruction. I ſhall not detain you longer with any Diſcourſe about the Hainouſneſs of this Offence, becauſe every Man's own Thoughts cannot but ſuggeſt to him, how diſmal the Conſequences muſt have been, if ſo fatal a Stroak had been given.

But, Gentlemen, I muſt crave Leave to take up ſo much of your Time as to open how this Bloody Execrable Conſpiracy was firſt framed, and afterwards carried on by the Priſoners at the Bar, together with others, till it was very near putting in Execution, had not the infinite Mercy of God prevented it, by a timely Diſcovery.

Gentlemen, this Conſpiracy was firſt framed and conſulted upon the laſt Year; there were ſeveral Conſultations and Meetings, at ſeveral Places about the Town, for this purpoſe; then and at thoſe Conſultations and Meetings, there were preſent Captain Porter, the Priſoners, and others of whom you will have an account from the Witneſſes; and at that Time they had an Expectation of Commiſſions from the late King, to Authorize the Deſign; that not coming, they yet reſolved to put it in Execution before the King went away. But becauſe the French Troops were then not in a readineſs to come over hither, to protect them, after the Execution of their bloody Deſign, it was neceſſary for them to fly thither for ſhelter; and therefore they endeavoured to procure a Veſſel to be ready to carry them over to France. But they could not get a Veſſel time enough; and then the King's going over into Flanders quickly after, prevented the Execution of the Deſign for that Time, and ſo Matters reſted till the King's Return.

About Two or Three Months ago, Sir George Barcley, who is an Officer in the late King James's Guards in France; and ſome other Officers, with Sixteen or Eighteen Troopers in thoſe Guards, privately came over from France to put this Deſign in Execution; and he did acquaint Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock with the Deſign, knowing that they had been engaged in the Matter before, and ſo could not but expect that they would readily aſſiſt. This Deſign was treated and conſulted of between 'em, at ſeveral Times, and in ſeveral Places, at Captain Porter's, and Mr. Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-ſtreet; at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Nags-head Tavern at St. James's, and ſeveral other Places; ſeveral Conſultations and Meetings were had between the Priſoners at the Bar, and others, whom you will hear named at theſe Meetings; ſeveral Ways and Methods were propoſed, how it ſhould be beſt effected; it was propoſed by ſome, that it ſhould be done by Ambuſcade, that ſhould be laid near the King's Houſe at Richmond, ſuch a number on Foot were to lye in the Wood, there ready to Attack the King as he came by, and the reſt of the Conſpirators at the ſame Time to fall on the Guards. But this Method was not ſo well approved of, as that which was afterwards propoſed and agreed to: That is, there were to be three Parties of them, and the Place was the Lane, lying between Brentford and Turnham-Green, at the end next Turnham-Green, which the King uſed to paſs through, upon his return from Richmond; The Order and Method of the Deſign was this; Sir George Barcley, with Eight or Ten more was to attack the Coach, and by forcing into it, to have killed the King, and all in it, and the reſt were to attack the Guards, in two Parties, on each ſide of the Lane, whereof Mr. Charnock and Porter were to command one, and Brigadeer Rookwood the other. In order to ſee how feiſible this Deſign might be, the Priſoner King, Captain Porter, and Knightly, were to go and ſurvey the Place; and the next Day after that Conſultation, they went to view the Ground, and did very carefully do it, both on this ſide the Water, and on the other ſide the Water; and they came back and met the reſt of the Company at the Nagg's-Head Tavern late at Night, to give an Account what they had done in order to this Enterpriſe. It was agreed the Number ſhould be about Forty; Sir George Barcley was to make up about Twenty, Mr. Charnock was to furniſh Eight, Captain Porter Seven, and ſo in other Proportions, in all to make up the Number of Forty; which they thought were enough to effect and accompliſh the Deſign.

In order to make this Matter the more ſure, they did appoint Two to lodge and wait at Kenſington, near the Guards; who were to give notice, when the King went abroad: And they had their ſeveral Perſons aſſigned to whom they ſhould give notice, who thereupon were to ſend Orders to the ſeveral Parties; one of which was

Chambers, who was to give Notice to the Priſoner at the Bar Mr. Charnock, and there was one Durance, who was to give Notice to Sir George Barcley; and when ſuch Notice was given, then they were to ſend Orders to the ſeveral Perſons, who were to be concerned in this bloody Buſineſs, to come at the time appointed, to be diſpoſed of into their ſeveral Poſts.

Gentlemen, in order to the furthering of this Deſign, they did likewiſe ſend Durance to go and view, and give them an Account of the moſt convenient Inns at Brentford, and Turnham-Green, and the Places adjacent; which were leaſt lyable to Obſervation, where the Men might be the moſt conveniently diſpoſed of, to lie ready againſt the time, when they were to execute this barbarous Aſſaſſination; accordingly he went, and took an Account of the ſeveral Inns within that Compaſs, and they were to be Billeted by Two or Three in an Inn, ſo as not to be obſerv'd; Sir George Barcley and his Party at Turnham-Green, and the reſt at Brentford.

Gentlemen, after they had thus laid the Deſign, Saturday the 15th of February was the firſt Time pitched upon for the putting it in Execution, if the King went abroad, as he uſed to do, upon Saturdays, to Richmond to Hunt; and if they had notice from Durance and Chambers, that he was ſo to do, which notice they had; and every thing was prepared in Order to have perpetrated this villainous Deſign; but it happened that the King went not abroad that Day, of which they had notice about Noon from Chambers to Charnock, and Charnock ſent Word ſo to Porter's Lodgings, and then the Order for their getting together was countermanded, and the Note, by which Charnock ſent Word, was ſubſcrib'd with the Name of Robinſon; which you will hear is a Name he goes by, as well as by that of Charnock.

Thus they were diſappointed at that time, but they were not diſcouraged from purſuing this inhumane Enterprize; but reſolved to go on the next Opportunity that ſhould be given. And to omit ſeveral Things that intervened, which the Witneſſes will give you an Account of, on the Friday following they met again, to have every thing ready againſt the next Day, which was Saturday the 22d of February; when they expected the King would go abroad, as he uſually did on that Day of the Week; and that Meeting was at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and there were preſent Captain Porter, Sir William Perkins, Sir George Barcley and Mr. Charnock; and at that time there was a Diſcourſe amongſt them about the Diſappointment, which they had had the Week before, and ſome of them had a Jealouſy that a Diſcovery had been made of their Deſign: But then upon further Conſideration, They concluded, if it had been ſo, they ſhould not have met there, but ſhould have been taken up: And therefore they concluded the King's ſtaying at Home that Day was but Accidental, and ſo reſolved to put their Conſpiracy in Execution the next Day.

While they were there, ſeveral Perſons for whom Captain Porter had undertaken, that is, one Cranborne, Kenrick, and Keyes, the Priſoner at the Bar, came to Porter; theſe were carried into a nother Room, and Commanded all to be ready the next Day, when it was reſolved to put the Aſſaſſination in Execution: And then Captain Porter asked Kenrick for Sherborne, who it ſeems had been undertaken for; but it was anſwer'd, That he asked ſo many Queſtions about the Matter, that he did not think fit to truſt him.

The next Morning they met again at Captain Porter's Lodgings; and there met, as the Witneſſes will tell you, amongſt others, Mr. Pendergraſs, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. King; King brought a Meſſage to Captain Porter from Sir George Barcley, to know the Names of thoſe that were concerned, and upon that Meſſage Captain Porter writ down the Names of his Men, who were for his Quota, and ſent the Liſt by Cranborne to Mr. Charnock, to add his Liſt to it of the Men he was to have under him; Cranborne afterwards came back, and brought the Liſt that Captain Porter ſent, with the additional Liſt ſent by Mr. Charnock, written with his own Hand, and ſubſcribed R. C. and Cranborne told them that Chambers had ſent Word, that the King would go out that Morning: At the hearing of which there was very much Joy amongſt them; for they hoped then their wicked Deſign would be put in Execution that Day. There was a Diſcourſe then likewiſe, that Porter had a Piece which carried Six Bullets; and this, it was ordered, ſhould be put into the Hands of Pendergraſs, who was to be one of Sir George Barcley's Men to attack and fire into the King's Coach.

This was upon Saturday the 22d of February, when they had News that the King was to go abroad, and every Thing was to be put in Execution at his Return from Richmond. From Captain Porter's Lodgings they went to the Blue Poſts in Spring Garden; but about 12 a Clock there came News from Chambers, one of the orderly Men at Kenſington, that the King did not go abroad that Day: This put them into a very great Confuſion, they then thought ſome Diſcovery muſt needs be made becauſe of the Diſappointment two Saturdays together; and Keys, the Priſoner at the Bar, came up and told them, that the Guards were all come back in a Foam, and the King's Coaches were brought back to the Meuſe: And this confirmed them in their former Jealouſy that the Matter was diſcovered; upon which Captain Porter, Mr. Pendergraſs and Mr. Keyes went together to lye hid ſome time; but they ſaid they would ſend Keyes to Mr. Charnock, to let him know where they might be heard of; and if the matter was not diſcovered they would ſtill go on to put it in Execution: But they could not part without drinking ſome Trayterous Healths, which the Witneſſes will tell you of, to the Reſtoring of the late King and his Queen, and the Prince of Wales; and after all, one of the Company taking an Orange in his Hand, began a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange; and in this Manner it was drunk by all of them before they parted, tho' they were under the Apprehenſion at that time of being diſcovered already.

This is the Beginning and Progreſs of the ſeveral Conſultations that were had for the Carrying on this execrable Trayterous Conſpiracy. I have opened it ſhortly to you, but you will hear it much fuller in its ſeveral Parts by the Witneſſes. By what I have opened, you cannot but obſerve, that it was very near coming to be executed, if there had not been a Diſcovery of it time enough, thro' the Providence of Almighty God, to prevent it. They had agreed, after the intended Aſſaſſination to keep together, till they came near the Town, and then they were to lie hid till the French Troops landed, which they were assured of were ready upon the least Intimatioh of the Success of this Conspiracy.

Gentlemen, every Body may guess at the dismal Consequences that would have follow'd, had this bloody Design taken Effect; and I am sure, as we and our Posterity could not have expected any thing less than the perpetual Yoke and Burden of Slavery and Popery, if it had pleased God to permit this Conspiracy to take effect; so I hope we shall always remember the merciful Hand of Providence, that has detected and disappointed it.

Gentlemen, I shall not detain you any longer; I have opened unto you Part of that which will more fully be made out by the Witnesses; only I would observe, that the Providence of God has not only made a Discovery to prevent the Execution of this abominable Villany, but hath brought this Conspiracy so far to light, by such unquestionable Testimony, that no Man can doubt of the Reality of it, which I hope will raise in every honest Man's Mind an Abhorrence and Detestation of those Principles, upon which so villanous and barbarous a Design was founded; and I think I may say, that after the Evidence you will hear this Day, no one will pretend any Doubt of the Truth thereof, but either such as are sorry for the Discovery, or such as knew too much of the Conspiracy before. I shall trouble you no further, but call our Witnesses, who will give you a clear and full Account of this Conspiracy. Swear Captain Porter. (Which was done.)

Mr. Soll. Gen. Captain Porter, I would not lead you with any Question, but pray will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know concerning any Conspiracy about assassinating the King, and when it was to be done, and where, and how, and by whom; and particularly what relates as to that Matter to the Prisoners at the Bar.

Charnock. My Lord, there are two Things that I must beg of the Court, in Relation to the Witnesses that are to be produced, and the Evidence that is to be given against me at this time: And the first is, That before any of the Witnesses give any Evidence against me, the rest that are to be sworn and produced, may be kept out of Court, till they that are called have severally given their Evidence, that one may not hear what the other says; That I suppose is but reasonable in a Case of this nature, and what was never denied, but always allow'd, as I have been informed.

L. C. J. There is but one Witness sworn, and I believe, that there are none of the rest here.

Char. Yes, my Lord, here is one Gentleman in Court whom I suppose to be an Evidence, and that is Mr. De la Rue.

L. C. J. If there be any others of the Witnesses let them withdraw till they be called for; let there be some Body to look after them and attend them. (Which was accordingly done.)

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, you have your Desire as to this matter, all the rest of the Witnesses are withdrawn.

Char. My Lord, there is another Thing that I have to beg of the Court, and that is, in relation to the Evidence in general, That if there be any Thing prov'd to be spoken in company, and talked of by Way of common Discourse, or only in jollity in ordinary Conversation, that may not be interpreted as a Proof of any settled Design or Practice.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, who can tell what the Evidence will be until it be given; you will hear what is deposed by the Witnesses, and you have Pen and Ink, and may make such Observations as you think fit: When the Witnesses are heard, you will have all the Advantage that can be allowed you, and you may then propose your Objections to the Matter of their Evidence; which, no doubt, will have their just weight with the Court: In the mean Time, have you any Exception to this Man's being a Witness? If you have no Exception against him, then he must give his Evidence; and after he has delivered himself, and the King's Council have done with him, you are at Liberty to ask him what Questions you think fit.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Captain Porter, I desire you will acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of any Conspiracy to take away the Life of his Majesty, when it began, in what Manner it was carried on, how far it proceeded, how it came to be disappointed, who were concerned in it, and what relates to the Prisoners at the Bar, as to their Share therein.

Capt. Porter. My Lord I am unfortunately ingaged in this Matter, and have made a frank Discovery, to make the King all the Atonement I can, for having been concerned in such a Design. Some Weeks before this Conspiracy for Assassinating the King was in hand, there came to my Lodging———

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, I would not interrupt you, but to put it into a Method, and order of Time, will you please to recollect your self, and give the Court and the Jury an Account of your Knowledge about the first Beginning of this Conspiracy the last Year; I would not lead you, and therefore I ask you the general, and no particular Question.

Charnock. My Lord, I suppose that any Question about what was done the last Year is not at all to the purpose in this Case, for there is nothing mentioned in the Indictment of the last Year.

L. C. J. It is in the Indictment diverse Days and Times, as well before as after.

Charnock. The Crime for which we are accused is laid to be the 10th Day of February, 1695.

L. C. J. The Day is not material, but only a Circumstance, but in Form some Day before the Indictment preferred must be laid; and tho' the Day mentioned in the Indictment is the 10th of February, yet it is also said, that the Things contained in the Indictment, of which you are accused, were done likewise at diverse Days and Times, as well before as after, and so the Indictment comprehends even what might be done the last Year as well as this.

Charnock. I beg the Favour of the Court in this Matter, for sure the 10th of February last can no way be supposed to be in the last Year.

L. C. J. I told you before, the Day is not material, nor are the Witnesses nor the King's Council tyed up either to the particular Time or Place, mentioned in the Indictment, so it be within the County, and before the Indictment preferred. All that is to be regarded is, that no Evidence be given or admitted of any other Species of Treason, but what is contained in the Indictment; for a Man may certainly be indicted for a Treason committed this Year, and upon his Tryal Evidence may be given of the same Treason committed the Year before.

Charnock. But then how can a Man prepare for his Defence?

Mr. Att. Gen. The Time is but a Circumſtance, it may certainly be proved at another Day than what is laid in the Indictment, and yet very good Proof; and ſo it is in all other Caſes, as well Civil as Criminal.

Charnock. Mr. Attorney General has ſaid enough I think to confute himſelf; for if one Year may be put in the Indictment, and another Year brought in in the Evidence, how ſhall any Man be able to apply himſelf to his Defence, whoſe Thoughts run only upon the Time laid in the Indictment. I hope neither the Court nor the King's Council will come ſo hard upon us, as to put our Thoughts quite out of all Order, that when we apprehend we are only to defend our ſelves againſt what is ſaid to be done this Year, we muſt afreſh prepare our ſelves to anſwer what was done the laſt Year.

L. C. J. It is always ſo; for Form ſake, there is a particular Time laid in the Indictment, but the Proof is not to be tyed up to that Time; but if it be proved at any Time before or after, ſo it be before the Indictment preferred, it is well enough. And not without great Reaſon, for the Treaſon conſiſting in imagining and compaſſing the King's Death, which may be manifeſted by diverſe Overt Acts, ſome before, ſome on, and others ſince, the Tenth of February, yet they are Evidences of one Treaſon, which is the Compaſſing the King's Death.

Char. Then we may be under an Obligation to give an Account of all the Tranſactions of our Lives, if that be the Rule.

L. C. J. No, not ſo neither, for that very Treaſon aſſign'd in the Indictment muſt be proved, and therefore you are only to give an Anſwer to that, and nothing elſe.

Char. But, my Lord, it may give a great Looſe, and much hinder our Defence; for as it is now deſired that Proof may be given of what was done laſt Year, at the ſame Rate, the (as well before and after) may ſignify ſeven Years ago.

L. C. J. And ſo it may if your Conſpiracy reach'd ſo far, or did then begin, and was afterwards purſued, this is not any Thing that is unuſual, but the Common Law is plain in it. Well, what ſay you, Mr. Porter?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I will give you an Account, if your Lordſhip pleaſeth, of what was done this Year; and if any Queſtions afterwards be thought fit by the King's Council to be now asked me, about what paſſed before, I will anſwer them very readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then go on your own way, we will reſerve our ſelves till afterwards.

Capt. Porter. Some Weeks before this Deſign was on Foot, for aſſaſſinating the King, Sir William Perkins, when he was in Town, was at the ſame Place where Mr. Charnock and I did lodge; it was about the latter End of January: He asked Mr. Charnock where he would be at Night; and I told them, if they were not about private Buſineſs, I would meet them. He told me, there were ſome Friends come from France, and that ſomething was a doing that would be for the Service of the King: I told them, if any Thing of that Nature was a doing, I would readily engage in it; and they told me I ſhould know it very ſoon. A little after I fell Sick of the Gout, and could not ſtir from my Chamber: Bnt then Mr. Charnock did acquaint me that Sr. George Barcley, and thoſe that came from France, had brought a Commiſſion to raiſe and levy War upon the Perſon of King William, and he asked me how many I could bring to joyn with them, if the King landed; I deſired to conſider of it, and he told me Sr. George Barcley would come to him about it. Accordingly, he and Holmes came to the Houſe where we lodged, in Norfolke-ſtreet, and there they were in private with Mr. Charnock, and afterwards, becauſe I was lame, and could not ſtir, they came into my Room, and Sr. George Barcley, told me he was glad to ſee me in good Health, but ſorry to find me Lame, but he hoped to ſee me abroad in a little Time; and I told him, I hoped ſo too. They ſaid they were going then to ſome Company, and they hoped to ſee me afterwards. After that there were ſeveral Meetings that we had, particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Naggs-Head at St. James-Street, and the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and in all theſe Places we did conſult together, which was the beſt Way, and where was the beſt Place to Aſſaſſinate the King, when he came from Hunting. Sr. George Barcley told us he had ſome Money to buy Horſes, but not much, he had as much as would furniſh about Forty. Capt. Charnock ſaid, he would bring ſix or ſeven Men, that ſhould come out of the Country, Sr. William Perkins ſaid he would lend five Horſes, three to be mounted by Men of his own, the other two by ſuch as ſhould be provided. I promiſed to bring ſeven Men with Horſes, and Sr. George Barcley ſaid, that Lowick and others that came over with him from France, would engage in the Deſign, and make up the Number. I deſired very much to ſee the Commiſſion that came from the late King, and asked Mr. Charnock about it, he ſaid he never ſaw it, but Sr. William Perkins told me, he had ſeen it, and that it was all writ with King James his own hand, and ſigned by himſelf. All this was agreed to, and then there were Conſultations in what Method it was to be done. Several Propoſals there were; one was to ſet upon him as he came from Richmond by the Road, others when he was upon Horſeback at Cue. Sr. George Barcley was for having it done by Ambuſcade in the Park by Richmond, and therefore deſired me to go with Mr. Knightly, and view the ſeveral Places and Ground there abouts, to find out which was the moſt convenient Place. The Day before we were to go, Capt. King came to me, and would know if we were to go about ſuch a Matter, and proffered to go with us. I told him I had never a Horſe, but he ſaid, he would get one. We went that Night to the Swan at Knights-Bridge, and there we lay, and went the next Day to view the Ground, and came the next Evening to the Company, to give an Account, what we had done; and upon the Account that we gave, Sr. George Barcley's Mind was altered, and it was agreed to do it in the Lane coming from Branford to Turnham Green, and the particular Manner was agreed on too. There was one Rookwood that was to command one Party of Sr. George Barcley's Men to attack the Guard; he told us, he had bought twenty Horſes which were to be employed in this Expedition; they were to be divided in three Parties, and Sr. George Barcley was to have four out of each of the other Parties, and to ſeize upon the King's Coach, and to Shoot into it, and kill the King, and all thoſe that were with him:

And

And this was to be done on the 15th of February, which was a Saturday, and the King uſually went to Richmond on Saturdays. We had two Orderly Men (as they were called) who were to lie at Kenſington, to give Intelligence, when the King and the Guards went out, the one was Chambers, and the other one Durant, a Flemming, I think, or I do not well know what Country-man he was; and Durant was to bring an Account when the Guard went out, and Chambers when the King went out, and when we had Notice that the King was gone, we were to go by 3. or 4. in a Party to prevent Suſpicion, and we were to be diſperſed in the ſeveral Inns about Brentford and Turnham Green. Sir George Barcley was to be at the King of Bohemia's Head; and we ordered a Man to give Notice to him when the King landed, and then he was to give Notice to us, and ſo we were to form our ſelves into our ſeveral Bodies, to take our ſeveral Poſts as were agreed upon. I asked him what he thought to do when the Matter was over, how we ſhould diſpoſe of our ſelves? He told me, we need not fear any Thing, but might go to Town and lie ſtill, and that there would come a ſufficient number from abroad ready to aſſiſt us. That 4. or 5000 French were to divert in Scotland, and the King would be near the French Shore with a ſufficient Army. On Friday before the 22*d*, when it was to have been executed again, we met at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand; and there diſcourſed, for a Matter of half an Hour, about the former Diſappointment, and ſeveral in the Company were afraid the Deſign was diſcovered; but then I told them, if it had been ſo, ſure we ſhould have been taken up before now; upon which it was agreed, then let us reſolve upon it again to Morrow, and ſo it was reſolved upon. Cap. Charnock ſaid, he could not ſtay, becauſe he ſhould want ſome Men that were come up out of the Country on purpoſe. I ſaid, I was afraid my Horſes were Sick, and could not be uſed in the Service. And Sir William Perkins thereupon undertook to furniſh me, and told Mr. Charnock and me he had ſent to Mr. Lewis that belongs to the Earl of Feverſham, to procure ſome, having, as he ſaid, promiſed ſo to do. I ſent the next Morning to have a Note for two, by Mr. Cranburne and he ſent me a Note back again by Cranburne, that he had ſent to Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Lewis ſaid, he would help him to three Horſes, with Saddles, Holſters and Piſtols, and deſired the Liſt of my Men, which I ſent him, and he ſent it me back again with the Liſt of his own, and then I ſhewed it to Mr. De la Rue, and we were preparing all Things for the Execution of this Deſign, and preſently after News came, that the King did not go out that Day neither; upon which I ſaid I would go out of Town, and I asked Cap. Pendergraſs to go with me, and we ſent Keys to bring Linnen unto us, but he did not come until the Wedneſday, and upon the Thurſday we were taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, you mention ſeveral Conſultations, at ſeveral Times and Places; who were preſent at any, and which of them? were any of the Priſoners at the Bar there, and which?

Capt. Porter. There was Mr. Charnock, and Mr. King, at all of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you ſay about Keys? What was he?

Capt. Porter. He was my Servant a Year and a Half.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he acquainted with the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. Porter. Yes he was, and was preſent at moſt of the Conſultations. He hired Horſes for me to be imployed in the Buſineſs. On the firſt Saturday he hired two, I gave him Money for them, and did know upon what Account they were hired.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he preſent when News was brought of the Diſappointment?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was both Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are ſure he was preſent then?

Capt. Porter. Yes, the ſecond Time he ſaid, that he met the King's Guards that were come back all in a Foam, and that he had ſpoke to one of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, and that ſomething was mutter'd upon which he feared a Diſcovery.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Keyes agree to be one of the Men, that ſhould be concerned and Act in this Buſineſs?

Capt. Porter. Yes, He did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Quality is he of? What is his Profeſſion?

Capt. Porter. He uſed formerly to help to dreſs me, and he was to look after my Linnen and Equipage.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he not been a Trumpeter? Was not that his Profeſſion?

Capt. Porter. He was a Trumpeter, and uſed ſometimes to entertain us with his Trumpet.

Mr. Conyers. You ſpeak of a Meeting at the Sun Tavern in the Strand upon Friday, the 21 of February, where it was reſolved to execute this Attempt upon the next Day.

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was ſuch a Meeting.

Mr. Conyers. Was Keys there at that Time.

Capt. Porter. He was not in the Room where we were, but he was in another Room in the ſame Houſe, where I went out to him, and there was he, Cranbourn, and Kenrick.

Mr. Conyers. Pray what did you go to them for?

Capt. Porter. I went to acquaint them what was reſolved upon; and I told them they were reſolved to do it the next Day, to which they agreed, but that I thought my Horſe's would not be ready, but I hoped I ſhould get ſome other.

Mr. Conyers. Pray, what other Diſcourſe had you in that Company: With whom and about what?

Capt. Porter. Mr. Kenrick came to me with his Arm in a String; either he had broke his Arm, or pretended ſo to have done. I then asked him for Mr. Sherbourn, whom he had mentioned before to me, as one that was likely to be concerned: He told me Mr. Sherbourn asked a great many Queſtions about the Deſign, which he did not think fit to Anſwer; I thanked him for telling me ſo, and ſaid I would not ſend to him.

Mr. Cooper. Pray Captain Porter give me leave to ask you one Queſtion, can you remember what Number of Men Charnock was to provide for this Enterprize?

Capt. Porter. He promiſed ſeven or eight Men, ſome of which ſhould bring their Horſe's out of the Country, others he would borrow or hire for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, was there any Body ſent to take an Account of the Inns about the Place where this Aſſaſſination was to have been Executed?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Mr. Durant was, and he did bring us an Account of the ſeveral Inns about Brent-

Brentford and Turnham Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. As to the Liſt of Men, which you ſay you ſent to Charnock, and he ſent you back with a Liſt of his Men, pray can you tell whoſe Hand that Liſt of his Men was in.

Capt. Porter. I know Captain Charnock's Hand very well, and to the beſt of my Knowledge, it was his own Hand, and ſubſcribed, R C.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir you have given an Account of the Meeting the 22*d* at your Lodging.

Charnock. I was not there he ſays.

Mr. Att. Gen. Firſt let me ask you, how came it that it was not put in Execution the 15*th*, for that you did not tell us before?

Capt. Porter. I tell you, Sir, it was becauſe the King did not go out that Day, according as we had Notice, that he intended to do: Durant wrote firſt Word that the Guards were gone before, upon which I went for my Men, and about Noon I received a Note from Mr. Charnock that the King did not go out that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Name was ſubſcribed to that Note?

Capt. Porter. R. Robinſon, which was a Name he uſed to go by ſometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And pray in whoſe Hand was that Note?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Knowledge it was Captain Charnock's, I know his hand very well

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if the Priſoners will ask him any Queſtions they may.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Char. My Lord, in the firſt Place I deſire the Judgment of the Court, whether he be a legal Evidence or no. I conceive he is not, and I hope your Lordſhips will think ſo too: For he makes himſelf a Criminal by his own Confeſſion, and that of a very hainous Crime, and it is equal in my Judgment, (and as I have been adviſed, who I muſt ſtill ſay am ignorant in theſe Matters) as if he had confeſt it upon an Indictment, and then the Law can take no Notice of him as a good Witneſs. And if he were no legal Witneſs then, I take it by the ſame Reaſon he is no legal Witneſs now: For the Crime is the ſame, and it is an Acknowledgment in open Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, if it had been a Confeſſion upon an Indictment, it would have been a Conviction, which would have had quite another Operation, but it not being upon an Indictment, it is no Conviction, and therefore he is a legal Witneſs, tho' he does acknowledge himſelf to be guilty of the Crime.

Char. Then, my Lord, he is looked upon as no good Evidence, in my Judgment, becauſe he is a Criminal.

L. C. J. He is a legal Evidence, tho' he does confeſs himſelf guilty of the Crime.

Char. He owns himſelf a Partner in a bloody Deſign, and to convict me he ſwears, to take away my Life, to ſave his own. I cannot imagine why he ſhould be accounted a legal Witneſs, that is a Party by his own Confeſſion in ſuch a Matter.

L. C. J. Pray, who can tell better what was intended and done in ſuch a Conſpiracy than he that was a Party in it?

Char. My Lord, he has forfeited his Life by his own Confeſſion, and now he would by Swearing againſt me take away my Life to ſave his own.

L. C. J. Whatſoever Objections you have againſt the Credit of his Teſtimony you may make what Uſe of them you can in the proper Time; but for any Thing that yet appears he is a legal Witneſs.

Charnock. My Lord, I know not how far he is a Legal Witneſs, therein I muſt be governed by the Judgment of the Court; but ſure it will take away from the Credibility of his Teſtimony, his own Acknowledgement of his being guilty of ſuch a Crime. Tho' he may be a Legal Witneſs, he cannot be a good one. And I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider of it, when a Man comes to take away other Mens Lives to ſave his own, by accuſing them of Crimes which he acknowledgeth himſelf to be guilty of.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, for that matter, it is ſo in all Caſes of this nature, not only in Caſes of High-Treaſon, but of Robberies and Burglaries, and the like, where the Parties concern'd are and always have been allow'd to be good Witneſſes againſt their Accomplices in thoſe Crimes. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Mr. Charnock?

Charnock. My Lord, here is another Thing, which, I apprehend, I have Reaſon to object againſt the Teſtimony of this Witneſs; he does not only ſwear to ſave his own Life, and take away another's to deſerve the ſaving of his own, but there is in this Caſe Swearing to get a Reward, for there is a Reward of 1000 l. a Piece promiſed by Proclamation, for the Apprehenſion of this Man and others. And not only a Pardon but the 1000 l. to any of thoſe in the Proclamation who ſhall diſcover and take any of the proſcribed Perſons. Now, where a Man ſtands accuſed by Proclamation, and his own Life is thereby concerned, and a Reward is propos'd for any of the Conſpirators diſcovering and apprehending the others, it is a hard Matter to admit any one that acknowledgeth himſelf guilty of ſuch a Crime, to prove a Priſoner guilty of that Crime under thoſe Circumſtances. Beſides, my Lord, I have known this Gentleman, and tho' he may have had an Eſtate, yet ſince I have Reaſon to ſuſpect, and perhaps it may be very well known, that the Fortune he had is laviſhed away; to make up that Damage, he may be tempted to undertake this Way of Swearing. So I think he cannot be a good Evidence, and I hope your Lordſhip will think ſo too, and that he is to receive no Credit or Countenance before an honeſt Jury, as I doubt not theſe Gentlemen are that are to try us.

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, do not miſtake your ſelf, he is to have no Reward by the Proclamation unleſs he had come in voluntarily, and apprehended one of the others; for only thoſe that apprehend any of the Perſons named in the Proclamation, are to receive any Part of the Reward, not any of the Witneſſes againſt any of them; the Reward is for the Apprehenſion, whether they be found guilty or not guilty.

Char. But ſtill, my Lord, he cannot be a good Witneſs, for it looks as if he was a Man that was willing to have become an Evidence, becauſe we, whom he has accuſed, particularly my ſelf, were permitted to be taken, and then in the mean while he ſeems to withdraw, only that he might be taken as a Colour. For my Part, I know not, but that it may be a Contrivance of his own, to be colourably taken up, becauſe he is ſo willingly an Evidence, as the Jury may perceive he is.

L. C. J. It is certainly a very hard Matter, if not impoſſible, to diſcover Crimes of this Nature, if the Accomplices in thoſe Crimes ſhall not be allowed to be good Witneſſes againſt their Fellow-Conſpirators.

Char-

Charnock. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit to the Judgment of the Court that he is a legal Witneſs. But tho' I ſhall not preſs upon the Legality, yet I muſt ſay he is not a good Witneſs for all the Reaſons that I have urged.

L. C. J. Nay, he is a very good Witneſs, if he be a legal Witneſs; but the Credit of what he ſays, as in all other Caſes, muſt be left to the Jury, who are Judges of the Matter of Fact, and the Credibility of the Witneſſes.

Char. My Lord, when Perſons will own themſelves guilty of joyning in ſo barbarous a Crime as we ſtand indicted for, and accuſed of, ſure there will be little Credit due to their Teſtimony.

L. C. J. His Credit muſt be left to the Jury, who are the Judges of it; now if you will ask no Queſtions, I muſt ſpeak to the reſt; Mr. King will you ask him any Queſtions?

Char. I ſpeak this only in general; but I have ſome Remarks that I have made upon the Evidence that has been given, out of which, when I have told you of them, Queſtions may ariſe, which it may be fit for me to propoſe, and I ſhall deſire your Lordſhips Leave accordingly.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Charnock, you ſhall be heard all that you have to ſay, when your Time comes for your Defence, and to make what Obſervations upon the Evidence you pleaſe. But the Matter is now, whether you will think fit to croſs-examine the Witneſſes that are produced for the King, or to ask them any Queſtions.

Char. My Lord, I have taken ſome Notes of what has been ſaid, and I deſire I may make the beſt Uſe of them that I can.

L. C. J. You may make what uſe you will of your Notes, and make what Obſervation you will to make any Queſtion you ask intelligible.

Char. My Lord, Capt. Porter in his Evidence hath ſaid, That this Conſpiracy was in the latter End of February. Now I apprehend his Oath is not valuable upon this Indictment, becauſe the Offence is laid the Tenth of February, and ſo his Conſpiracy that he talks of, was after the Time laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. I believe you miſtake him, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he pleaſes to ask him, I ſuppoſe he will find himſelf miſtaken.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I ſay the latter End of January; if I ſaid February I miſtook.

L. C. J. And ſo it muſt be; for the two and Twentieth of February, was to have been the ſecond Time for the Execution of the Deſign, and ſeveral of the Conſpirators were taken the next Day.

Char. My Lord, I deſire Capt. Porter may be asked, where it was, and when, that I brought Sir George Barcley and Mr. Holmes into his Company?

Capt. Porter. It was the Beginning of February, at my Chamber in the ſame Houſe where Mr. Charnock lodged, and I was then Sick of the Gout.

Char. My Lord, I declare it, I know nothing of it. Then he ſays we had ſeveral Meetings, particularly at three ſeveral Taverns; by what I can obſerve, there is no Time at all, nor at any of thoſe three Places that there was any Sort of Conſpiracy for the Aſſaſſinating of the King.

L. C. J. Yes, He ſays, that you met at thoſe Places, where you did conſult about Aſſaſſinating of the King, and the Ways and Methods how it ſhould be carried on, and that you was at thoſe Conſults; for Mr. Attorney asked him particularly, Whether you that are the Priſoners were there? and he ſays, ay.

Char. He ſays, that we met at the Nagg's-head Tavern in St. James's-Street, where it was agreed that he and Knightly ſhould go and view the Ground, to ſee which would be the moſt convenient Place; and that they came the next Night to give an Account according to our Deſire. Now, my Lord, I was there at Dinner, and Capt. Porter did come in at Night; and if you do remember, Captain, you could not pull off your Boots well, and complained of the Gout, and was very peeviſh; and ſaid you had been at Mortlack, and had met with a Friend there; that is all that I know. There was Capt. King and Mr. Knightly indeed; who ſent for ſome other Cloaths, but it cannot be pretended that there was any Crime tranſacted at that Time; for you cannot imagine, that I would have to do in any ſuch Matter amongſt Porters and Meſſengers that were to go on common Errands.

L. C. J. I will only put you in a right Method; You may ask what Queſtions you will now; but you are not to make your Obſervations upon the Witneſſes to the Jury till the King's Evidence be given, for then your Time will come for your Defence.

Char. My Lord, It may be I may forget then what may be proper for me to inſiſt upon. If your Lordſhip would pleaſe to allow me a Sollicitor to put me in Mind, I ſhould be the better able to manage my ſelf.

L. C. J. You may be helped by your Notes; but you have been told over and over, we can allow no Sollicitor.

Char. My Lord, Captain Porter ſays, I told him there was ſuch a Commiſſion brought by Sir George Barcley from King James; he ſays indeed, I told him I never ſaw it; and I do not know how I could, becauſe I do not believe there ever was any ſuch, and it is improbable there ſhould be any ſuch.

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, I would not hinder you from ſaying any Thing that would be proper for your Defence, nor will interrupt you when your proper Time comes.

Char. My Lord, what I ſay is as to what Captain Porter has evidenced, and I would make Obſervations upon one Part of the Evidence after another, as it is given.

L. C. J. But that is not regular, according to the Courſe of Evidence, and will introduce a Confuſion. You may ask any Queſtions of the particular Witneſſes, as they are in order, if you will; but your Obſervations, as to your own Defence, you muſt defer, till the Witneſſes are heard, that ſo the Evidence may be entire, and your Defence entire; therefore if you will ask him any Queſtions, ſay ſo.

Char. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Mr. King, will you ask him any Queſtions?

King. Captain Porter, Did I mention any Thing, or was there any Diſcourſe when you and I, and Mr. Knightly, as you ſay, went out to view the Ground about killing the King?

Capt. Porter. The Day before we went, we dined together, and it was at the Naggs-head, and he asked if I was to meet Knightly, and go and view the Ground, in order to ſettling the Deſign, which was then talked of, and conſulted about; and Captain King deſired to go with us, and we lay at Knights-Bridge; and when we were about it, we diſcourſed ſeveral Times of the Nature of the Place; and Captain King did not approve of the Place on this Side the Water, but liked the

Am-

Ambuſcade better which was to have been on the other ſide the Water.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

King. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well then, What ſays the other Man, Keys? Will he ask him any Queſtions?

Keys. My Lord I have had no Body to adviſe me, no Council; I was only a Servant to Captain Porter.

Mr. Att. Gen. If then they have done with him, before he goes, I deſire to ask him one Queſtion. What Diſcourſe, or Treaty, or Conſultation about this, or ſuch like a Matter, there was the laſt Winter, and between whom?

Capt. Porter. There were ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations the laſt Winter between Capt. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and my ſelf, about ſuch a Thing; and we Thought that the quickeſt Way to bring in the King, and reſtore him to his Crown, was by knocking King William on the Head; and there were ſeveral Meetings about the Ways of doing it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who elſe were there at thoſe Meetings?

Capt. Port. There were ſeveral others in Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. But the Meaning of my Queſtion is, who of the Priſoners.

Capt. Porter. I cannot remember any but Capt. Charnock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint us with the Reaſon why it was not done at that time.

Capt. Porter. We wanted a Commiſſion from France, which we thought was a neceſſary Authority for us to act by.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſpeak of a Liſt that was brought you again from Charnock, with the addition of thoſe Names that were his Men; pray at that time was there no Diſcourſe about a particular Gun that was ſomebody's, and that one in the Company was to have, to be employed in this Service?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I ſaid, I had a Muſketoon that carried 6 or 8 Bullets, that Capt. Pendergraſs, who was one of the Four out of my Quota, that was to go with Sir George Barcley, ſhould have if he pleaſed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Capt. Porter, I would not lead you, but were there any particular Directions given? and what touching the particular Imployment of that Gun?

Capt. Porter. I remember I told Capt. Pendergraſs, if the Coach made any great haſte to get away, he might eaſily hinder that by killing, or laming one of the Horſes with that Gun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray recollect your ſelf, Sir, was King, the Priſoner at the Bar, preſent at that Diſcourſe?

Capt. Porter. Capt. King was then in my Room at Maiden-lane, where I then lay, being removed from my Lodging at Norfolk-ſtreet.

King. Do you ſay that I heard any ſuch Diſcourſe?

Capt. Porter. I cannot ſay you heard it, but you was preſent then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there not ſome Diſcourſe about a Defect of the Numbers that were appointed, and expected to join in this Thing.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I told you I wanted a Man, and that was Kenrick, who had his Arm in a String; and Mr. De la Rue brought one that I knew not, and ſome of the Company went to the Blue-Poſts to tarry there whilſt I came to them, and Capt. King was preſent when the News was brought us of the Diſappointment, and then I reſolved to go out of Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witneſs, My Lord, that we call is Mr. De la Rue, and we deſire he may be ſworn. Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. De la Rue, we would deſire you to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you know of any Deſign or Conſpiracy to Aſſaſſinate the King, when it began, how it was carry'd on, and by whom, and by what Methods.

Mr. De la Rue. My Lord, this Conſpiracy hath been carrying on a great while, for ſome Years. And it originally came from Col. Parker, eſpecially as to my Knowledge of it; and that was 5 or 6 Years ago, at St. Germains, when I was there: He propoſed it to me, and ſaid he would propoſe it to my Lord Melfort, who was King James's Secretary in France. Two Years after, he came over into England, it was a little before the Buſineſs of La Hogue, and he would have had me come over into England with him; upon which I applyed my ſelf to my Lord Melfort, to know whether I ſhould come over hither yea or no: My Lord Melfort adviſed me to ſtay there a while, for, ſaid he, you will find there is ſomething a doing which will pleaſe you. But nothing being done, after that I came to England, and ſuffered a very tedious Confinement here. I became acquainted with Mr. Charnock and Capt. King abroad; I have been with Mr. Charnock, Mr. King, Mr. Porter, Mr. Goodman and Col. Parker, here in Town ſeveral Times, and at ſeveral Places. And now I come to what was a doing the laſt Year. In the Months of January, February, and March, till the King's going to Flanders, there were ſeveral Conferences, and Conſultations about this Matter, between Sir William Perkins, Capt. Porter, and others; I cannot ſay that ever I was in Company with Goodman at that Time, when we talked of any Thing of this Nature. But Capt. Charnock carried me to Sir William Perkins, whom I had never ſeen before, to the Mitre-Tavern in St. James's Market, and there I was asked if I would be concerned in the Eaſing us from the Yoke that then lay upon us. I asked which way it was to be done, for I could not underſtand what was meant, but the taking off the King, and therefore I asked which Way it was to be done. Then they asked me, whether I knew where Capt. Stow lived; and they imployed me to go to his Lodgings, and appointed me to meet them at the Star-Tavern in Whste-Fryars. They were there before me, when I had met with the Captain, and brought him thither; but that they thought not a fit Place to conſult in, and therefore they went to Bromfield's Coffee-houſe, and there they did talk ſomething of it; but they took one another aſide, and talked privately among themſelves, which I took ſome Obſervation and Notice of; and upon Enquiry I was told it was becauſe there was an Old Gentleman in the Company, whom they did not care to acquaint with any Thing of the Matter, becauſe he was too Old to have any Hand in it, and they would acquaint none with their Reſolutions, but thoſe that were to be Actors in the Deſign. My Lord, I was not often in their Company after that, but I heard from Time to Time, how Matters went on, and I heard from Capt. Porter particularly, that they had been at Turnham-Green and liked the Place very well, and that the Deſign was to take the King off, or elſe to hurry him away to Rumney-Marſh alive, and carry him into France.

Char-

Charnock. Surely this is not any Evidence, becauſe Captain Porter only ſpoke of it, and it is by Hearſay, and we are not concern'd what other People talk of.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray who was in the Room, when the Propoſals were made?

De la Rue. What Propoſals do you mean, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. At the Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet.

De la Rue. At the Coffee-houſe there was a little Talk of it between themſelves; but they would not talk much, they ſaid, becauſe there was an old Gentleman there, who was too old to engage, and they would have none but Actors; that I underſtood to be the Reaſon why they talked one with another ſo: But I taking Notice of their Privacy, whenever I asked Charnock of it, he referr'd me to Captain Porter. But withal he told me ſeveral Times, that he believed it would come to nothing. The Deſign was to carry the King alive into France, if they could; if they could not take him alive, then to aſſaſſinate him, and pretend it was done by a Random Shot. He told me alſo, they had ſent to King James for a Commiſſion to execute this Matter, and to authorize them to carry the King into France, if they could take him; and then if they could not, they agreed to excuſe themſelves, as I ſaid, by pretending that he was killed by a Random Shot. It ſhould ſeem (as I underſtood) the Commiſſion was delay'd a long Time, and then they reſolved to execute the Deſign without a Commiſſion; and within a few Days before the King was to go to Flanders, I was told, all was ready. But then they wanted a Ship to carry him off when they had taken him; and there met at the Roſe Tavern, as I remember, Captain Porter and Sir William Perkins; but I cannot tell whether Mr. Charnock was there or not. I asked them if they had concluded upon the Matter; they told me, it was concluded upon, and as I remember, they told me Captain Charnock, or Robinſon, (for he went by both Names) was to have a Recommendation to ſome Body at Deal; and there they were to hire a Veſſel, and I was asked whether I would go with him: I told them, I would. But then the King went a little after for Flanders; and they had no Time to compleat the whole Affair, and ſo the Buſineſs was put off, till the King's Return this laſt Winter.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, What ſay you to any Thing ſince?

De la Rue. This Year in the Months of November and December, Mr. King, the Priſoner at the Bar, told me, that there would a Major General come over from France, and that there was a Man of Quality about the Town, that offered to diſburſe two or three Thouſand Pounds, if King James would give Order for it: And this was, as I ſuppoſe, to buy Horſes to be engaged in this Matter, and he would tell me more a while after. A Month or two after, he told me he was out of Money about it, which could not be had: I was brought in by Captain Porter, and they communicated this to me, about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of the Month of February; they told me there was a Major-General come over from France, and there were a great many People come over beſides; and there would be ſomething ſpeedily put in Execution, which would be for the King's Service.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

De la Rue. Captain King, the next Time I ſaw him, he told me he wanted a Saddle with Holſters, it was the 7th of February, on Friday Night, for he was to go out of Town with ſome Friends, about ſomething in Order to this Affair, he deſired me to lend him one; but I had none, I told him, but I would write to Captain Porter, to procure one for him; and he told me he was to go with Knightly, Durant, and others, to ſee whether the King went to Richmond or to Hounſlow; becauſe they were told, the King had altered his Journey from Richmond to Hounſlow. He afterwards told me, he went out with his Friends, and the Sunday Morning he comes to me, and told me, there was the rareſt Place for the Execution of the Deſign againſt the King, that was poſſible to be thought of; if they ſhould have ſtudied never ſo long, and deſired a convenient Place, they could not have had ſuch another. It was within a Quarter of a Mile of the King's Houſe at Richmond, in a Lane that leads to the Houſe, and ſo narrow, that the Officers and the Guard could go but very few a-breaſt, hardly broad enough for a breaſt; and there was to be an Ambuſcade behind the Park Pales, and the other Side was the River; and, ſays he, we will have all the Pales ſawed ſo far, that when the King's Coach comes into the Place, the Pales ſhall be broke down, and we will have a Parcel of Horſe ready, that ſhall be ſure to do the Work with the Guards; and when we fire, they ſhall take Notice to make their Attack. Durant deſires to command this Party; and they were to be dreſſed in Country-Men's Habit, that they might the leſs be taken Notice of: And he ſaid 10 or 12 Men on the other Side would beat 100 of the Guards in that Conſternation, eſpecially we having the Park Pales before us to defend us. He asked me if I would be one of the Ambuſcade. I told him, I had rather be one of thoſe on Horſeback to ſecure the Retreat, and I would rather attack the Guards. It was late, and ſo King and I went Home; and the next Day I went to ſee Captain Porter, when he was ill of the Gout. This was Sunday, the 9th of February; we did go to Porter, and he was in his Chamber, and two or three more, and they were talking of indifferent Things: He asked for Captain Charnock, and they ſaid he was gone out; but he takes out Captain Porter into the Yard to talk with him by himſelf; and what he ſaid to him, I ſuppoſe was to tell him what he had told me before: Says Captain Porter to him, I have taken care of a Horſe for you; we will ride out on Tueſday next to ſee the Place. Mr. Porter, and Mr. King, and, as I was told, Mr. Knightly, went to Knightsbridge, and lay there all Night; and the next Day they went out of Town to view the Place. I was at Porter's Lodging on the Monday, but I was told there by Keys and his Landlady, that he lay that Night at the Swan at Knightsbridge, and was to go out the next Day. On the Tueſday Morning I was coming back from Kenſington, which was the 11th of February, and when I was coming along the Street I met with Keys, and aſk'd him where he was going? ſays he, I am going to Sir William Perkins with a Lerrying Trumpet; for it ſeems he was raiſing a Troop of Horſe, as Porter told me afterwards; and within a little Time afterwards, I ſaw Captain Porter at the End of Norfolk-ſtreet, and he told me they would all be together at the Nagg's-head about 7 or 8 a Clock. I went, and expected to be admitted, and asked if Captain Porter was there; they told me he was above, but there were ſeveral other Perſons with him; and there was a Coach at the Door which had brought two Scotch Gentlemen, of which I thought Sir George Barcley was one, whom I heard to be in Town.

Town. I desired to speak with Captain Porter; they told me he was busy above in Company, and could not be spoke with; by which I saw they were not willing that I should come there amongst them, which I took very ill. Captain King came out to me, and was talking with me at the Door, and Captain Charnock comes with another to the Door in a Coach: I saw him, but when, I suppose, he perceived me, he pulls himself back into the Coach, as if he had no Mind to be seen; but finding he could not avoid it, he comes out, and asks me if I would not go up stairs into the Company: I told him, No, I hear they are busy, and because I was not invited up at first, I would not trouble them. I was then thinking of going to my Lord Shrewsbury's Office immediately, to get some Messengers immediately to apprehend them; but then I thought I had not enough to discover their Intentions, and make it out against them, but I should have, one Time or another. I did not see Captain King till Saturday afterwards at 12 a Clock, and I was then at Charnock's Lodging, to see whether he was gone out, that I might be able to give the King the better Account; they told me, he was at the Blue Posts in Spring Garden: I would not go and dine there, but went home, and afterwards went thither; and King, told me, the King did not go out that Day; I told him that I heard so, and would come and see them after Dinner. At this Meeting at Spring Garden I saw Keys was one, and Kenrick, and Sherbourn, and Bryerly, and two that I did not know. This was Saturday the 15th. On Sunday the 16th, I met Mr. King at St. James's-street, and we went thence to the Dog Tavern, and there we supped together, and he told me Sir George Barcley had brought over Sixteen of the Guards, and two Officers, and a Brigadier, and a Sub-Brigadier; and he told me the Day before, that he knew some of them, and was going to meet them; for they were en Cachet, as he called it in French, and did not stir abroad without Leave, and were subsisted at the Rate of 4 s. a Day, as the Guards were here. He told me, he had been lately with them a Drinking. I asked him whither they went; he told me, to the Bear Tavern in the Strand; and he told me, Mr. Charnock and Captain Porter had several Conferences with them, to contrive how to take off his Majesty, to Murder and to Assassinate him. And he told me——

Charnock. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, whether he was at the Bear-Tavern with these Men.

L. C. J. What he says about this Matter, is what King told him.

Char. That is not Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is true, not to affect you, but only Mr. King.

De la Rue. Captain King told me besides, that Mr. Charnock did not argue like a Souldier, and reflected upon him for it; for he said, he seemed to desire to have his Post in as little Danger as was possible. And for Mr. Porter, he did not approve of him; for he told me he had as much Fat in his Brains, as he had in his Body. I remember those Words he said; and that what he and Durant had proposed, was rejected, that was about the Ambuscade: For it was said, that after all their Consideration, Sir George Barcley was not sure of Horse enough to carry them off afterwards; wherefore they resolved to Assassinate his Majesty in the Lane coming from Brentford to Turnham-Green; and Sir George Barcley was to command Eight Persons to assault the King, and those that were in the Coach; and Mr. Charnock was to attack the Guards in the Rear; and one Rookwood, with a Party that came from France, and Captain Porter, in two Wings, were to attack the two Sides of the Guards. I remember on Sunday Night I asked him if he had a good Sword, for I wanted one; and I said to him, Where is your Sword-Cutler? He told me, On the other Side of the Way; and he was sent for to bring a good Sword, and I chose one that was but a little Blade, which he thought would do best, and was ridiculing Captain Charnock's Sword, as being too broad, and of three or four Finger's Breadth. I liked his Sword, and spake to the Man to get me one like his; and he said a Tuesday, that he had sent him to my Lodging, but I had not seen him. On Tuesday, the 18th of February, I went to him, and asked him, whether I should see him in the Afternoon? He told me, No; for he was to go out with Knightly to buy Arms. Shall I see you then at Night? said I. I cannot tell whether you can or no, said he. I cannot remember any Thing more that passed upon the 18th. But I spoke to Mr. Charnock, whom I met near his Lodging in Norfolk-street, and desired to have a Word with him towards the Water-Side: I asked him, how the Matter in hand went? Says he, I find People that were sanguine, and hot, and forward, are now grown cold: I believe the King has Notice of it, and the Thing has taken Air; for he has not been abroad a good while. He was not abroad on Saturday, as he usually does go; and I hear, that upon Friday Night it was agreed in Council, to take up several People. Said I, Does the Business go on? No, says he, I believe it is off, because we apprehend the Thing has taken Air; besides Things of such a Nature are not to be communicated to so many, nor delayed, both which are very dangerous; not above Three People should know of it. Said I, How then would they get enough for the Execution? If they be not acquainted with the Design, they will never engage. Well, said he, I believe they are quite off of the Thoughts of it; but you may depend upon the main Business, that will be very speedily, which was the Landing of King James. While I was talking, comes Bryerly from Captain Porter; and after him, came Captain King in a Coach, and asked me, if I would go Home with him? I told him, No, I was not going Home, but was going into White-Fryers, and I took my Leave of them; and nothing past more, that I remember, at that Time. On Wednesday Morning I went to Capt. Charnock's, thinking to learn something how Matters went on; but he was closer, and more reserv'd than before. I asked him to lend me a good Sword. He said, he had none, but Mr. Porter had a good broad flaming Sword, which I thought to be the Sword that Capt. King mentioned to be his: And we had little Talk that Day; for I had Business to do, and I left him pretty soon on the Wednesday. Next Day after, I went to Captain Porter's Lodging, who was removed from Norfolk-street into Maiden-head-lane, to one Brown a Surgeon's, and very few People knew where he was, but those that were of the Party in this Business; and I went into another Room, into the Dining-Room, because his Room had not a Fire, and he came in to us, and I told him what I had heard from Mr. Charnock, that the Thing was quite off. He told me, he heard nothing of it, but found all People that were concerned, as resolute for the Execution of it, as ever they were.

Char. My Lord, he speaks of what Capt. Porter told him; that is nothing to me.

L. C. J. No, it is not, nor will it ever be urged against you; it is but Hear-say from another. Go on, Sir.

De la Rue. I stay'd there but a short Time: But Captain Charnock, since you speak of this Matter, I only say, I told Captain Porter what you told me, that you thought they were off of the Business, and that it had taken Air; and I asked him what he thought. Says he, I know nothing of any Alteration; I believe they are as resolute as ever they were: For they fully purpose, that if the King goes abroad on Saturday Morning, we will have all ready. And he told me how it was to be done. He desired me to lie with him on Friday Night, that we might prepare every thing against the next Day: But I could not do that; and therefore he bid me send at Nine, or thereabouts. I told him I would be at my Lodging about that Time, if he would send to me, to be sure about Seven or Eight a Clock in the Morning. About that Time in the Morning Captain Porter sends to me again; a Servant-Maid came to me, for the Black that used to attend him, used only to go abroad at Nights, and was not seen to go in and out a Days, for Fear of being taken Notice of; because, as I said, none but those that were of the Party knew that he lodged there. I dress'd my self, and went to Captain Porter's Lodging. He was in Bed, but presently he rises, and told me in French, Toutes Parties sont prests, All things are ready: And when he was up, he put on his Boots; and by and by, in comes Mr. Kenrick; and after him, in comes Mr. Keys; and after him, Mr. King and Mr. Pendergrass: And Captain King takes Mr. Porter into another Room, and there they were whispering a while, but I did not hear what they said; but King told me afterwards, he did not observe that I was in the other Room. The Question then was asked of Cranbourne, When he saw Sir George Barcley? He said, he just came from him: And then Captain Porter takes a Pen and Ink, and writes down a List of the Persons that he was sure of, and puts me down first. What, says Mr. Pendergrass, are you the Captain? I told him, I believed I was in before the rest of the Company that were there. Then Captain Porter sends Mr. Cranbourne with the List to Captain Charnock's Lodgings; and in the mean Time, when Mr. Cranbourne was gone, Capt. Porter told me, that Mr. Pendergrass was to be one of the Eight under Sir George Barcley, that were to Assassinate the King, and now, says he, I am going to lend him a Gun that will carry six or eight Bullets. Says Captain King thereupon to him, I hope you will not fear to break the Glass Windows. No, says he, I will have a Hand or a Finger in the Business. By and by came in News, that Chambers, one of the orderly Men, as they called them that lay at Kensington to give Intelligence, had sent Word that the King was to go abroad, and the Guards were gone out. Durant was to stay last, to see when the King went out. Chambers had been there all the Week. Mr. Cranbourne came back, and told Captain Porter, that Chambers had sent to Captain Charnock, that the King would go out that Day. At which all the Company seemed joyful. Captain Porter told me likewise of several Disappointments that they had, both as to Time, and as to Men; particularly that one Major Lowick had engaged to bring two Men, and that one of them had told his Wife, that he was to mount for King James's Service; and she went and cried after him when he went to the Coffee-house; and so he was forced to abscond, and so we lost three: And also told me, that Kenrick said he had broke his Arm; and when Captain Porter asked for Sherbourne whom Kenrick had talked of, he said he asked so many Questions that he durst not trust him; so that they had lost Five or Six in the whole: And there was one Plowden that they were disappointed of besides, whom they had very much reckon'd upon. When Mr. Cranbourne brought back the List that Captain Porter sent to Captain Charnock, there were added to it several Names, which Captain Porter said were the Names of the Men that were to be under Captain Charnock, and that it was his Hand; and at the Bottom there were the Letters R. C. which I thought stood for Robert Charnock. The Names made up about seventeen or eighteen: I told him, I thought there had been more. He told me, there would have been more, but that they were under some Disappointments, as I told you before. He asked me to get him some Men to supply the Defect, and I proposed some Names, to make him believe I was hearty in the Business: We agreed to go to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, and I went under Pretence to get the Men, and came and told them, I had got them, and I found Mr. Pendergrass there, and I took Mr. Keys thither, and Mr. Porter sent Mr. Cranbourne to Captain Charnock several times; by and by Word was brought that Chambers had sent Word, the King would not go abroad that Day; upon which they all look'd very blank: And Keys came two or three Times in, and went out again; he was several Times up and down, at last he came and told us, the Guards were returned from Richmond foaming; and he went down again to learn further Intelligence, and within a little Time came and told us, the King's Coach was returned to the Mews Gate, and the People very much wondred what should be the Reason, that the King did not go a Hunting for two Saturdays together as he used to do. They seemed to be in a very great Consternation at this News, and Captain Porter said he resolved to go out of Town, and asked me if I would go: I told him, No; I had a Suit in Doctors Commons, and I would go to my Proctor and Lawyers to consult about it. Then he asked Mr. Pendergrass to go with him, which he agreed to do; and Captain Porter sent Keyes up to give the rest of the Company an Account, that there was no Occasion for them then, and so they dispersed.

Charnock. Did I go out of Town can you tell?

Mr. De la Rue. Now you put me in mind, Mr. Cranbourne brought a Message from you about that Time to Captain Porter, that Sir George Barcley desired to speak with him at his Lodgings. Captain Porter was then apprehensive of Bayliffs meeting with him; and, says he, he knows this, I wonder he would not come to me: But he did not go to him, but resolved speedily to go out of Town; and Keys was to give an Account where he was in the Country, that if Occasion was he might be sent for. This is all I can at present recollect, only, I beg your Pardon, I remember, there were several disloyal Healths drunk in the Company, at several Times, as the restoring the late King, the Health of the Prince of Wales, the late Queen, and the French King; and particularly, I remember, when the News of the Diſappointment was, Mr. Porter took an Orange in his Hand, and ſqueezed it, and gave it into the Hand of the next Perſon to him, whom he drank to, and began a Health to the Squeezing the rotten Orange; and ſaid, Though we are diſappointed one Day, I hope to have another: And Keys was at Dinner with them all the Time, and every Body drank it, I did not ſee any Body refuſe it, but it went from one to another quite round.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Who were there at that Time?

De la Rue. All the Company pledged the Health, and Mr. Keys was there.

Charnock, Pray was I there?

De la Rue. No.

King. Was I there?

De la Rue. No, there were none of the Priſoners, but Mr. Keys, who belonged to Mr. Porter's Party; Mr. King for his Part belong'd to Sir George Barcley's Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before we go to another Witneſs, I deſire to know whether the Priſoners will ask this Witneſs any Queſtions Char. You ſay, there was a Note of Names ſent by me to Captain Porter, Pray do you know my Hand writing.

De la Rue. I cannot ſay, I have ſeen you write, or that I ſaw you write that; but I have ſeen your Writing ſeveral Times, and I believe it to be your Hand.

Char. Why ſo, have you any of my Writing?

De la Rue. I have received ſeveral Notes from you, which I believe are your Writing.

Char. But you do not ſwear, that they were my Writing, or that this was my Writing.

De la Rue. I tell you, you have ſent ſeveral Notes to me at ſeveral Times, and you have owned the Meſſages came from you, and I do believe it was your Hand-writing, becauſe it was like the reſt: And Captain Porter told me, it was your Hand-writing.

Mr. Att. Gen Pray did Mr. Keys uſe to ſit down at Table with Mr. Porter?

De la Rue. Yes, in all Companies he was treated as familiarly as a Companion, and no Ways as a Servant; and dined and ſupped at the ſame Table with the reſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was done after that the News was brought of the King's not going abroad, and Captain Porter reſolving to go into the Country?

De la Rue. When Captain Porter was gone, the Company broke up; and away goes I to Captain Charnock, to ſee him, about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon. When I came there, his Landlady told me there was a great deal of Company: But I deſired her to go in, and tell him that I was there. She did ſo; and he ſent and deſired me to come in. I did ſo, and I ſaw ſeveral Perſons there. There was one Douglas, and one Trevor, and four Troopers of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, and a Trumpeter that was his Servant in Ireland, when he was a Captain in Parker's Regiment; I know Captain Charnock was a great Croney of Parker's, and he ſent Letters by me to him: I have ſeen ſome of the Letters that Parker ſent; and they were drinking the ſame Healths as were drunk before at the Blue Poſts, to the Reſtoring King James, the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Grand Monarch (as they called him) the French King.

L. C. J. Who was in Company then?

De la Rue. Mr. Douglas, Mr. Trevor, four Troopers of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, one White, one Lowthorp, and one Maſon, whom I know when I ſee very well; Mr. Charnock, one Day in the Summer, asked me to go and drink a Bowl of Punch, which I was unwilling to do; but he muſt needs preſs me, and he carries me where Maſon and Lowthorp were, at the George Inn in Piccadilly; whence we went to the Prince of Orange's Head, and Captain Charnock ſpent in Wine and other Liquors upon them a great deal of Money. This was half a Year ago in the Summer Time, but I do not remember that I ſaw thoſe two, Lowthorp and Maſon, afterwards, till the 22d of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all that you can ſay as to the Priſoners?

De la Rue. This is all at preſent that I can recollect.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then for the Satisfaction of the Court and Jury, give us an Account when you firſt made a Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy, and in what Manner, and to whom.

De la Rue. The laſt Year I had diſcovered it if it had come to a Head, and been ripe enough to have been put in Execution; I did then deſign to acquaint the King with it; but it coming to no Head then, I deferr'd troubling the King with it: And now this Year I deſigned (had the King gone out the 15th of February) to have prevented any Miſchief, but they had Notice that he was not to go: But my Way was, to have put them all into the King's Hands, by getting two or three General Officers to be acquainted with it; and dividing ſome of the Guards into ſeveral Parties in the Lanes between Brentford and Turnham-Green, and ſo have ſurprized them and their Horſes in the ſeveral Inns that they were quartered in. But upon Monday the 17th of February, leſt they ſhould alter their Reſolution, and I ſhould happen not to be acquainted how it was to be done, I went to a General Officer of my Acquaintance, that is, Brigadier Lewſon, to acquaint him with the Matter; but he was gone out of Town with Collonel Fitz. Patrick and another: I went then to Durant's Lodgings for a Colour, and it was told me, he had been out all Night. I went again to Brigadier Lewſon's, but he was not in Town, and I left Word for him, that the next Day I would wait upon him, and deſired he would not go out till I came to him. I went, he was not then at home, but I afterwards met with him, and acquaints him with this Buſineſs, and begs of him to acquaint the King with it that Day, which he told me he would. He asked me which Way I purpoſed to put them into the King's Hands. I told him the beſt Way and ſafeſt for me, was for his Majeſty to go out on the 22d, for the Party that was to execute this Deſign, were not to go out of Town till the Afternoon, to be at Brentford, when the King came back from Hunting, and that they ſhould have two or three Troops of Horſe by Parties to have ſeiſed them and their Horſes in the ſeveral Inns and Publick-Houſes, where they were diſperſed. He ſaid, it was not ſafe to run that Hazard, but he would offer it to the King, and let me know his Mind. He ſent to me the next Day, and told me, he had acquainted the King with it, who deſired to know who they were that were concerned in it; then I gave him the Names of thoſe that I knew, and where they lived. I dined with him on Thurſday, and told him what had paſſed on the Wedneſday neſday Morning between Captain Charnock and I, and what Porter ſaid about it on Wedneſday Night; and after Dinner he ſaid he would go again to the King and acquaint him with it; and that I ſhould come to him on Friday Night, which was the Reaſon I was not there with Captain Porter, where Sir George Barcley and they were together; for I went to the Play to paſs away the Time. When I came home to my Lodging, I found there were a Couple of Letters from the Brigadier, to whom I went, and he told me, the King was deſirous to ſee me: I told him I would wait on him to the King with all my Heart. I went with him to Kenſington, and was introduced to the King by my Lord Portland, where I think I told the King what I have told the Court now.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day do you ſay it was you diſcover'd it to the King?

De la Rue. Brigadier Lewſon acquainted the King upon the Tueſday Night before, and that had been done the Day before, if I could have met with him; but it was Friday Night that I was with the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will they ask him any Queſtions?

Char. No, my Lord; I do not think that any Thing he ſays againſt me is material at all.

De la Rue. My Lord, I remember one thing more; that upon Tueſday Night Mr. King told me he had my blue Coat on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any Thing more to ſay as to Keys.

De la Rue. Keys was the only Man that told me of the Meetings.

Char. Where was it that you ſay I pull'd my ſelf back in the Coach?

De la Rue. It was at the Nagg's-Head in St. James's-ſtreet, and he came out of the Coach, and asked me to go up; but I took it ill to be refuſed before, and becauſe I was not invited up at firſt, I refuſed, and ſaid, I had Buſineſs elſewhere, and went away.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Char. No; yet I think I would ask him one Queſtion more. You ſay, Sir, I carry'd you once to the George Inn in Piccadilly, where there were Lowthorpe and Maſon: Are you ſure it was the George Inn?

De la Rue. Yes, ſure.

Char. Are you poſitive it was the George Inn?

De la Rue. I believe ſo, I took it to be that Inn.

Char. You did ſwear it poſitively, that it was the George Inn before.

De la Rue. I ſaw thoſe two Men ſince, which was on Sunday the 23d, at Kenſington, and they ſaid they did quarter at the Inn in Piccadilly, where you carried me to them.

Char. Pray, where abouts is the George Inn in Piccadilly?

De la Rue. The Inn that I ſpeak of is about the Middle of Piccadilly upon the left hand.

Char. There is but one George Inn in all Piccadilly that ever I heard of, and that is at the further End, there is no ſuch Sign in the Middle.

L. C. J. He is not ſo poſitive as to the Sign, but as to the Place.

Char. I appeal to every Body, if he did not ſwear before poſitively, that it was the George Inn in Piccadilly.

De la Rue. I do ſay, it was to an Inn in Piccadilly; and Lowthorpe told me on Sunday the 23d at Kenſington, they were quarter'd at an Inn in Piccadilly, I take it to be the George Inn, if it be not the George, I know not what Sign it is, but I think it is not very material what the Sign was.

Char. Yes, it is all material to us; and I think it is very material for every Man to take care how he forſwears himſelf.

L. C. J. No, it is no forſwearing himſelf, when he is not poſitive as to the Sign.

Char. But I hope every Body conſiders, that he did ſwear it was the George Inn, and there is no ſuch Inn there.

De la Rue. This I did not think of, to take ſo much Notice of it then, as to mind what the Sign was; 'twas you carried me thither.

Char. It was your Intereſt to mind every Particular; for according to your own Words, you had been a Trapanner half a Year before.

De la Rue. I have told you already, I intended never to have been an Evidence; but to put you into the King's Hands, and prevent the Execution of the Deſign, and I beg'd of the Council to be excuſed from giving any Evidence, but I could not by any Means get my ſelf excuſed.

L. C. J. Will Mr. King ask any Queſtions?

King. No.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you Keys, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Keys. My Lord, he ſays I drank the Health to the Squeezing of the Orange, and the other Healths: I was not in the Room while any ſuch Healths were drunk, nor did I ſit down while I was there, nor do I know any thing of the Horſes upon my Word, that he ſpeaks of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then if they have done with him, there is a noble Lord, whom he has mention'd, as being preſent when he diſcover'd this to the King, who we deſire may be examined touching that Matter: We muſt humbly pray my Lord Portland, that he will pleaſe to be ſworn.

L. C. J. Hold my Lord the Book, and ſwear him. Which was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly ask your Lordſhip this one Queſtion, Whether Mr. De la Rue did make any Diſcovery of this Matter in your Preſence to his Majeſty, on Friday the 21ſt of February.

E. of Portland. Yes he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip has heard what he ſaid now: Was it to the ſame Purpoſe?

E. of Portl. Yes, to the very ſame Purpoſe, and he did it before he went in to the King to me, being brought to me by his own Deſire: It was all the ſame in Subſtance as he has told you now; and afterwards he was brought to the King on Friday Night, and there he ſaid the ſame Things.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This Gentleman did it not to ſave his own Life, but the King's. Our next Witneſs, my Lord, is Mr. Pendergraſs. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. At. Gen. But before we go on to another Evidence, I would ask Mr. Porter one Queſtion, and that is, What is become of the Liſt which you ſpoke of?

Capt. Porter. I burnt that Liſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Why did you ſo?

Capt. Porter. Becauſe I thought the Thing was diſcover'd, and it was not fit to have ſuch a Paper remain.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Pendergraſs, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know about this Matter, how you came to be acquainted with it, who were concerned in it, and when and how it was to be done.

Capt. Pendergraſs. My Lord, about the 11th of February laſt, I was ſent to by Capt. Porter, where I was in the Country, to come to Town; the 13th of February I met him at the Blue Poſts in Spring Garden; we dined there, and he told me of a Deſign that was on foot, to take away the King's Life, and that Sir George Barkeley, and other Officers, were come on purpoſe out of France, in order to execute the ſame. I was very uneaſy when he told me of the thing, but I ſaid nothing, till I had an Opportunity of waiting upon my Lord Portland, which I did as ſoon as I could, and acquainted him with the whole Matter of the Deſign, and deſired him to acquaint the King: This was upon the Friday Night, which was the 14th, and he told me the King had a mind to ſpeak with me; and afterwards my Lord Portland carried me into the Kings Cloſet, where the King ask'd me ſome Queſtions. I told him what I knew of the Deſign, but deſir'd to be excus'd from naming any Perſons, becauſe my Intention was only to prevent ſuch a barbarous Action, and I was reſolv'd not to be a Witneſs. The King promiſed me I ſhould be ſafe, and preſs'd me to name them, and aſſur'd me I ſhould not be forc'd to come in as an Evidence; upon which I did tell all that I knew, and went out of Town with Mr. Porter, as reſolving not to be an Evidence; but being ſatisfied, after we were taken, that Mr. Porter, who had engaged me in it, had himſelf diſcover'd, and accus'd me, I thought my ſelf diſcharged from any Obligation of Honour in concealing it, and am willing to give an Account of any thing that I know.

Mr. Att. Gen. We know you do it voluntarily, as you did it at firſt honourably, and therefore, Sir, we deſire you would pleaſe to give an Account of your Knowledge in the Matter.

Capt. Pendergraſs. My Lord, as I told you before, the 11th of February I was ſent to by Capt. Porter into the Country, where I was with Mr. Bryerly, to come to Town; accordingly the 13th which was the Thurſday, I came to Town with Mr. Bryerly, and found Capt. Porter at the Blue Poſts in Spring Garden, and we dined there. There was Keys, and Bryerly, and Porter, and I in company, where he acquainted me with the Deſign. We had no further Diſcourſe that Day; the next Day we dined at the Roſe Tavern in Covent Garden, where there was King, Bryerly, Cranbourne, Porter, and I dined together.

King. Pray, was it by way of Rendezvous or ſet Meeting?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, you muſt ſtay your time before you ask any Queſtions of the Witneſſes; you ſhall be heard, when your time comes, as fully as you deſire. Go on Sir.

Capt. Penderg. This was Friday the 14th of February, we had ſome Diſcourſe about the Matter; Capt. King and Capt. Porter went away, and then I went to my Lord Portland's, and was by him introduced to the King. The 15th, I came to Capt. Porter's Lodgings, and he was getting ready, in expectation of notice whether they ſhould execute the Deſign that Day or no. While he was getting ready, I goes to the Blue Poſts, where was Kenrick and Sherbourne, and Mr. Bryerly, and there we were drinking a Glaſs of Wine, and in comes Durants, who was an orderly Man that lay at Kenſington to give Intelligence; and Bryerly directed him to Capt. Porter's Lodgings to carry the Intelligence which he brought, that the King intended to go out that Day; upon that he went away to his Lodging, and Capt. Porter came a little time after, booted, to the Blue Poſts, and there he din'd; within an Hour or two after Capt. Porter came in, Mr. Charnock ſent a Note to Capt. Porter, to tell him, the King did not go that Day, and ſo there muſt be Counter Orders; Capt. Porter told me it was his Hand; the Note was ſigned R. Robinſon, and he ſhewed me the Note, and acquainted me and the reſt of the Company, that they were diſappointed that Day, ſince the King did not go; there we dined, and drank a Bottle of Wine. The next time we met there was Mr. King, and Mr. Keys, and Mr. de la Rue, at Mr. Porter's Lodgings; this was Saturday the 22d in the Morning, there we had ſome Diſcourſe of the matter; and Capt. Porter, upon notice from Capt. Charnock of the King's intending to go abroad, had ſent a Liſt of his Men, and receiv'd back a Liſt of Capt. Charnock's, and Capt. Porter, and De la Rue, and we went to the Blue Poſts to dine, where we had an account afterwards, that the King did not go, and ſo there was another Diſappointment; and a little after Keys came in, and ſaid, the Guards were come home all in a foam, and the Kings Coaches come back to the Mews. Capt. Porter then thought all was diſcover'd, and ſays he, I will go into the Country, Mr. Pendergraſs, will you go with me? With all my Heart, ſaid I, ſo we ſent Keys to get our Horſes ready; we lay at Epſom that Night, and from thence to another Place we went the next Day, where we lay till Thurſday Morning, when Capt. Porter, Mr. Keys and I was taken together, the Place was called Leatherhead, in Surrey, whence we were brought up to Town, and have remained Priſoners ever ſince.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which of the Priſoners were there preſent upon the Saturday the 22d at Capt. Porter's Lodgings?

Capt. Pendergraſs. There was Capt. King and Mr. Keys.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray was there any Diſcourſe about a Gun, and who was to have it?

Capt. Pend. Capt. Porter told me there was a Musketoon that he had would carry 6 or 8 Bullets, and I ſhould have it, being to joyn with Sir George Barcley to ſet upon the King's Coach, and directed me to be ſure to ſhoot ſome of the Horſes to ſtop their Courſe if they ſeemed to drive furiouſly away; and Mr. Cranbourn was the Perſon that carried the Meſſages from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you remember Sir, that Keys ſaid the Guards were come back?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, and that they were all in a Foam, and the Coaches were come back to the Mews Gate, and one of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment told him there was ſomething extraordinary mutter'd among the People, upon which they concluded it was diſcovered.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will the Priſoners ask him any Queſtions?

Char. King, and Keys. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I muſt beg the Favour of my Lord Portland to give himſelf the further trouble of acquainting the Court how this Gentleman behaved himſelf in reference to this Diſcovery.

E. of Portland. My Lord, it was, as he has acquainted you. This Gentleman came to me upon the Friday Night, and told me of it; and then upon the ſame Friday Night, which was the 14th, I think the Night before the firſt time that it was to have been executed, and declared his Abhorrence of ſuch a barbarous Buſineſs: And he told told me his Design of coming into it, and keeping Company with them was to save the King's Life by acquainting me with it, and discovering it, which he would do upon a Promise that he should not be used as an Evidence, nor pressed so much as to name Names, which Promise I made him, and the same Promises were made him that Day seven-night, when I carried him to the King. But the King pressing him to name their Names, assuring him he should be safe and not forced to be an Evidence, he did then name the Names under that Promise from the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray my Lord, who was by then besides your Lordship?

E. of Portl. My Lord Cuts.

Mr. Att. Gen. We must desire my Lord Cuts will please to be sworn. [Which was done.]

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you please to acquaint the Court and the Jury what happen'd at that time.

L. Cuts. My Lords, I was in the King's Closet that same Friday Night when Mr. Pendergrass was brought in there: 'Twas, as near as I can remember, between 12 and 1 a Clock at Night; no Body was present but my self, with the King, when my Lord Portland came in with this Gentleman: All that he said to the King at first was, that he had a Discovery to make of a Design to assassinate his Person, if that his Name might not be made use of, nor he forced to be an Accuser or a Witness. And therefore desired to be excused if he said no more; then desiring the King not to go out the next Day, but to take care of himself, because there were some Persons had resolved to assassinate him coming home; but beg'd to be excus'd from naming Names, for he said he would rather die than betray his Friend, and he thought it enough that he had saved his Majesty's Life. It was above half an Hour before the King could perswade him to name Names, and he would not, till the King had given him his Word and Honour that he should not be obliged to be a Witness, and then he did name the Names. Afterwards, when Captain Porter and Mr. Pendergrass were taken, as my Station obliged me to give Orders, and require Intelligence, and assist at the securing and examination of the Conspirators, I happen'd to see them before they were carried into the Council, and presently knew Mr. Pendergrass to be the Person that was with the King that Friday Night; I had a great Compassion to see Gentlemen and Officers, whom I had some Knowledge of before, in such a Condidition, and I told them naturally what my Opinion was: Mr. Porter did seem sorry for what he had done, and inclin'd to make the King that Atonement for his Fault which he has now done. When I came out and told Mr. Pendergrass this, and that Mr. Porter had named him, and owned the whole Matter, I only gave him my Opinion upon it, that I thought he was discharged from any Obligation of Friendship; and he seemed then inclined to do the same likewise that Mr. Porter had done.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Swear Thomas Berthram. [Which was done.] Pray do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account how long you have known Mr. Charnock to be engaged in this Conspiracy: Tell your whole Knowledge as to him.

Mr. Berth. The 8th or 9th of February last I was crossing Covent-Garden, I light upon one Mr. Trevor, who is now in Newgate, and he told me he was going down to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, and that he heard him say he wanted to speak with me: I told him he had no Business with me nor I with him that I knew of: But he prevailed upon me to go with him, and when we came to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, he met me in the Entry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did?

Mr. Berth. Mr. Charnock did. He told me he wanted to speak with me, and took me into a back Room, because he had Company in his own; and he told me the King, that is, King James, was a coming, and there was a Piece of Service to be done before he could come, and if I would assist in it, it would answer my Expectation. I asked him what was to be done? He answered, you must only go abroad to take the Air, you will see several of your Acquaintance there. I desired to know what was to be done? He said it was to cut off this Spark, or to take off this Spark, I can't tell which, and then the King will come home quietly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were to cut him off?

Mr. Berth. The Party that I was to meet when we rode out to take the Air.

L. C. J. Who did they say they were to take off.

Mr. Berth. He said we must take off this Spark, or cut off this Spark, I can't tell which, which I understood to be the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long had you known Charnock?

Mr. Berth. By Times, seven Years.

Mr. Comper. How came you acquainted with him?

Mr. Berth. We were in the Army together; he was a Lieutenant in Col. Parker's Regiment, and I was a Trooper there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Discourse was there between you and Charnock after you heard there were Warrants out?

Mr. Berth. Sir I have not yet done with what past at his Lodgings. He asked me if I would accept of being one in the Business? I told him I could not engage in it, for I had disposed of my self otherwise. So we came out of that little Room, and he desired me to come into his Room and drink a Glass of Wine: There were three or four Gentlemen that I did not know; and then there was one Mr. Chambers, and Mr. Trevor, and Mr. Lee which Mr. Chambers fetch'd afterwards in there.

Mr. Att. Gen. He would not be engaged there because he had otherwise disposed of himself: Indeed, he was engaged with Sir William Perkins.

Mr. Berth. After I came in I observed great Whisperings among the Company, and frequent calling out of Mr. Charnock for private Discourse; but there was no other particular Discourse about this matter that Night.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray when did you see Mr. Charnock again, and where?

Mr. Berth. At another time, which was the 22d of February, I met him at Lincolns-Inn back Gate; and meeting me there, he called me aside, and took me within the Inn upon the Pav'd-stones, we took a Turn there: He told me Warrants were out against us as he heard, and we had as good, if I would come to his Lodging, go out to Kensington and do the Work at once and take him off, and then we shall be quiet, and have the King peaceably here. I am sure he cannot say that I do him a word of wrong in what I have said, he knows it all to be true.

Mr. Comper. Has any Body else engaged you in this Matter? Do you know one Lowick?

Mr.

Mr. Berth. If that be neceſſary I will tell it. But this is all that I know of any thing of the Priſoners; only Mr. Charnock did ask me as to Mr. Trevor, what I thought of him, whether he might truſt him? I told him he might do what he pleaſed.

L. C. J. H. Mr. Charnock will you ask him any Queſtions? for his Evidence relates only to you.

Char. No, I think not. Pray did I ſend for you.

Mr. Berth. I met Mr. Trevor, and he told me, he was coming to your Lodgings, and that you deſired to ſpeak with me: And when I came, you told me your ſelf you wanted to ſpeak with me: Indeed I knew no Buſineſs you had with me, or I with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have one more Witneſs, and that is one Mr. Boyſe. [who was Sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Mr. Boyſe will you give an Account when you were ſpoke to about this Deſign, and by whom.

Mr. Boyſe. On Friday the 14th of February I went to viſit Mr. King, and he was the firſt that ever told me of the Buſineſs; it was in his own Chamber, he told me there was a great Undertaking in Hand, and he had put my Name into the Liſt, and if I would make one, I ſhould have a Horſe; and he asked me if I had any Boots? I ſaid no. He deſired me to ſee if I could get any, and to meet him in the Afternoon at the Roſe Tavern in Covent Garden; but in the mean time he bid me go to Mr. Knightley and he would inform me further. I went to Mr. Knightley, and I came to Mr. King again in the Afternoon at the Roſe Tavern, and he deſired me not to be out of the way the next Day, but to be at my Lodging, and he would come or ſend for me; and I had Twenty Shillings of him to buy Boots, and he ſtill referr'd me to Mr. Knightley: When I came to Mr. Knightley I was told there was Nothing to be done that Day: But I was deſired to be always in the way, for the Buſineſs would ſoon be over. This is all the Diſcourſe that Day. After that I met Mr. King ſeveral times, who ſtill referr'd me to Mr. Knightley, and when I asked him for my Horſe, he told me I ſhould have one allotted for me time enough; and when this thing was done we ſhould be happy: But he never told me it was to take off the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what did you underſtand was to be done?

Mr. Boyſe, I did believe I ſhould know further of it; for I would not have engaged till I did know. But he did not tell me it was to take off the King, or what it was. This to the beſt of my Memory, is what I know of the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when did you come from France?

Mr. Boyſe. He told me indeed ſeveral were come from France, and that the King would land very ſpeedily.

Mr. Att. Gen. But when did you come?

Mr. Boyſe. I came the beginning of June laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember nothing about Sir George Barcley?

Mr. Boyſe. Yes, he told me Sir George Barcley would Command the Party, and that there were about 40, or 45, that were concerned in the Deſign.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember nothing elſe?

Mr. Boyſe. No truly, I do not remember any thing more concerning Mr. King.

L. C. J. H. Mr. King will you ask him any Queſtions? for what he ſays relates only to you.

King. No my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we have done my Lord; we reſt it here till we hear what they can ſay.

L. C. J. H. Mr. Charnock, The King's Council have done all the Evidence they deſign to give, and now is your time to make your Defence.

Charnock. My Lord, I have taken ſome Notes of the Evidence, and made ſome Remarks, which muſt be my Defence; and I ſhall take them in Order of Time as they were given: The firſt is Capt. Porter; and the main Evidence he hath given againſt me, is my informing him that Sir George Barcley was come from France, with a Commiſſion all written with King James's own Hand, thereby authorizing us to raiſe War againſt the Perſon of King William. But then he ſays at the ſame time, I told him I never ſaw it; and I know not how I ſhould; for it is impoſſible to ſee a Thing that is inviſible, a Thing that never was in being, and to ſuppoſe that ever there ſhould be ſuch a Commiſſion under the King's own Hand, and writ with his own Hand, is ſuch a Contradiction to all Senſe and Reaſon, that no rational Man can be guilty of; and therefore I hope the Court and the Jury will conſider of it, and reject it all as a fooliſh, idle, nonſenſical Fiction and Story. It is very well known that King James has always had, and ſtill has, notwithſtanding his preſent Sufferings and Circumſtances, his Miniſters of State about him, in how ſlender a Condition ſoever they may be, or be repreſented to be. He has my Lord Middleton as his Secretary of State, he has been all along with him, and it is not ſuppoſable that he ſhould put himſelf to the Trouble of Writing any Commiſſions with his own Hand, when there were others enough to do it for him, and he need only ſign the Top of it James R. much leſs is it ſuppoſable, that he ſhould give any ſuch Commiſſion as this that they ſpeak of, and Write it all with his own Hand, and that Sir George Barcley ſhould bring it over. This is ſuch a nonſenſical ridiculous Story as ought to be rejected with Scorn and Contempt, and is only fit to be laughed at: I hope every Body will look upon it as ſuch, and think that ſuch Evidence is very incredible.

My Lord, Another Thing that I obſerve out of Capt. Porter's Evidence is this, he ſays, he and I was to command a Party; he knows what he himſelf intended to do, but I am ſure I know of no Party that I was to command. It is all a Dream a meer Dream and a Fiction. He thinks fit to acknowledge his own Guilt of a very bad Crime, and he may accuſe himſelf as long as he will, but I think that will not make me Guilty of any ſuch Thing, only becauſe he ſays ſo: He does not ſay what Men they were, or who they were; and it cannot be an Overt-Act, unleſs he can tell who they were. He ſays Sir George Barcley and I met at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and at ſeveral other Places where this Matter was diſcourſed of, and a great many were ſuppoſed to be in the Aſſaſſination, to the Number of Forty; but he does not mention any thing then of its being diſcourſed who they were to be: And is it ſuppoſable when the Deſign he talks of was ſo near being put in Execution, it ſhould not be known who ſhould engage in it? For my part, I deny that ever I was with him at any Place where Sir George Barcley, or any Body elſe, talked of any ſuch thing. When I was examined before the Council, my Lord Keeper asked me when I ſaw the Duke of Berwick? I thought it not fit to anſwer that Queſtion, becauſe I knew the Duke of Berwick was out-lawed here, and I might accuſe my ſelf if I acknowledged having been in his Company, tho' it were at St. Germains. But I ſaid I never believed he was in London, and I do not believe he was. I heard that Colonel Parker was in England, but I did not ſee him; and as to the Major-General and other Officers, they talk of, it is all a Jeſt to me, and it is no way at all to be believed or credited; that becauſe other Men have Notions of Caſtles in the Air, I muſt be ſo fooliſh as to believe ſuch Impertinencies too. He ſays I ſent him a Liſt of Men, and written with my own Hand, and ſubſcribed with the two Letters of my Name; he does not ſwear he ſaw me write it, and Similitude of Hands was never thought good in Criminal Cauſes; and I believe it was never look'd upon for Law, that it ſhould be a good Evidence for a Man to ſwear ſuch a Writing was another Man's own Hand, unleſs he ſays he ſaw him write it, and kept it in his own Cuſtody till it ſhould be produced as Evidence, and produce it in open Court, and not let it go out of his Cuſtody till then. All theſe things, I apprehend, the Law judges neceſſary to make a good Proof of a Writing to be of a Man's own Hand; but here is nothing of that here: Here is nothing produced, nor does he ſay he ſaw me write it; and ſo I think it all goes for nothing, a meer idle Invention of his own. My Lord, upon this Evidence there is not any poſitive Proof of my doing an Overt Act, by buying of Arms or Horſes, or writing Letters, or any thing of that Nature; and I hope if I ſpeak irregularly, your Lordſhip will pardon me; I am no Lawyer, and I have no Aſſiſtance but my own nonſenſical Notes to depend upon for my Defence. My Lord, he ſpeaks about Horſes that were to be provided, but there is no Proof of that; I never bought any Horſes, or borrowed any; nay, nor is there any Proof, that while this bloody Aſſaſſination that he owns himſelf to have contrived and carried on, was on foot, I had ſo much as a Horſe any where, and that I ſhould be ſo vain to get Men to engage in ſuch an Expedition with me, and have never a Horſe my ſelf, is very ſtrange. The Conſpiracy he ſays was depending a long while, and whenever it was to be put in Execution, we were to go expeditiouſly to work, leaſt it ſhould be diſcover'd; and 'tis very ſtrange then that I ſhould never have provided the leaſt thing in the World to do it with! neither Arms, nor Horſe, nor any thing: For there is no Proof of any ſuch thing againſt me, but only Talk, as he is pleaſed to ſwear, to take my Life to ſave his own: And I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will declare to the Jury, that here is no Evidence of any Overt Act againſt me.

My Lord, there is another Thing he ſays againſt me: He ſays he had a Note from me by the Name of Robinſon, to countermand the Orders upon the 15th: My Lord, the Truth of that would depend very much upon the producing of that Note, then it would be ſeen whether it was my Hand, and what it contained, and what it related to: For my part I utterly deny I ever ſent any ſuch Note wherein there was a Word of the King, or of any Fact of this Nature that was to be committed, or any thing relating to it, if it were true that I had written any Note to him at all; and I hope the Jury will conſider, and the Court will direct them ſo to do: For I know not that they are any more skill'd in the Law than my ſelf, and therefore I hope your Lordſhip will give them ample and true Directions, what is Law and what is not Law, and what is Evidence and what is not Evidence; and this cannot be Evidence to affect me at all, there being nothing that doth appear or is produced.

My Lord, he ſays, there were Four that were to go with Sir George Barcley, that were to be appointed out of each Party; he does not ſay I named any, nor does he name any himſelf; but it ſeems they knew what was to be done; and truly if any Thing was to be done, they knew it themſelves (and no Body elſe that I know of) who ſwear to ſave their Lives, and get a Reward. If the Four were to be out of the Party, which he calls his own, he knows them beſt, and I believe the Party was his own, and the Plot his own too, and no Body's elſe; he does not ſay that I appointed any one, he only ſays there were Four to be appointed out of a Party, which Party was in Nubibus, and ſo is the whole Deſign, unleſs it be in his Head, fram'd there by his own Invention, for it only exiſts there that I know of.

My Lord, theſe Obſervations I make upon Captain Porter's Evidence: The next Witneſs is Mr. de la Rue, and he is a very good Evidence indeed, if Hearſay be to be believ'd; he ſays I was very ſhie of Diſcourſing with him about it, that I told him it would come to Nothing, without ſaying what would come to Nothing, not that the Plot would come to Nothing, for there was nothing at all ſpoken of any Plot, much leſs of a Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King. This is all that he ſays, as to me of his own Knowledge, all the reſt relating to me is but what Captain Porter told him. But to begin with the Beginning of his Evidence, he ſays one Thing which is very Odd, that at the Roſe-Tavern, the laſt Year, there was a Conſultation about carrying King William away into France, in a Veſſel alive, and that Sir William Perkins ask'd him whether he would go along with me to Deale, to procure a Veſſel to carry the King over; he might as well have ask'd him to go with me to Conſtantinople, or any other Place in the World, as to Deale, and about any other Employment, as that. A pretty Sort of Thing, that I ſhould go to Deale to hire a Veſſel to carry the King over into France; I that know no Sea-Man, or any Maſter of a Veſſel at Deale, that I ſhould be employ'd to hire a Ship before the Deſign was form'd, as he ſays, it was not come to an Head. If we had got the Prince of Orange into our Power: If we had King William in our Power, how was it poſſible we ſhould ever have carry'd him to Deale, I cannot but think any one would believe us Mad-men to entertain ſuch a Chimera in our Heads. What nonſenſical Stories are all theſe, that we ſhould carry King William to Deale, and I hire a Ship to tranſport him to France; I hope the Jury, and all that hear it, will conſider what ridiculous Stuff, theſe Men talk of, as Evidence againſt Men for their Lives. Then he talks of my coming in a Coach to the Nagg's-Head Door, where I was very ſhie of letting him ſee me, and afterwards when I came out ask'd him to go into the Company; but he was angry that they had deny'd to admit him before, and ſo would not go up: What a ſtrange Sort of a contradictory Story is all this? here was a Conference it ſeems appointed the Night before to be at that Place, when Captain Porter, and Captain King, and Mr. Knightly were juſt come from viewing the Ground, and were to make their Report, and Porter told him of it, and yet they would not admit him, and I was ſhie of him, and yet ask'd him to go up: What contradictory Nonſenſe is this? it muſt needs be look'd upon as improbable or impoſſible to be True, that I ſhould ask him to go up into ſuch a Company, where ſuch a mighty Conference was to be had about ſuch a great Tranſaction, when I had ſhewn my ſelf apparently ſhie of him, by falling back in the Coach, as being unwilling to let him ſee me; I hope the Jury will conſider the ſelf Contradictorineſs and Improbability of ſuch Evidence. Then there is another Thing, and that is, what he ſays Captain King ſaid, he did not believe it would come to any Thing, becauſe he did not like me as being no Soldier, for I was for keeping out of Danger, and having an eaſie Poſt: If he means I had no Mind to be in a Plot, he was in the Right of it, for no Man in his Senſes would ever be engaged in any ſuch deſperate Deſigns, where there is ſuch apparent Deſtruction in view; ſo I cannot apprehend what there is in that of any Objection againſt me, or any Proof that I had a Hand in this Plot, becauſe I deſired to keep out of Danger. It was ſaid that I was to have attacked the King, with Sir George Barcley, but Captain Porter ſays, we were to be together, to attack the Guards; and both can't be True, nor indeed is either of them True, but a Figment and Invention of their own: Then he ſays he ask'd Keys for a good Sword. and he told me I had a very good one: 'Tis true, I had a Sword, I always wore one, but it does not follow that that was to be employ'd upon ſuch an Enterprize as this. And then he tells you a Story again of Captain Porter's having a broad flaming Two-edg'd Sword. But what is all this to the Purpoſe? Does this prove any Thing againſt me, that I conſented to, or was engaged in any ſuch bloody Deſign as this. He ſaith that on Wedneſday he came to me, and ask'd me of the Affair, how it went on; he doth not ſay what the Affair was, nor he doth not ſay it was about killing the King; nor indeed is it probable it ſhould be, for he ſays I was always ſhie of him, and that he could never get any Intelligence but from Captain Porter. He ſaith I told him it was a Thing would not admit of being delay'd, and that only Three People ſhould know ſuch a Thing, but ſtill he doth not tell you what this Thing was, and therefore I do not apprehend how this ſhould affect me, as Evidence of my intending to aſſaſſinate the King. He ſaith he had it from Capt. Porter, that Mr. Chambers was an orderly Man, a Word I do not underſtand, to convey Intelligence to me; and that Duraut was an orderly Man, to convey Intelligence elſewhere: Still this is all but what Captain Porter told him, and there is no Proof that I ſent Mr. Chambers any where; Chambers, I acknowledge I know, he is a poor Man, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, I ſuppoſe, cannot but Remember that he was in Priſon, and try'd before him, upon the Account of Pyracy; I muſt needs ſay, I thought him an honeſt Man, becauſe he had ſerv'd with me in Ireland: I knew he was in great want, and therefore I gave him his Diet and Lodging; there is no Proof that I furniſhed him with Money, but I acknowledge I did with Bread and Drink, to keep him from Starving; that I think was an Act of Charity, but it cannot be interpreted, nor is there any Proof to warrant it, that it was with any ill Deſign, or that I gave it him to hire him or engage him to any ſuch Purpoſe. My Lord, they would make it as if the Perſons that were intended to be imploy'd in this pretended Plot, were to be regular Troops, and to have Courts of Guard, and to be diſpos'd of into Quarters, and this was to be done by theſe orderly Men: I profeſs I know not what to make of it, it is ſuch a Medley, a Fancy, and a Chimera, that it is perfectly Unintelligible, whether theſe were to be general Officers, or private Centinels, or what. Then my Lord, he ſaith Cranbourne brought a Liſt from me to Captain Porter, with R. C. at the Bottom: Firſt, that does not prove that it was my Liſt, nor doth that R. C. being at the Bottom of the Liſt, make me a Partner in this Conſpiracy. Then he ſaith that Cranbourne came to the Blue-Poſts, as from me, to acquaint them of the Diſappointment, becauſe the King did not go out that Day: Surely, my Lord, I need not trouble you with ſaying any Thing to this, for it is all, as to me, but Hearſay; and what am I concern'd in that which other People talk amongſt themſelves? tho' they do uſe my Name, how can I help that? My Lord, he ſaith himſelf that he intended to diſcover this Conſpiracy a Year ago, but the Thing failing then, which how ridiculous it was I obſerved before, he let it alone for that Time; but when I met him at the Nag's-Head Door, and he was ſo angry for their not admitting him into their Company, which was three Weeks before this Deſign they talk of was to be executed, he had a Mind to go to the Secretaries, and get Warrants and Meſſengers to apprehend us; and he ſaith he hath often come to me, to ask about the Affair, as he calls it, but I was ſtill reſerv'd and ſhye, and told him nothing would come of it. From all this I would obſerve that I have very good Reaſon to look upon him to be no Evidence, not only for the ſame Reaſon that I objected againſt Mr. Porter, that by his own Acknowledgment he is Particeps Criminis, but his coming to me after he reſolved to diſcover, plainly declares, that he ſet himſelf to be a Trapanner, and no Trappanner can in the Judgment of any honeſt or underſtanding Man, be a credible Perſon as an Evidence to take away any Man's Life: I am ſure what he ſaith of my Shyeneſs to converſe with him, and his own frequent Attempts to converſe with me, ſhews plainly, he was willing to Trapan me, for ſo he himſelf ſaith. He came to me ſeveral Times, and took me aſide, to ask how the Affair went on, but he did it only to enable himſelf, to make the better Diſcovery, which makes him Ten thouſand Times worſe, than if he had only gone at Firſt and told what he pretends he knew, and afterwards forbore the Company. Beſides, my Lord, as to Trapanning, I have read in a Book of Sir Robert Atkins, that to be Particeps Criminis, proves a Perſon to be a bad Man, and conſequently not ſo Credible, eſpecially if it can appear the Witneſs has Trapan'd the Priſoner into the committing the Crime; then the Witneſs will appear to be guilty of a far more higher Crime than the Priſoner, and therefore ought not to be believ'd as a credible Witneſs againſt the Priſoner, for he is a credible Witneſs that has the Credit of being a good and honeſt Man, which a Trapanner cannot have; and this Trapanning proves withal that the Trapanner did bear a Spight, and Malice againſt the Perſon Trapanned, and intended to do him a Miſchief, and deſign'd to take away his Life: Shall ſuch a one, ſays he, be a credible Witneſs, and be believed againſt him? God forbid!

My

My Lord, as to Mr. Pendergraſs, who is the next Witneſs, I do not take my ſelf to be much concerned in all he ſaith. I think I have ſeen him but once of a great while, and that was on the Wedneſday or Thurſday before I was taken up; but, my Lord, I have this to ſay to his Evidence, I deſire your Lordſhip to obſerve I was not in the Proclamation, though he was: They took Occaſion to have me ſecured as a Colour, or to ſave Expences, I ſuppoſe, while they themſelves went out of the Way, to have their Names put into the Proclamation; that ſome Body might colourably take them, and get the King's Money. All that he ſaith of me, is, that Cranbourne brought Meſſages from me: One Time I writ a Note, ſign'd R. Robinſon; another Time I ſent a Liſt ſubſcribed R. C. and that Porter ſhew'd him them both; but all this is but Hear-ſay, ſtill out of the Mouth of Porter, and can be no Proof at all againſt me. He ſaith, upon the Diſappointment he and they went to Epſom, which to me ſeems a very remarkable Thing; for if he ſay true, it is plain, this was before by him diſcover'd at Court; and to me it ſhews, that he had a ſtrong Deſign of getting Money, and taking away Peoples Lives upon that Account; and that Captain Porter was in the ſame Deſign: For De la Rue ſaith, Captain Porter ask'd him to go with them, as well as Pendergraſs. Now can it be ſuppoſed, that theſe three ſhould agree to go together, unleſs they were in a Combination, as it appears they now are? And I cannot but think, the Court and the Jury will think it reaſonable to believe: For if I was in a Plot of ſuch a Nature as this, and ſhould hurry out of Town after I had diſcover'd it, with three or four of the People that were concern'd in it, and ſome of them afterwards pretend to be Diſcoverers too, no Body in the World can believe but they contriv'd the Thing amongſt themſelves, and went out of Town only for a Colour, that they might be put in the Proclamation, and pretend to be taken, to entitle themſelves to the Reward.

L. C. J. Really, Mr. Charnock, I am loth to interrupt you in any Part of your Defence, but I do not underſtand what you mean by this, and I very willingly would underſtand you if I could.

Char. My Lord, I ſay, I look upon it, that they were all combin'd together in a Deſign to get the King's Money, and take away our Lives; that Porter ſhould deſire them to go with him, into the Country, and particularly Mr. Pendergraſs, who diſcover'd this to the King, and then that he ſhould agree to go with him.

L. C. J. Truly, I do not underſtand the Force of your Argument; that becauſe upon the ſuppoſed Diſcovery, Captain Porter went to Epſom, and Mr. Pendergraſs went with him, therefore this muſt be a Deſign between them to get the King's Money, I cannot any Way ſee how that muſt follow.

Char. Pray, my Lord, to what End ſhould he run out of Town, upon the Apprehenſion of the Diſcovery, and with Captain Porter too, when he actually had got the King's Promiſe that he ſhould be ſafe, and not be a Witneſs, unleſs it were a Combination between them, in order to ſet up as Witneſſes againſt us, to get the King's Money?

L. C. J. I'll tell you, why he was willing to go with Captain Porter, becauſe he had not a Mind that the Diſcovery he had made, ſhould be any Way known to have come from him; for you ſee how unwilling he was to name Names, and ſo kept Captain Porter Company ſtill, as his Friend, reſolving not to be an Evidence againſt him.

Char. Well, my Lord, after all, I hope, what he ſaith cannot be look'd upon as any Evidence againſt me; becauſe whatſoever he ſaith relating to me, is about the Notes and Meſſages that he ſaith were brought to Captain Porter, and all of it can amount at the utmoſt to Hearſay from other People's Mouths. My Lord, the laſt Evidence that I apprehend relates any Way to me, is that of Mr. Bertram, and he talks of what I ſhould ſay to him upon the ninth of February, that I ſhould take him into a back Room into my Lodgings, and there tell him, That there was ſomething in Hand for the Reſtoring King James, but there was ſomewhat to be done firſt to take off the Spark, or I do not know what, nor do I believe any Body elſe doth know how to make any thing of it. It is a very improbable Thing, that this Matter which was to be ſo great a Secret, and which I ſhould ſay, was not fit to be communicated to above Three People at once, I ſhould ſend for a private Trooper, for he was no otherwiſe, to communicate ſo great a Matter to him; beſides that, I cannot, nor, I believe, can any Body elſe tell what to make of the Words, Taking off the Spark, how to conſtrue that to make it an Evidence of an Intention to kill the King. It might be probable I might ſay. there was a Noiſe that King James would come, for it hath been in the Gazettes and the publick Prints, that there was ſuch an Expectation, and Preparation for it on the Coaſt of France; but it is not probable, I am ſure it is not true, that I ſhould ſay there was ſomething to be done firſt, for the taking off the Spark. Evidence of a Thing of this Nature ought to be plain and clear, and diſtinct: He doth ſay nothing that I talk'd to him of Killing the King, or of Aſſaſſinating him, or of my asking him to be one in any ſuch Thing, and that I furniſh'd him with Arms, and an Horſe on any ſuch Deſign, but only that he might ride out, and take the Air, and there he ſhould meet with ſome of his Acquaintance: What unaccountable looſe Stuff, is all this? It is very ſtrange, my Lord, that if I liked the Man ſo well, as I muſt do if I would ſend for him to communicate a Thing of this Nature to him, that I ſhould not put it into a Method, that he might be one with us in the Execution of it: But there cannot be any Thing inferred of that Nature, for which we ſtand accuſed, from any Words that he ſaith were ſpoken. My Lord, he doth ſay indeed that he told me, that he had diſpoſed of himſelf otherwiſe; but that is no more certain, nor can be referred to any particular Thing, than the reſt, He might diſpoſe of himſelf to a Friend, he might diſpoſe of himſelf to his Wife; but what is all that to this Purpoſe? And he might indeed, if King James came, diſpoſe of himſelf to aſſiſt him, or to oppoſe him, or to let it alone; but all this is nothing to the Buſineſs for which we are here to be try'd, it's all looſe, idle, impertinent Talk, and not at all to the Purpoſe. And then he ſaith, that afterwards I met him at Lincoln's-Inn back Gate, and took him into Lincoln's-Inn, and told him, there were Warrants out, and we had as good do the Buſineſs preſently. My Lord, I do remember I met him at Lincoln's-Inn Gate, and it was upon Saturday the Day before I was taken up, and it was about Twelve a Clock at Noon, and I did hear there were Warranss out, but there never was that Intimacy between him and me, that I ſhould deſire him to come to my Lodging, or that I ſhould ſupport him in any Sort. My Lord, I have made a few Remarks to your Lordſhip and the Jury, upon the Evidence; I am ſenſible I have given the Court a great deal of Trouble, but I hope you will conſider it is for my Life, and my All, and I hope you will be of Opinion, that the Evidence produced againſt me is frivolous and weak, and that the Witneſſes have a very bad Cauſe of it, ſince all that they talk of, if it were true, is only Diſcourſe, and they are forced to ſupply in Words, what they want in Fact.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay, Sir?

Char. Yes, my Lord, I deſire to take Notice to the Court and the Jury, that the Buſineſs of bare Words was never look'd upon in Law as an Overt Act to prove a Man guilty of High Treaſon, nor that ſeveral Perſons met together doth prove a Conſpiracy. Theſe Perſons proving that I met with them doth not prove that I was concerned in the Aſſaſſination, nor that I conſented to any ſuch Thing; beſides, my Lord, I am taxed in the Indictment with buying Arms and Horſes for this Buſineſs; but there is not one Word of it proved, or of my riding out to view the Ground, nor any thing, that I was to be concern'd about this villanous Act. My Lord, if I had bought any Arms, that had not been an Overt Act of it ſelf; it muſt be proved firſt that I bought them with ſuch an Intent to employ them about ſuch a Buſineſs; and it neither is, nor can be proved, that I furniſh'd any Body with Horſes or Arms: And therefore the bare Buying of Arms of it ſelf, as far as I am informed of the Law, would be no Proof of an Overt Act. To prove an Overt Act of Treaſon by the buying of Arms, it muſt be prov'd that I declar'd ſome way that I bought them with ſuch an Intent, or elſe it is no Proof at all; but now if you have no Evidence that I bought any Arms at all, I look upon it that there is no Poſſibility to make that an Overt Act. If you pleaſe, my Lord, to bear with me to give you the Trouble of Reading ſome ſhort Notes, which I have takeh out of ſome Law-Books about Overt Acts.

L. C. J. No, the Court won't think it any Trouble: Make your Defence as well as you can, and take your own Way.

Char. Ey Lord, I hope you will allow what hath been collected out of the Books of Law as to Overt Acts: There is Hale's Pleas of the Crown is poſitive in it, That an Overt Act muſt be alledged in every Indictment, and proved; That Compaſſing the Death of the King by bare Words, is no Overt Act. Now if bare Words be no Overt Act, why then all the Conſpiracy that is here proved, ſuppoſing all to be true that is ſaid, it is no Overt Act; for it is all but Words ſtill. And bare Conſpiring is no Overt Act, according to my Lord Coke's Opinion in his Third Inſtitutes; and the utmoſt of all that any of them prove againſt me is, that I did ſay ſo, and ſo, which is but bare Conſpiring. Pray, my Lord, let me know upon what Law it is that I am Indicted and Try'd, I ſuppoſe it is upon 25 Edw. 3.

L. C. J. Yes, you are, and only upon that Statute.

Char. My Lord, Coke, in his Third Inſtitutes, ſaith, The Open Act muſt be manifeſtly proved. If divers conſpire the Death of the King, and the Manner how, and thereupon provide Weapons, Powder, Poiſon, ſend Letters, or the like, for the Execution of the Conſpiracy, or Preparation be made by ſome Overt Act, to depoſe the King, or take him by Force, or by ſtrong Hand, or impriſon him; theſe are ſufficient Overt Acts, to prove the Compaſſing the King's Death. But by this it is plain, that bare Conſpiring is not Treaſon, as wanting a ſufficient Overt Act to declare the Intention. Now, my Lord, I ſay, that in all this Evidence that hath been given againſt me, there is not one Overt Act proved of my Providing Arms, or ſending Letters, or the like. And the ſame Page of the ſame Book, the Third Inſtitutes, Chap. High-Treaſon, upon the Words proveable Attaint, it muſt be by Overt Act, it muſt be upon direct and manifeſt Proof, not upon conjectural Preſumptions or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: So that the ſtrongeſt Preſumptions upon the whole Earth will never be able to make an Overt Act, without plain and manifeſt Proof. And, my Lord, I do inſiſt, here is not plain and manifeſt Proof, or any Overt Act, but only Preſumptions in the whole Scene of the Thing. I muſt beg the Favour of the Court as to one particular Thing. Your Lordſhip, no doubt, knows the Law very well. I am here an ignorant Man, unable to defend my ſelf by the Forms of Law; but I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will not let me ſuffer any Damage upon that Account. You are always preſumed to be of Council for the Priſoners; and I look upon it as aſſured, that you will do that Juſtice to Perſons in our Circumſtances, as truly to inſtruct the Jury how they ſhall behave themſelves in Relation to this Matter that is now upon Enquiry before them. Particularly, my Lord, I deſire they may be told plainly and truly, what is Proof of an Overt Act, and what is not; and when your Lordſhip ſums up the Evidence, you will tell the Jury directly and plainly, what is Legal Evidence, and what is not; and then what is ſufficient Proof of any one Overt Act or Species of Treaſon; and that you would not leave it to the Apprehenſion of the Jury, what they do believe, but inform them really and truly what is Legal Evidence, and what of that Sort hath been given to Day. My Lord, here is a ſtrange Sort of Thing, a Conſpiracy, which conſider'd in the general bath neither Head nor Tail; how many there were to be is uncertain. In the Indictment is ſaid, there were Forty Men to do this Fact upon the King in his Coach, and for Attacking the Guards. Can it be ſuppoſed, that any Man in his Senſes would do ſuch an Act as this, without Reſpect to have Security for himſelf and his Family, or thoſe he is concerned for? I know not how great Wits theſe People be in other Things, but I am ſure they ſhew no Wit in this, I look upon it to be ſo deſperate a Thing. The Guards are at leaſt treble the Number, and better appointed; and that Forty ſhould go to aſſault treble the Number, and in divided Bodies too, that were only to mix Fury and Malice with Reſolution, to be torn in Pieces by the Mob upon an apparent viſible Diſappointment. And when we had done this, and made this Attempt, where were we to go? We had no Aſylum that we can hear of, nor Caſtle or Fort to retire to, nor none that were to back or aſſiſt us; and I am ſure no Man in his Wits would undertake a deſperate Attempt without Aſſurance of a Retreat. If I was reſolved to kill any Man, I would propoſe to my ſelf ſome Place, to which I might repair for Shelter and Safety when I had done. If then we were in our Senſes, it cannot be imagined we ſhould ever engage in ſo apparently deſtructive a Deſign. We ought rather to have been confin'd to Bedlam, than any other Place, if we could be thought guilty of ſo much Raſhneſs and Folly. My Lord, I pretend not to make any particular

Reflections

Reflections upon these Gentlemen that have given Evidence here; but only I must take leave to say in general, That there are none of them, but that if they have had any Fortunes in the World, their Circumstances as to that Matter are now much altered; and if any Persons will be Evidence against others for their Lives in Hopes to repair those Fortunes, and concerning Matters in which they were engaged themselves in, as they do acknowledge, and if it be true, it must be thro' the Desperateness of their Fortunes, it is the most barbarous and inhumane Sort of Evidence that ever was given by any that ever had any Sense of Honour, and must be a base Reflection upon any who pretend themselves to be Gentlemen: And I hope the King will think them upon that Account very little deserving Credit. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will please to consider, that what I have offer'd is but what my own sudden Thoughts could suggest to me out of the confused little Remarks I have been able to make upon the Evidence; and it is the more confused and immethodical, because I could have no Council to assist me. I would only put your Lordship in Mind once more, of what I earnestly desire and insist upon from your Lordship, that you would tell the Jury plainly and truly what Evidence it is the Law requires to convict any Person of the Crime, for which I stand accused; what Things are necessary to make up that Evidence, what is a Legal Proof of an Overt Act, and what Overt Acts have been plainly and manifestly proved against me in this Case, and not leave the Construction of the Evidence to the Apprehension or Inclination of the Jury. This is all the Favour that I have to beg of the Court, and I hope I need not doubt the Justice of the Jury.

L. C. J. Have you done, Sir?

Char. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then what say you, Mr. King?

King. My Lord, I must insist upon a great many Things that Mr. Charnock hath said. But as to what relates to my self, Captain Porter saith, I went with him and Mr. Knightley to view the Ground where this Design was to be executed. Truly, my Lord, I did go abroad with Captain Porter and Mr. Knightley; but it was meerly to take the Air, and no other Thing. Truly, my Lord, I have not taken any Notes of the Evidence, nor have I had any Council to assist me, and so I am not very capable of making my Defence.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to say?

King. As to Mr. De la Rue, he doth not pretend to say, I did ever tell him of any Thing of a Design of destroying the King: And as to the Sword he speaks of, he knows I always wore one, and ever had one.

L. C. J. Well, is this all you have to say?

King. And as to Mr. Pendergrass, he saith, he saw me at the Rose Tavern in Covent Garden, where we discoursed something of the Matter; but he tells you not what that Matter was, nor what the Discourse was. And as to Mr. Boyse, he doth not tax me with any Design of killing the King: Nay, he saith, I did not mention any such Thing to him. And as to the Matter of an Overt Act, what is an Overt Act and what not, and what is good Proof of it, and what not, I must refer to your Lordship and the Court.

Char. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, there is one Thing I forgot to offer to your Lordship, There is no Place laid in the Indictment, nor no Set Number of Men ascertained.

L. C. J. At present you are out of Time, for that you might have spoke to it before the Evidence was given, or you may speak to it after the Verdict is brought in, if there be Occasion.

Char. My Lord, I am ignorant in the Forms of Law.

L. C. J. If you will observe any Thing out of the Evidence, you may, now is the Time.

Char. My Lord, I think the Evidence is inconsistent with the Indictment: For the Indictment doth say positively, that there were Horses and Arms bought and provided. Now if this be an essential Overt Act, as I apprehend it is, according to my Lord Coke, to prove the Compassing the King's Death, then there hath been no Evidence to support this Indictment; for there is no Proof of the Buying of any Horses or Arms.

L. C. J. They tell you there were Forty provided.

Char. My Lord, I have taken some Notes, as well as I could, upon reading of the Indictment; and in the first place it is said, That it was agreed there should be Forty Horse-men armed of us, Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keys; which I take to be Nonsense and impossible.

Mr. Att. Gen. But there is, and others in the Indictment too.

Char. It is Quadragint' Homines equestres de ipso Roberto Charnock.

L. C. J. And divers others, to the Jurors unknown. May not they make Forty? Thirty seven and you Three will make Forty.

Char. That divers others is so uncertain, that no one can tell whether it be five or five thousand; and I know not what will make an Indictment void, if Uncertainty will not.

L. C. J. But your Time of Exceptions to the Validity of the Indictment is not now, we are now only upon the Tryal of the Fact.

Char. My Lord, I was advis'd by my Council that if I could find a Flaw in the Indictment, I must mention it, and take the Advantage of it before the Summing up.

L. C. J. You were not well advised; for after the Jury is sworn, we are only to have Regard to the Fact, and we are now upon the Tryal of the Fact; and the only Thing we have under Consideration upon the Fact and the Evidence is, Whether upon this Evidence that hath been given, you are guilty or not of the Fact that's charg'd upon you in the Indictment?

Char. My Lord, I crave your Pardon, and I hope you will take no Advantage of my Ignorance, not being used to these Proceedings.

L. C. J. As to what you said at first, that there was no Overt Act proved, because there is no Proof of buying Horses or Arms; it is true, that is one Overt Act laid in the Indictment, and there is some Evidence given of it; but what that Evidence will amount unto will be a farther Consideration by and by.

Char. There was another Observation, my Lord, that I have made upon the Indictment, that it is uncertain upon the Word tunc; there is no Time assigned, nor no Place: Pray what Time doth this tunc refer too?

Mr. Att. Gen. When the King went out.

L. C. J. But these Things are not proper now, I tell you we are upon the Fact. Mr. King, have you any more to say? because Mr. Charnock interrupted you.

King. My Lord, if there be any Objection that Mr. Charnock hath made, would be of any Advantage to me, I hope you will let me be heard by my Council, that I may have the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. I tell you, that is not proper now; you may have the Benefit of any Objection of that Nature, if there be an Occaſion, after the Verdict: Now we are only conſidering the Evidence upon the Iſſue, Guilty or not Guilty; and you are now to apply your ſelves to that.

King. My Lord, I think I have anſwered all the Evidence.

L. C. J. Well then, Mr. Keys, What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Keys. My Lord, all that I have to ſay is, I was a Servant to Captain Porter, and I did nothing but by his Order.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to ſay?

Keys. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then I muſt tell you, no Man is ſuch a Servant that the Commands of his Maſter can excuſe him for committing High-Treaſon.

Keys. I did but obey his Commands.

L. C. J. But I tell you again, no Man is ſo much under the Command of his Maſter, as that he ought to obey him, if he command him to commit High-Treaſon. It is proved you bought Horſes, and he told you upon what Deſign, and you engaged in it.

Keys. I did not hear any Thing of it, my Lord. My Maſter was pleaſed to jeſt with me ſeveral Times, and he might ſay a great many Things that I did not much regard.

L. C. J. You were by when your Maſter, as you call him, promiſed Mr. Pendergraſs his Musketoon, and Mr. King told Pendergraſs, he hoped he would not fear breaking the Glaſs Windows.

Keys. Indeed I do not remember any ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. And there are ſeveral other Particulars ſworn againſt you: But have you any Thing more to ſay?

Keys. Nothing, but that I did what my Maſter order'd me to do.

L. C. J. Have you all done then? If you have any more to ſay, you muſt ſpeak it now, becauſe you cannot ſpeak after the King's Council have ſummed up; they muſt have the laſt Word: Have you any Witneſſes to call, or any Thing more to ſay?

Char. No, my Lord, we have nothing more to ſay, but leave it to your Lordſhip entirely.

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, and I think the Matter hath been fully proved as Mr. Attorney at firſt opened it; That there was a Deſign of an Invaſion on this Kingdom from France, and of an Inſurrection within this Kingdom, to abet that Invaſion, and as an Inducement to both, of a barbarous and abominable Aſſaſſination upon the Perſon of the King, and that the Priſoners at the Bar had an Hand in this Conſpiracy.

Now, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, That for the two firſt Parts of this Deſign, the Invaſion and the Inſurrection, we have given you no other Evidence now, but ſome ſhort Hints, that ſuch a Thing was intended; and we did it purpoſely for this Reaſon, becauſe the Priſoners, tho' they were concerned too in thoſe other Parts of this Plot, yet they are not now indicted for that Matter, but only for a direct Conſpiracy to murder and aſſaſſinate the King: We have Abundance of Witneſſes to prove the other Parts at ſeveral Times againſt a great many as well as them; but we confine our ſelves now to this Particular, as it ſtands charged againſt theſe Perſons in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, There is an Overt Act alledged in the Indictment, as it by Law is neceſſary to do, to prove the Treaſon, which is Compaſſing the Death of the King; and it is by Law a good Overt Act, That they did at ſuch a Place, that is to ſay, the Pariſh of St. Clements in the County of Middleſex, on the 10th of February laſt, conſult and agree to carry on ſuch a Deſign; now it is not material, as my Lords the Judges will tell you, in Point of Law, to prove all the ſeveral Conſultations to be in that Pariſh, nor to have been upon the Day alledged in the Indictment; for if it be any Day before or after the Times ſpecified in the Indictment, ſo it be before the Indictment preferr'd, and if it be at any Place within the County wherein the Indictment is laid, it is ſufficient; the Thing that is material to be proved, is, Whether they did meet upon ſuch a Deſign before the Indictment, within this County.

This Deſign, Gentlemen, we in Law call High-Treaſon; the higheſt Crime that our Law, or the Law of any other Government, takes Notice of, and it very well deſerves to go under that Name; for it tends to ſubvert the very Foundations of the Government, without which no Subject is ſafe; and to bring all into Confuſion and Deſolation, by taking away the Life of the King, who is the Head of this Government; which Life the Law makes ſacred above all others, becauſe without that be ſafe, there can be no Safety to any particular Perſon.

Gentlemen, We have proved this bloody Conſpiracy moſt fully againſt all the Priſoners at the Bar: I will not take up ſo much of your Time, as to repeat every Particular of the Evidence that hath been given; but only ſhortly remind you of what hath been materially ſaid againſt each of them by the Witneſſes that have been produced.

Againſt Mr. Charnock, there is firſt Mr. Porter, who hath ſworn, That he and others met, and conſulted about this Deſign, agreed upon it, and on the Ways and Methods for carrying it on; and he names the Places where, and the Times when thoſe Conſultations were had: Then there is Mr. De la Rue, who ſaith, he ask'd Mr. Charnock, how the Affair went on? and he anſwered, he was afraid it would come to nothing; that ſhews he was willing it ſhould come to ſomething, though perhaps he might be fearful whether it would take Place or no. Mr. Pendergraſs ſaith, Mr. Charnock ſent a Note to Mr. Porter to countermand the Orders for the 15th, ſubſcribed by the Name of Robinſon; but that is only a concurring Evidence to that of Captain Porter, who ſaid before, he had ſuch a Note; but Bertram tells you, That he ask'd him if he would be one in the Deſign to take off the Spark? And that after he heard Warrants were out, he would have had him joined in the putting it in immediate Execution, and aſſured him there would be Safety in ſo doing.

Againſt Mr. King, there are the ſame Witneſſes, Mr. Porter, and Mr. De la Rue, who tell you of the Diſcourſes at Captain Porter's Lodgings, where

Mr.

Mr. Pendergraſs was likewiſe, who tells you the Times, viz. the 15th and 22d of February laſt, the Days when this wicked Deſign was to have been put in Execution, and there they conſulted about Carrying it on. Mr. Boyſe likewiſe tells you of the Diſcourſe he had with King; he would not indeed directly tell him, what the Deſign was, but Mr. Boyſe did ſuſpect what it might be; for Mr. King told him Sir George Barcley was come, and Mr. Boyſe ſhould have a Horſe, and make one, and it would ſoon be over.

Then for Keys, there are three poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; there's his Maſter, as he calls him, Captain Porter, who ſwears, That Keys knew of it, and conſented to it. Mr. Pendergraſs ſaith, Keys was one that met at Captain Porter's the 15th of February, to put the Deſign in Execution that Day. De la Rue tells you, Keys was in the Chamber at that Time, and in other Places, conſulting about it, and ſo muſt needs know of it, and conſent to it. So that Gentlemen, if you believe theſe Witneſſes, as I ſee no Reaſon offered to the contrary, we have moſt manifeſtly proved upon them all three, the Matters charged in the Indictment.

As to what they ſpeak of the Witneſſes being Trepanners, and ſwearing them out of their Lives to ſave their own; it is plain, the Priſoners deſigned to trepan the King out of his Life, and ſome the Priſoners would have trepann'd to have join'd with them in that Deſign, who honeſtly and honourably diſcover'd it, and now the Priſoners Danger is a Safety to the Nation.

Gentlemen, They argue againſt the Belief of this Conſpiracy, from the Improbability that any Perſon ſhould be ſo deſperate to engage in ſo wicked a Deſign. Truly had this been a Matter that had been only talked and diſcours'd of once, that might have been the better alledg'd; but when there have been ſo many Meetings at ſeveral Times and Places, and ſuch Methods taken for the putting this Conſpiracy in Execution, and after a Diſappointment one Day, put off to another; nay, and as it hath been prov'd, it hath been a Project that hath been tranſacting for ſeveral Years, from one Year to another, and all this made as manifeſtly evident, as Proof by Teſtimony can make it; the Objection of Improbability will ſoon vaniſh into nothing; and I hope you will think, as I believe all the World doth, or will after this Tryal, That there hath been ſuch a barbarous, bloody Conſpiracy, as in the Indictment is alledg'd, and that theſe Perſons are guilty of it, and that you will give your Verdict accordingly.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, I would only add to what Mr. Sollicitor hath ſaid, ſome few Obſervations that have been omitted of the Evidence that hath been given againſt the Priſoners.

The Treaſon charged, is a Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King's Perſon, the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment are ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations in order to the bringing it to Effect, and the providing Men and Horſes to put it in Execution.

This Charge we have fully proved againſt the ſeveral Priſoners at the Bar, by two Witneſſes at the leaſt, and it is manifeſt that they were all concern'd in the ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations for the Carrying on this Deſign.

As for Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter's Evidence is very full as to his providing Arms and Horſes; and there is beſides, Mr. De la Rue, who though he met him at the Tavern, and not being admitted at firſt, took it ill, yet afterwards at two Meetings he did diſcourſe with him about it; and Bertram gives an Account, how he would engage him in it.

As to Mr. King, there is not only Captain Porter, who teſtifies, that he dined with him the 14th of February, where they did diſcourſe of this intended Aſſaſſination, but De la Rue likewiſe, that ſaid, there was a Meeting appointed for Porter, and King, and another, to go and take a View of the Ground; and the Priſoner himſelf owns he did ride out with them, but he would have it only to take the Air: Captain Porter tells you, it was to ſee which was the moſt convenient Place, and that the Place pitched upon was the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green.

And for Keys, there are two poſitive Witneſſes, Capt. Porter and Mr. De la Rue, that he was at the Blue Poſts, and at Mr. Porter's Lodgings when this Matter was conſulted of, and particularly that he came and gave an Account of the Diſappointment the ſecond Day, upon the Guards coming back.

Beſides, Mr. Porter gives an Account in general, of ſeveral that were to provide Arms, Horſes, and Men; and Mr. Bertram proves that Mr. Charnock told him, the Deſign was to take off the Spark, and then the Time would come, that King James would come back quietly. Mr. Boyſe ſwears, King told him on the 14th of February, that he was to go out upon a Deſign the next Day, and that he ſhould have a Horſe provided, which next Day, the 15th, is by all the Witneſſes agreed to be the firſt Time appointed for the Aſſaſſination; and Mr. Bertram adds, that he met with Charnock the 22d, who told him Warrants were out, and it was beſt to go and do the Buſineſs preſently, and deſired him to come to his Lodgings, and he went to his Lodgings, and found ſeveral Perſons there—

Charnock. He does ſay no ſuch Thing, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. He does ſay, that Mr. Charnock deſir'd him to come to his Lodgings.

Mr. Conyers. As I apprehend him, he ſays, he went thither in the Evening on the 22d.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays, Mr. Charnock would have had him come, but he did not, the Time that he was at his Lodging, was before.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, if I miſtake, I beg Pardon of the Court, and of the Priſoner too.

L. C. J. As I take it, there is no coming to his Lodging at all, but the 9th or 10th of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays, the 9th of February he met with Trevor, who carry'd him to Charnock's Lodgings, and then he would have engaged him in the Deſign of Taking off the Spark; the Meeting of the 22d was afterwards in Lincoln's-Inn, and there was no going to the Lodging that Day.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I am very loth to take up any of your Time; but I would beg the Favour to obſerve two or three Paſſages relating to this Matter, which have not been obſerved yet; and ſhall only mention ſo much as I think has been omitted.

The Defence that has been made, has been principally by Mr. Charnock; and upon his Defence, it ſeems, the Reſt do depend; therefore I would beg Leave to make ſome few Remarks upon the Defence that he has made. He ſays, That all the Evidence is but Hearſay, as to him, and no Overt Act of his own proved; but, my Lord, I queſtion not, if the Evidence be looked into, it will appear ſufficient not only to prove him guilty beyond Contradiction, of all that is charg'd upon him in the Indictment; but particularly, that he was the principal Agent (under Sir George Barclay) in carrying on this whole Conſpiracy.

For Captain Porter tells you, That Charnock firſt acquainted him with Sir George Barclay's Coming over with the Commiſſion; that Charnock brought Sir George Barclay to the Lodgings, where they both lay; that they had ſeveral Meetings, at which he was always preſent, and a main Promoter of the Deſign; That he agreed to find a principal Quota of the Perſons that were to be concerned; particularly, That he was to find Eight Men, and ſeem'd always moſt zealous for the Execution of it.

Then as to Mr. King, it is plain, That Knightley, and Captain Porter, and he, went to view the Ground; and Mr. De la Rue tells you, what Report King made of that View; That with great Joy King acquainted him, they had found the rareſt Place in the World for the Execution of their Deſign, a Wood hard by the King's Houſe at Richmond; and then he opens the whole Manner of the Ambuſcade, and the Deſign.

Charnock. It is at the Liberty of any Body to ſwear what they pleaſe; but I hope the Jury will conſider the Nature of the Evidence.

Mr. Comp. Mr. De la Rue tells you further, ſomething more than Hearſay, as to Mr. Charnock; That he ask'd Mr. Charnock about the Matter, what was like to come of it? And he anſwered him, That he feared the Succeſs of it; for that a Thing of ſuch a Nature was not to be truſted to above Three. Which could not refer to the intended Invaſion, and the Inſurrection; for as to that, it is plain from the Nature of the Thing it ſelf, that it muſt be communicated to a great many, or elſe they could not be ready to aſſiſt in it: And therefore it is evident, it was the Aſſaſſination which he was in haſte to have executed, ſaying, it had been delay'd too long, and that was as dangerous as communicating it to too many.

My Lord, I ſhall make my Words good to you, and rather than take up your Time in making Repetition of what has been ſaid, I will chuſe to break my Method, and omit what might be further obſerved: It is true, it was a Miſtake of the Day as to Bertram's Evidence of his Going to Charnock's Lodging, but that is not material; for it is in Proof, he did go to his Lodgings the 8th or 9th of February, and there Charnock told him that King James was a coming; but there was a Service to be done firſt, to take off the Spark, and then the King would come in quietly; if that Deſign took Effect, it would anſwer his Expectation: He was to ride out to take the Air, and meet ſome of his Acquaintance, and after all was over, we ſhould be very happy. The Words indeed were ſomething dark, but yet the Intent and Meaning of them are pretty manifeſt, not only from the Words to take off the Spark, but becauſe this Action, whatever it was, was to precede the Invaſion of King James with the French Forces, and was to be done in Order to it, and therefore could not be meant of it, nor of joining with it.

My Lord, I ſhall trouble you no further, but ſubmit to your Direction.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Theſe Three Priſoners at the Bar, (viz.) Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keys ſtand indicted of High-Treaſon, for conſpiring, compaſſing, and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King, and that in a very bloody and barbarous Manner, by Way of Aſſaſſination; and the Indictment charges them, that they did meet and conſult with divers other Traitors unknown to the Jurors, and there did reſolve upon this Aſſaſſination, and Horſes and Arms were prepared and provided for the Execution of it.

The Queſtion, Gentlemen, that you are to try is, Whether theſe Perſons who ſtand now thus accuſed, are guilty of this Crime or not? And you have heard a very long Evidence; Five Witneſſes have been produced, and they have given upon this Occaſion a very large Account of the whole Tranſaction, which I will obſerve to you as briefly as I can.

In the firſt Place, Gentlemen, you are told, how there had been a Deſign forming, even for ſome Years, for the Reſtoring of the late King James, and the Depriving and Depoſing of this King. It ſeems it was a Deſign before the Buſineſs of Cape la Hogue, which you remember very well was in the Year 1692. about the Time of the Burning a great Part of the French Fleet by Admiral Ruſſell; but this Deſign, though it met with ſeveral Diſappointments, yet did not die, it had its Ebbings and its Flowings, ſometimes it was higher, and at other Times lower; and in Winter was Twelve Months it began to be more vigorouſly proſecuted than at any Time before, ſince the La Hogue Buſineſs; and then there was a Reſolution fram'd of attempting the Perſon and Life of the King, which appears by Capt. Porter's and Mr. De la Rue's Teſtimony. And great Hopes were conceiv'd amongſt them, that it might be effected before the King went over into Flanders; but it ſeems they wanted a Commiſſion from Abroad, (which they thought neceſſary as an Authority for them to act under) which not coming in Time, the King went over to Flanders, and ſo for that Time the Execution of it was deferred.

Gentlemen, after the King's Return from Flanders, the Proſecution of this Deſign was reſumed, and Intimation was given, that a Commiſſion was brought over by Sir George Barclay from King James, which was to make War upon the Perſon of King William, who was called therein, as you may ſuppoſe, the Prince of Orange: And you are told by Captain Porter, that at that Time, he and Mr. Charnock lodged together in one Houſe in Norfolk-ſtreet, and that Mr. Charnock told him Sir George Barclay was come with ſuch a Commiſſion from King James, and imparted to him the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating and Murdering the King, and that would be the readieſt Way to bring home King James: He asked Captain Porter, whether he would engage himſelf in the Matter. It ſeems Mr. Porter did freely and readily engage in it, and was in good earneſt; and therefore there were ſeveral Meetings at ſeveral Places, in order to conſult and contrive how they might bring it to paſs.

Gentlemen, you are further informed, that there were ſeveral Meetings at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, another at the Naggs-Head in St. James's-Street in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and that Two of the Priſoners at the Bar, Mr. Charnock and Mr. King with divers others, were at thoſe Meetings, and Keys was at ſeveral of them, and there it was agreed and reſolved, that the King ſhould be Murthered as the beſt Way to bring in the late King.

This being ſettled and reſolved upon as fit to be done, the next Conſideration was in what manner it might be effected, and two Ways were propoſed, one by way of Ambuſcade on the other Side of the Water near the King's Houſe at Richmond, the other in the Lane that leads from Brentford to Turnham-Green, upon the King's Return from Richmond, ſome Evening; for it ſeems it is uſual for the King to go to a Houſe he has on the other Side of the Water, to divert himſelf once a Week upon the Saturday, and to return in the Evening.

Theſe two Places being propoſed, the one on this, the other on the other Side of the Water, there was a Difference in Opinion among the Conſpirators, which of the Places would be the beſt and moſt proper: And in order to ſettle that Matter, it was reſolved upon, that ſome Perſons ſhould be ſent to view the Ground in both Places, and make their Report to the reſt; and the Men agreed upon, were Captain Porter and Mr. Knightley, to whom Mr. King added himſelf, and accordingly they did go out of Town together to take a View of theſe Places.

Here the Court was interrupted by Mrs King, the Priſoner's Mother, who in a very outragious violent Manner, got into the Court; but being removed, the Lord Chief Juſtice proceeded.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I was ſaying that this View was taken by thoſe Perſons that undertook it; and the Night of that Day they had viewed the Places, upon their Return, they made a Report to their Accomplices, and thereupon it was reſolved to relinquiſh the Ambuſcade, and that the Attack ſhould be made in the Lane that leads from Brentford to Turnham-Green.

The Time that was fixt upon for this Execution was Saturday the 15th of February: There were two Men that were appointed to lodge at Kenſington, whom they called orderly Men, a Title that they gave them: Theſe were to give Notice at what Time the King and the Guards went out, the one was to give Notice firſt of the Guards going, the other was to give Notice when the King went: When Notice was brought them that the King was gone abroad, the Conſpirators were to be ready to go after in ſmall Numbers, and were to be quartered and diſperſed in the ſeveral Inns about Brentford and Turnham-Green, to be gathered into the ſeveral Bodys, upon Notice of the King's Return, when the King came over, then they were to make the Attack in this Manner. Captain Porter and Mr. Charnock, with one Rookwood were to attack the Guards, and Sir George Barcley, and his Party, were to come up to the King's Coach, and fire into it, and kill the King, and every one that was in it; and of that Party Mr. Pendergraſs was deſigned to be one, and he was to have had a Musketoon from Captain Porter, that would carry ſeven or eight Bullets: Theſe Conſpirators, and the Perſons that were to be concerned, were in all Forty, or ſome few more in Number.

But, by great Providence, this bloody Deſign was diſcovered, as was told you, by one of the Witneſſes Mr. Pendergraſs, a Day or two before it ſhould have been put in Execution; and ſo His Majeſty did forbear going out that Saturday the 15th. But they having Notice that the Guards were gone, and after that receiving an Account that the King did not go, it very much alarm'd theſe Conſpirators; but notwithſtanding this, as you have been told, they were reſolved not to lay aſide the Proſecution of this Deſign, but were rather bent upon executing it the next Opportunity that ſhould offer itſelf, for which purpoſe Diverſe of the Conſpirators did meet together, and did conſult whether it was fit further to proceed, particularly upon the Friday the 21ſt Day of February at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, divers of them met, and there they had Diſcourſe of the Matter, and were troubl'd at the Diſappointment, and were reſolved to purſue it, and for that purpoſe, agreed to be in a Readineſs upon the next Day, and as ſoon as they ſhould have Notice, that the King was gone from Kenſington, they would proſecute it in the ſame Manner, in which they had formerly agreed.

It ſhould ſeem, ſome of the Men that they had engaged were gone off, and others were provided in their ſtead, but there was an other full Diſcovery made, before that, by Mr. De la Rue, by which their wicked Purpoſe was a ſecond Time diſappointed.

Gentlemen, upon the Diſcovery of this Deſign, it was thought very fitting to take all poſſible Care, for preventing ſuch a diſmal Stroke, and for puniſhing ſuch hainous Offenders, there was a Proclamation iſſued for the Apprehenſion of a great many of them that abſconded, which had a very good Effect, by the taking of ſeveral of them, beſides thoſe that were taken up by Warrants before, and theſe three Priſoners now at the Bar, are indicted for this horrid and traiterous Conſpiracy, and for purſuing this wicked Deſign, and are now upon their Tryal for it.

Now Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence, which you are to conſider of in Relation to theſe Priſoners, and how far they are affected by it. I muſt tell you, that Captain Porter, gives a very full Evidence againſt all Three, he tells you how and in what manner they were all engaged, and what Parts they had all in the Proſecution of this bloody Enterprize. As for Mr. Charnock, he ſeems to have been a remarkable Perſon in almoſt all the Parts of it, a great Carrier on and Promoter of it, was to be an Actor in it, and provide his Number of Men: and it ſeems he was a Perſon much truſted by Sir George Barcley, and he ſpoke to Mr. Porter, of a Commiſſion that Sir George Barcley brought with him from King James, which was to levy War upon the Perſon of King William, which it ſeems was underſtood, to authorize them to Aſſaſſinate the King. Mr. King went to view the Ground, and Charnock and he were at the ſeveral Conſultations, and Keys was at Porter's Lodgings, and at divers other Conſults, when the carrying on of this Deſign of aſſaſſinating the King, was debated and reſolved upon. Mr. Porter's Evidence you have heard at large, and I doubt not you take good Notice of it, and the King's Council have repeated the moſt material Parts of it, therefore I need not do it again. And as to Mr. Charnock, you have heard what Evidence is given by De la Rue and Bertram; for tho' Mr. Charnock, ſays all that is teſtified by the other Witneſſes, is only Talk and Diſcourſe, and that bare Words are not High Treaſon, but there muſt be ſome Overt-Act; therefore you are here to conſider particularly cularly what the other Witneſſes ſay againſt him, and whether another Overt-Act is not proved. De la Rue, (who was one of the Diſcoverers, and (as he tells you) he reſolved ſo to be ſo ſoon as he could get a perfect Knowledge of the whole Deſign) does inform you, that between the 15th. and 22d. of February, he met Mr. Charnock, and enquired of him, how the Buſineſs went, to which Charnock returned anſwer, That the Deſign did languiſh, ſaying, that People were not ſo warm as formerly, and did believe the King had Notice, for that he had not been abroad on Saturday; that too many were acquainted with it, and therefore Thought it might come to Nothing: But the main Buſineſs, which was the Landing of King James, would be ſpeedy; and though the Diſcourſe may be reckon'd only Words, yet they do import, at leaſt acknowledge, to the carrying on this Deſign before that Time.

But then conſider what you are told by Berthram, another of the Witneſſes, that he being inform'd by Trevor, that Mr. Charnock would ſpeak with him, he thereupon went to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, where Charnock took him aſide into a Back-Room, and told him that King James was a coming, and there was great Hopes of reſtoring him; but there was ſomething to be done to facilitate it, which he would do well to joyn in: And when he asked what it was, Charnock told him, he muſt go abroad and take the Air, where he would meet with ſome of his Acquaintance; and there was no way to effect it, but by taking off the Spark; and by doing that Thing, it would moſt probably be brought about, that King James ſhould be reſtored. Now, though it was not directly ſaid, they were to kill the King; yet it is manifeſt what was meant by it: For the Taking of no one Perſon in England, beſides King William, could conduce to the Return of the late King. And for his Encouragement, he told him further, that if Berthram would undertake the Doing of it, it would anſwer his Expectations. And then you are told again by Berthram, that he met Charnock, at Lincolns-Inn-Gate, upon that very Day that it was laſt to have been executed, which was the 22d of February, where Charnock told him he ſuſpected a Diſcovery was made, and that there were Warrants out againſt them; and that therefore the beſt Way was, to go immediately and take him off, and then all would be well.

Now I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, that what he ſays, that bare Words are not Treaſon, is very true in ſome Caſes: For looſe Words ſpoken, without Relation to any Act or Deſign, are not Treaſon, or an Overt-Act; but Arguments, and Words of Perſuaſion, to engage in ſuch a Deſign or Reſolution, and directing or propoſing the beſt Way for effecting it, are Overt-Acts of High Treaſon, as much as if two agree together to Kill the King, tho' the Agreement be Verbal only, and not reduced to Writing: Likewiſe, conſulting together for ſuch a Purpoſe, is an Overt-Act of Treaſon. For it is the Imagination, the Compaſſing and Deſigning the Death of the King, that is the Treaſon. For the Law is very careful of the Perſon of the King, and hath fully provided for his Safety; and this Treaſon is the firſt Species mention'd in the Statute. But there is no Way of diſcovering thoſe Compaſſings or Imaginations, in order to puniſh a Traitor, but by ſome external Act, that may be ſufficient to manifeſt ſuch an Intention and Purpoſe; and that which is a ſufficient Manifeſtation of ſuch a Deſign, is an other Overt-Act: But there have been proved ſeveral Meetings, and Conſultations and Propoſals at thoſe Meetings, about the Ways and Methods for bringing about the Deſign of Aſſaſſination. And it was never yet doubted, but to meet and conſult how to kill the King, was an Overt-Act of high Treaſon. Beſides, Mr. Charnock's endeavouring to engage Berthram in this Enterprize, and the Argument he uſed to perſuade him to it, that it was a Means to reſtore the late King, and telling him it would anſwer his Expectation, is another Overt-Act. And therefore, how far Mr. Charnock is Guilty of the Charge in the Indictment, you are to determine when you have well conſider'd the Nature of the Evidence, and what Anſwer Mr. Charnock hath made to it; which ſhall be open'd to you by and by.

Then, Gentlemen, concerning Mr. King, who is the next Man, he has theſe Witneſſes againſt him: Captain Porter ſays, that he was very frequently at the Meetings and Conſultations, and that he came to him when he and Knightley were to view the Ground, and deſir'd to be one of them, and they went together, and did view the Ground; this was ſome Time before the 15th of February, in the ſame Week.

And you may alſo remember the Evidence given by Mr. De la Rue, That Mr. King told him about November or December, that a Major-General would come from France, and that Money was to be advanced; and that after Captain Porter and Mr. King told him, that the Major-General was come. On Friday the 7th. of February, King ſaid he was to go out of Town with Knightley and Durant, to know whether the King went to Richmond or Hounſlow. Being inform'd the King had a Deſign to go to Hounſlow; and being return'd, on the Sunday following, Mr. King did ſay they had found out the rareſt Place, and the fitteſt that could be for that purpoſe, within a Quarter of a Mile of the King's Houſe at Richmond; and that there was to be an Ambuſcade, and asked the Witneſs whether he would be one in the Ambuſcade; but he liked it not, but had rather attack the Guards. He had been at the Dog-Tavern with Mr. King, and diſcourſing about this Undertaking, Mr. King the Priſoner had told this Witneſs, that ſeveral of the Guards were come from France, and that ſeveral Conferences were had about Taking off the King; and he did not approve of Mr. Charnock, in regard he did not talk like a Soldier, and was for an eaſie Poſt without Danger; and as for Captain Porter, he had another Objection againſt him, he had as much Fat in his Brains as he had in his Body; and ſo the one wanted Skill, and the other Wit. But ſtill Mr. King owned his being concerned in the carrying on of this Deſign of Aſſaſſination; for after the Deſign of the Ambuſcade was diſapproved of, and agreed that the Guards ſhould be Attack'd, and the King in his Coach, at Turnham Green; he, by Diſcourſe with De la Rue, expreſſes his Conſent to it: beſides, he told Pendergraſs, who was to be one, and to have Porter's Gun to ſhoot the King, he hoped Pendergraſs would not be afraid to break the Glaſs Windows.

Mr. Keys ſtands upon it, for his Part, that he was only a Servant to Captain Porter, and if he had done any Thing amiſs, it was no more than what his Maſter bid him do; and that he knew of no Deſign; and that it was a hard Thing that he ſhould be troubled in this Matter; for if a Maſter ſend his Servant to buy Horſes or Arms, if he does not know how they are to be imployed, afterwards it doth appear they are to be imployed in Aſſaſſinating the King, that the Servant ſhould be puniſhed for obeying his Maſter. But the Queſtion is, whether Keys knew what the Deſign was, Captain Porter ſays he did know when he hired the Horſes, for what Purpoſe they were to be uſed. And he ſays further, that he was with them at many of the Conſults at the Globe-Tavern and other Places, where he did Eat and Drink with them, and was privy to the Deſign, and concerned in it.

Then Gentlemen, by the other Evidence it is proved, that he was in Company ſeveral Times when the Deſign was diſcourſed of, and that he was uſed as a Companion to Captain Porter, and uſed to ſit and eat and drink with him and the reſt of them at the ſame Table; and when they drank to the Reſtoration of the late King, and to the Squeezing of the rotten Orange, Keys was there, and pledged the Health, which ſhews the Intention of the Man; and this was upon Saturday the 22d. And when News was brought that the Deſign was diſappointed by the King's not going abroad that Day, he went out to get Intelligence, and brought in Word that the Guards were come home, and that all their Horſes were in a Foam, and the King's Coaches returned to the Mews; all which is Evidence that he knew of the Deſign and conſented to it. So that I muſt leave it to you upon the whole, though there be a great deal more Evidence than I have mentioned, you are the Judges how far it amounts to prove them Guilty.

But then, Gentlemen, as to what they ſay, that the Witneſſes do teſtify by Hear-ſay, that's not Evidence; but what they know themſelves, or heard from the Priſoners; and ſo Mr. Charnock inſiſts upon it, that what Mr. De la Rue ſays againſt him, is moſtly what Captain Porter told him, and therefore cannot make a Proof by two: It is true, and therefore I did omit repeating a great Part of what De la Rue ſaid, becauſe as to him it was for the moſt part Hear-ſay: But whatſoever Evidence has been given of any Fact done within the Witneſſes own Knowledge, or of any Conſult or Diſcourſe of the Priſoners themſelves, that you are to take Notice of as good Evidence, and conſider of it.

But then there is another Thing that is objected againſt the Evidence, and that is, as to the Fairneſs and Credibility of it, becauſe the Witneſſes, eſpecially Mr. Porter, by their own Acknowledgment, are involved in the ſame Crime, and therefore cannot be good Witneſſes againſt others. Now as to that Objection, I muſt tell you firſt, that Priſoners under thoſe Circumſtances are good legal Witneſſes, but their Credits, as in all other Caſes, are left to your Conſideration. But Secondly, As to the Weight of this Objection againſt their Credit, you may conſider that Trayterous Conſpiracies are Deeds of Darkneſs as well as Wickedneſs, the Diſcovery whereof can properly come only from the Conſpirators themſelves; ſuch Evidence has always been allowed as good Proof in all Ages; and they are the moſt proper Witneſſes, for otherwiſe 'tis hardly poſſible, if not altogether impoſſible, to have a full Proof of ſuch ſecret Contrivances; ſuch Diſcoveries are to be encouraged in all Governments, without which there can be no Safety: And though Men have been guilty of ſuch Hainous Offences, in being Partakers or Promoters in ſuch Deſigns, yet if they come in and repent, and give Teſtimonies thereof by diſcovering the Truth great Credit ought to be given to them, for ſuch Evidence was ever accounted good. Beſides, as to two of them, De la Rue and Pendergraſs, which were the firſt that diſcovered, before they were apprehended, or ſuſpected themſelves to be in Danger, and therefore do not ſwear to ſave their own Lives, but reſolved upon it to ſave the Life of the King. And Mr. Pendergraſs had not any Deſign to be an Evidence, who, though he diſcover'd it almoſt as early as he knew it, yet refuſed to tell the Names, upon a Principle of Honour, till he had the King's Word that he ſhould not be preſs'd to come in as a Witneſs; and he tells you himſelf the Reaſon why he refuſed then, and why he comes in now, becauſe Capt. Porter was his Friend, to whom he was obliged, and he never intended at firſt to diſcover his Name, nor afterwards to be Evidence againſt him; but upon Capt. Porter's being taken, and diſcovering himſelf and his Witneſs, he thought then he was abſolved from all that Obligation, and therefore reſolved to appear as a Witneſs againſt the reſt: And this doth not depend only upon the Credit of Pendergraſs, but alſo upon the Teſtimony of my Lord Portland, and my Lord Cutts, who have given you a full Account of the Manner of it.

And Mr. De la Rue tells you, That it was his Deſign at firſt, even a Year ago, if the Conſpiracy had ſo far proceeded, as to be ready to be put in Execution, he would have endeavoured to have prevented the Miſchief, by acquainting the King with it; And he gives you an Account how he revealed it to Brigadier Lewſon, and to my Lord Portland, and after to the King, which is confirmed by my Lord Portland; ſo that theſe are Witneſſes beyond all Exception, and if ſuch Evidence as this be not allowed to be good, the Government can never be Secure againſt ſuch Villainous Enterpriſes and Wicked Machinations.

Gentlemen, This is not Trepanning, for it doth not appear by any Evidence, nor have I heard the Priſoners pretend that theſe Perſons did go about to ſeduce them into the Deſign, but indeed were endeavoured to be ſeduced into it themſelves; and though they kept them Company afterwards, yet it was only with a Purpoſe to acquaint themſelves with the real Intentions of theſe Wicked Men, which is Lawful and Juſt in order to the making a full Diſcovery of their ſo Dangerous a Villany; and therefore they ought to receive all Countenance for doing ſo great a Service to the Government, without Undergoing the Imputation of being Trepanners.

Gentlemen, there is no more occurs to me at preſent, that is material to be obſerved or taken Notice of, I leave it to you, you have heard what the Witneſſes ſay againſt the Priſoners, you have heard what the Priſoners have ſaid for themſelves, you are the Judges of this Fact; If you are not ſatisfied that here has been ſufficient Evidence given to prove them Guilty, you will acquit them; but if you are ſatisfied, that upon the Evidence and all the Circumſtances of this Caſe, that they are Guilty, I ſuppoſe you will diſcharge your Conſciences, and give your Verdict accordingly.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of the Evidence, and in leſs than half an Hour returned, and found all the three Priſoners Guilty of the High-

Treaſon for which they were Indicted, and the Court Adjourned till ſix a Clock that Evening.

Poſt Meridiem eodem Die.

ABout Seven a Clock the Lord Mayor, and the Common Serjeant, with as many of the Court as would make a Quorum, came upon the Bench, and by Proclamation in uſual Form, the Court was reſumed, and the Priſoners called to the Bar to their Judgment.

Cl. of Arraignments. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand. (which he did) You ſtand convicted of High Treaſon, for Conſpiring the Death of our Sovereign Lord the King by Aſſaſſination, What can you ſay for your ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgmeut upon you to die according to the Law?

The Jaylor firſt made him to kneel; and then, when he roſe up, he ſpoke as follows.

Charnock. Sir, I have a great deal to ſay, if I knew when was the proper Time to apply my ſelf to the ſaying what I have to ſay.

Mr. Com. Serj. You are now called to, to know what you have to ſay.

Charnock. Sir, I would put this Queſtion, becauſe I am ignorant in Forms of Law, Whether it be practicable for me to ſay any Thing before Judgment, or not? For I have no Pardon to plead to hinder the Judgment; and therefore I would know, if it be practicable to ſay any Thing before Judgment.

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes, Sir, it muſt be before Judgment; becauſe what you are called to. and asked now, is what you have to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment.

Charnock. I have many Things to ſay as to Obſervations I made out of the Indictment, and upon my Tryal, if this be my Time to offer them.

Mr. C. Serj. Yes, Sir, it is your only Time.

Char. Then, Sir, I think the Fact is ill laid: We are indicted here for High Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, and no Overt Act is proved againſt me; I ſpeak for my ſelf, I ſuppoſe theſe Gentlemen will ſpeak for themſelves.

Mr. C. Serj. At preſent you are the only Perſon that is asked the Queſtion; therefore pray go on, and ſay what you have to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment. You ſay the Indictment is ill laid, wherein is it ſo.

Char. I do find fault with the Indictment, becuuſe it is laid for Aſſaſſinating the King; and all that is proved againſt me, was, That I was in Company where ſuch a Thing was diſcours'd of: Now I am adviſed, and my own Reaſon tells me, that being in Company is no Proof of my giving my Conſent to the Thing; and without my Conſenting, there can be no Overt Act to make me guilty of the Treaſon. It is ſaid, that I and my Accomplices, though there are none named but us Three, did meet together, and conſult of this Matter, and that we bought and provided Horſes and Arms: Which I take to be the only Overt Act. And of all theſe Things, there is not one Tittle proved; and therefore, with Submiſſion to the Court, the Indictment is naught in that Reſpect. And this I think I may ſpeak, not only for my own Sake, but for the Sake of theſe Gentlemen that ſtand by me; if there be nothing proved againſt us of an Overt Act, as laid in the Indictment, we ought not to be condemned.

Mr. Com. Serj. Look you, Mr. Charnock, you move nothing againſt the Indictments, but only run into the Proof: That Matter is quite at an End, and we cannot enter into any Debate about it; you have had a fair and a legal Tryal, and upon that Tryal the Jury has found you Guilty.

Charnock. I have not had a fair, and an equal Tryal, Sir.

Mr. C. Serj. Yes, you have had both a fair and a legal, and an equal Tryal.

Charn. If you pleaſe to leave out the Word Legal, becauſe it perhaps may be according to the ſtrict Forms of Law: But I ſay it was not a fair and an equal Tryal, becauſe in the laſt Act of Parliament, which was made for regulating Tryals in Caſes of Treaſon, the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of a Priſoner's having that which was denied me; that is, a Copy of the Indictment, and Council, is laid down as the Ground and Reaſon of making the Act; and without that it had never been made: It is in the Preamble of the Act, which I have looked upon ſince I went out of Court; and though as to the Time of the Commencement, there is a certain Day prefix'd, yet the Equity of the Act is always the ſame, and that Equity I take my ſelf to be entitled unto; and therefore being denied the Benefit of it, I think I had not an equal and a fair Tryal.

Mr. Com. Serj. Sir, you have very unreaſonably objected this Matter of this Act of Parliament at your Arraignment, and upon your Tryal, and now; but your Objection is of no Moment or Validity in the World: For the Act is to commence in futuro, and you are tryed according to the Courſe of Common Law before that Act can take place; and it is the Common Law only that this Court can proceed by, and you be tryed by.

Char. Sir, I inſiſt not upon the Law itſelf, but only upon the Equality of it, and the Reaſonableneſs of the Thing.

Mr. Com. Serj. Courts of Juſtice are to go according to Rules of Law, and that is equal that is according to thoſe Rules: I ſay again, Sir, you have had a fair, a legal, and an equal Tryal, and have been treated with all the Candor and Temper, that I believe was ever ſhewn to any Perſons in your Condition.

Char. I had not Council allowed me to aſſiſt me.

Mr. C. Serj. The Law allows it you not; if it had, you ſhould have had it.

Char. Then my Council were ignorant People, to inſtruct and adviſe me, that by the Equity of this Act I ought to have it.

Mr. Com. Serj. It was never practicable before, nor can be, till the Time that this Act takes Place.

Char. Sir, I cannot argue with the Court in Matters of Law; but as to the Evidence, I ſay, it did not come up to the Indictment.

Mr. C. Serj. If you have any Thing to except againſt the Indictment, that is very proper for you to do, and if you will propoſe it, we will hear you.

Char-

Char. Sir, I find fault with the Indictment in ſeveral Particulars; all the Facts are laid in the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes, and there is not one Fact proved to be done there.

Mr. C. Serj. It is not material that the Facts ſhould be proved to be done in the particular Pariſh laid in the Indictment; it is ſufficient, if they be proved to be done in the County.

Char. There is not one Fact proved to be done in that Pariſh.

Mr. C. Serj. All that is againſt the Evidence, which we cannot at all take Notice of after the Verdict.

Char. I inſiſted upon ſeveral Things, whereby it was impoſſible that the Evidence could be true, and mentioned ſeveral Things, wherein the Indictment was erroneous, and the Evidence not conſiſtent with it, or at leaſt not of ſuch Validity as to affect me; all which Things if I might have had Council to argue for me in Point of Law, (and I look upon it as a very great Hardſhip that it was denied me,) as likewiſe that my Lord Chief Juſtice over-rul'd what I offered about Trepanners, as I take theſe Witneſſes to be, out of Sir Robert Atkins's Book, and what I quoted out of my Lord Hales's Pleas of the Crown, and Coke's Inſtitutes.

Mr. C. Serj. Mr. Charnock, If you pleaſe to offer any Point of Law to the Court to ſtop Judgment, we are ready to hear it; but you ought not to reflect upon the Court.

Char. Where a Man is dying, ſure he may have Leave to take Notice of what Hardſhips he has lain under.

Mr. C. Serj. Pray, Sir, hear me; No Men that ever ſtood in your Place have had more Indulgence and Favour ſhew'd them, nor, I believe, ſo much neither. Thoſe of us that are here, and were at your Tryal, do think you do very much amiſs, to make any Reflections upon the Court after you were ſo fairly dealt with. If you have any Thing that is material to offer in Arreſt of Judgment, pray let us hear it: But we muſt over-rule all Diſcourſes of this Nature, it is a vain Sort of Diſcourſe, and will be of no Uſe or Service to you at all.

Char. Truly I know not what it is poſſible for me to urge which you will think to be material, if I cannot urge falſe Latin and Inconſiſtencies. There have been heretofore Arreſts of Judgment, and that muſt ſure have been upon ſome Error or other.

Mr. C. Serj. It is true, but you aſſign none; you abound in Words, but will not offer any Thing that is fit for you to offer.

Char. Sir, I aſſign this particularly as an Error, and if it be not I cannot tell what is: I am upon my laſt Legs, and ſtand here for my Life, and ought to be allowed all legal Advantages. One particular Thing is this, Whether the Scene of the Fact being laid to be at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes there ought not to be Proof that ſuch Facts were done there; and if ſo, Whether it be not an Error, that there was no Proof of any one Fact done there? And then the next Thing is, we are charged to have bought Horſes and Arms in the Indictment, and there was no Proof of any Horſes or Arms bought, I am ſure as to me there was not.

Mr. C. Serj. I told you before, all this is to no Purpoſe, you enter into the Evidence, which is Matter of Fact, which is all over, and we cannot enter into any Conſideration of it, therefore pray do not ſpend our Time, but if you have any Thing that is an Objection to the Frame of the Indictment let us hear it.

Char. Then I think that the Indictment is uncertain; it ſays, quadraginta Homines equeſtres aut circiter de ipſis Roberto Charnock, Edwardo King, & Thoma Keys; this is either not true, or it is Nonſenſe: For if there be forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keys, that cannot be true, for they can't make forty; and if you take in the aliis Proditoribus ignotis, that will make it uncertain, and that Uncertainty will make the Indictment void.

Mr. C. Serj. I thought my Lord Chief Juſtice had ſatisfied you as to that Objection; you repeat but Part of the Sentence: It is ſaid, de ipſis Roberto Charnock, & prædictis aliis Proditoribus ignotis, ac aliis, that is certain enough, I thought we ſhould have heard no more of that frivolous Objection, but you had been ſatisfied with the Judge's Anſwer to it.

Char. I am ſatisfied in Point of Fact that they conſtrued it ſo; but theſe are the Words of the Indictment as they were read to me.

Mr. C. Serj. You ſhall have the Words read to you again. Read them.

Cl. of Arraignments. Quod quadraginta homines equeſtres aut eo circiter de ipſis Roberto Chernock, Edwardo King, & Thoma Keys, & prædictis aliis Proditoribus ignotis ac aliis.

Mr. C. Serj. You took but Part of the Sentence, or elſe you could never have made that Objection.

Char. Then, Sir, here is tunc & ibidem, what is that?

Mr. C. Serj. You can eaſily tell that ſure; it is then and there.

Char. What, ibidem? What Word is that?

Mr. C. Serj. It is the beſt Word that could be uſed, what Word would you have had?

Char. Tunc & ibi is then and there.

Mr. C. Serj. No, ibidem is a better Word, and is always uſed in our Pleadings at Law.

Char. Then I have only this in general to ſay; Whether it be poſſible for a Man that is ignorant in Forms of Law to defend himſelf without Council? I muſt deſire Council to look into the Indictment and to aſſiſt me.

Mr. C. Serj. That is what we cannot allow by Law, unleſs you offer ſomething that may be ſuch an Objection, as the Court ſhall think fit to have argued by Council.

Char. But how ſhall I, that am ignorant in the Law, know how to offer you that which you will think fit to hear Council to?

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer any Thing that you think is an Exception, and the Court will conſider of it; for I think it is my Duty, and every Man's that has the Honour to ſit here by the King's Commiſſion, to lay as much Weight upon any Objection that a Priſoner does offer, as it will bear; but if nothing be offer'd that is of the leaſt Weight or Moment, we being to do our Duty equally between the King and the Priſoner, we cannot allow Council when there is nothing before us to allow it upon.

Charn. You will not, it ſeems, let me have ſuch Aſſiſtance as I may offer you ſomething material.

Mr. C. Serj. You know well enough we cannot do it, pray do not ſpend our Time to no Purpoſe.

Char. Nay, Sir, if you be in Haſte, I will not trouble you any longer.

Mr. C. Serj. You have no Reaſon to ſay we are in Haſte; I am ſure you have had all the Indulgence and Patience that could be; you are at Liberty to offer any Thing that you can, but to ſpend the Time of the Court in bare Words is not reaſonable.

Char. The Law was never my Practice, Sir, nor Study: I perceive whatſoever I offer ſignifies nothing; therefore I beg your Pardon for the Trouble I have given you; I ſhall not attempt to offer any thing further.

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer what you will, we will hear you.

Char. Sir, I perceive whatſoever I ſay is unacceptable, and ſo I had as good let it alone.

Mr. C. Serj. You ſhall be heard to ſay whatever you think is for your Intereſt to ſay.

Char. I thought theſe Things were for my Intereſt to offer; but I ſee it is to no Purpoſe; therefore I have no more to ſay, I have done.

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer what you will, and you ſhall be heard with all the Patience and Candour imaginable.

Char. I ſee it is impoſſible for me to offer any Thing that the Court will think material; therefore it is in vain for me to ſpeak, and trouble my ſelf and the Court with what will be of no Uſe to me.

Cl. of Arraignments. Edward King, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) You ſtand convicted of the ſame High-Treaſon; What can you ſay for your ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment upon you to die according to Law?

Then he was made to kneel and riſe up again.

King. What Mr. Charnock has ſaid, all of it I do imagine to be material; and ſince he is not to be heard, I have done; I can ſay no more.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Keys, hold up your Hand; you are in the ſame Caſe with the Priſoner that went laſt before you: What can you ſay for your ſelf why the Court ſhould not give Judgment upon you to die according to the Law?

He was made to kneel and riſe again.

Keys. Sir, I have had no Council, nor no Aſſiſtance, ſince I have been in Priſon.

Mr. C. Serj. That you alledged upon your Tryal, and you were then told you might have had Council if you had thought fit; for you had an Order for it, and you come too late to offer any Thing of that Nature now. But the Queſtion that is now ask'd you is, what you have to ſay for your ſelf, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you?

Keys. I was only a Servant.

Mr. C. Serj. You have been told that will not excuſe a Man in ſuch a Caſe.

Keys. I cannot help it, Sir, I have done; I hope you will take care of my Wife and Children when I am gone.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, whilſt Judgment was in giving; which the Common Serjeant, ſitting down upon the Bench, pronounced thus:

Mr. C. Serj. Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keys, the Priſoners at the Bar; You have been ſeverally indicted for High-Treaſon; you have pleaded Not Guilty, and put your ſelves for your Tryal, upon the Country, which Country have found you Guilty: You have had the Benefit of a fair, lawful, indifferent, and equal Tryal, according to the Laws of this Land; thoſe very Laws, which you are charged in this Indictment to have conſpired to ſubvert. It is a Crime of the higheſt Nature that the Law knows: You are Gentlemen of liberal Education, and I hope this will bring you to ſome Reflection, both upon the State of your own Caſe, and the Blackneſs of your Offence, in the Time you have to live, which I fear is but ſhort: It is certainly the hainouſeſt Crime that any Perſons can be guilty of; the Murdering of a Prince in cold Blood, and Involving your Country in Slaughter and Confuſion. I have nothing more to do, but to pronounce the Judgment that the Law has provided for ſuch Offenders, and which the Court doth award:

That you go from hence to the Place from whence you came; and that from thence you be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are ſeverally to be Hanged by the Neck, and cut down alive; your Bowels and Privy-Members to be cut from your Bodies, and to be Burnt in your View; your Heads to be cut off, your Bodies reſpectively to be divided into Four Parts; which Heads and Quarters are to be at the King's Diſpoſal: And God have Mercy upon your Souls.

Char. Sir, I deſire we may have the Favour to have our Friends and Relations come to us while we are in Priſon.

Mr. C. Serj. You ſhall have all the Liberty of your Friends and Relations coming to you, that you can reaſonably deſire.

Char. And I hope we ſhall have no hard Uſage in Priſon.

Mr. C. Serj. No, God forbid you ſhould; you may aſſure your ſelf you ſhall have none.

Then the Seſſions of Peace for London, and of Goal-delivery of Newgate for London and Middleſex were adjourn'd unto Saturday the 21ſt of March inſtant.

And Charnock, King, and Keys, were Executed according to the Sentence, on Wedneſday the 18th of March, 169½. at Tyburn.

The TRYAL of Sir JOHN FREIND, Knight.

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

Die Lunæ viceſimo tertio Martii, 1695. Anno Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii Octavo.

At the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, this Day came on the Tryal of Sir John Freind, Knight, for High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death and Deſtruction of his preſent Majeſty King William, upon an Indictment found by the Grand-Jury for the City of London, upon the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, on Saturday the 21*ſt inſtant.*

Clerk of Arraignments.

CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez. All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do at this General Seſſions of the Peace, Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London, and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middleſex, adjourned over to this Day; Draw near, and give your Attendance, for now they will proceed to the Pleas of the Crown for the ſaid City, and County; and God ſave King William.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation again.

Cryer. Oyez. You good Men of the City of London, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that is to be at the Bar; anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called every Man at the firſt Call, upon Pain and Peril that will fall thereon.

Then the Petty Jury were all called over, and the Appearances of thoſe that anſwered to the Call were recorded.

About Ten a Clock the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, Mr. Juſtice Nevill, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby, came into the Court; and there being a great Confluence of the Nobility and Gentry there preſent, the Priſoner was order'd to be brought to the Bar: Which was done accordingly.

Cl. of Arr. Sir, John Freind, hold up thy Hand.

Freind. My Lord, I humbly move that I may have one William Courtney (who is to be a principal Witneſs for me at my Tryal, and is now a Priſoner in the Gatehouſe) ſent for.

* Lord Chief Juſtice Holt.

L. C. Juſt.* Is he your Witneſs, Sir John?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, William Courtney is his Name.

L. C. J. Sir John, why did not you ſend, and deſire this before?

Freind. My Lord, I did not hear of him, while laſt Night; and I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, that you will pleaſe to let him be ſent for.

The Judges conſulted among themſelves.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, I'll tell you, if you'll appoint your Agent to come hither, you ſhall have an Habeas Corpus ad teſtificandum: But indeed you might have ſent this Morning, and then the Writ might have been got ready.

Freind. My Lord, I did not know ſo much; for it was laſt Night before I underſtood that he was to be a Witneſs.

L. C. J. You might have ſent laſt Night, or this Morning, and you ſhould have had a Warrant for the Writ.

Freind. I aſſure your Lordſhip, I did not know ſo much.

L. C. J. Well, ſend your Agent, or your Sollicitor, and you ſhall have a Warrant for the Writ.

Freind. I beſeech your Lordſhip, that he may be ſent for, and that the Meſſenger may make haſte.

L. C. J. Let your Sollicitor come to my Clerk, and he ſhall have it.

Freind. My Lord, if you pleaſe to give a Rule of Court for it, I ſuppoſe it may be done preſently.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir John, it muſt be by Writ, the Keeper of the Gatehouſe elſe cannot bring him.

Fr. My Lord, that will be a long Time before it can be done, I deſire nothing but that I may have him here to give his Evidence for me.

L. C. J. It will be got ready preſently; I believe he will be here Time enough for you to make uſe of his Teſtimony.

Fr. But, my Lord, ſuppoſe he ſhould not be here: It would be a great Hindrance to me, and a greater Injury to my Tryal.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir John, you need not fear any Thing of that Nature, we are not in ſuch Haſte; we will not ſpur you on: But the Warrant ſhall be made; and do you make what Haſte you can to get the Writ, and your Witneſs brought.

The Lord Chief Juſtice gave Order to Mr. Maſon his Clerk, to prepare a Warrant for an Habeas Corpus, directed for the Keeper of the Gatehouſe, to bring William Courtney immediately hither to give Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.)

You

You ſtand Indicted in London by the Name of Sir John Freind, late of London, Kt. for that, Whereas there had been for a long time, and yet is, an open, and notoriouſly publick, and moſt ſharp, and cruel War by Land, and by Sea, had, carried on, and proſecuted by Lewis the French King, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. All which time the ſaid Lewis the French King, and his Subjects were, and yet are Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, that now is, and his Subjects. You the ſaid Sir John Freind, a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, of this Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premiſſes, not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor againſt the ſaid moſt Serene, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our ſaid Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, &c. your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord; the cordial Love, and the true, and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, towards him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and intending utterly to extinguiſh, and contriving, and with all your Strength, purpoſing, deſigning, and endeavouring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is of Right, duly, happily, and very well Eſtabliſhed, altogether to Subvert, Change, and Alter, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable, and moſt miſerable Slavery, to the aforeſaid French King, to Subdue, and bring, the firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is; and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at London, in the Pariſh of St. Peter Cornhill, in the Ward of Limeſtreet, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe, and intend, our ſaid Sovereign, the Lord the King that now is, then your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, and Lawful Sovereign Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Command, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to Depoſe, caſt Down, and utterly to Deprive; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to put, and bring, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, by his Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and Subjects, this Kingdom of England to Invade, Fight with, Oovercome, and Subdue, to move, incite, procure, and help, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Faithful Subjects of him, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cauſe; and that you the ſaid Sir John Freind to the aforeſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, that now is, then, and there during the War aforeſaid, Traiterouſly were adhering and aſſiſting; and the ſame your moſt impious, wicked and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Intentions, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect; and in proſecution, performance, and execution of that traiterous Adheſion, you the ſaid Sir John Freind, as ſuch a falſe Traitor, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, and divers other Days and times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in London aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, &c. with one Robert Charnock (late of High-Treaſon, in contriving, and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, duly convicted and attainted) and with divers other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, to procure from the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then and yet Enemies of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, great Numbers of Soldiers and Armed Men, this Kingdom of England to Invade and Fight with, and to levy, procure, and prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, and Troops and Legions againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to riſe up and be formed, and with thoſe Enemies at and upon ſuch their Invaſion and Entry into this Kingdom of England, to join and unite, Rebellion and War againſt him our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and wage, him our ſaid Lord the King ſo as aforeſaid to Depoſe, and him to Kill and Murder; and moreover with the ſaid falſe Traitors, the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, Traiterouſly you did conſult, conſent, and agree to ſend the aforeſaid Robert Charnock as a Meſſenger from you the ſaid Sir John Freind, and the ſame other Traitors unknown, unto and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, unto James the Second, late King of England, to propoſe to him, and deſire of him to obtain of the aforeſaid French King, the Soldiers and Armed Men aforeſaid, for the Invaſion aforeſaid to be made; and Intelligence and Notice of ſuch their Traiterous Intentions, and Adheſions, and all the Premiſſes unto the ſaid late King James the Second, and the ſaid other Enemies and their Adherents, to give and exhibit; and them to inform of other particular Things and Circumſtances thereunto relating; as alſo Intelligence from them of the ſaid intended Invaſion, and other Things and Circumſtances concerning the Premiſſes, to receive, and the ſame to you the ſaid Sir John Freind, and the ſaid other Traitors in this Kingdom of England, to ſignify, report and declare, in Aſſiſtance, Animation, and Aid of the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, in the War aforeſaid, and to incite and procure thoſe Enemies the more readily and boldly to Invade this Kingdom of England; and the Treaſons and Traitorous Contrivances, Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes of you the ſaid Sir John Freind aforeſaid, to perfect and fulfil, and all the Premiſſes the ſooner to execute, manage and perform, you the ſaid Sir John Freind, during the War aforeſaid, ſo as aforeſaid continued, to wit, the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the aboveſaid Seventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſely and traiterouſly did procure and obtain to your ſelf, and did receive and accept of a certain Commiſſion or Writing, purporting it ſelf to be a Commiſſion, under and from the aforeſaid James the Second, late King of England, to conſtitute you the ſaid Sir John Friend to be a Collonel of Horſe in the Army by you and the other falſe Traytors againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, within this Kingdom of England to be levied and formed; and in purſuance of the ſaid pretended Commiſſion by you the ſaid Sir John Freind ſo obtained and accepted of, and your Treaſons and all your Traiterous Intentions aforeſaid, the ſooner to execute, perform, fulfil, and perfect, You the ſaid Sir John Freind afterwards, (to wit) the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, Falſely, Maliciouſly, Adviſedly, Secretly, and Traiterouſly, Divers Soldiers, and Armed Men, and ready to be Armed, with Force and Arms, &c. To Raiſe, and Liſt, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to make and wage; And to and with the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, Foreigners and Strangers, Subjects and Soldiers of the ſaid Lewis the French King, being about to invade this Kingdom of England, at and upon their Invaſion, and Entry into this ſame Kingdom, then ſhortly expected to be made, Themſelves together with You the ſaid Sir John Freind to join and unite, and in Troops and Legions to form, did Raiſe, Liſt, and Retain, and did procure to be Raiſed, Liſted, and Retained; And divers Sums of Money, in and about the Raiſing, Liſting, and Retaining of the aforeſaid Soldiers, and Men Armed, and ready to be Armed upon the Account aforeſaid, upon the aforeſaid Firſt Day of July in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, Falſely, Maliciouſly, and Traiterouſly, did give and pay, and cauſe to be paid; and thoſe Soldiers and Men, for the Treaſons, Intentions, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, then and there, and long after, you had in readineſs. As alſo the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, Divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Carbines, Piſtols, Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and Military Inſtruments, Falſely, Maliciouſly, Secretly, and Traiterouſly You did Obtain, Buy, Gather, and Procure, and cauſe to be Bought, Gathered, Obtained and Procured, and in Your Cuſtody had and detained, to that Intent to uſe the ſame in the ſaid Invaſion, War and Rebellion, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, Him our ſaid Lord the King of, and from the Regal State, Crown and Command of this Kingdom of England to Depoſe, Caſt Down, and Deprive, and him to Kill and Murder, and all the Treaſons, Intentions, Contrivances and Purpoſes of You the ſaid Sir John Freind, as aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and fully to bring to Effect; againſt the Duty of Your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, His Crown and Dignity; as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided.

What ſay'ſt thou, Sir John Freind, Art thou Guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Freind. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Culpritt, How wilt thou be Tryed?

Freind. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Friend. I don't know any thing of it, I am as Innocent as the Child unborn.

The Warrant for the Habeas Corpus was Signed by the Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt, and delivered to the Priſoner, who ſent it away to the Crown-Office by his Sollicitor, to get the Writ ſealed.

Freind. My Lord, I have ſomething to move, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to hear me, and the reſt of my Lords the Judges; That if any Matter of Law do ariſe upon my Trial, I may be heard by my Council, that you may not deſtroy me without Law.

L. C. Juſt. Look you, Sir John Freind, if any Matter of Law do ariſe at your Trial, and you will tell us what that Matter of Law is, and the Court ſee that it is a Matter of Doubt, we can, and ought, and no Queſtion ſhall aſſign you Council; but that is time enough when ſuch Matter does ariſe.

Freind. My Lord, It is well known to your Lordſhip, and all the Court, that I am not a Lawyer; but, I hope, as you are of Council for the King as Judges of Law, ſo you will be of Council for me; for I am not a Lawyer, and cannot know, whether any Matter that ariſes be Law or no; and therefore I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to be ſo juſt and kind, as to tell me whether it be Law or not Law, and I ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhip's Direction.

L. C. Juſt. Sir John Freind, We are bound to tell you when any Thing of that Nature appears before us, and to let you have all the Benefit of the Law that poſſibly you can have; for we are obliged to be indifferent between the King and you.

Freind. My Lord, I don't queſtion it. I deſire alſo I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. Juſt. Yes, yes, by all means. (And he had them.)

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez: You Good Men of the City of London, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to Try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that is at the Bar, who have been called, and made Default, anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Iſſues.

Then the Defaulters were call'd over.

Cl. of Arr. You the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that you ſhall hear call'd, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Cryer. Call Thomas Clerk.

Freind. Pray, Sir, how many may I challenge?

L. Ch. J. Look you, Sir John, you may challenge, that is, except againſt 35, without ſhewing any Cauſe: If you don't like them to be of the Jury, you may refuſe them; and as many others, as you have Cauſe to except againſt.

Fr. My Lord, I humbly beſeech you, that becauſe perhaps I may miſtake in numbring, that I may have timely Notice before the 35 be excepted againſt, or elſe it may occaſion me a great deal of Prejudice.

L. C. J. Sir, the Clerk ſhall take Care of that, he ſhall inform you how many you challenge, and you ſhall receive no Prejudice of that Kind, or by any Slip in point of Form.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call Thomas Clark. (who appeared.)

Fr.

Fr. Pray Sir, muſt I not ſee the Gentleman?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all Means. (He was ſhewn to him.)

Fr. You may ſwear Mr. Clark; I do not except againſt him. I deſire but honeſt Gentlemen, and I ſhall come off I warrant you: I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

L. C. J. Swear Mr. Clark.

Cl. of Ar. Hold him the Book; (which was done) look upon the Priſoner, you ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Nathan Green.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Emms.

Fr. I accept of him for a Juryman, I have nothing to object againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Francis Byer.

Fr. Pray let me ſee him, (he was ſhewn to him) I do except againſt him, I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Dry.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. James Demew.

Fr. I accept him, I have nothing to ſay againſt him, I would have him to be a Juryman.

Mr. Demew. My Lord, I am not a Freeholder.

L. C. J. Sir John, Do you challenge him peremptorily, or do you challenge him for Cauſe?

Fr. My Lord, I do not challenge him at all, I accept of him.

* Sir Thomas Trevor.

* Mr. Attorn. Gen. If he have no Freehold, we that are for the King will except againſt him; for I would not have any Body that is not a Freeholder ſerve upon the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Henry Hunter.

Fr. Pray, my Lord, is this Gentleman that was called before laid aſide? He is not one that I challenge.

L. C. J. No, no, he is challeng'd by the King's Council, as no Freeholder.

Fr. Then he is only ſet aſide, I ſuppoſe, I ſpeak it for this Reaſon, I would not be miſtaken in my Number.

L. C. J. Care ſhall be taken of all that, he is not to be reckoned as one that you challenged, he is challenged for want of Freehold by the King's Council.

Cl. of Ar. What ſay you to Mr. Hunter?

Fr. I accept of Mr. Hunter, let him be ſwore. (which was done.)

Cl. of Ar. John Cox.

Mr. Cox. My Lord, I have no Freehold in London.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then let him be ſet aſide.

Cl. of Ar. George Bodington.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. John Hedges.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. You challenge him Sir, do you?

Fr. Yes, yes, I do.

Cl. of Ar. John James.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Poole.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Peter Parker.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. George Grove.

Fr. I except againſt him, for I have him not in my Pannel.

L. C. J. How comes that?

Fr. I can't tell, my Lord, I have been kept alone while Saturday laſt, only that worthy Gentleman (bowing to Mr. Baker, the Proſecutor for the King) was with me to give me Notice of my Tryal before.

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Wyerſdale.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Blewitt.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolfe.

Fr. Sir, I do aſſure you I have him not in my Pannel, upon my Word. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Jackſon.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Long.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Richard Chiſwell.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. George Child.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. William Walker.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Wills.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Hibbert.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Pettit.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of. Ar. James Robinſon.

Fr. Sir, he is not in my Pannel upon my Word.

Cl. of Ar. He is in the Original Pannel.

Mr. Sheriff Buckingham. My Lord, here is the Original Pannel, and here's his Name here; and there is not a Perſon in this Pannel, but what was originally put in, except it be about five or ſix at the End, and this is none of them.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Hollis. (He did not appear.)

L. C. J. Pray, Sir John, who had you that Copy from? Who gave it you?

Fr. My Sollicitor.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, he had none from me I am ſure: I received the Pannel from the Sheriff, but no Body, from Sir John, was ever with me for a Copy.

Fr. My Lord, my Sollicitor brought it to me on Saturday Night.

L. C. J. Who is your Sollicitor, that gave you that Copy?

Fr. His Name is Mr. Burleigh, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is he? Let's ſee this Mr. Burleigh.

Fr. My Lord, he is gone to the Crown Office it ſeems, for the Habeas Corpus.

Mr. Juſtice Rokeby. It is your own Sollicitor that has put the Abuſe on you, if it be ſo.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Hollis. (He did not appear.)

L. C. J. Pray, Sir John Freind, how many have you in all?

Fr. In Number my Lord, would you have me tell you how many I have in Number?

L. C. J. Aye, in Number, in your Copy of the Pannel.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. In the Pannel there are above Fourſcore.

Fr. I have ſeventy one, my Lord.

Then Thomas Hollis appeared.

Cl. of Ar. Do you challenge him, Sir?

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. Pray let the Secondary produce his Pannel that he had from my Brother and me, me, and I am ſure the Court will find they were all named in that Pannel.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, I have the Pannel, but they never came to me for a Copy, as I expected: I had got one ready; if Sir John Freind, or any Perſon for him, had ſent to me, they might have had it.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. And theſe People that are not in Sir John Freind's Pannel, are none of the half dozen that were added, when we came to the Knowledge of them, that they were Freeholders.

L. C. J. When were they added Sir?

Mr. Sh. Buck. They were added on Friday in the Afternoon, and it ſeems he never came for the Pannel to the proper Officer, and thoſe that he objects againſt were not added, but are in the original Pannel.

L. C. J. Truly I can't ſee any Body is to blame in this Matter but your own Sollicitor.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, I aſſure you I had made a Copy, and I wondered I did not hear of them: I do not know where he got this Copy.

L. C. J. Treby. In truth if you would not ſend to the proper Officer for a Copy, when you might have had it, you muſt be content with what you have; for no Body is bound to give you a Copy unleſs you ask for it.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to Thomas Hollis?

Fr. I challenge him, my Lord, for he is not in my Pannel.

Cl. of Ar. John Sherbrook.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. James Blackwell.

Fr. He is not in my Pannel, upon my Word, my Lord.

L. C. J. I can't help it, he is in the Sheriff's Pannel that is returned here.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Gardner.

Fr. I accept of him.

Mr. Gardner. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in the City.

Mr. Juſtice Rokeby. Mr. Gardner, have you not lately convey'd away your Freehold?

Mr. Gard. No, indeed, my Lord, I never had any.

Cl. of Ar. William Prince.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Simons.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Robert White.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Joſeph Morewood.

Fr. I accept him; his Name is John I ſuppoſe, for ſo it is in my Pannel.

Cl. of Ar. No, it is Joſeph.

Mr. Morewood. My Name is Joſeph.

Fr. Well, Sir, I accept of you, I don't queſtion but you are an honeſt Man. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, countez. Thomas Clark.

Cryer. One, &c. (So of the reſt to the laſt.)

Cl. of Ar. Joſeph Morewood.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Jury were theſe.

Thomas Clark,	Jur.	Nathaniel Long,
Thomas Emms,		George Child,
Henry Hunter,		William Walker,
Thomas Poole,		John Sherbrook,
Peter Parker,		William Prince, and
Samuel Jackſon,		Joſeph Morewood.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of the High-Treaſon whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: And all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance; and all Jury-men of London, that have been called, and have appeared, and are not ſworn may depart the Court.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge: He ſtands indicted by the Name of Sir John Freind, late of London, Knight, (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis.) And againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God, and the Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, Whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince; if you find him not guilty, you are to enquire if he fled for it? if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment of High-Treaſon, that is brought againſt Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar, for aſſociating with, and aiding the King's Enemies, with a Deſign to procure an Invaſion from France, and to raiſe a Rebellion within this Kingdom, and this was to depoſe the King, and to reſtore the late K. James; and in order to the Effecting theſe his wicked Purpoſes, the Indictment ſets forth, That the firſt of July laſt, he did meet, and conſult, and agree with one Mr. Charnock, (a Gentleman ſince tryed, convicted and attainted of High-Treaſon) how they ſhould procure an Army from France, to come and invade this Kingdom: And ſhould raiſe a ſufficient Number of Men, to facilitate the Landing of the French; and the Indictment particularly charges the Priſoner at the Bar, with ſending Mr. Charnock into France, to the late King James, to acquaint him with the Deſign, and to deſire him to procure a great Number of Forces from the French King, to come here, and land within this Kingdom: And the Indictment does likewiſe charge him with procuring, and receiving a Commiſſion from the late King James to conſtitute him, the Priſoner at the Bar, a Colonel of Horſe; and likewiſe with laying out and expending, and paying ſeveral Sums of Money in liſting and keeping Soldiers, and Men in pay under him, which were to be in his Regiment; and with laying out ſeveral Sums of Money in buying Arms, and Horſes for this Invaſion and Rebellion that was thus deſigned to be made, and raiſed within this Kingdom. To this, Gentlemen, he has pleaded not Guilty; we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove the Fact, and we do not doubt but you will find him ſo.

Freind. Prove this if you can, it cannot be.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Priſoner at the Bar,

Sir John Freind, ſtands Indicted of High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing, and Imagining the Death of the King, and likewiſe in Adhering to the King's Enemies.

Gentlemen, the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to prove this Treaſon, are theſe.

That the Priſoner at the Bar, did accept a Commiſſion from the late King James, to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe in this Kingdom, in order to joyn with the French, when they Invaded it; and there were ſeveral Meetings, and Conſultations between him, and ſeveral others whom you will hear named by the Witneſſes, upon which it was Reſolved to ſend a Meſſenger, one Charnock, into France, to deſire the late King James, to prevail with the French King to get a Number of Men, in all 10000, with an Aſſurance, that they would Aſſiſt him with a Number of Horſe when he came: And in Purſuance of this Deſign, the Priſoner at the Bar did raiſe Men, and pay ſome Sums of Money for their Subſiſtence, and Liſted, and had them in Readineſs; and provided Horſes and Arms. Theſe are the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; the Evidence that will be produc'd to you, to prove this Treaſon, and theſe Overt-Acts, will be in this Manner.

Gentlemen you will ſee by the Evidence, that there has been a Deſign and Conſpiracy on Foot for ſeveral Years, to Aſſaſſinate the King's Perſon, and to have an Invaſion from France at that Time, by armed Force here to ſubdue this Kingdom. The Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, I think about two Years ago had a Commiſſion ſent him from the late King James, to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe: There were ſeveral other Commiſſions ſent likewiſe, but one was ſent to the Priſoner, which he accepted of; and in purſuance of it, he appointed ſeveral Officers, and Liſted ſeveral Men for that Purpoſe, and expended ſeveral Sums of Money for the raiſing, and ſubſiſting of them.

Gentlemen, you will hear that his Lieutenant-Colonel was to be one Blaire, and his Major was to be one Slater; and this Slater's Father was a Clergy-Man, and he undertook to bring in a Troop of Clergy-Men that had refuſed to take the Oaths. One of his Captains was one Evans, one Richardſon was another; and there were ſeveral other Officers whom you will hear named by the Witneſſes, that were appointed and ingag'd to make up the Regiment.

Gentlemen, you will hear further by the Witneſſes, that about May, or June laſt, they having rais'd a conſiderable Number of Men, there were ſeveral Meetings had between the Priſoner at the Bar, and ſeveral other Perſons, in order to ſend ſome Perſon over to get Forces from France, to Invade this Kingdom. The firſt Meeting, that you will hear of, was at the Old King's Head-Tavern in Leaden-Hall-Street, and there were preſent the Priſoner at the Bar, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, (who was lately Condemned and Executed for the Deſign of Murdering the King) Mr. Porter, and one Cook. At that Meeting you will hear what their Debates were, and what their Reſolutions: After ſeveral Debates, who they ſhould ſend, they reſolved to ſend Mr. Charnock, to go into France, to deſire the late King James to get 10000 Men of the French Troops, to land upon our Coaſts, about 8000 Foot and the reſt Horſe and Dragoons: And they did Impower him in their Names, to aſſure the late King James, that they would, when ever he Landed with his French Troops, be ready to aſſiſt him with near two Thouſand Horſe among them.

Upon this, Gentlemen, Mr. Charnock undertook to go upon this Meſſage: But about a Week after they met again, for he was unwilling to go upon ſuch an Errand, without having a full Reſolution and Aſſurance from theſe Gentlemen that were thus Engag'd, that he might ſatisfie the late King what they would certainly do. So they met again about a Week after, and that was at a Tavern in St. James's-Street, near Sir John Fenwick's Lodgings, one Mrs. Montjoyes, there was the Priſoner at the Bar, my Lord of Aylesbury, and moſt of the ſame Company that were at the Meeting before: And Mr. Charnock deſired to know, if they did agree to what had been Propos'd and Reſolv'd on before; for he was unwilling, and did not care to go without a full Aſſurance of the Performance. They did all agree, and deſir'd that he would go with all Speed, and that he ſhould aſſure King James, they would be ready to meet him, if they had Notice where he would Land.

Pray, Gentlemen, obſerve the Time when theſe Meetings were. It was in May or June laſt ſoon after the King was gone to Flanders; and they thought this a fit Opportunity, when the King's Forces were drawn out of England into Flanders, for carrying on the Campaign, then was the proper Time, according as they diſcours'd the Matter, the People being as they ſaid, generally Diſſatisfied, and but few Forces in England to oppoſe them.

Mr. Charnock accordingly went over into France, and about a Month after return'd again, and acquainted them that he had told King James their Reſolution, and how they would aſſiſt him, and what they deſired of him, and, in ſhort, had delivered his Meſſage: But that King James told him, he thank'd them very much for their Kindneſs and Readineſs to aſſiſt him; but at that Time the French King could not ſpare any Forces, nor could it be all that Summer, and ſo there was nothing to be done; and thereupon it reſted till the laſt Winter.

Then, Gentlemen, you will hear that the laſt Winter the Deſign was renewed again, about January laſt: For Sir George Barcley came over from the late King, being a Lieutenant in his Guards there, and then they entered into a Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate the King; and that was to be done firſt, to facilitate the Invaſion, which was to follow immediately upon the Execution of the Aſſaſſination: For they thought they cou'd have no Aſſurance of Succeſs in their Invaſion, as long as the King lived; and I hope every one will take Notice, how precious that Life is to us, when it is ſo apparent to all the World, that our Enemies cannot hope for any Succeſs to their Enterprizes and Deſigns to deſtroy us, but by taking that Life away.

Gentlemen, this very Conſpiracy, you will hear the Priſoner at the Bar was acquainted with, and privy to, even this Aſſaſſination; tho' indeed you will hear he did not much approve of it, becauſe he thought it would be a Diſſervice to the late King's Affairs; but he was at ſeveral Meetings with Mr. Porter, and Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Perkins, and ſeveral others that were Conſpirators in that Deſign, and was acquainted with it, as you will hear by the Evidence.

Gentlemen, you will hear further, that about January laſt, the Invaſion being intended to be quickly made, the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind

Freind, had frequent Meetings with Blair, that was Lieutenant-Colonel, and other Officers, to conſider and prepare how to be in a Readineſs. About that Time the Priſoner at the Bar, Captain Blair, and one Captain Ridley, met at a Place in Exchange-Ally, and there they diſcourſed among one another; and there Ridley ſaid there was a conſiderable Roman-Catholick that was ſent to King James, and he wou'd bring the laſt Orders; and Sir John Freind ſaid he knew of it very well, it was ſo, and he hoped he ſhou'd have them brought very quickly.

At another Time, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Blair his Lieutenant-Colonel, met at Jonathans's Coffee-Houſe, and the Priſoner took him up in his Coach, and carried him along with him, and there they had a great Diſcourſe of the Affairs of the Regiment. The Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, told Blair they muſt be very good Husbands of their Money: For if the Invaſion ſhould miſcarry, he ſhou'd not have Money enough to carry on his Trade, but he would take Care about ſome Officers that had not Money to mount themſelves; but a great many were to prepare for themſelves at their own Charges, and for thoſe that were to be under them. They had likewiſe then ſome Diſcourſe about the Thoulon Fleet coming about, and that he thought it not adviſeable till the Thoulon Fleet came round. He ſaid he wou'd not put a Foot in the Stirrop till that were done; and that he wou'd keep out of the Way till all was in a Readineſs, and adviſed Captain Blair to do ſo too.

Gentlemen, you will find it further proved, that about May laſt, the Priſoner at the Bar paid 20*l.* to this Captain Blair, who had laid out Moneys in the Affairs of the Regiment, and this was to Re-imburſe him what he had ſo laid out; and it was in this Manner. You have all heard, I ſuppoſe, of one Colonel Parker, who being taken upon his coming over from France, was a Priſoner in the Tower, but made his Eſcape from thence, to which Eſcape the Priſoner at the Bar was privy. This Eſcape coſt 300 l. as you will hear, and the Priſoner laid down 100 l. of it. But this was to be repay'd him again: But how was it? There was one Johnſon a Prieſt, a Conſpirator likewiſe in this Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, and he undertook and promiſed, that the late King ſhould pay this 100 l. And accordingly one Piggot went over into France, and had this 100 l. paid him by King James, to repay it to Sir John Freind: But he thought fit to keep the Money, and Sir John Friend cou'd not get it of him, and he durſt not ask it, becauſe he knew the Conſideration was not fit to be made Publick. But he told Captain Blair I cannot pay you the Money out of my own Pocket; but Piggot ought to pay me, who has received this Money of mine. If you will prevail with Johnſon, who got this Money from the late King to be paid to Piggot, to perſuade Piggot to pay 20 l. I will allow it in Part of the Money he is to pay me, and you ſhall have it. Captain Blair did prevail with Johnſon to perſuade Piggot to pay this 20 l. and Captain Blair did receive it, and Sir John Friend did agree to allow it to Piggot out of the 100 l. due to him.

Gentlemen, at another Time, about Chriſtmas laſt, there was another 20 l. paid by Sir John Freind's Order and Direction, by Piggot to Blair upon the ſame Account, by the Mediation of Johnſon the Prieſt; and this was paid and allow'd as being laid out in the Affairs of the Regiment before, he being intruſted as Lieutenant-Colonel, to look after the Regiment.

Gentlemen, I have now open'd the Subſtance of the Evidence; the Particulars you will hear from the Witneſſes themſelves. If I have open'd it amiſs, you will take Care, when the Witneſſes are produc'd, to obſerve what they ſay, who will tell you what really was done, and will rectifie any Miſtake of mine: For I wou'd have no ſuch Miſtake do the Priſoner at the Bar any Prejudice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, Mr. Attorney has open'd the Nature and Courſe of our Evidence ſo fully, that I ſhall make no Repetition of any of the Particulars; but call our Witneſſes and prove it in Order as it hath been open'd. And firſt, we call Captain George Porter, (who came in.)

Freind. My Lord, before Mr. Porter is ſworn, I deſire to know whether he is a Roman Catholick, or a Proteſtant?

L. C. J. Why do you deſire that? Is not a Roman Catholick a Witneſs? Though he be a Roman Catholick, that's no Objection to his being a Witneſs.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire to ask him the Queſtion, whether he be a Roman Catholick or no?

L. C. J. Sir John Friend, it is not a proper Queſtion.

Freind. My Lord, a Man ought to know what Profeſſion they are of, that are Witneſſes againſt him for his Life.

L. C. J. Will you ask him whether he be a Chriſtian or no?

Freind. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he be a Papiſt or a Proteſtant.

Mr. At. Gen. If Mr. Porter be willing to tell you he may; but it is not a proper Queſtion.

L. C. J. Eſpecially before he is Sworn; he is not Entitled to ask any Queſtions whatſoever, till he be Sworn.

Freind. My Lord, I beſeech you let me have the Queſtion anſwered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sure you don't conſider, that the Anſwer to that Queſtion is to accuſe himſelf; you don't conſider the Conſequences of it.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Right.

L. C. J. The Queſtion is whether it is your Right or no.

Freind. My Lord, I would not trouble the Court if I cou'd help it, but my Life and All is at Stake, and I muſt make the beſt Defence I can.

L. C. J. Indeed your Queſtion is improper in itſelf; but if he have a Mind to tell you, and anſwer voluntarily, he may.

Freind. I humbly beg your Lordſhip that he may anſwer the Queſtion.

L. C. J. I cannot ſee you have a Right to have this Queſtion anſwered you.

Freind. Mr. Porter, you are a Gentleman, and I deſire you will anſwer whether you be a Roman Catholick or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before he does anſwer, I deſire he may be acquainted with the Danger: He was born a Proteſtant, no doubt, and then turning Roman Catholick, he ſubjects himſelf to a very ſevere Penalty.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, I told you your Queſtion was not proper to be ask'd.

Friend. Pray, my Lord, let him anſwer the Queſtion, it will be of great Uſe to me in my Tryal; pray let me have my Right.

L. C. J. You ſhall have all the Right done you that can be; but in the firſt Place, if a Man be a Roman Catholick, notwithſtanding his Religion, he is a good Witneſs: And beſides that, it may be his anſwering the Queſtion may ſubject him to ſeveral Penalties; at leaſt he is liable to Proſecution upon ſeveral Acts of Parliament that are very penal; and therefore it is by no Means to be ask'd.

Freind. My Lord, I pray only that he may anſwer the Queſtion.

L. C. J. No Man is bound to anſwer any Queſtion that tends to make him accuſe himſelf, or ſubject him to any Penalties.

Fr. My Lord, I do with Submiſſion deſire it, and it is no great Matter for him to ſay whether he be Papiſt or Proteſtant.

L. C. J. If it be no great Matter, then why do you inſiſt upon it? But perhaps it may be a great Matter in the Conſequence of it to him; a Man therefore is not obliged to anſwer any ſuch Queſtions.

Fr. I beſeech your Lordſhip, let him anſwer the Queſtion.

L. C. J. You have my Opinion; if you will, you ſhall have the Opinions of the reſt of the Judges: My Opinion is, That the Queſtion ought not to be anſwer'd.

L. C. J. Treby. Since your Lordſhip's Pleaſure is, That we ſhould deliver our Opinions upon this Point, I muſt declare, I am of the ſame Opinion, That no Man is bound to anſwer any Queſtions that will ſubject him to a Penalty, or to Infamy. If you ſhould ask him, whether he were a Deer-ſtealer, or whether he were a Vagabond, or any other Thing that will ſubject him to Puniſhment, either by Statute or by Common-Law, as whether he be guilty of a Petty Larceny, or the like, the Law does not oblige him to anſwer any ſuch Queſtions.

Fr. Well, I hope the Jury will conſider it, that he will not anſwer the Queſtion; and therefore they are to take it for granted that he is ſo.

L. C. J. Treby. And now to this preſent Purpoſe, to ask a Man whether he be a Popiſh Recuſant, is to ſubject him to Danger: For when you ask him that Queſtion, if he were not bred up in that Religion, then for him to own himſelf of that Religion now, is to own as great a Crime as that you are charged with. If it were not ſo, but he was always bred in that Religion, yet there are very great Penalties that he is ſubject to, as, the Confiſcation of two third Parts of his Eſtate, and ſeveral other Things that he may be liable to, if he ſhould diſcloſe that upon his Anſwer to the Queſtion, which without this Diſcovery could not be prov'd perhaps. We muſt keep the Law ſteady and even between the Priſoner and the Witneſs.

Mr. Juſtice Nevil. I am of the ſame Opinion, it does ſubject him to a Penalty; and unleſs he will voluntarily anſwer it of himſelf, I think it cannot be demanded of him: For he may ſubject himſelf to a Proſecution by it.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. I think, it is not a Queſtion that can of Right be impoſed upon him; he may anſwer it, if he will; but he is under no Obligation to anſwer it, becauſe it may tend to accuſe himſelf of a Crime for which he may be proſecuted, and likewiſe will ſubject him to other Penalties, which the Law cannot compel him to ſubject himſelf to.

Then Captain Porter was ſworn.

Freind. I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you'll conſider this.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Porter, do you know Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray then will you give my Lords and the Jury an Account what Meetings you have had with him, where thoſe Meetings were, and when, and what paſt between you, about inviting the French over hither, or for a Riſing here.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, about the latter End of May laſt, or the Beginning of June, we had two Meetings, one was at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, the other at Mrs. Mountjoy's in St. James's ſtreet. At the firſt Meeting there were preſent my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Mr. Cook, Captain Charnock, and my ſelf; after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in: Now at both thoſe Meetings it was conſulted of, and agreed, to ſend Captain Charnock into France to King James, to deſire him to borrow of the French King 10000 Men to come over hither, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons. Captain Charnock ſaid, He did not care to go upon a fooliſh Meſſage, and therefore deſir'd to know what they would have him to acquaint King James with, and aſſure him of. They all agreed to meet the King, whenever they had Notice of his Landing, with a Body of 2000 Horſe; of which every one in particular was to bring their Quota where-ever he would appoint.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. When was the ſecond Meeting?

Capt. Porter. That was at Mrs. Mountjoy's.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I ask you when it was? how long after the firſt?

Capt. Port. I believe it was about a Fortnight after, or ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Meeting for?

Capt. Port. The ſecond Meeting was to confirm the firſt. Capt. Charnock informed me, that he was to go within 3 or 4 Days, and therefore deſir'd to have a Meeting before he went.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe was there at that ſecond Meeting? What Occaſion was there for it?

Capt. Port. Capt. Charnock deſired the Meeting once more before he went, to ſee whether we all kept our Reſolution.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, what do you know of Sir John Freind's Agreeing to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe?

Capt. Port. I know nothing of that Matter, but what I have heard ſeveral People talk; but I have heard him ſay he would be as ready as any Man, whenever the King came: And I have heard from Captain Charnock, and from Sir William Perkins, that he had a Commiſſion to be a Colonel of Horſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon that ſecond Meeting, who were preſent?

Capt. Port. I told you, Sir, the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent at both Meetings.

Mr. Sol. Gen.. Who elſe were there?

Capt. Port. My Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Perkins, Capt. Chernock, and I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery and Mr. Goodman were there; Mr. Cook and my ſelf were there, but the Priſoner at the Bar I am ſure was there.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray Capt. Porter, will you remember and recollect your ſelf, who were at the firſt Meeting?

Capt. Port. I have named them already, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Name them again then.

Capt. Port. My Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Captain Charnock, Mr Cook, and my ſelf; we dined there, and after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did you ſee Mr. Charnock after this, and what Diſcourſe had you with him about his Journey and the Succeſs of it?

Capt. Port. I never ſaw him till three or four Days after our Riot Buſineſs in Drury-lane, upon the Account of which I had been a Priſoner in Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, and what did he ſay to you?

Capt. Port. He told me that he had been in France, but that King James told him, the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year; and withal, that he had been with Sir John Freind, and the ſeveral other Perſons, with Meſſages from the King, but I do not know whether he had been there or no, only as he told me, that he had been, and brought that Anſwer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray now tell us, what other Meetings you have had about this Matter this Winter.

Capt. Port. I was once with Sir George Barclay and Sir John Freind, at the Nag's Head in St. James's ſtreet; I cannot tell what Diſcourſe they had, they whiſpered among themſelves.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who elſe was there?

Capt. Port. There was Sir George Barclay, Sir William Perkins, my ſelf, Mr. Ferguſon, and one Humes.

L. C. J. Where was that do you ſay?

Capt. Port. At the Nag's Head in St. James's-ſtreet.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Body elſe there that you can remember?

Capt. Port. Captain Charnock came in after Dinner, but I cannot ſay he din'd there.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who elſe do you remember?

Capt. Port. There came in one Harriſon after Dinner; he is a reputed Romiſh Prieſt, and goes by the Name of Johnſon.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, Capt. Porter, what was that Meeting for?

Capt. Port. They had ſeveral Whiſperings among themſelves, but what they diſcourſed of I cannot tell.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, did Sir John Freind ſay any Thing that you heard at that Meeting.

Capt. Port. Sir George Barclay did ſay, That ſome People that were not ſo violent had written over into France to ſtop this Buſineſs; upon which ſaid I, I hope you will have no Letter to Night. Upon which Sir John Freind ſaid, Is there any Thing that is hid behind the Curtain? If there be, I am not fairly dealt withal; I will proceed no further.

Mr. At. Gen. If Sir John Freind has a Mind to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

L. C. J. Pray, Capt. Porter, let me ask you this Queſtion, Did all that were preſent at the firſt Meeting, at the King's-head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, agree to ſend Mr. Charnock into France to the late King?

Capt. Port. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. All of them?

Capt. Port. Yes; we deſir'd Capt. Charnock to anſwer to the King for us that we would meet him at the Head of 2000 Horſe.

L. C. J. Did Sir John Freind agree to it?

Capt. Port. Yes, I do poſitively affirm he did.

L. C. J. Then at the ſecond Meeting, which, you ſay, was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, what was ſaid then?

Capt. Port. We did agree all, That Capt. Charnock ſhould go on with the Meſſage that was reſolved upon at the firſt Meeting; and we would go on with the Buſineſs, and he ſaid he would go away in two or three Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will Sir John Freind ask him any Queſtions?

Fr. I will only ask him if they have done, whether he has any Thing more to ſay.

Capt. Port. No, Sir.

L. C. J. The King's Council have done with him.

Fr. Then, my Lord, I will hear all they can ſay, and when I have heard the whole Evidence, I ſhall know how to anſwer to it.

L. C. J. Before you go, Captain Porter, I would ask you, What Anſwer Mr. Charnock brought back from France?

Capt. Port. I ſay, I did not meet with Captain Charnock, till after I came out of Newgate for the Riot Buſineſs, and then he told me, he had been there, and he had acquanited the ſeveral Gentlemen with the Meſſages he had brought from King James, who thank'd them for their Kindneſſes, but the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then the next that we call is Brice Blair, (who was ſworn.) Pray, Sir, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind?

Capt. Blair. Yes, my Lord; and I am very ſorry to come on ſuch an Account as I do now againſt him. I am ſorry for it with all my Heart——

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, pray will you give an Account, what you know of Sir John Freind's having a Commiſſion from the late King to be a Colonel of Horſe, and when it was, and how; pray tell my Lord, and the Jury the whole Matter.

Capt. Blair. All that I can ſay to this Buſineſs is written in my Paper, and I refer to my Paper.

Mr. At. Gen. You muſt not refer to your Paper, Sir, you muſt tell all what you know.

L. C. J. He may look upon any Paper to refreſh his Memory.

Capt. Bl. I did ſee the Commiſſion, Sir, and I read it.

Mr. At. Gen. What Commiſſion was it, Sir?

Capt. Bl. It was a Commiſſion from King James, to Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you ſee it, Sir?

Capt. Bl. I ſaw it in his Lodgings at the Strand, when he lived near the Strand in Surry-ſtreet.

Mr. At. Gen. Who ſhew'd it you?

Capt. Bl. He ſhew'd it me himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it for?

Capt. Bl. It was for Raiſing a Regiment of Horſe.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it that you did ſee it? How long ago was it?

Capt. Bl. It is well near two Years ago, or thereabouts, as I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was to have been Colonel of that Regiment.

Capt. Bl. He was nominated to be Colonel of it himſelf in the Commiſſion.

L. C. J. Who was the Commiſſion directed to?

Capt. Bl. It was directed to him, to Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Well, and what was done upon it? who were to be the Officers?

Capt.

Capt. Bl. He promiſed me to be his Lieutenant Colonel; and I had the ſame from Mr. Harriſon, and there were ſeveral Letters that I ſaw, that came from my Lord Melford and Secretary Caroll, who were with King James.

Mr. At. Gen. What other Officers were there appointed?

Capt. Blair. There was one Richardſon was to be one of his Captains, and there was one Mr. Fiſher was to be another, and one Hall another; Fiſher was to be his eldeſt Captain, and one Capt. Evans was to be his Captain Lieutenant, and one Captain Vernatti was to be another.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember who was to be his Major?

Capt. Bl. No, Sir, I think I cannot be poſitive as to that. I ſpoke to Capt. Barneſly, that had been a Lieutenant in King James's Service, to be a Lieutenant, and ſometimes he accepted, and ſometimes he refuſed it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what did you do as Lieutenant Colonel upon this Matter?

Capt. Bl. I endeavour'd all I could to get Officers for them; and to raiſe Troops. I endeavour'd to get what Men I could my ſelf.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray what did you do? what Officers did you procure for him?

Capt. Bl. I told you Vernatti and Fiſher, and one Mr. Hall that lives at Deal.

Mr. At. Gen. What Troops did you get under you? Did you engage any to ſerve under you?

Capt. Bl. What? I my ſelf, Sir, Do you mean?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, I do.

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you name any of them?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, if I make uſe of my Paper.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You may make uſe of your Paper to refreſh your Memory.

Capt. Bl. There is a Paper of Names that I gave in before the Council.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, have you his Paper there? let him ſee it to refreſh his Memory.

Mr. Baker. I have none of the Papers, my Lord, they are all ſent before the Council.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, can you tell who was to have been your Lieutenant in your Troop?

Capt. Bl. One Mr. Bertram.

Mr. Mountague. You ſay, Sir, you were conſtituted Lieutenant Colonel; pray, who conſtituted you, and made you ſo?

Capt. Bl. I had only a Promiſe of it from Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray did you lay out any Monies for Sir John Freind? or did he ever pay you any Money afterwards?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I have had ſeveral ſmall Sums of Money from Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what was it for?

Capt. Bl. It was to drink with the Men that belonged to the Regiment, and encourage them.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray did Mr. Piggott pay you any Sums of Money? and by whoſe Order?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he paid me firſt 20 l. and afterwards he paid me another 20 l.

Mr. At. Gen. By whoſe Order was that, Sir?

Capt. Bl. It was by the Order of Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, how do you know that Sir John Freind order'd him to pay it you?

Capt. Bl. Becauſe it was the Money that Piggott had received to repay Sir John Freind, what he had advanced for the furthering of Parker's Eſcape out of the Tower.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you know that he advanced any Money for procuring Parker's Eſcape?

Capt. Bl. He told me ſo himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. How much did Sir John Freind ſay he had advanced for that Purpoſe?

Capt. Bl. He told me 100 l.

Mr. At. Gen. How did he tell you he was to be paid it again?

Capt. Bl. He told me, that King James ordered the Payment of it at France, when Piggott went over, which was immediately afterwards: and I had of that, firſt 20 l. and afterwards 20 l. by the Order of Sir John Freind.

M. Soll. Gen. Pray, Sir, did Sir John Freind tell you what Piggott had received in France?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he ſaid Pigott had received 100 l. in France; and he did not pay it him, but if I could get 20 l. of him, he would allow it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray about what Time was it that the firſt 20 l. was received?

Capt. Bl. I have ſet it down in my Paper; there it is.

Mr. At. Gen. But can't you tell about what Time it was?

Capt. Bl. It was about laſt May, or June, the firſt 20 l. was paid.

Mr. At. Gen. When was the laſt 20 l. paid.

Capt. Bl. It was after I was ſick, about Michaelmas.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Sir, who was by when the laſt 20 l. was paid.

Capt. Bl. Mr. Piggott paid me the laſt 5 l. of it, (for I received it at ſeveral Payments from Mr. Piggott) but the laſt 5 l. was before Sir John Friend) at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray do you know any Thing of Sir John Friend's Receiving any Letter from King James?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he told me he had a Letter from King James.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long ago was that?

Capt. Bl. Truly, I cannot tell.

Mr. Soll Gen. I don't ask you the preciſe Day, but was it within a Twelve Month?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I believe it might be thereabouts.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire he may ſpeak out; for I don't hear half he ſays.

L. C. J. Repeat it to him again.

Capt Bl. Sir, you told me you had received a Letter from King James.

Freind. My Lord, I ſhall anſwer to this all afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, had you at any Time any Diſcourſe with Sir John Freind about one Slater?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I had.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray tell what that was

Capt. Bl. He told me he was to bring him in ſeveral Officers; and that he had intended to make two Lieutenant-Colonels, whereof Captain Slater was to be one; but when he ſaw I was not ſatisfy'd with that, he ſaid he ſhould command a Troop of Non-ſwearing Parſons, and they ſhould be an independent Troop.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay that Slater was to command that Troop.

Capt. Bl. Yes, and it was to be an independant Troop.

Mr. At. Gen. I think you ſay that he and you met at Jonathan's Coffee-houſe.

Capt. Bl. Yes, we did ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Diſcourſe had you there?

Capt.

Capt. Bl. I called him aside and desired to speak to him; and it was when Mr. Fisher told me of this Plot, and desired me to speak to him, a little before this horrible Conspiracy broke out. And I told him what I heard from Fisher, and from Harrison the Priest about it; and he told me that he had heard of it, and he was afraid it would ruin King James, and his Affairs.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it that you told him you had heard.

Capt. Bl. This last horrid Thing, the Conspiracy against the King's Life.

Mr. Cowper. Was it before it broke out that he told you he knew of it?

Capt. Bl. Yes, it was shortly before it broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you meet with him again? and did he carry you in his Coach at any Time?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he did, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What Discourse had you then, when you was with him in the Coach?

Capt. Bl. He took me in his Coach to St. Martins le grand, and, says he, I will do nothing till the Thoulon Fleet meet with the Brest Fleet; at that Time perhaps we shall be all taken up; but, says he, you may sculk about the Town better than I can; and therefore I'll keep my self private; and we must be as good Husbands of our Money as we can; for Money will be very scarce. What do you think you shall need, says he? Truly, Sir, says I, I can't tell; that must be according as I am mounted. For I found I had a few indigent Officers at that Time.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what were you to do?

Capt. Bl. We were to sculk up and down; and when he asked me, what Money I should need, I told him I could not tell; for there were several indigent Officers, most of which begg'd at that Time; and here is a Letter that I had from Sir John Freind, to confirm my Receiving Money from him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Sir John Friend's own Hand?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, it is.

Mr. At. Gen. Then put it in, give it hither.

(It was delivered in to the Attorney General.)

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, what have you heard Sir John Freind say of Sir John Fenwick's being concerned in this Matter?

Capt. Bl. I heard him say, that he believed, that he should command the Party that he was engaged in, and that Sir John Fenwick had Four Troops of Horse, that lay near Reading to be employ'd.

Mr. Soll. Gen. For what Purpose?

Capt. Bl. To be in Readiness upon the Descent.

Freind. Gentlemen of the Jury, I can't hear a Word, I hope you hear.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, look upon that Letter; you say you had that Letter from Sir John Freind, pray who is that H that is mentioned in it?

Capt. Bl. It means Harrison, alias Johnson, the Priest.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what was that Letter written for?

Capt. Bl. It was about the last 20 l. that I was to receive from Piggott.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that Sir John Freind's Hand?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I think so.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you seen Sir John Freind write?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I have seen him write, and I think it is the same Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we desire it may be read.

Then a Jury-man desired he might be asked, Whether he saw Sir John Freind write that Letter?

L. C. J. What say you, did you see him write that Letter?

Capt. Bl. No, my Lord; it came to my Lodging.

Mr. At. Gen. Did ever he own to you he had writ you such a Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, let it be read; read it all, for it is but short.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads.)

For Captain Blair, These.

SIR, Tuesday Morning.

YOU may much wonder you have not received an Answer of yours before now: I have been afflicted with the Gout in my Hand and Foot, that I have not been able to put Pen to Paper; (I thank God) I am somewhat better, and do hope to be in London a Thursday next, about the Hour of Twelve, at Jonathan's Coffee-House, if the Weather do not prevent me; if it do, I shall not come before Monday following: I do desire you for to meet me about that Hour; for it is not convenient for to write a Note to Mr. H. for some Reasons I shall give you, when I see you. I wish you good Health. I am,

SIR,

Your Affectionate Friend, and Servant,

John Freind.

Jury-man. Pray, Sir, what Date is it of?

Cl. of Arr. It has no Date but Tuesday Morning.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Sir John Freind meet you on the Thursday, according to this Letter?

Jury-man. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, How this Letter came to him, whether by the Penny Post, or how?

Capt. Bl. I don't know, I believe it was by a Porter: It came first to me when I was in Bed, and my Wife brought it up to me.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, answer my Question. Did Sir John Freind afterwards meet you at Jonathan's Coffee-House, according to this Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, he did.

Mr. At. Gen. And did you there speak about the Business that's contained in that Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, and accordingly I had the Order.

Mr. At. Gen. What Order?

Capt. Bl. An Order for the 20 l.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Capt. Blair, do you remember that you dined with Sir John Freind, near the Exchange, in January last?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I think I did, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Discourse was there between you then? Who was with you besides you Two?

Capt. Bl. I must refer that to my Paper.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Well then, what Discourse was between you and Sir John Freind there?

Capt. Bl. It is down in my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know one Captain Ridley?

Capt.

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Solt. Gen. Was he at any Time preſent, when you and the Priſoner at the Bar were together?

Freind. My Lord, I cannot hear a Word he ſays.

L. C. J. Here is a great Noiſe indeed, and he it ſeems is not well, and ſpeaks but low; pray, order Silence in the Court. (Which was done by Proclamation.)

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, he ſpeaks of a Letter that you ſent to him that bears Date ſome Tueſday Morning, that you would be in Town, and meet him at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe upon Thurſday following, at Twelve a Clock; and that Letter was read, and he ſays he met you accordingly, and there was Order taken for the Payment of the laſt 20 l. This is that he ſays; Did you hear it?

Freind. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. That is what he ſaid. Then go on: You ſay he met you at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe according to that Letter.

Capt. Bl. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was done there, when you met?

Capt. Bl. Nothing but the Order.

L. C. J. Who did he give the Order to?

Capt. Bl. He gave the Order to Harriſon.

L. C. J. Why, was Harriſon there?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he came there before I came away.

L. C. J. But you ſay he gave the Order to Harriſon?

Capt. Bl. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was the Order for?

Capt. Bl. It was to pay me that Money.

L. C. J. What Money was that?

Capt. Bl. It was the laſt 20 l.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the 20 l. paid you afterwards?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Who paid it?

Capt. Bl. Mr. Piggott; he paid me the laſt 5 l. of it before Sir John Freind's Face.

L. C. J. Was this the firſt 20 l. or the laſt, do you ſay?

Capt. Bl. It was the laſt.

L. C. J. What was this Money paid for?

Capt. Bl. I believe it was to ſupport me to go about the Buſineſs of the Regiment.

L. C. J. You believe; that's not enough: But are you ſure it was ſo?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I am ſure it was for that.

L. C. J. Had you ever demanded Money of him before?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. For what was that Money that you demanded?

Capt. Bl. It was to drink with the Men that were brought in; to cheriſh, and keep them together.

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe were thoſe Men kept together?

Capt. Bl. They were for his Regiment.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, had Sir John Freind any Occaſion to pay you any Money upon any other Account?

Capt. Bl. No, Sir, not out of that 100 l.

Mr. Cowper. You do not underſtand the Queſtion. Had you any Dealings with Sir John Friend, but about this Matter concerning the Regiment?

Capt. Bl. No, never in all my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, do you remember your Meeting with Sir John Friend when one Ridley was there?

Capt. Bl. Yes, it was at the Chop-houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Give an Account what paſs'd there.

Capt. Bl. Mr. Ridley ſaid, A Gentleman was lately gone over to France, about Ten Days before; and Mr. Ridley ſaid, he was a very ſenſible Gentleman, a Roman Catholick, an ancient Man, about Threeſcore Years of Age; what he was, I can't tell: He ſaid, he believed he ſhould bring the laſt Orders.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Sir John Freind ſay?

Capt. Bl. Sir John Freind ſaid, He knew of it; but he named no more.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Effect of thoſe Orders, as you underſtood?

Capt. Bl. I cannot tell that, Sir, indeed.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you know Mr. Charnock?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of his going to France.

Capt. Bl. I met him upon the Exchange the laſt Summer, and I told him, I expected not to have ſeen him here at that Time, I thought he had been abroad; he told me he was come from France, but who ſent him I cannot tell, I do not know upon my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what has Sir John Freind ſaid to you about Ferguſon? Whether was not he to have been an Officer in his Regiment?

Capt. Bl. No; but Sir John Freind ſaid, he would join, and Mr. Ferguſon himſelf has told me ſo.

M. At. Gen. When did he tell you ſo?

Capt. Bl. A good while ago.

Mr. At. Gen. How long ago?

Copt. Bl. Two Years ago and above.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did Sir John Freind, tell you any Thing about Ferguſon, that he would bring in any Men?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he ſaid he would bring in a great many.

Mr. At. Gen. Will the Priſoner ask him any Queſtions?

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, I ſhall by and by, if they have done with him.

L. C. J. Yes, they have done with him.

Then he pauſed, and peruſed his Papers.

Freind. Firſt, as to the Commiſſion you charge me with, that I ſhould receive a Commiſſion from King James; I deſire to know, whether it was ſigned, or ſealed, and what Date it was.

Capt. Bl. I cannot tell the Date indeed, Sir John; for I never thought to come here upon ſuch an Account as this: But I think it was in Paper, ſigned above James Rex, and below, By his Majeſty's Command, Melford; and a little Seal upon the Margin.

Freind. This is the hardeſt Thing in the World upon a Man; here you have charg'd me with Money to ſubſiſt and encourage Soldiers.

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Freind. I would only ſay this; you were recommended to me for a very honeſt Man, and you have come to me ſeveral Times, and told me, Sir, my Neceſſities are very great, I am ready to ſtarve, I have a great Charge; for God's ſake will you be pleaſed to beſtow ſomething upon me, to relieve my Neceſſities: It's true, I have given you Money ſeveral Times, but I never gave it for any other

other Uſe but Charity; God knows my Heart. I deſire you, to conſider with your ſelf and anſwer it. There is a God above where you muſt give an Account as well as I, and I hope you will conſider of it. Pray declare the Truth, Whether you have not writ thoſe Lines to me ſeveral Times, that you were ready to ſtarve, and beg'd of me to relieve your Neceſſities?

Capt. B. I have ſo, Sir, I acknowledge it.

Freind. Pray take me Right, and was not that Money I gave You, only upon pure Charity?

Capt. B. Yes, you did give me Charity, but I had expended ſo much Money in your Buſineſs, that reduced me to that, God knows my Heart. I have laid out many a Pound upon this Affair.

Freind. It is the hardeſt Thing in the World, this is a Roman Catholick too.

Capt. B. I am ſure it coſt me many a Pound more than ever I had of you.

Freind. You ſay you Liſted a great many Men, who where the Men? What are their Names? what were they For?

Capt. B. I have given a Liſt in of them to the Council.

Freind. Who are they? For God knows I know nothing of them.

L. C. J. If you have a Liſt there, let it be produced.

Capt. B. I gave it in to the Council; and Sir John I brought in ſeveral Officers to you.

Mr. At. Gen. Remember, and name as many as you can.

Capt. B. I have named the Officers already.

Mr. At. Gen. Name them again.

Capt. B. Did not I bring Captain Fiſher to you, and did not you promiſe to make him your Eldeſt Captain?

Freind. No, you never did.

L. C. J. Theſe are Queſtions of your own asking, ſo you muſt hear him.

Capt. B. I brought Captain Fiſher to you, and accordingly we Dined at Captain Simons's, and there was Captain Ridley, Mr. Richardſon, and Mr. Fiſher and you talked together, and yon liſtned to him, and in my own hearing you promiſed he ſhould be eldeſt Captain, upon Condition, that he would bring in a Troop; and this is true ſo help me God.

Freind. Pray, where are your Men? and what are your Men that you Liſted?

Capt. B. I never ſpoke of Liſting, I only ſpoke of Encouraging.

Freind. Did not you ſay you had Liſted a great many Men for to be of my Regiment?

Capt. B. No, Sir, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. I think you do miſtake, Sir John he did not ſay Liſt.

Capt. B. I had Money from you upon the Account of Encouraging, and Treating, and Drinking with a great many of the Men: And you ſaid it was impoſſible to keep them together, but that I muſt have Money to Treat them, and Drink with them; but you deſired me to be as good a Husband as I could.

Freind. I never ſaid ſo, theſe are very hard Things upon me.

Capt. B. Did not I bring Captain Cole and Captain Neale to you, and his Brother-in-Law Mr. Robinſon, and Mr. Gellibrand? and did not we Dine together?

Freind. I know nothing of all this I declare to you.

L. C. J. If you will ask him any more Queſtiſtions, do.

Capt. B. I brought thoſe three Gentlemen, and we Dined together.

L. C. J. Where did you Dine then?

Capt. B. At Hackney, when Sir John lived there, at his own Houſe.

Freind. When was it?

Capt. B. It is above a Year ago. Pray, Sir John, don't think to daſh me out of Countenance, tho' I am very Ill; I ſpeak nothing but the Truth, and therefore I will not be daſht out of Countenance. You know what I ſay to be true; you then drank a Glaſs of Wine to Captain Cole: And did not you promiſe him, becauſe he was one of your Mother's Name, that he ſhould have a Place in the Exciſe next one of the Commiſſioners. ſays I, Sir John, what will you give me? O, ſays he you ſhall have the Regiment, Man. This was before Robinſon, his Mother-in-Law, and Mr. Gellibrand.

L. C. J. Who was to have the Place in the Exciſe.

Capt. B. Captain Cole.

Freind. I know not a Word of all this.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Captain Blair, be not daſhed, but ſpeak the Truth, and you need fear Nothing.

Capt. B. This I ſay, was before Mr. Robinſon and Mr. Gellibrand.

Freind. I don't know Gellibrand, nor none of them.

L. C. J. Was that Cole to be any Thing in the Regiment.

Capt. B. Yes, he was to have been a Captain, and to bring in a Troop.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir John, will you ask him any more Queſtions.

Freind. No, I muſt depend upon the Jury, for I cannot remember half what he has ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Diſcourſe between you and him, about ſome briſk Men that were to follow him;

L. C. J. But before you ask him, Mr. Solicitor, we muſt know whether he will ask him any more Queſtions, for he is now his Witneſs. Do you ask him any more Queſtions, Sir John?

Freind. I can ask about no more than what I hear.

L. C. J. But ask him what you will.

Freind. My Lord, I have not heard half what he has ſaid, I hope the Jury will take Care in it.

L. C. J. Some Part of it was twice repeated to you.

Friend. As to that my Lord, I would ask him a Queſtion or Two. Was that my Letter?

Capt. B. Yes, it was.

Freind. did you ſee me Write it?

Capt. B. No, it came to my Hands by a Porter, as I believe, when I was in Bed, my Wife brought it up to me.

Freind. What was that Letter for?

Capt. B. In order to pay the laſt 20 l. and I did ſee a Return of a Letter that you Writ to King James.

Mr. At. Gen. Who ſhewed you that Letter to King James?

Capt. B. He ſhew'd it me himſelf.

L. C. J. How long ago is that?

Capt. B. A Year, and a half ago, as near as I can Remember.

L. C. J. Did he ſay any Thing of an Anſwer he had to it.

Capt. B. Yes, but I cannot Remember what it was Directly.

Juryman. He was pleaſed to ſay he ſaw a Letter from King James.

L. C. J. No, No, Sir, it was a Letter to King James.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, if he knows the Contents of that Letter.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him write the Letter, or did he ſhew you the Letter he had Writ?

Capt. B. I did not ſee him write the Letter, I ſee his Hand to the Letter, and he ſhew'd me the Letter, that he ſaid he had written to King James; and there is this particular Paſſage to confirm it, it was at Mr. Piggot's Mother's Houſe; I dined with him there that Day, and when he ſhew'd me the Letter, I told him I was ſo well pleaſed with the Penning it, that I believed Mr. Ferguſon had a Hand in it; and he was very angry, that I ſhould think, he was not able to write, and did not write the Letter himſelf.

Juryman. My Lord, ſince it ſeems, he peruſed the Letter, I deſire he may be asked, whether he can Remember the Contents of that Letter, or any of it?

Capt. B. Really, my Lord, I cannot tell that particularly: But I am apt to think it was about the Buſineſs of the King, and about the Regiment.

L. C. J. Can you tell truly any the Contents of it?

Capt. B. That it was about the Affairs of the Regiment, I am poſitive.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, before he goes away (that the Jury may not go away with a Miſtake,) I deſire it may be Obſerved, he does not ſay, he ſaw Sir John Friend, write the Letter.

L. C. J. No, No, but that he ſhew'd it him himſelf.

Freind. When was that Letter writ that I ſhew'd to you?

Capt. B. It was about a Year and a Half ago.

Freind. I declare in the Preſence of God, I never Writ one.

Juryman. He ſayes you ſhew'd him the Letter, therefore it is very fit we ſhould ſee it.

L. C. J. Nay, Sir, you muſt not talk to the Priſoner; if you have any Queſtions to ask, you muſt propoſe them to the Court.

Freind. I declare in the Preſence of God, I never writ any ſuch Letter, as this he now charges me with.

Capt. B. And I declare in the Preſence of God you ſhew'd me ſuch a Letter.

Freind. Yes, you may, but I am a Proteſtant, you are a Papiſt, you may do any Thing.

Mr. At. Gen. You may ask any Queſtions of him, Sir John, but you muſt not rail at the Witneſs.

Freind. But when you charge me with the writing of a Letter to King James, I ought to ſpeak to it. It ſeems I am not to ask whether he is a Papiſt.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays you ſhew'd him a Letter, that you ſaid you had Written to King James, which he Read, and liked the Penning of it ſo well, that he Thought Ferguſon had a Hand in it; at which you were offended that he ſhould think you could not write ſuch a Letter your ſelf.

Freind. I declare in the Preſence of God I never writ any ſuch Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſuppoſe you'l diſprove him by and by.

Freind. I can have no Witneſſes to this Matter.

Mr. At. Gen. And you can't expect your own Denyal ſhould go for Proof. If you will ask him no more Queſtions, let him go down, and eaſe himſelf.

Freind. He muſt not be askt whether he is a Papiſt, but I hope you will take Notice, Countrymen, that theſe Witneſſes are Papiſts, and they think they merit Heaven by ſwearing againſt Proteſtants, whom they call Hereticks.

L. C. J. Indeed, Sir John, I don't hear you: Pray ſpeak ſo loud that the Court may hear what you ſay.

Freind. I will my Lord; I ſay he is a Roman Catholick, and I have Witneſſes to ſwear he is ſo, and Deſire I may prove that he is a Roman Catholick, and therefore he is not to be heard againſt a Proteſtant.

Mr. At. Gen. Then the next Witneſs we call is Mr. Bertram, (who was Sworn.)

Friend. But I have not done with Mr. Porter.

L. C. J. Well you ſhall have him by and by, let the King's Council go on in their Method.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Bertram do you know Captain Blair that was here juſt now?

Bertram. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you Known him.

Bertram. About Eight or Nine Years.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe have you had with him about any Regiment that was to be raiſed for the late King James.

Bertram. Captain Blair had told me for two Years laſt paſt that Sir John Friend was to have a Regiment of Horſe, that were to be raiſed, and lye poſted about the Town, and Captain Blair was to be Lieutenant-Colonel to the Regiment, and I was to be Lieutenant to Captain Blair in his Troop.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we only call him to Confirm what Captain Blair has ſaid that he was to be his Lieutenant, and that this was talked of two Years before. Did he tell you Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment of Horſe?

Bertram. Yes Sir, and he obliged me to bring in as many Men, and Horſes as I could into this Regiment, and he told me Captain Fiſher, Captain Varnatti, and Captain Cole were to be Captains in the Regiment.

L. C. J. And what were you to be?

Bertram. A Lieutenant.

L. C. J. To whom?

Bertram. To Captain Blair; he has told me ſo ſeveral Times, and talked to me about the Affairs of the Regiment; a great deal that I cannot now Remember, relating to that Purpoſe.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence againſt Sir John Freind; he is only called to confirm the Teſtimony of Captain Blair; that Blair ſpoke of it long before he gave his Evidence, and ſo it is not a new Thing now invented by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir John Freind did ask what Men he had Ingaged, and among others he named this Mr. Bertram to be his own Lieutenant, and he now tells you Blair promiſed him ſo to be two Years ago, and then told him Sir John Friend was to have a Regiment.

Friend. Do you know me Sir?

Bertram. No, Sir, I never was in your Company in my Life, I only tell you what I have heard from Captain Blair, I do not know that ever I ſaw your Face.

L. C. J. His Evidence Sir John Freind hurts you not, as to any particular Thing that he knows againſt you, he is only brought to confirm what

Captain

Captain Blair ſaid, that he was to be his Lieutenant in his Troop.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. Look ye Sir John Freind, the King's Council have done, and now you may ſpeak, and ſay what you have a Mind to ſay in your own Defence.

Mr. J. Rokeby. And call what Witneſſes you have a Mind to call.

Freind. My Lord, in the firſt Place, I deſire to know whether Mr. Courtney is come.

L C. J. Your Sollicitor can beſt tell that.

Freind. I perceive he is not come.

L. C. J. Well go on: I ſuppoſe he will not be long before he comes, we will ſtay for him.

Freind. My Lord, I muſt wait for my Witneſs: But in the mean Time, as to Mr. Porter's Evidence. I own I was at the Meeting at the King's Head in Leaden-Hall Street; I declare I was at that Place, and there were ſome Gentlemen there, but how many or whom I cannot ſay; but I declare there was not one Word ſpoken there of any Raiſing of Men, nor any Thing of that Nature, that he ſpeaks of, but only we were drinking a Glaſs of Wine, and eating a Diſh of Meat together, and Sir John Fenwick at that Time coming in ſaid to us, I deſire you to come to our End of the Town, and take a Diſh of Meat with us. And there was nothing ſpoke of any Thing relating to the Government. Gentlemen theſe are Papiſts, and I am a Proteſtant, they don't care what they ſay, for they think they merit Heaven by deſtroying Proteſtants; and they are not to be believed, and that is the Reaſon that I was not to ask them the Queſtion, for by Law they are not Witneſſes, and for that I appeal to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. H. Why are they not Witneſſes?

Freind. Nay I appeal to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. H. Truly I think they are Witneſſes, I know nothing to the Contrary.

Freind. My Lord, Papiſts are not good Witneſſes againſt Proteſtants for this Reaſon, that I ſhall tell you; I am adviſed, my Lord, that a Papiſt is not a good Witneſs to prove a Proteſtant a Traytor within the Stat. of 25. of Ed. 3.

L. C. J. H. Who ſays ſo?

Freind. My Lord, I deſire to know whether there is ſuch a Statute?

L. C. J. H. Yes no doubt of it, there is ſuch a Statute as that of the 25 Ed. 3. about Treaſons.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, does not that make it ſo?

L. C. J. H. No indeed, I know no ſuch Thing.

Mr Sol. Gen. That cannot be, my Lord, that any ſuch thing ſhould be, for all were Papiſts then, there was no ſuch Thing as a Proteſtant in the time of Ed. 3.

Freind. My Lord, there is the Statute of the Third of James the Firſt, Cap. 4*th.* and other Statutes made in the Time of King Charles the Second, particularly in the 30*th* Year of his Reign Cap. 2*d.* Whereby it is plain they are not to be believed againſt Proteſtants, becauſe they believe them Guilty of Damnable Hereſie; and by thoſe Statutes they are reputed Infamous.

L. C. J. Where is your Statute.

Friend. My Lord, I have no Statute-Book, I deſire it may be Inquired into, this Advice was given me by my Lawyer, I am no Lawyer my ſelf, there is the Statute of 3. James the Firſt, Cap. 4 and the next is 30. Car. 2. Cap. 2.

L. C. J. Well the Statute-Book ſhall be looked into.

Freind. My Lord, the Perſon is not come, who is to give Evidence againſt Captain Blair, the principal Witneſs, he is a Priſoner at the Gate-houſe, and your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay you would have Patience till he came.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we will ſtay a while.

Freind. I pray my Lord do, for it will be very material for me.

L. C. J. Treby Have you any Thing to fill up the Time with in the mean Time.

Then William Courtney appeared.

L. C. J. Is your Sollicitor returned with this Habeas Corpus.

Freind. I believe he is in or about the Court, but I cannot get him to me the Croud is ſo great.

After much adoe Courtney came in.

L. C. J. Is this the Witneſs you wou'd have?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Then what do you ſay to him?

Freind. My Lord, muſt I ask him the Queſtions?

L. C. J. Yes, you muſt propoſe your Queſtions to the Court, and they will ask them of the Witneſſes. If this be the Perſon you ſpeak of you had beſt examine him.

Freind. Mr. Courtney I deſire you would ſpeak what you know of Captain Blair.

Courtney. Gentlemen, I have been a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe about a Month, and while I was there Captain Blair at the ſame Time came in as a Priſoner, as mentioned in the Proclamation; being my old Acquaintance, (I was in Bed being in upon ſome other Accounts,) and when they told me Captain Blair was brought in, I deſired him to come into my Chamber. I told him I was ſorry to ſee him there, I told him I hoped he was none of thoſe concerned in this Plot; he ſaid he was in the Proclamation, but that he was innocent, and knew nothing of the Plot, nor of the Aſſaſſination, nor any Thing like it; there were ſeveral other Perſons in that Place at the ſame Time, and he ſaid he was as innocent as the Child unborn.

Freind. Did he mention any Thing of me then?

Courtney. At that Time he ſaid nothing of you.

Freind. Pray Sir, do you believe he is a Roman Catholick?

Courtney. I do not know his Religion indeed.

Freind. But don't you know him to be a Roman Catholick.

Courtney. He bore the Character of one, but I never ſaw him at any Church.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Pray Sir how long have you known Captain Blair?

Courtney. By ſight, I have known him 6 or 7 Years.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Pray, upon what Account did you call him Captain?

Courtney. It was a common Name among all the Company: He was called ſo.

L. C. J. What all the Time that you knew him?

Courtney. Yes, all the Time that I knew him, I knew no other Name that he had.

Freind. But did not you hear that he was reputed to be a Roman Catholick?

Courtney. I have heard that Character of him, among thoſe that I have known, but I have very little Knowledge of his Religion.

L. C. J. Is this what you can ſay?

Courtney. There are ſeveral others that were Witneſſes of this, as well as I; I never ſaw you Sir John Freind, before in my Life, to my Knowledge, nor ever ſpoke to you.

Freind. Sir, a Note was ſent to me, that you could do me ſome Service, and that was the Reaſon I ſent for you. I deſire Mr Carpenter, Mr King, and Mr Payne may be called.

L. C. J. Have you done with this Man then?

Freind, Do you know Captain Porter, Sir?

Courtney, Yes, I do, Sir.

Fr. Sir, do you know him to be a Roman Catholick?

Courtney, Sir, I have heard that he has ſuch a Character.

L. C. J. What Character has he?

Courtney, That he is a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. That's only by Hear-ſay.

Freind, My Lord, I have done with this Man.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, then the Keeper may carry him back again.

Courtney. Sir, I have ſomething elſe to ſay.

Fr. My Lord, he ſays he has ſomething elſe to ſay.

L. C. J. Then ſet him up again: (which was done.) Well, Sir, what is it you have more to ſay?

Courtney. Two or three Days after that Time, there was a Priſoner then in the Gate-houſe, who was an Enſign in the Army, was reading the Flying Poſt in my Chamber, and in that Flying Poſt there was News that Capt. Blair was making a great Diſcovery, and that he had accus'd Sir John Freind, for having receiv'd a Commiſſion for a Regiment in which he was to be Lieutenant Colonel, and ſaid a great deal about that Regiment, how he had received Subſiſtence Money for them from Sir John Freind. A little after Captain Blair came into the Room, and ask'd me if I had got the News; I told him yes; and Captain Blair then ask'd what was the Import of it? I told him it was there, that he was making a great Diſcovery, and particularly, that he was to be Lieutenant Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had received Subſiſtence Money from Sir John Freind for the Men of the Regiment. Captain Blair anſwer'd, that they might put what they would in the News, but he knew nothing of it, nor did not receive any Money; and this was a great Surprize upon me, and upon thoſe others that heard him, when we were told he was to be the main Evidence againſt Sir John Freind.

Freind. Well, Sir, do you know any Thing elſe?

Courtney. Captain Blair was bemoaning himſelf afterwards, that he went againſt his Conſcience in this Thing, and his Wife told me that he was very much concern'd, becauſe he was going to do this againſt his Conſcience, and ſhe was ſure it would break his Heart.

Fr. Do you know any Thing more?

Courtney. And he told me in his Chamber upon Friday Night laſt, about Nine a Clock I came to ſee him, he lay upon his Bed very ill, and his Wife was with him; I asked him how he did, and he clapt his Hands, and ſaid he was very ill. Pray, ſaid I, what ails you? Sure you have gotten ſome very great Cold. Oh! no, ſays he, Life is ſweet, I don't know what it is I ail, but were it not for Life, I ſhould never do what I do.

L. C. J. Did he tell you, he went againſt his Conſcience?

Courtney. His Wife and he ſpoke at firſt, that he went againſt his Conſcience, and he believed his Conſcience was in a miſerable State, and this I ſpoke innocently among ſome of the Priſoners, and I did not know that it was taken Notice of, but it ſeems ſome Body has acquainted Sir John Freind, and ſo I am brought here, I know nothing of being a Witneſs, I aſſure you.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. Pray, who were preſent when this Diſcourſe was between you and Blair? You ſay there were two other Perſons preſent when this Diſcourſe was between you, and Captain Blair and his Wife, who were thoſe two Perſons?

Courtney. What Diſcourſe do you ſpeak of, my Lord?

L. C. J. You ſaid there were two Perſons in your Chamber.

Courtney. Does your Lordſhip mean at the Reading of the Flying Poſt?

L. C. J. Yes.

Courtney. My Lord, this Gentleman that I was ſpeaking of was lying down upon the Bed, and Captain Blair came into my Room juſt after the News was read, and ask'd me if I had got the News, I told him yes, he ask'd what was the Import of it? I told him, they ſaid he was making a great Diſcovery, and particularly againſt Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Well, and who were there then?

Courtney. This Enſign that is now a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe, who I ſuppoſe can ſay the ſame Thing.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let Mr Blair be call'd while he is here, and let him know what this Witneſs ſays, that the Court and Jury may know what he has to ſay to it.

L. C. J. Yes, pray let Mr. Blair be brought in again; (which was done.)

L. C. J. Treby. Now, let Mr. Courtney repeat what he ſaid now before about Capt. Blair's Declarations to him.

Courtney. My Lord, I tell your Lordſhip, there was one Tooley a Priſoner in the Gatehouſe; when he heard the Flying Poſt cry'd, bought it, or it was order'd to be bought, and it being brought into my Chamber, I deſir'd him to read it, and I was walking about the Room: In the mean Time Capt. Blair came in, and ask'd if we had got the News? we ſaid yes; and he ask'd what News there was in it? I reply'd, it is ſaid that you are making a great Diſcovery, that you were to be Lieutenant Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had received a great deal of Subſiſtence Money for the Regiment: Says he, They may put what they will in their News, but I know of no Regiment, nor any Subſiſtence, nor of any Commiſſion. The Man that read the Book, will ſay the ſame that I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When was this?

Courtney. This was one Day when the Flying Poſt came out, the laſt Saturday but one I think.

L. C. J. But you talk'd of ſomething he ſhould ſay to you of going againſt his Conſcience?

Courtney. That was upon Friday Night laſt, I came to ſee Capt. Blair, and his Wife was with him, and Captain Blair was very ill, and clapping his Hands, and groaning, and moving himſelf, and in a very miſerable Condition, truly I thought he was giving up the Ghoſt. I ask'd him upon what Account he was ſo ſad, and told him I thought he had got ſome great Cold; he told me No. Well, ſaid I, Captain Blair, I underſtand yon are going to morrow to Hicks's-Hall, and I pray God direct you. (Says he ſeveral Times) I pray God direct us all; Life is ſweet. Oh! ſays his Wife, dear Sir, he would never do it, but to ſave his Life; but it goes againſt his Conſcience: So ſaid I to him, you have had the Character of an honeſt Gentleman; I hope you will ſhew your ſelf ſuch, and I pray God direct you: I wiſh no Man's Blood may lie at your Door. Says he, I am an unfortunate Man, that is the Thing that troubles me, or ſomething to that Purpoſe; which ſhew'd all the Remorſe of Conſcience which could be in the World. I ſpoke of this innocently among the Priſoners, and it ſeems, it was communicated to Sir John Freind, and ſo I am brought here to teſtifie it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what ſay you to this Captain Blair? you hear what he ſays, do you give an Account what you know of it.

L. C. J. You hear what Diſcourſe he ſays he had with you, what ſay you to it?

Capt. Bl. My Lord, this Gentleman crouded himſelf in upon me, my Wife was with me, and he told me he had a Cup of Brandy, which would be good for me if I had a Cold. God knows my Heart, I deſired no Company might come to me. Says he, Captain Blair, I have heard you have been an honeſt Gentleman all along, and you are going to Hicks's Hall to morrow, and a great deal of ſuch Diſcourſe as that, and I pray God Almighty direct you: That's all that I know paſs'd. I was very ill, very ſick, as I am far from being well now; but as for any Thing of Remorſe of Conſcience, as I hope for Mercy and Salvation, I never expreſs'd any ſuch Thing to him.

L. C. J. Did your Wife ſay, that you were troubled, that you were going to do that which went againſt Conſcience, and you would not do it but to ſave your Life?

Capt. Bl. No, I am ſure ſhe did not.

L. C. J. Did that Gentleman thruſt himſelf into your Company, or did you deſire him for to come to you?

Capt. Bl. No, he thruſt himſelf into the Room.

Courtney. The Sink was hard by, and I heard Captain Blair groan, and ſo I went in to ſee him; every Body had Acceſs to him.

Capt. Bl. Pray, where is the Keeper?

Keeper. Here I am, Sir.

Capt. Bl. Did not I beg of you for God's ſake, that no one ſhould come to me but my Wife?

Mr. At. Gen. If the Keeper of the Gate-houſe be there pray ſwear him.

The Keeper of the Gatehouſe was ſworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What do you ſay as to Captain Blair's deſiring that no Body ſhould come to him, but his Wife?

Keeper. No Body was to come to him unleſs they forced themſelves upon him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of that Man's coming to him?

Keeper. No, Sir, I know nothing of it.

Capt. Bl. I always deſir'd to have the Door lockt with the Key on the Inſide, that no Body might come to me but whom I had a Mind to.

Keeper. He did ſo, becauſe he was ill, and no Body did come to him that I know of.

Capt. Bl. My Wife being with me came to me to the Bedſide, while this man was with me, and I was lying upon my Back; and ſaid ſhe, for Chriſt Jeſus's Sake, dear Blair, do not ſpeak any Thing.

L. C. J. When was this?

Capt. Bl. When this Gentleman was with me, ſhe deſired me not to ſay any Thing before him; becauſe ſaid ſhe, I do not know but he may be a Trepan.

Courtney. Upon the Word of an honeſt Man, and my Reputation is as dear to me, as yours is to you, ſhe ſaid nothing of that. She told me, you were going to do that which was againſt your Conſcience, and you would not do it but to ſave your Life.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what is this Man committed for, you Keeper?

Keeper. He is committed for Suſpicion of Treaſon.

Courtney. I have been taken up Five Times upon Suſpicion, and this laſt Time I was committed to the Gatehouſe.

Mr At. Gen. Where do you live, Sir?

Courtney. In Old Southampton Buildings.

Mr At. Gen. How long have you lived there?

Courtney. I have lodged there about Four Years and an half; there are ſeveral Perſons can come and give a Teſtimony of me.

Mr Sol. Gen. How come you, Sir, to be brought as a Witneſs here?

Courtney. I was ſurpized at it: for my Part what I did was by Way of Pity, ſeeing him in ſuch a Condition; I pitied your Soul, becauſe you and your Wife both ſhewed ſo much Trouble and Remorſe of Conſcience: As for Sir John Freind, I never ſaw him till to Day in all my Life, that I know of.

Mr At. Gen. What Countryman are you, Sir?

Courtney. I am an Iriſh Man born.

Mr At. Gen. Have you any Eſtate in Ireland?

Courtney. No, Sir, I have not.

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray, how came you to go to Mr Blair?

Courtney. I have known him a long Time; I have been often in his Company at the Coffee-houſe; I cannot ſay I am intimately acquainted with Captain Blair, but only as I have ſeen him in the Coffee-houſe a great many Times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you how you came to go to him; becauſe it ſeems he deſir'd no Body ſhould come to him, but his Wife.

Courtney. He may ſay what he pleaſes; for he lay firſt in one Room, and then in another, and he could never go to the neceſſary Houſe, but he muſt go thorow my Room; but if you pleaſe to ſend for Mr. Tooley and Capt. Courtney, they will ſay and ſwear that theſe Things paſs'd in their Preſence, or to the ſame Purpoſe, except what paſs'd between him and me in his own Chamber. Enſign Tooley did read the Paper of the Flying Poſt; and as for what he ſaid of his knowing nothing of the Plot, it was talk'd of up and down in the Priſon, and ſo it came to me; and I invited him into my Chamber, as my old Acquaintance; though I was not very familiar with him; and as he declared, he knew nothing of the Matter.

L. C. J. You hear what he ſays; Captain Blair, did you tell him you knew nothing of the Plot.

Capt. Bl. Yes, I believe I might at firſt; as we were talking when I firſt came in, and I told him the Truth: For I was innocent as to the Aſſaſſination, for indeed I was ſo. And as to the Invaſion there was only ſome general Diſcourſe, and I was not willing to explain my ſelf among ſuch People as they were, when they ask'd me any Queſtions about it, I had to do with the King and Council.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, have you any more Witneſſes to examine?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, I deſire Mr. King may be called. (Which was done, and he appeared.)

L. C. J. There he is, Sir, what would you ask him?

Fr. I desire to know of him, whether he does not know Captain Blair and Captain Porter to be Roman Catholicks, and whether he does not know me to be a Protestant.

King. I am of Opinion Mr Porter is a Papist; he was always taken to be so at Epsom, where I used to go, and where he used to go, and he was never look'd upon as a Protestant.

L. C. J. And what do you take Sir John Freind to be;

King. I take Sir John Freind to be a Protestant; so he is, and so he ever was.

Fr. But when you have been in my Company, and they have been speaking of the Government, what have I said or done?

King. When ever they started any reflecting Words upon the Government, he was used to say, Forbear, I do not admit of any such Discourse.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you known him?

King. He has been my Acquaintance this Fifteen Years, and married a Relation of my Wife's Husband. At which there was very great Laughing.

King. I mean her former Husband.

L. C. J. He has reconcil'd the Matter very well for this Point; for he tells you he meant her first Husband.

Freind. Ay, my Lord, no doubt of it, he will recover it; it was her former Husband. Mr King, don't you mean it was her former Husband?

King. Yes, Sir, I have told you it was so; her former Husband's Name was Thomas Case.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, you are to look upon two Statutes, the one is 3 Jac. 1. Cap. 4. and the 30th Car. 2. Cap. 2.

King. My Lord, I have heard him say, If I had not taken the Oaths to K. James, which Oaths are binding to my Conscience, I could as freely take the Oaths to the present Government, as any Man in England; but I will live peaceably and quietly under the Government, but because I do not take the Oaths, I am double taxed, and I will pay it.

Freind. My Lord, I desire Capt. Kaines may be call'd. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Sir?

Fr. Capt. Kaines, I desire to know of you, whether Mr Porter and Mr Blair are Roman Catholicks; and I desire you to speak as to my self, what I am.

Kaines. They are so reputed to be at Epsom; it was always so reported there; and I have been acquainted with Sir John Freind several Years, being concern'd together in the Train'd-Bands of the Tower-Hamlets, and I have been in his Company several Times since the King came in, and never heard him give any reflecting Language against the Government in my Life.

L. C. J. Have you done with him, Sir?

Fr. My Lord, I did not hear him; but I suppose he has declar'd, as to Capt. Porter and Capt. Blair, that they are Catholicks.

L. C. J. He says, Porter and Blair are reputed Papists; and he has known you a long Time, and been concern'd with you in the Train'd-Bands, and never heard you reflect upon the Government since the King came in.

Fr. My Lord, I desire to know, whether he believes me to be a Protestant?

Kaines. I did always take Sir John Freind to be a Protestant?

Fr. Then, next, I desire Mr Carpenter may be call'd. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Sir?

Fr. I desire, Mr Carpenter, that you will acquaint the Court, whether you know Captain Porter to be a Roman Catholick, and what you know of me.

Carpenter. I have been at Epsom several Summers, and usually am there in Summer-time, and he was so reputed there: But as to Sir John Friend, I have known him above these Twenty Years; I keep a Brew-house, as he does, and we have been concern'd together, and have had several Occasions, upon the Account of Trade, to meet him, upon Particulars of Appraisement, when any Partners came in, and I never knew him but very orderly and civil; I never heard him reflect any Thing upon the Government, but was always peaceable and quiet: He was always looked upon as a Protestant, and went to Church. That's all that I can say.

Freind. My Lord, as to the Statute-Book, will your Lordship please that the Statute-Book be sent for?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we do not forget it. Have you any more Witnesses? Call all your Witnesses, and we will consider of that afterwards.

Fr. I desire Mr Hawkins may be called. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What say you to this Gentleman?

Freind. I desire you, Mr Hawkins, to give an Account what I am; whether you know me to be a Roman Catholick or a Protestant.

Hawkins. I have known Sir John Freind these Twenty odd Years, and have had Dealings with him many Times before the Change of Government, and since, and I never heard him reflect upon the Government; nor never heard him to speak slightly of it: And as to his being of the Protestant Religion, I do know as much as any Man, as much as another; I always believed him to be a Protestant of the Church of England, as good as any Man alive; he always went to Church.

L. C. J. What, since the Revolution?

Hawkins, I have not been so conversant with him since that, because I went out of Town, and liv'd out of Town; but I believe there are those at Hackney, that can give an Account of that Matter.

Fr. I desire Major Mould may be call'd.

L. C. J. Then, I suppose, you have done with Mr Hawkins.

Fr. Yes.

Then Major Mould stood up.

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Sir;

Mould. My Lord, I have known Sir John Freind many Years, above these Twenty Years, and I always look'd upon him as a sincere Protestant; and I have often been in his Company since the Revolution, and I never heard him speak diminishingly of the Government. I believe him to be as good a Protestant as any in England.

L. C. J. How! as any in England? That's a great Character.

Fr. Then I desire Dr Hollingsworth may be called; (but he did not appear.)

Fr. Then, my Lord, I desire Mr Luston may be call'd.

L. C. J. There is Mr Luston, what would you have with him?

Fr. I desire he will give an Account what he knows of me, what Religion I am of.

Luston, My Lord, as to Sir John Freind, I have known him this Ten Years; he was pleased to employ me as a Chaplain in his House a considerable Time, both before and after the Revolution; and after after the Revolution we always uſed the Prayers according to the Church of England, and we did always pray for the preſent King, and the late Queen Mary, at which Sir John was many Times preſent.

Mr Att. Gen. How long is it ſince you left him?

Luſton, About four or Five Years, as I remember: Then Sir John's Family leſſen'd; he was pleaſed to ſay to me, Mr Luſton, I am going to Tunbridge, and my Family leſſens, (this is about Five or Six Years ago,) and I ſhall have no Occaſion for you at preſent; but if ever I make uſe of a Chaplain again, I will make uſe of you: This he was pleaſed to ſay.

L. C. J. How long is it, do you ſay, that you have left him?

Luſton, About five Years; and as to any Objection of his being a Papiſt, I have often diſcourſed with Sir John Freind about the Popiſh Religion, and he has often ſpoken with Deteſtation of the Principles of the Papiſts.

Freind. What have you heard me ſpeak of the French; and about any Thing of an Invaſion, how I would venture my Life for the Proteſtant Religion, or any Thing of that.

Luſ. I have often heard you ſay, as to the preſent Government, that though you could not comply with it, yet you would live peaceably under it. When we have been talking of theſe Things, you ſaid you never would be in a Plot; and though you could not comply with the preſent Government; yet you would never concern your ſelf in any Deſign againſt it. For my Part, my Lord, I know nothing by him, but that he is an honeſt and a worthy Gentleman, tho' he be ſo unfortunate to be under this Accuſation.

Fr. I deſire Mr Hoately may be called, (who appear'd.)

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you, Sir?

Freind. Pray, Mr Hoately, will you give an Account to the Court what you know of my being a Proteſtant, and of my Life and Converſation.

Hoately. I believe Sir John Freind is a very ſettled Proteſtant of the Church of England; and I have Reaſon to believe ſo, becauſe I have frequently diſcourſed with him, becauſe I have had a Couple of Children that were his Nephews, upon whoſe Account I have been forced ſeveral times to wait upon him; and he has often ſaid he never would be in any Plot, and his Words that he uſed to me were really very remarkable. Catch me in the Corn, and put me in the Pound.

L. C. J. What were his Words, Sir?

Hoately. He uſed to ſay he would never be in any Plot, for ſays he, Catch me in the Corn, and put me in the Pound; and I have heard him expreſs himſelf with a great deal of Deteſtation of King-killing, and thoſe Principles of the Papiſts; the Aſſaſſinating of any Crown'd Head.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, how came you to diſcourſe with Sir John Freind about King-Killing and Plots? You are a Schoolmaſter it ſeems, how happened this Sort of Diſcourſe between you?

Hoately, There will be Diſcourſes about theſe Things ſometimes.

Mr At. Gen. But, pray, how was the Diſcourſe introduced? What was the Occaſion of the Diſcourſe? Sure there was ſome Occaſion extraordinary for him ſo to expreſs himſelf to you.

Hoately, I cannot remember the particular Occaſion, but ſuch Diſcourſe there was.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, how long ago is this Time that this Diſcourſe was?

Hoately. I believe it was five or ſix Times within theſe two Years.

Mr At. Gen. What, have you had the ſame Diſcourſe five or ſix Times one after another?

Hoately. I cannot ſay that; but thoſe uſed to be his Words.

Mr At. Gen. What, in common Diſcourſe?

Hoately, He ſaid he would never be in any Plot.

Freind. My Lord, I can bring a great many more Witneſſes of this Kind, and I believe I could have a Thouſand to prove me a Proteſtant

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Sir John, we will hear them.

Freind. My Lord, I am very loth to trouble you.

Mr Juſtice Rokeby. No, it will not be reckon'd any Trouble, we will hear all your Evidence.

Freind. There is one Mr Willis and one Mr Hemings; but I deſire it may not be forgotten as to the Acts of Parliament, for they are very material for me, as I ſhall ſhew by and by,

Mr. Willis appeared.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to this Gentleman?

Freind. Mr Willis, I deſire you'd give an Account to their Lordſhips, what you think of me, as to my being a Proteſtant, and how I have behaved my ſelf in every Reſpect all along.

Willis. My Lord, I have always taken it for granted, that thoſe that come to Church are Proteſtants; and I did always take Sir John Freind to be a Proteſtant. The Acquaintance I had with him was ſince he lived in the Pariſh of Hackney, and we have had ſome Converſe together, and there have paſt friendly Viſits between us; and I do not remember any Diſcourſe while I was there that tended to the Government one Way or another. I was never very often with him, but his Diſcourſe was always very obliging, diſcreet, and prudent, whenever I was there.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, when did you ſee him at Church?

Willis. Truly, my Lord, I cannot call to Mind when it was.

L. C. J. Cannot you name any Time?

Willis, He may be at Church ſometimes, and I not ſee him; our Seats are at a diſtance from one another, and there are Pillars between, that one can't ſee every Body; and I cannot call to mind when I did ſee him laſt at Church.

L. C. J. Has he been there within this Year or two?

Willis. He has been gone from Hackney a Year and above.

Mr Mountague. Pray can you ſay you have ſeen him at Church within theſe Four Years?

Willis. Truly I cannot call to mind whether I have or no.

Freind. I deſire Mr Hemings may be called. I could call a great many more, but they are much to the ſame Effect as theſe are.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Sir John, if you think fit to call them, we will hear them.

Fr. Being they are not here, I will not trouble you farther; it is all to the ſame Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Well, take your own Courſe; if you'll call them, the Court will be ſure to hear them.

Fr. But my Lord, here is one Thing that I muſt deſire your Lordſhip's Direction in: If theſe Gentlemen, my Lord, Captain Porter and Captain Blair, who who are the two Witneſſes, and none but thoſe two, againſt me, if they are Papiſts, they are not good Witneſſes againſt a Proteſtant, to prove him a Traitor within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. For that Statute ſays, He that is indicted muſt be proveably attainted; which cannot be by the Evidence of Papiſts, and thoſe that refuſe to take the Oaths of Obedience, which are requir'd to be taken: And therefore I humbly beſeech you, that you will pleaſe to tender them the Oaths, for there is a Statute in the 3. Jac. I. Cap. 4. which appoints the Tendering of the Oaths to them.

L. C. J. That is not our Buſineſs at this Time.

Fr. Then I muſt beg your Pardon that they are not ſubſtantial Witneſſes; for this is the Law, as I am inform'd. I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhip, whether this be not the Law. I only ſpeak it to know whether it be convenient for me to rehearſe it. I ask'd the Queſtion before they were ſworn. I know not whether it be convenient for me to move it now.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, it is very convenient now, now is the proper Time.

Freind. Before ever they were ſwore I would have ask'd them the Queſtion, whether they were Papiſts or not, but it was not allowed, it was over-rul'd: Now, my Lord, there is ſuch a Statute, and I humbly beſeech you to tender them the Oaths, and that would be a Demonſtration, that they were Papiſts, and then they could be no good Witneſſes.

L. C. J. You ſay well, if we could find ſuch a Statute, that no Papiſt ſhould be a Witneſs, but there is no ſuch.

Freind. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, and I hope you will not take it amiſs; I offer what I am adviſ'd to offer.

L. C. J. No, no, by no means, there will be nothing taken amiſs.

Freind. For the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, and that of the 30th of King Charles the Second, and that of the 3d of King James the Firſt, Cap. 4. here it is plainly demonſtrable, that Papiſts are not to be believ'd againſt any Proteſtant, who is with them eſteem'd a damnable Heretick; and then they believe the Pope and their Prieſts can abſolve them from all Oaths, and they are declar'd to be given to Evaſions, and Equivocations, and mental Reſervations, and can have Diſpenſations for all their Villanies; and therefore they are not be credited: Their Evidence is of no Value, unleſs they will in this Manner upon their Oaths renounce theſe Principles: Therefore I humbly beg they may have the Oaths tender'd them.

L. C. J. That is not our Buſineſs now.

Freind, And, my Lord, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to promiſe me that if any Matter of Law did ariſe, my Council ſhould be heard.

L. C. J. Firſt let us know, whether there be any ſuch Law as this you mention, or to any ſuch Purpoſe.

Freind, My Lord, I deſire my Council may come in, and ſpeak to it: For my Life is in Danger, and ſo is every honeſt Gentleman's Life every Day. I am as clear as the Child unborn, I have no Witneſſes to prove any Thing, and therefore I deſire my Council may be heard.

L. C. J. If the Court did think there were any Colour in this Objection that you make, we would let you have Council, we would do it; nay, we are deſirous to do it if it could.

Freind. What, my Lord?

L. C. J. To allow you Council, if there were any Colour in this Objection in Relation to Papiſts not being Witneſſes. I would be glad to ſee the Council that would own this Objection; but indeed, I ſee no Colour in it: The Statute ſhall be produced that you quote, and then we ſhall ſee, whether there be any Thing like it in that Statute. Pray will you read thoſe Words that you ſay are in that Statute to that Purpoſe.

Freind. I am not ſo expert to know the Words before and after; and therefore I think it is requiſite I ſhould have Council.

L. C. J. It is ſuppoſed you have had Council, and I ſuppoſe your Council that have adviſed you to make this Objection, have inſtructed you whereabouts in the Statute it is.

Fr. My Lord, I deſire my Council may be call'd in and heard to it.

L. C. J. I tell you, that by Law we cannot hear Council to any ſuch Matter that has no Colour of Objection in Law in it; tho' for my Part, I wiſh we could, becauſe I would fain hear what any Council can ſay to make out ſuch an Objection, that Papiſts are not good Witneſſes.

Fr. My Lord, I wiſh you would hear my Council to it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, you have deſir'd that this Statute may be turned to, and you deſire to have them read, and they ſhall be all read from the Beginning to the End.

Fr. I deſire the Statutes of the 25th of Edward the Third, the 3d of K. James the Firſt, Chap. 4. and the 30th of K. Charles the Second, may be read.

L. C. J. What Chapter is that of the 30th of K. Charles the ſecond?

Fr. Really it is not put down in my Paper.

L. C. J. Then look out the Chapter, while he is reading the other. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir John Freind does deſire the Statute of the 25th of Edward 3. may be read, which is the Statute about Treaſons, and the Statute upon which he is indicted, and it ſhall be read, therefore pray hearken to it.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads it.) This is made in the 25th Year of King Edward the Third. A Declaration which Offences ſhall be judged Treaſon. Item, Whereas divers Opinions have been before this Time, in what Caſes Treaſons ſhall be laid, and what not.

Fr. My Lord, I beg the Favour I may ſpeak one Word before it go on to be read.

L. C. J. Yes, with all my Heart.

Fr. I ſpeak it my Lord, becauſe it will be to the very Thing now in Queſtion, I am adviſed that Conſultation to levy War is no Treaſon, without Rebellion and Inſurrection; and inviting Men to come from beyond Sea is no Treaſon, unleſs a Foreign Prince be invited to come with his own Subjects; for Engliſh, Scotch, and Iriſh are not Enemies, but Rebels, and to be dealt with otherwiſe; therefore I leave it to your Lordſhips, for I am no Lawyer, only I am adviſed to inſiſt upon theſe Things.

Then the Statute of the 25th of Edward 3. about Treaſons was read throughout, only about the middle the Priſoner made ſome Interruption.

Fr. I believe this Statute is not the Statute I go upon, that which I mainly inſiſt upon, is the Statute of the Third of King James the Firſt, Cap. 4.

Mr

Mr Juſt. Rokeby. This is the ſame Statute you are indicted upon, the great Statute for Treaſons; and as to your Objection laſt mentioned, what is Treaſon and what is not, he is not yet come to that Part.

Fr. Well then, let him go on with it.

(It was read to the End.)

L. C. J. Now it has been read, is this the Statute you would have?

Freind. There muſt needs be a Miſtake as to the Chapter, it is ſet down the 25th of Edward 3*d.* but there is no Chapter.

L. C. J. Yes, this muſt be the Statute, it relates to Treaſons, and it has thoſe Words in it, that what you read out of your Papers relates to. Well, that we may go on in Order of Time, what Statute of King James is it that you mention?

Fr. It is the 3d of King James 1. Cap. 5. it is upon Account of tendering the Oaths appointed to be taken by that Statute, and—— (reading out of a Paper) to tell the Court that they ought to have the Oaths tendered them.

L. C. J. That is the Buſineſs of another Time, read the Statute.

Cl. of Ar. An Act for the Diſcovering and Repreſſing Popiſh Recuſants. What Part is it.

Fr. Truly my Lord I can't tell.

L. C. J. It is a long Statute, but if he'll have it read, it muſt be read all.

Fr. My Lord I would not give the Court any Trouble, but it is about having the Oaths tender'd to them.

Cl. of Ar. I believe this is the Paragraph, And for the better Trial how his Majeſty's Subjects ſtand affected in Point of their Loyalty and due Obedience, &c.

(A great Part of the Statute was read, relating to that Matter.)

L. C. J. What elſe would you have read, Sir John Freind?

Fr. I only gather from thence, that no Roman Catholick is capable of Swearing againſt a Proteſtant, becauſe the Pope and the Prieſts can abſolve them from their Oaths.

L. C. J. Well, what have you more to ſay?

Fr. My Lord, I only ſpeak this as to Roman Catholicks, they do not regard an Oath againſt a Proteſtant, becauſe they have their Prieſts that can abſolve them, and therefore how ſuch a Man's Oath can weigh any Thing, I cannot apprehend; therefore if I have omitted any Thing, I hope your Lordſhip will ſupply it, as you are my Council, for you are a Council for me, as well as the King.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, I would help you in any Thing I could.

Fr. My Lord, I thank you, I deſire you to help me, for I am as innocent as the Child unborn, whatſoever theſe Men have ſworn: Theſe are hard Things that are laid upon a Gentleman, and no Man is ſafe at this rate, they being ſworn by two Papiſts, who will ſwear any Thing againſt Proteſtants.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, have you any Witneſſes to produce, that theſe two Men have any Diſpleaſure or Malice againſt you, that they ſhould accuſe you falſely?

Fr. My Lord, I am ſorry I have not my Witneſſes; I have been ſo kept up, that I had not Time for People to come to me; I had not my Council come to me before Saturday.

L. C. J. How happen'd that?

Fr. My Lord, there was a Miſtake in that, I think it was Friday, either Friday or Saturday; I had them not till Friday in the Afternoon: I was kept ſo cloſe that none were permitted to come at me: On Thurſday I had an Order, but there was a Miſtake in the Order, and I deſired to get another Order, but I could not get any Body to get another Order for me, to have my Friends to go and enquire into Things, or elſe I ſhould have found out enough Witneſſes.

Mr Att. Gen. I am ſure he had an Order for Council, at the ſame Time that Notice was given him of his Trial.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Att. Gen. On Tueſday, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Baker?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I did attend Sir John Freind on Tueſday laſt, to give him Notice of his Tryal as this Day; and I at the ſame Time told him if he would name his Council to me, I would procure an Order for them to come to him. The next Morning he was pleaſed to name to me Sir Bartholomew Shower; I took the Liberty to tell him, that he being ſo concern'd at the Houſe of Lords, and at the Committee about Parliamentary Buſineſs, ſome other Perſons that had named him of their Council, notwithſtanding Orders were procured for him to go to them as their Council, yet by that Means they were diſappointed of him, and great Delay was given to the Priſoners; and therefore I deſir'd him to conſider of it, and to ſend to Sir Bartholomew Shower, and any other Council that he had a Mind to, and know their Pleaſures, whether they would attend him; and if he would ſend me Word, I would procure an Order for him. But not hearing from him, I went on Wedneſday to him again, and he ſaid he had ſent to Mr. Northey, but he would not come to him till he had ſpoke with Sir Bartholomew Shower, but he would ſend me Word that Night, yet he did not. But the next Day came Mr. Burleigh to me to the Duke of Shrewsbury's Office, and brought me the Names of the Perſons that he would have aſſign'd him of Council, and immediately I procured an Order for it, and away he went with it. This was upon the Thurſday; Mr. Welden, and Mr. Creſſet, or one of them were named in the Order, I am not poſitive which, and Mr. Underhill, and Mr. Burleigh were to be admitted to him. Mr. Burleigh had the Order, if he did not carry it to him I can't help that.

L. C. J. When was that Order for the Council?

Mr. Barker. It was upon Thurſday, my Lord.

Fr. My Lord, may I ſpeak?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, what you will.

Fr. My Lord, the Reaſon why I had not my Witneſſes was this: There was a Gentleman, one Colonel Caſh, Lieutenant to my Lord Lucas, he undertook to go, and put in his Name, and three more; one John Neale, and one Phillips to have an Order to go about to look after my Witneſſes; but they did not put in any one of theſe Names, but they took up and ſecured my Kinſman Caſh, and put him into the Meſſenger's Hands, and would not ſuffer me to have any of his Aſſiſtance; therefore I ſaw what a Deſign there was upon me.

Mr. Att. Gen. As for Mr. Caſh, there was very good Reaſon for it, he was ſecured for Suſpicion of Treaſon.

L. C. J. If you had wanted any Witneſſes, and had not been ſo fully prepared as you expected to be, you ſhould have moved before the Tryal came on to put it off.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. But my Lord put a Queſtion to you before, Can you ſhew any Reaſon why theſe Perſons ſhould have any Malice againſt you?

Freind. My Lord, I was not ſo much a Lawyer, as to know theſe Things; but it's a hard Thing, that a Man that's innocent muſt ſuffer at this rate: I have been diſappointed in every Thing; for theſe Gentlemen have not been permitted to anſwer, whether they are Roman Catholicks or no.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Nor have your Witneſſes proved that they are Roman Catholicks, but only that they are reputed ſo.

L. C. J. Well, I can't tell what Avail that would have been of, if they had been proved ſo. Have you any more to ſay, Sir John Freind?

Fr. No, my Lord, I leave it to God, and you, and the Jury to conſider of it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King, againſt Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar; and it comes to my Turn to ſum up the Evidence that has been given. Sir John Freind the Priſoner at the Bar, cannot but own, that he hath hitherto had a very fair Tryal, and he ſhall have no Reaſon to complain, that I do him any Injury in my part. I am ſure both he, and you, and all of us, very well remember, when Perſons of as good Quality as he is, or better, had not the ſame Uſage or Liberty of Defence, in ſuch Caſes as this Gentleman has had: And though all Things are very well now, yet the Time was, within all our Memories, when Innocency was no Safety for a Man's Life, much leſs for his Liberty; and when thoſe two are taken away, and are invaded, Property ſignifies nothing. The Time was, when the Proteſtant Religion, and the Church of England of which the Priſoner boaſts himſelf to be, (and for a very good Reaſon, becauſe it is the beſt of Religions,) I ſay, the Time was, when that was in Danger; and when Popery (for which he now reflects upon the Witneſſes) was like to have over-run both us and it; And if his Majeſty, with the Hazard of his Life, and at a great Expence, had not reſcued us, there is no Body doubts, but that all that we feared at that Time, would have been made good upon us 'ere now. And it is a melancholy Thing to conſider, that there ſhould be a Sort of People amongſt us, ſo in Love with what we then dreaded, as to be continually endeavouring to bring it about again. And it is an ungrateful Thing, when his Majeſty ventured his Life then, and has done it ſeveral Times ſince to defend us, and does all that he can to keep our Enemies at a Diſtance, there ſhould be a Party of Men, that do what they can to invade their Country, to deſtroy his Majeſty's Subjects, and to fall upon himſelf, when he is preſent amongſt us. I will not accuſe the Priſoner at the Bar particularly, tho' it is plain he knew of it.

Fr. Know of it? I declare before God, and the World, I know nothing of it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This, if it were among Equals, were certainly a moſt ungrateful Thing, when another Perſon is fighting in my Defence, that I ſhould deſign againſt his Life, or when he does what he can to protect my Eſtate, I ſhould be invading and ſpoiling his.

Gentlemen, if the Priſoner at the Bar is not Guilty of what he is accuſed of, and what you have heard the Witneſs give Evidence of, then nothing of this does relate to him: But if what has been given in Evidence againſt him is true, then the Priſoner at the Bar is one of thoſe Perſons, that has done all he can to make this Country, which has been the Place of Retreat for all Proteſtants to fly to, from Perſecution in their own Countries; I ſay, to make it as unſafe for them, as that from which they came.

Gentlemen, The Evidence againſt him, is firſt Mr. Porter, and he gives it in Evidence, that at the Old King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, there was a Meeting of the Priſoner, and Porter, and ſeveral others, in order to conſider the beſt Means, how to bring back the late King James; and they concluded at laſt, that the beſt Means would be to ſend ſome Body into France, to adviſe the late King James to borrow of the French King 10000 Men, 1000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot, and that he ſhould make what ſpeed he could to land with them here; and to encourage and invite him to do ſo, they promiſed him their Aſſiſtance, and they did not doubt, but to be ready to meet him with 2000 Horſe at his Landing.

Gentlemen, The Perſon that was pitched upon to go upon this Errand, was Mr. Charnock, a Perſon lately executed for the Treaſons of which he was attainted. Mr. Charnock was diffident whether this were the Effect of ſober Conſideration, and therefore would not undertake to carry this Meſſage, till there had been another Meeting of the ſame Perſons; to ſee whether they continued in the ſame Mind. Another Meeting accordingly was appointed, and agreed upon, and that was at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern at St. James's, and there, he ſays, there were almoſt all the Perſons that were in Leadenhall-ſtreet; and at that Meeting the Queſtion being ask'd, whether they were of the ſame Opinion, that Mr. Charnock ſhould go to France to the late King upon that Meſſage, that I told you of before, they did all agree to abide by the old Reſolution; that he ſhould go, and make as ſpeedy a Return as he could, and bring back the late King's Anſwer.

Captain Porter tells you, that Mr. Charnock did go to France, and comes and brings word back, that the French King could not at that Time ſpare that Force that was then deſir'd; and ſo it was delay'd at that Time, becauſe the French King was not at Leiſure then to employ his Men in this Service; but it was likely to have taken Place, but very lately, if the Providence of God had not prevented it.

Gentlemen, our next Witneſs is Captain Blair, and he tells you, That about Two Years ago, Sir John Freind the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhow'd him a Commiſſion that he had received from the late King James, to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, of which he was to be Collonel; that this was ſigned James Rex at the Top, and counterſigned by my Lord Melford, and it was in Paper. And that there was a great many Conſultations between Sir John Freind, himſelf, and others about the raiſing of this Regiment, and providing Officers for it. He tells you he was to have been Lieutenant Collonel, and was to procure as many Officers and Troopers as he could; and he tells you he did procure ſeveral Officers; and he names them; one Fiſher was to be eldeſt Captain, one Vernatte, and one Hall, and one Bertram, and that Bertram was to be Lieutenant to Blair in his own Troop.

Gen-

Gentlemen, a great deal of the Evidence which Captain Blair has given, is indeed out of Sir John Freind's own Mouth, and that is as ſtrong an Evidence as poſſibly can be given; and he does for that purpoſe tell ye, that he ſaid one Evans was to be a Captain of Horſe, and one Collonel Slater was grown ſo much in Sir John Freind's Favour, that he rivalled Captain Blair, in the Opinion of Sir John Freind; and Sir John Friend for that Reaſon would have two Lieutenant Collonels, whereof Slater was to be one. Captain Blair ſays, he took that amiſs, that any one beſides himſelf ſhould be in that Poſt, and Reſented it to Sir John Freind, and therefore Sir John Freind found out another Office for Slater; and that was to be a Captain of a Troop of Horſe, that ſhould conſiſt of Non-ſwearing Parſons, and which were to be an Independent Troop.

Gentlemen, He tells you that he did liſt ſeveral Men, but the particular Perſons, tho' he has named the Officers, he did not ſo diſtinctly remember, but they are in the Paper that he delivered to the Council, which he has not about him: He tells you, that Sir John Freind told him that one Richardſon was another Captain of Horſe, and the like of one Mr. Cole, that he was to be a Captain likewiſe.

He alſo acquainted you, Gentlemen, that he did receive from Sir John Freind ſeveral Sums of Mony, and he acquaints you in particular with the Manner how; he ſays that Sir John Freind had expended 100*l.* towards the 300*l.* that was paid for the eſcape of Coll. Parker out of the Tower; and that Sir John Freind was to be re-imburſed by Monies that were to be tranſmitted from King James at St. Germaine. He tells you that Piggot had received the Mony, but did not deal with Sir John Freind ſo fairly as to pay it to him; but when Captain Blair was preſſing on Sir John Freind for ſome Mony, Sir John Freind was contented that he ſhould have 20*l.* provided he got it from Piggot out of this 100*l.* Captain Blair had not Intereſt enough it ſeems to get it himſelf from Piggot, but he applies himſelf to one Harriſon or Johnſon, (for it ſeems he goes by both thoſe Names) a Prieſt, who had an intereſt in Piggot, by which means he got 20*l.* of Piggot, and this he ſays was in June or July laſt.

Then, Gentlemen, he tells you afterwards, he was preſſing upon Sir John Freind to have another 20*l.* and Sir John Freind was contented he ſhould have it, provided he had it from Piggot, and he produces ye a Letter that was from that very Perſon the Priſoner at the Bar, which is to that purpoſe; excuſing himſelf that Captain Blair had not heard from him, but that he would meet him at ſuch a time, and at ſuch a Coffee-houſe. The Matter indeed is not directly expreſs'd in Words, but at the Time and Place the Priſoner did meet Blair, and there was Harriſon and this Piggot, and there 5*l.* of the laſt 20*l.* was paid him; and the other 15*l.* was paid him afterwards; and he ſwears theſe two Twenty Pounds were paid to him by Sir John Friend, upon Account of the Charge that Blair had been at in drinking with and treating thoſe Men who were to be engaged with Sir John Freind in his Regiment.

Gentlemen, he tells you likewiſe, that Sir John Freind told him he had written a Letter to King James, and he ſhewed him this Letter, and this was at that Piggot's Mother's Houſe; and when Blair read it, he tells you he thought it was ſo well penned, that he did apprehend Ferguſon muſt have a hand in it, and that it was none of Sir John Freind's own; and that upon this Sir John Freind was angry, that he ſhould ſuſpect that Sir John was not the Writer of this Letter; all this ſhews an Intelligence with King James, and makes out all the reſt of the intended Invaſion by King James, and a French Force here.

Captain Blair likewiſe tells you, Gentlemen, that Sir John Fenwick had Four Troops of Horſe, as Sir John Freind told him, by way of encouragement, which were all ready for the ſervice; and that Ferguſon undertook to bring a Number of Men, and was to be one himſelf in that Party; and all this was to be put in practice when the Thoulon Fleet came about, and join'd the Breſt Fleet. And laſtly he tells you, when he went in the Coach with Sir John Freind, Sir John told him they muſt act very warily, and be very good Husbands, for in truth it had coſt him ſo much, that if the Fleet did not come ſoon, or the Deſign ſhould miſcarry, he ſhould want Mony to carry on his Trade. All this poſitive Evidence is of the Witneſſes own knowledge, from the Priſoner's own Mouth.

Againſt this Evidence, Gentlemen, he takes Exception; that the Two Witneſſes are Roman Catholicks; but this is no Exception to their Evidence at all; for it was never yet allowed, or indeed objected, that I know of, before, that Roman Catholicks were not good Witneſſes. A Roman Catholick may be an honeſt Man, notwithſtanding his Religion: But, I think, that every Body knows that Men who have been ill in other Things, tho' Roman Catholicks, may as to thoſe particular Things be good Witneſſes. Nay, not long ago, but on Wedneſday laſt we produced ſome Witneſſes, who were Roman Catholicks, and yet allowed for good Evidence, tho' ingaged in that Horrid Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King; and if any thing would have taken off their Evidence, certainly the Guilt of ſuch a Crime would do it, more than the Pretence of any particular Perſwaſion of Religion. Nay, I muſt crave leave to ſay farther, that this Argument is ſo far from making him no Witneſs, that it makes it the more likely he does ſpeak the Truth, and therefore is a good Witneſs. For tho' Roman Ctholicks may be honeſt Men, yet they are more likely to engage in ſuch a Deſign than any other Men. And I think I may very ſafely add, Sir John Freind would not have found ſo many that he could ingage in ſuch a Buſineſs as this, that were of any Religion but the Roman Catholick, and therefore he applied himſelf to theſe Perſons, as moſt likely to imbark with him on ſuch a Bottom.

Gentlemen, as to what Courtney, that was brought from the Gate-houſe ſays about his Diſcourſe with Captain Blair in the Priſon; Captain Blair has upon his Oath declared, that he did not go ſo far as to ſay, he did any Thing againſt his Conſcience, but only Courtney bid him take care what he ſwore, and preſt him no further. He pretends he came caſually into Blair's Chamber, but it is plain he intruded into his Room; for it is ſworn by the Jaylor, and Blair himſelf, that he had given Directions none ſhould come into his Room but his Wife, ſo that does not diſcountenance the Evidence of Blair at all, and if you do believe what our Witneſſes have ſaid, Captain Porter and Captain Blair, then Sir John Freind is guilty of all the Crimes that are charged upon him in this Indictment, and I hope you'll be be ſo juſt to your Prince, to your Country, and to your Selves, as to find him guilty accordingly.

Mr Cowper. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, ſpare me a Word on the ſame Side. My Lord, I do not trouble your Lordſhip out of an Apprehenſion that there is any thing neceſſary to be ſaid to the Court in this matter, or for the Satisfaction of the Jury, but if poſſible, that we might convince the Priſoner at the Bar, that he has had no hard Meaſure in this Proſecution meeted to him, but that he is proved Guilty of the Crime of which he ſtands accuſed, and that really there is no Weight at all, in the Defence which he has made.

The firſt Part of it goes to diſcredit one of our Evidences, Captain Blair, from ſome Diſcourſe that he would object to have paſs'd between him and the Perſon here produced, in the Priſon of the Gatehouſe. And the firſt Part of that Diſcourſe was, upon Blair's firſt coming into the Priſon; and as to that Time, the Objection amounts to no more than this; that Captain Blair would not confeſs, when he was pump'd by a Fellow Priſoner, that he was engaged in ſo horrid a Deſign: What Weight there is in ſuch an Objection, truly I cannot ſee, but will leave it to any Man's Judgment to conſider, That a Man, when he is freſhly taken upon ſuch an Occaſion, does not immediately confeſs his Guilt to every Body that meets hm, nay, to Perſons that would not have lik'd him for making ſuch a Confeſſion, but perhaps would have deſtroy'd him in Priſon for ſo doiug.

The other Diſcourſe was upon Friday, the next Day, I think, before Captain Blair went to Hicks's Hall, to his Examination; and then he intrudes himſelf into Blair's Chamber, when he lay very ill upon the Bed, accoſts him with a Cup of Brandy in his Hand, and with good Advice at the ſame Time, that he ſhould take great Care in what he ſhould ſay at Hicks's Hall, and the like: And then Captain Blair, it ſeems, did expreſs ſome Reluctancy in the Thiug he was going about, as if it were againſt his Mind and Inclination. If that were true, (though Captain Blair denies it poſitively upon his Oath) yet it was no more than, I am willing to obſerve for the Priſoner, Captain Blair did expreſs here, when he firſt came into Court; and it is no more than what is natural, ſince the Priſoner had been his Friend and Intimate, and he was going to depoſe that againſt him, which was likely to prove fatal to him.

My Lord, As to another Part of his Defence, it conſiſts chiefly in this: The Evidence brought to prove, that the King's Witneſſes are reputed Roman Catholicks, and that the Priſoner is a reputed Proteſtant of the Church of England. If that be true too, all that can be rationally and fairly collected from thence is this, that they (the Witneſſes I mean) when they engaged in ſuch a black and execrable Deſign, might be very good Papiſts; but I am ſure it will be agreed, That the Priſoner in ſo doing was a very bad Proteſtant.

My Lord, he objects to their Evidence this likewiſe, That, if they be Papiſts, they may be abſolv'd by the Pope, or their Prieſts, though they ſhould ſwear falſely. Poſſibly that may be ſo, for ought I know; I confeſs, I am not very well acquainted with the Principles of that Religion: But this I dare ſay, that every one, who has heard what has been ſworn by them, will think it ſo great a Diſſervice to the Popiſh Cauſe and Intereſt, that it will be one of the laſt Things their Prieſts will ever abſolve them of.

My Lord, there's another Matter the Priſoner has thought fit to inſiſt upon; he has brought two or three Clergy-men to depoſe, that when ever he diſcourſed with them (it ſeems at all times) he was talking about being in a Plot, and very readily told his Reſolution not to be in any. It ſeems it ſtill ſwom uppermoſt; his Profeſſions were made very cauſeleſly: For they all ſay nothing introduc'd them; but of his own meer Motion he was always declaring he was not then in a Plot, nor ever would be. I have heard, that one Way, weak Men and Children often diſcover their Knowledge of a Secret intruſted to them, is, by a repeated and unneceſſary declaring, that they know nothing of the Matter.

My Lord, in the next Place for his Defence, he juſt offered a Point of Law; but the Court ſo well ſatisfied him in that, that I think he waved it. He alledged, that a bare Conſpiracy to levy War is not Treaſon; and the Court did him right in declaring (as God forbid but they ſhould) that it is not Treaſon: But I deſire the Gentlemen of the Jury would conſider that the Priſoner at the Bar is not accus'd barely of a Conſpiracy to levy War, but you are told to what End that War was to be levied, to join the late King upon his Deſcent into this Kingdom with a French Power, in order to drive his Majeſty out of the Kingdom, and to depoſe him from the Crown; which is a Kil-ling him in the Eye of the Law: and that is High Treaſon by whatever Means they intended to effect it; whether by War or a Stab, or any other Manner, it is indifferent.

In the next Place, my Lord, I would take Notice of another Part of his Defence, which had been better let alone, wherein he admits that he was preſent at the Two Meetings he is accuſed to have been at by Porter; but he only differs in one Point, that there was nothing talked then but general and indifferent Diſcourſe. The Witneſſes have ſworn what the Diſcourſe was, and you will weigh the one againſt the other; his Affirmation of a thing unlikely in Defence of himſelf, and what is depoſed upon Oath by the King's Witneſſes to the contrary.

My Lord, there is one Thing more I would take Notice of, and that is the Evidence of Mr. Bertram, which we do not produce as a direct Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, but as a Confirmation of what was ſworn by Blair. And it does ſhew that the Matter ſworn by Blair, was not of late deviſed out of Malice, or otherwiſe, to deſtroy the Priſoner; for that Blair acquainted Bertram with, and diſcourſed him about, the principal Matters of Fact, that are now ſworn, at leaſt Two Years ago; and beſides his Evidence and the Evidence of Blair concur in this Particular, that he was to be Lieutenant in Blair's Troop.

My Lord, ſuch a Concurrence of Evidence and other Circumſtances in this Matter, greatly increaſe the Weight of the Proof againſt the Priſoner, eſpecially when there is nothing material alledged by him in his Defence, and therefore I ſhall trouble your Lordſhip no further.

L. C. J. Look ye Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar, is Indicted for High Treaſon. The Treaſon that is mentioned in the Indictment is Conſpiring, Compaſſing, and Imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King

King. To prove the Conſpiracy and Deſign of the King's Death, there are two principal Overt-Acts that are mainly inſiſted upon. The one is the Conſulting and Agreeing with diverſe others to ſend Mr. Charnock into France to King James, to deſire him to perſuade the French King to ſend over Forces here to aſſiſt them; who were to furniſh other Forces for the raiſing of a War within this Kingdom, in order to depoſe the King; and accordingly Mr. Charnock was ſent upon that Deſign. The other Overt-Act is the Priſoner's having a Commiſſion from the late King, and preparing and directing Men to be levied, and to be ready to be in a Regiment, of which Sir John Freind was by that Commiſſion to be Colonel, and this was alſo to aſſiſt in the Reſtitution of King James, and in order thereunto in the Depoſing and Expulſion of King William.

Theſe, Gentlemen, I tell you are the two Overt Acts that are principally inſiſted upon; and to prove Sir John Freind Guilty of theſe there are two Witneſſes that have been produced, the one is Captain Porter, who ſpeaks to the firſt, the other is Captain Blair, who ſpeaks to the ſecond.

Captain Porter tells you, that the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June laſt, that he and Sir John Freind, and others that he mentioned, were at the Kings-head Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and there they entered into a Diſcourſe about the Returning of the late King James; and they did conſider among themſelves which was the moſt effectual Way, and what were the moſt probable Means to have him Reſtored: And thereupon it was agreed among them, that they would ſend a Meſſenger into France to him, to deſire him that he would ſollicit the French King to furniſh him with 10000 Men, to be ſent into England, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; and they did agree, that when theſe Forces were ſent, conſiſting of this Number of Men, then they would be ready to meet and joyn them with 2000 Horſe, every one of them was to furniſh his Quota; to which Sir John Freind did expreſly agree. The Meſſenger that they agreed to ſend was with them in Company, and heard the Conſult, which was Mr. Charnock, who was lately Tryed and ſince Executed.

This being at that Time determined, Mr. Charnock intended to go upon the Execution of that Deſign, and made ready for his Journey: But before he went, he had a Deſire to meet with the Company again, and have a further Diſcourſe upon this Matter, to ſee whether they did perſevere in the Reſolution they had ſo taken. There was another Meeting about a Week or a Fortnight after, which was at Mr. Montjoy's, a Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet, where met Sir John Freind, Captain Porter, and divers others of the Company that were before at the Kings-Head. And there they enter'd into a Debate of the Matter again; the Queſtion there was, whether Mr. Charnock ſhould be ſent into France, as it was formerly agreed, and there it was again derermined he ſhould go, to which he agreed, and Capt. Porter ſays, that he did go about two or three Days after.

Mr. Porter tells you farther, that about the Time that Mr. Charnock came back, Mr. Porter was in Priſon, and he did not ſee him upon his firſt Return, but afterwards he met and ſpoke with him, and ask'd him what was the Effect of his Negotiation, and Mr. Charnock told him, that he had done as he was directed; that he had been with King James, and he had ſpoke to the French King, but the Anſwer returned was this, That the French King had Occaſion for his Forces that Year to be otherwiſe imploy'd, and therefore he could not furniſh ſuch a Number of Men that Year; and Mr. Porter ask'd him whether he had been with the reſt of the Gentlemen, and acquainted them therewith; and he ſaid he had. This is the Subſtance of Mr. Porter's Evidence; whereby you may perceive what the Meetings were for, what Reſolutions were there taken, and what was the Iſſue and Effect of them.

The next Witneſs is Captain Blair, and his Evidence goes to the other Part, that is, to Sir John Freind's having a Commiſſion from the late King James, and engaging him and others to be in his Regiment, whereof Sir John was to be Colonel, and the providing of Officers. And for that the Evidence ſtands thus.

Captain Blair tells ye, that about two or three Years ago, he was with Sir John Freind at his Lodgings in Surrey-ſtreet, and there he did produce a Commiſſion that he had from King James to be Colonel of a Regiment of Horſe; he was to raiſe it himſelf, and was to appoint, and provide what Officers he thought fit. He ſays, he read the Commiſſion, and it was ſigned at the Top James Rex, and counterſigned at the Bottom Melfort; this he is poſitive in, and farther, that Sir John Freind did promiſe that he ſhould be Lieutenant-Colonel of this Regiment, and alſo deſir'd that Captain Blair would get as many Men as he could, and that there were other Officers that were appointed in that Regiment, and particularly one Fiſher was brought to Sir John Freind by Captain Blair, to be his firſt Captain, and one Colonel Slater, who was much in Favour with Sir John Freind, was to have been another Lieutenant Colonel; for ſaid Sir John Freind, I have a Mind to him to be my Lieutenant Colonel, and though you are ſo too, yet it is no Matter, if we have two in this Regiment; at which Blair took very great Offence, and expreſs'd as much to Sir John Freind, whereupon Sir John Freind told him, it ſhould not be ſo, but ſaid he would make another Proviſion for Mr. Slater; that he ſhould be a Captain of an independant Troop, that ſhall be compoſed of Non-Swearing Parſons, and that ſhall ſatisfy him.

And Sir John Freind did intruſt Captain Blair with the providing of Men and managing of them. And Captain Blair tells you, he was at a great deal of Charge, and laid out diverſe Sums to careſs them, and keep them together, and wanting Money to proceed in that Affair, he came to Sir John Freind, and made great Complaints, that he wanted Money to carry on the Deſign, by obliging the Men to keep together, and therefore preſſed to Sir John Freind to furniſh him with ſome Money; ſays Sir John, there is 100 l. due to me, becauſe I laid down 100 l. to further the Eſcape of Colonel Parker, and Piggot has received it, and had Directions to pay it me, but I cannot yet get it. You ſhall have 20 l. out of that 100 l. if you can get it. Well, but how is that 20 l. to be had? It ſeems there was one Harriſon or Johnſon a Prieſt, who had ſome Intereſt in this Piggott, and he was to help him to it; and thereupon the 20 l. was actually paid the latter End of June or the Beginning of July laſt. This 20 l. he ſwears he did receive upon that Account, by the Direction of Sir John Freind, to be ſo imploy'd as you have been told.

Then

Then Captain Blair had Occaſion for more Money, which was ſometime after Michaelmas laſt, which was to be employ'd as the former was: and he was very importunate to obtain it of Sir John Friend; at length he did obtain it, as he tells you, and the Manner how. He produces a Letter under Sir John Freind's own Hand, which ſeems to be an Anſwer to a Letter that Captain Blair had ſent to him before, he thinks it to be his own Hand, for he is acquainted with his Hand-writing. But that is not all to prove it his Hand, for the Contents of the Letter are remarkable, which are about the Payment of Money to Blair: The Letter bears Date of a Tueſday Morning, and is directed to Captain Blair; and a Porter brought it, as he thinks, to his Houſe; and thereby it was appointed they ſhould meet on Thurſday next at Jonathan's Coffee-houſe about the Hour of Twelve. And accordingly Captain Blair came to Jonathan's Coffee-houſe, where he accordingly met with Sir John Freind, and there was Harriſon the Prieſt and Piggott, and there he does receive a Sum of Money upon the ſame Account: So that now the Proof of this Letter does not depend barely upon the Knowledge of the Hand, but the Contents of it, and the ſubſequent Meeting at the Time and Place mentioned in the Letter is a great Evidence that it was Sir John Friend's Hand-writing, and more Money is prov'd to be actully paid in the Preſence of Sir John Friend, which is the moſt material Part of the Evidence. And you are told further, that as Sir John Freind and Captain Blair were going together in a Coach, from Jonathan's Coffee-houſe, to St. Martins le grand, there was a Diſcourſe between them; and Sir John Freind ſaid, for his Part he would not ſtir till ſuch Time as the Thoulon Fleet was come about, and joyned with the Breſt Fleet. That he did think he was in Danger of being apprehended when it came about, and therefore Captain Blair was to ſculk till then, as he himſelf told him he would do, but yet he ſhould get what Men he could. And this is a great Argument of his being concerned in the intended Invaſion, and that his making Preparation for his Regiment, had Relation to the French Invaſion which was expected.

It ſeems two Years ago, there being a great Intimacy between Blair and Sir John Freind, as appears by all the Evidence, Blair was acquainted with this Deſign. For you are told of the Letter that was writ by him to King James, which he ſhew'd to Captain Blair, and it was concerning his Regiment; he ſays, that Sir John Freind own'd he writ that Letter himſelf, that Blair did read the Letter, and finding it ſo well penn'd, he ſaid, that he thought Ferguſon had a Hand in it, at which Sir John Freind was angry; but Blair ſays, the Letter was concerning the Regiment of which Sir John Freind was Colonel.

Then, Gentlemen, you have Bertram called to prove, that Blair did tell him, that he was to be his Lieutenant Colonel, which was long before there was any Thoughts of any Diſcovery of this intended Invaſion, and before the Diſcovery of the Plot of Aſſaſſination, which Sir John Freind did own he had ſome Knowledge of, but he diſliked it, and ſaid it would ruine King James's Affairs. So that, Gentlemen, I think this is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that has been given upon this Occaſion againſt Sir John Freind, to induce you to believe him to be guilty of this Crime with which he now ſtands charged.

But now you are to conſider what Sir John Freind ſays on behalf of himſelf. In the firſt place, he makes an Objection againſt the Credit of all theſe Witneſſes, that they are not to be believed, becauſe, ſays he, they are known or reputed to be Roman Catholicks and Papiſts, and their Conſciences, and their Oaths are large, eſpecially when they think they can do an Injury to any Proteſtant; and therefore they are not to be allow'd as Witneſſes, at leaſt their Credit is not ſufficient to induce a Jury to believe them. At firſt indeed, he urged there was a Statute and a Law that did diſable them from being Witneſſes; but I muſt tell you there is no ſuch Statute, nor indeed is their being Papiſts any Diminution at all to the Credit of their Teſtimony: For Papiſts are legal Witneſſes, and though there are ſevere Laws to puniſh them for their Non-Conformity to the Church of England, and for other their Popiſh Practices; yet I know of no Law that renders them infamous, or incapable of being Witneſſes. For you are to conſider, Papiſts are Chriſtians, and ſwear by the ſame Evangeliſts that Proteſtants do; and as for that Suppoſition, that they look upon Proteſtants as Hereticks, and can have a Diſpenſation for any Oaths that they take againſt them; you are to conſider, as it has been very well obſerved by the King's Council, that they are never like to obtain any Diſpenſation or Pardon, if they ſhould forſwear themſelves to defeat the Deſigns of the Popiſh Party; and therefore it is a very inconſiderable Objection, and in this Caſe hath no Weight.

But then he does inſiſt upon it, that Captain Blair is not to be believed; and there are Two Objections he makes againſt him. Firſt, That he did deny that he knew any Thing of the Plot. For Blair being upon this Occaſion brought Priſoner to the Gate-houſe, and afterwards upon a Diſcourſe of ſome News in the Flying Poſt, wherein it was mentioned, that Captain Blair had confeſs'd all, and made a full Diſcovery, that thereupon he ſhould ſay, He was innocent of the Plot, and knew nothing of it. You, Gentlemen, are to conſider the Weight of this Objection. Firſt, Suppoſe he had ſaid ſo, it might be, he was not willing (as he was not oblig'd to own it), and would not confeſs it at that Time, and to thoſe Perſons. It was not his Intereſt and Prudence to be too open; and therefore it does not follow, that becauſe a Man would not truſt others with his Confeſſion, but deny'd his Knowledge of a Plot when there was no Occaſion for him to own it, that now he ſwears it poſitively, therefore he ſhould ſwear falſely.

But Secondly, Captain Blair, who was called for the Vindication of himſelf, and his Teſtimony, has upon his Oath declar'd to you, that he did not ſay he knew not any Thing of the Plot, but did deny any Concern in, or Knowlege of the Aſſaſſination. Now this Buſineſs, for which Sir John Freind is tried, is not for being a Party in the deſigned Aſſaſſination, but of a Deſign with Force to Depoſe the King, and reſtore King James.

Then as to the other Matter that was upon Friday Night laſt; Courtney the Witneſs ſays, That he came to Captain Blair's Chamber, and took Notice of his being to be a Witneſs at Hicks's Hall the next Day, and ſaid, I pray God direct you; and he ſays his Wife, then preſent, ſaid it was againſt his Conſcience, and he ſeem'd to be in very great Trouble about it, and owned as much. But now Captain Blair himſelf, being examined upon his Oath does deny poſitively, that either he or ſhe ſaid any ſuch Thing, as that it was againſt his Conſcience: He ſays, that Courtney got in to him on Purpoſe to ſurprize him, and he was aware of it, and his Deſign being to keep himſelf free from all Company, he gave Directions to the Keeper (as the Keeper himſelf ſwears) to let no Body come to him but his Wife; and Mr. Courtney intruded himſelf upon him.

in

Beſides, Gentlemen, you are to conſider the Probability of that which Mr. Courtney ſaith: When a Man is to be a Witneſs the next Day upon Bill of Indictment before a Grand Jury that he ſhould be ſo indiſcreet, as to tell any Body he was going to ſwear againſt his Conſcience, is ſtrange and very unaccountable. You are therefore to conſider of this whole Matter, what Evidence Captain Blair has given, and the Import of it, and the Weight and Credibility of that Evidence which is given againſt him.

Then Sir John Freind inſiſts upon another Matter: Says he, I am a Proteſtant, and it is not likely, that I that am a Proteſtant ſhould conſpire with Papiſts againſt Proteſtants; and for that he has called eight Witneſſes, who tell you they have known him, ſome twenty Years, ſome more, others ten, and that they have frequently converſed with him, and never knew that he was ever popiſhly affected, and they have been frequently in his Company ſince the Revolution, and they never knew that at any Time he reflected upon the Government; nay, I think one ſaid, that once he did reprove a Man for talking undecently of the Government; that he uſed conſtantly to go to Church four or five Years ago (though there is no Account of that ſince). And particularly there is one Mr. Luſton that was his Chaplain, and he tells you he was in his Houſe; and there he read the Common-Prayer in the Family ſince the Revolution, and pray'd for the King and the late Queen, and Sir John Freind was often preſent at the Prayers, and particularly when he pray'd for the preſent King, and the late Queen; but he ſays he himſelf has been gone thence Five Years, and has been little converſant with him ſince.

There is another Witneſs tells you, he has been in Sir John Freind's Company divers Times, whom he believes to be a Proteſtant of the Church of England, and hath had Diſcourſe concerning the preſent Government; and that Sir John Freind ſaid, that though he could not take the Oaths, and thereby conform to the Government, yet he was reſolved to live quietly under it; and would not engage in any Manner of Plot; for he that catched him in the Corn, ſhould put him in the Pound.

This is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence on both Sides; and you, Gentlemen, are to conſider, the Weight of this Part of his Defence too; whether it be a ſufficient Anſwer to the Evidence given againſt him, and has Weight enough to outballance what the Witneſſes for the King have Sworn? For altho' he was a Proteſtant, yet it is plain he had no great Liking to the Government; and therefore would not take the Oaths; and though he was preſent at the Common-Prayer, when the King and Queen were pray'd for, yet whether he join'd in thoſe Prayers is very uncertain. There are a great many, who are not very well affected to the preſent Government, that come to Church, and are preſent at the publick Prayers; but it may be a very great Doubt whether they join in their Prayers for the preſent Government or no; his Conſcience that ſcruples the Taking the Oaths, might ſcruple that too. But whether Sir John Freind's being a Proteſtant, and his Declaring he would never be in a Plot, be a ſufficient Proof, that therefore he never was in one; and that his former Diſcourſe of that Kind ſhould diſcredit theſe Witneſſes, that have ſworn he has been ſo much concern'd in a Plot, you are to conſider; and comparing the Weight and Nature of the Evidence on the one Side, and the other, it muſt be left to your Determination.

Then there is another Thing that he did inſiſt upon, and that is Matter of Law. The Statute of the 25th Ed. 3. was read, which is the great Statute about Treaſons; and that does contain divers Species of Treaſon, and declares what ſhall be Treaſon. One Treaſon is the Compaſſing, and Imagining the Death of the King; another is the Levying of War: Now, ſays he, here is no War actually levied; and a bare Conſpiracy or Deſign to levy War, does not come within this Law againſt Treaſon. Now for that, I muſt tell you, if there be only a Conſpiracy to levy War, it is not Treaſon: But if the Deſign and Conſpiracy be either to kill the King, or to depoſe him, or impriſon him, or put any Force or Reſtraint upon him, and the Way and Method of effecting of theſe, is by Levying a War, there the Conſultation, and the Conſpiracy to levy a War for that Purpoſe, is High Treaſon, tho' no War be levied: For ſuch Conſultation and Conſpiracy is an Overt-Act, proving the Compaſſing the Death of the King, which is the firſt Treaſon, mentioned in the Statute of the 25th of Ed. 3. For the Words of that Statute are; That if any Man ſhall compaſs, or imagine the Death of the King. Now becauſe a Man deſigns the Death, Depoſition, or Deſtruction of the King, and to that Deſign, agrees and conſults to levy War, that this ſhould not be High-Treaſon, if a War be not actually levied, is very ſtrange Doctrine, and the Contrary has always been held to be Law. There may a War be levied without any Deſign upon the King's Perſon, or endangering of it; which, if actually levied, is High-Treaſon; but a bare Deſigning to levy War, without more, will not be Treaſon. As for Example*; If Perſons do aſſemble themſelves, and act with Force in Oppoſition to ſome Law, which they think inconvenient, and hope thereby to get it repealed; this is Levying a War and Treaſon, though Purpoſing and Deſigning it is not ſo: So when they endeavour in great Numbers with Force to make ſome Reformation of their own Heads, without purſuing the Methods of the Law, that is a Levying of War, and Treaſon, but the Purpoſing and Deſigning it is not ſo.

* Riſing with Force to pull down all Incloſures, to expell Strangers, to pull down Bawdy-Houſes, is Levying of War, and Treaſon; but a bare Purpoſing and Deſigning to raiſe ſuch a Force, for ſuch a Purpoſe, is not Treaſon.

But if there be, as I told you, a Purpoſe and Deſign to deſtroy the King, and to depoſe him from his Throne, or to reſtrain him, or have any Power over him, which is propoſed or deſigned to be effected by War that is to be levied, ſuch a Con-a Conſpiracy and Conſultation to levy War for the bringing this to paſs, is an Overt Act of High Treaſon. So that, Gentlemen, as to that Objection, that he makes in Point of Law, it is of no Force, if there be Evidence ſufficient to convince you, that he did conſpire to levy War for ſuch an End.

Gentlemen, the Evidence you have heard what it is, you may conſider the Weight of it, and the Circumſtances that do attend it; and likewiſe the Anſwers that have been given by the Priſoner to invalidate that Evidence, and to prove the Improbability of what they have teſtified againſt him. You have heard, I ſay, the Evidence on the one Side, and the other; if you are not ſatisfied, that what the Witneſſes have Sworn is true, that Sir John Freind did engage in ſuch a Deſign for ſuch a Purpoſe, then you are to acquit him; but on the other Side, if you believe that Sir John Freind is guilty of what the Witneſſes have depoſed againſt him, then you are to find him Guilty.

Juryman. My Lord, we deſire we may have that Letter with us that was produced here.

L. C. J. No, no, you cannot have it by Law.

Juryman. May it not be left with the Foreman, my Lord?

L. C. J. No; but you may look upon it in Court before you go away, if you will.

Then the Letter was handed to the Jury, and one of them handed it to the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Why do you do ſo? You ſhould not give the Priſoner the Letter.

Juryman. It was done to ſee whether it was his Hand; and we deſire, if there be any Body here that knows his Hand-writing, or that ſaw him write it, may be produced.

L. C. J. Why? Did not he own the Letter to the Witneſs afterwards? It was ſworn to you he did; and that he met according to the Appointment in the Letter, and that Money was paid.

Then the Jury withdrew to Conſider of their Verdict, and an Officer was ſworn to keep them according to Law, till agreed; and about a Quarter of an Hour afterwards they returned into Court, and the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, Anſwer to your Names. Thomas Clark——

Mr. Clark. Here.

(And ſo did all the Reſt of the Twelve.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand, (which he did,) Look upon the Priſoner: How ſay ye, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

L. C. J. Jaylor, look to him, he is found Guilty of High-Treaſon.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Sir John Freind is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, nor Chattels, Lands, nor Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge.

L. C. J. Diſcharge the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, the Court diſcharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

L. C. J. Then we had beſt to adjourn the Court till to morrow Morning.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes: All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do, at this General Seſſions of the Peace, Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London; and Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middleſex, may depart hence for this Time, and give their Attendance here again, to morrow Morning at ſeven of the Clock, and God ſave the King.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate, and was brought the next Day to the Bar to offer what he had to ſay for Stay of Judgment; and afterwards received Sentence of Death, as a Traytor.

The TRYAL of Sir WILLIAM PARKINS, Knight,

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

Die Martis viceſimo quarto Martii, Anno Dom. 1695. Anno Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii Octavo.

This Day the Tryal of Sir William Parkins, Kt. came on at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, for High-Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, and Promoting a French Invaſion for the Reſtoring the late King James.

Clerk of Arraignments.

CRyer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez. All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do at this General Seſſions of the Peace, Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London; and Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middleſex, and were adjourned over to this Day, draw near and give your Attendance, for now they will proceed to the Pleas of the Crown for the ſame City, and County; and God ſave the King.

Cl. of Ar. Middleſex. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez. You good Men of the County of Middleſex, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that ſhall be at the Bar; anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called, every Man at the firſt Call, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereupon.

Then the Jury that were returned in the Pannel, were all called over and the Appearances of thoſe who anſwered to the Call, were recorded.

About Ten of the Clock the Judges (to wit) the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby, came into the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Set Sir William Parkins to the Bar. (which was done.) Sir William Parkins, hold up thy Hand.

Parkins. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I humbly beg the Favour of one Word before I am arraigned. My Wife coming to ſee me in my Diſtreſs, ſent up a Trunk of Linnen for our Uſe, and the Sheriffs of London have ſeized it, and do detain it. It has Linnen in it, and all her neceſſary Things, and all Things have been torn from me, ſince I was apprehended, but what is there, I have nothing to ſubſiſt upon but what is there; for no Money can I get from any Body, no Body will pay us a Farthing.

Mr Sheriff Buckingham. My Lord, we were ſent for to Mr Secretary Trumball's Office, and when we came there, there was a Trunk that had been ſeized, as belonging to Sir William Parkins; and when we came thither it was opened, and there was in it ſome houſhold Linnen, and ſome Plate; and Mr Secretary Trumball was pleaſed, after having ſearched the Trunk, to ſeal it up, and deliver it to my Brother and me, to be kept; and this is all we know of it.

* L. C. J. Where was this Trunk ſeized? * Lord Chief Juſtice Holt.

Mr Sh. Buckingham. We found it in the Secretary's Office, and it was delivered to us there, and we gave a Receipt for it to bring it down again when called for; we did not ſeize it.

L. C. J. Look ye ſee Sir William Parkins, your Trunk was ſeiz'd I ſuppoſe in order to ſearch for Papers.

Parkins. Yes, I believe it was; but I hope it ſhall be delivered back now, they have found nothing in it, and I have nothing elſe to ſubſiſt upon but what is there.

L. C. J. Is there any Plate there? What is there in the Trunk?

Mr Sh. Buckingham. There is ſome Diaper and Damask Linnen, a Carpet, and ſome Pieces of Plate, two or three hundred Ounces of Plate, for ought I know. We had it from the Secretary's Office; we did not ſeize it.

Then the Judges conſulted among themſelves.

L. C. J. He ought to have his Plate to ſell, to ſupport him that he may have Bread.

Parkins. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to direct the Sheriff to deliver it back.

L. C. J. Well, ſome Care or other ſhall be taken in it.

Parkins. My Lord, I have nothing to ſubſiſt upon, unleſs I can make ſomething of what is there; I have a Wife, and four Children, and nothing to ſubſiſt upon.

L. C. J. Let your Wife make Application for it at the Secretary's, it cannot now be done here. Why did you not make Complaint of it before? If you had, Care had been taken in it.

Park. I was told there was a Petition; for, my Lord, I was a cloſe Priſoner, and they told me there was a Petition; but my Wife never mentioned any Thing of it to me while afterwards; and they talk'd of an Order of Council that they had for the Sheriff's ſeizing it; but when I came to enquire into it, there was no Order about it, but only to ſearch and examine it.

L. C. J. Well, ſome Order ſhall be taken about it.

Mr Sh. Buckingham. My Lord, we have given a Receipt to the Secretary for it.

L. C. J. But he muſt have wherewithal to ſubſiſt and buy him Bread while he is in Priſon.

Mr Sh. Buckingham. My Lord, I ſee Mr Burleigh there, who was Sir John Freind's Sollicitor; I would humbly move your Lordſhip, that it may be inquir'd into, how he came by the Pannel of the Jury yeſterday? For it ſeems to reflect upon us, as if we had given the Priſoner a wrong Pannel.

Mr Juſt. Rokeby. No, I think there can be no Reflection upon you; but I think it would be very proper to have the Matter examin'd.

L. C. J. Ay, let Burleigh come in; (which he did.) Pray, how came you by the Pannel which you gave to Sir John Freind?

Burleigh. My Lord, I had Three ſeveral Copies ſent me by Sir John Freind's Friends, to the Horn Tavern about three or four a Clock, and I deliver'd one of them to Sir John Freind; but he had one before I deliver'd mine.

L. C. J. Who ſent them to you, or brought them to you?

Burleigh. I had them brought to me by a Porter.

Mr Baker. You know you might have had it from the proper Officer for asking.

Burl. I had them brought me from Sir John Freind's Friends.

L. C. J. Can you tell who had it from the Sheriff?

Burl. My Lord, I know not: I had three Copies ſent me in a Quarter of an Hour's Time; whence they came, I know not; the Sheriff knows me, and every Body elſe.

Mr Sh. Buck. I do know you, and would have you be fair in your Practice.

Mr Baker. The Inquiry is made, becauſe a falſe Copy is put upon him; you might have had a true Copy, if you had applied your ſelf right.

Burl. I ſent to Mr. Farringdon for it.

L. C. J. The Sheriff deliver'd it the Secondary, who is the proper Officer.

Mr J. Rokeby. Sir John Freind ſaid he had it from him yeſterday.

Burl. But he had one before; how he came by it, I can't tell; nor whence thoſe came that were brought to me.

Mr J. Rokeby. If you will not take care to go to the right Place, it is no Body's Fault but your own, if you ſuffer by it.

Burleigh. I was with my Lady, and delivered a Petition for this Trunk.

L. C. J. But it ſeems it was under the Conuzance of the Secretary, and Direction was given to go thither; ſome Care or other muſt be taken in it, and ſhall; but go on now to Arraign the Priſoner.

Cl. of Arr. Hold up thy Hand, (which he did;) thou ſtandeſt Indicted in Middleſex, by the Name of Sir William Parkyns, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Kt. For that, Whereas an open, and notoriouſly publick, and moſt ſharp, and cruel War, for a long Time hath been, and yet is, by Sea and by Land had, carried on, and proſecuted by Lewis the French King, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. During all which Time, the ſaid Lewis the French King, and his Subjects were, and yet are Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and his Subjects, You the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, of this Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premiſſes, not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor againſt the ſaid moſt Serene, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our ſaid Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, &c. your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord; the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh intending, and contriving, and with all your Strength purpoſing, deſigning, and endeavouring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and very well Eſtabliſhed, altogether to Subvert, Change, and Alter; as alſo the ſame our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring; and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery, to the aforeſaid French King, to Subdue and bring; the firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St, Paul Covent-Garden, aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, diviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe, deſign and intend, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then your Supreme, true, natural, rightful, and lawful Sovereign Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Command, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to Depoſe caſt Down, and utterly to Deprive; and the ſame our Sovereign Lord the King to Kill, Slay, and Murther; and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, by his Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and Subjects, this Kingdom of England to Invade, Fight with, Conquer, and Subdue, to move, ſtir up, procure, and Aid; and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King throughout all this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cauſe; and that you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, to the aforeſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, then and there, during the War aforeſaid, Traiterouſly were adhering and aiding; and the ſame moſt abominable, wicked and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, Intentions, and Purpoſes of yours aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect and bring to effect; and in proſecution, performance, and Execution of the traiterous Adheſion aforeſaid, you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, as ſuch a falſe Traytor, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame firſt Day of June, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and and traiterously, and with Force and Arms, with one Robert Charnock (late of High-Treason, in contriving, and conspiring the Death of our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, duly convicted and attainted) and with divers other false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree, to procure from the aforesaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, great Numbers of Soldiers and armed Men, this Kingdom of England to Invade and Fight with, and to levy, procure, and prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, and Troops, and Legions against our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to rise up and be formed; and with those Enemies at and upon such their Invasion and Entrance into this Kingdom of England, to join and unite; Rebellion and War against him our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and wage; and the same our Sovereign Lord the King so as aforesaid to Depose, and him to Kill and Murder. And further, with the said false Traytors, the same first Day of July, in the Year abovesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Traiterously you did consult, consent, and agree to send the aforesaid Robert Charnock as a Messenger from you the said Sir William Parkyns, and the same other Traytors unknown, as far as, and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, to James the Second, late King of England, to propose to him, and desire of him to obtain of the aforesaid French King, the Soldiers and Armed Men aforesaid, for the Invasion aforesaid to be made; and Intelligence and Notice of such their Traiterous Intentions, and Adhesions, and all the Premisses, to the said late King James, and the said other Enemies and their Adherents, to give and exhibit; and them to inform of other Things, Particulars, and Circumstances thereunto relating; as also Intelligence from them of the said intended Invasion, and other Things and Circumstances concerning the Premisses, to receive, and them to you the said Sir William Parkyns, and the said other Traytors in this Kingdom of England, to signify, report, and declare, in Assistance, Animation, and Aid of the said Enemies of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, in the War aforesaid, and to stir up and procure those Enemies the more readily and boldly this Kingdom of England to Invade, the Treasons and Traytorous Contrivances, Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes of you the said Sir William Parkyns aforesaid, to perfect and fulfil, and all the Premisses the sooner to execute, manage and perform, and the Invasion aforesaid to render and make the more easie, you the said Sir William Parkyns, afterwards, to wit, the 10th Day of February, in the Year abovesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, Falsely, Maliciously, Advisedly, Secretly, Traiterously, and with Force and Arms, with the aforesaid Robert Charnock, and very many other false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, did Meet, Propose, Treat, Consult, Consent, and Agree, him our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait, and Deceit, to Assassinate, Kill and Murder; and that execrable, abominable, and detestable Assassination, and Killing the sooner to execute, and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, there Traiterously you did Treat, Propose, and Consult with those Traytors, of the Ways, Methods, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, which Way, and how our said Sovereign Lord the King, so by lying in wait, the sooner might be Killed, and Slain, and did Consent, Agree, and Assent with the same Traytors, that Forty Horsemen or thereabouts, of those Traytors, and others by them and you the said Sir William Parkyns, to be Hired, Procured, and Paid, with Guns, Carbines, and Pistols, with Gun-Powder and Leaden-Bullets Charged, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons Armed, should lie in wait, and be in Ambush, our said Lord the King in his Coach being, when he should go abroad, to Attack, and that a certain, and competent Number of those Men so Armed, should set upon the Guards of our said Lord the King then, and there attending him, and being with him, and should Over-power and Fight with them, whilst others of the same Men so Armed, him our said Lord the King should Kill, Slay, and Murder; and that you the said Sir William Parkyns, then and there, did take upon you to provide Five Horses for those Men which should so Kill and Murder our said Sovereign Lord the King; and also that you the said Sir William Parkyns, your Treasons, and all your traiterous Intentions, Designs and Contrivances aforesaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, and bring to effect afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year last abovesaid, at the Parish aforesaid in the County aforesaid, Divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Carbines, Rapiers and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition and Warlike Things, and Military Instruments falsely, maliciously, secretly, and Traytorously did obtain, buy, gather, and procure, and to be bought, obtained, gathered, and procured did Cause, and in your Custody had and detained, with that Intention them in, and about the detestable, abominable, and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King, and the Invasion aforesaid, as aforesaid, to use, employ, and bestow; and also your Treasons, and all your Traiterous Intentions, Purposes, and Contrivances aforesaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfill, and fully bring to Effect; you the said Sir William Parkyns afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year last abovesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Falsely, Maliciously, Advisedly, Secretly, and Traiterously, divers Soldiers, and Men Armed, and ready to be Armed, after the said detestable, abominable, and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Sovereign Lord the King, so as aforesaid should be done, perpetrated, and committed, to Rise, and Muster, and War, and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to make, and wage, and with the Enemies of our said Lord the King, Foreigners and Strangers, Subjects and Soldiers of the said Lewis the French King, being about to Invade this Kingdom of England, at and upon their Invasion and Enterance into this Kingdom then expected to be shortly made, themselves, together with you the said Sir William Parkyns, to Joyn and Unite, and into Troops and Legions to form, you did Levy, List, and Retain, and did procure to be Levied, Listed and Retained, and those Soldiers and Men for the Treasons, Intentions, and Purposes aforesaid, then and there, and afterwards in Readiness you had; against the Duty of your Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, His Crown and Dignity; as also againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided.

How ſay'ſt thou, Sir William Parkyns, Art thou Guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Parkyns. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culpritt. How wilt thou be Tryed?

Parkyns. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Parkyns. My Lord, If your Lordſhip pleaſes to favour me with a Word or two.

L. C. J. Aye, What ſay you Sir?

Parkyns. My Lord, I have been kept in hard Priſon ever ſince I was committed, no Body has been ſuffer'd to come to me till Friday laſt, then my Council came to me; and being charg'd with many Facts as I ſee in this Indictment, it will be neceſſary to have divers Witneſſes to clear my ſelf of theſe Particulars; they are diſpers'd up and down, and I have had no Time to look after them, and therefore I beg your Lordſhip to put off my Tryal till another Day.

L. C. J. When had you firſt Notice of your Tryal?

Parkyns. The firſt Notice of my Tryal was on Wedneſday laſt, in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. That is a ſufficient Time of Notice, ſure you might have provided your Witneſſes, and prepar'd for it by this Time.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, being kept ſo cloſe Priſoner, I had no Opportunity for it; for it was not poſſible for me to get any Body to come to me, till Friday Noon, not ſo much as my Council, and then there was but Two Days, Saturday and Monday, (for Sunday is no Day for any Buſineſs) and it is impoſſible for me to be ready in the Manner that I ought to be. It is a perfect Diſtreſs, and Hardſhip upon me, to be put ſo ſoon upon my Tryal, without my Witneſſes, and what ſhould enable me to make my Defence; therefore I humbly intreat your Lordſhip to put it off till another Day.

L. C. J. What Witneſs do you want, Sir William?

Parkyns. I have divers Witneſſes, my Lord, that can give an Account where I was from Time to Time, but they are many of them out of Town, and I have ſent about every way, but cannot get them together in ſo ſhort a Time.

L. C. J. When had he Notice of his Tryal?

Mr Baker. On Wedneſday I told him, that he muſt expect to be try'd this Day, and withal, that if he would name me any Council, that he would have come to him, he ſhould have an Order next Morning for them.

L. C. J. You were told, it ſeems, on Wedneſday that you might have what Council you would.

Mr Baker. And he had an Order upon Thurſday Morning for his Council.

Parkyns. I could not have it without Application to the Court at White-Hall, and could have no Body come to me till Thurſday, and it was Friday before I could get my Council to me.

L. C. J. You might have ſent for your Witneſſes on Thurſday, and imploy'd ſome body about that Matter then.

Parkyns. The Sollicitor that I employ'd, was imployed otherways, and I could not employ any Body elſe.

L. C. J. Yes, you might have employed any other about that Buſineſs.

Parkyns. I had no Body to ſend, I was kept cloſe, and no Body permitted to come to me.

L. C. J. Your Sollicitor you deſir'd had Leave to come to you.

Mr Baker. You know that thoſe you ſent for, you had an Order for.

Parkyns. I cou'd not get him till Thurſday to me, I had no Meſſengers to ſend till then.

Mr Baker. I gave the Keeper Direction, to let him have Perſons come to him to ſend on any Errand.

L. C. J. The Keeper had Orders, it ſeems, to let any Meſſenger come to you, and he would have help'd you to ſome Body to ſend of this Errand to be ſure.

Keeper. I always did it, as ſoon as I know they have Notice of their Tryal.

Parkyns. But the Keeper is not always in the Way, and beſides, when I had Notice given me of my Tryal, it was Execution Day, and he was not at home that Day.

L. C. J. He names no Witneſſes, only he ſays he has divers Witneſſes, neither is there any Oath made of any Witneſſes: Pray how long is it ſince you were committed?

Parkyns. I was committed this Day Fortnight.

L. C. J. Your Commitment charg'd you with High Treaſon, and therefore you knew what you ſtood accus'd of, were you not committed for High-Treaſon.

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, I believe I was.

Mr Sol. Gen. My Lord, he had a very fair Time to prepare for his Defence, for he ſaw his Name in the Proclamation a good while before he was taken, and there it is declar'd, what he ſtands charg'd with.

L. C. J. You might have had a Copy of your Commitment, you had a Right to have it, and thereby you might have ſeen what you were accuſed of.

Keeper. We never do deny it, if it be demanded.

L. C. J. You cannot deny it, you know what Penalty you are under if you do.

Parkyns. No Body was permitted to come to me.

L. C. J. You might have ask'd for a Copy, or any Body elſe, for you had Notice of your Tryal ſo long ago as Wedneſday laſt.

Mr Baker. I gave him Notice of his Tryal on Wedneſday, and then told him he muſt prepare for it againſt this Day; he ſaid he would endeavour to petition for a longer Time, I told him it would be in Vain, for he muſt prepare for his Tryal to Day, and could have no longer Time.

L. C. J. Sir William, truly we do not ſee any Reaſon to put off the Tryal upon theſe Suggeſtions.

Parkyns. My Lord, it is very hard; then I humbly beg I may have the Favour, that I may have Council allow'd me, I have no Skill in Indictments.

L. C. J. We cannot allow Council.

Parkyns. My Lord, if I have no Council, I do not underſtand theſe Matters, nor what Advantage may be proper for me to take in theſe Caſes.

L. C. J. You are not ignorant, Sir William, that Council has been always refuſed when deſired in ſuch Caſes.

Parkyns. My Lord, there is a new Act of Parliament that is lately made, which allows Council.

L. C. J. But that does not commence yet, Sir William.

Parkyns. My Lord, it wants but one Day.

L. C. J. That is as much as if it were a much longer Time: for we are to proceed according to what the Law is, and not what it will be.

Parkyns.

Parkyns. But it is declarative of the Common Law, becauſe it ſays it was always juſt and reaſonable.

L. C. J. We cannot alter the Law till Law-makers do it.

Parkyns. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to let it be read?

L. C. J. Ay, if you have a Mind to it, it ſhall be read.

Parkyns. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Ar. Reads. An Act for Regulating of Tryals in Caſes of Treaſon, and Miſpriſon of Treaſon.——

All the firſt Paragraph of the New Act was read.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, this Law has not taken any Effect as yet; but the Law ſtands as it did before the making of this Act.

Parkyns. But, My Lord, the Law ſays it's juſt and reaſonable that it ſhould be ſo.

L. C. J. We go according to the Law as we find it is.

Parkyns. And, My Lord, what is juſt and reaſonable to Morrow, ſure is juſt and reaſonable to Day, and your Lordſhip may indulge me in this Caſe, eſpecially when you ſee how ſtreight Notice I have had, and what a little Time has been allowed me, that I am not able to make my Defence.

L. C. J. We cannot make a Law, we muſt go according to the Law, that muſt be our Rule and Direction.

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, but what is juſt and reaſonable, ſure is Law: the Law is grounded upon Reaſon.

L. C. J. The Parliament has thought fit to make ſuch a Law, which is to commence from the 25th of this Month: It is not a Law till the Time comes, that the Parliament hath appointed for its being a Law.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, if my Notice had been a convenient Notice, I had been within the Time limited by the Act of Parliament; and no one can want the Advantage of that Act from henceforward, nor ſuffer for ſuch Want but my ſelf, which is a particular Hardſhip upon me.

L. C. J. We cannot alter the Law, we are bound by our Oaths to proceed according to the Law, as it is at preſent.

Parkyns. Pray, my Lord, let the Tryal be put off till another Day then.

L. C. J. You ſhew no Reaſon for it; you name no Witneſſes that you want, nor have we any Oath as we ought to have in ſuch a Caſe.

Parkyns. I will do both if your Lordſhip will oblige me to it.

L. C. J. There ought to be an Oath certainly, but we think you have had fair and convenient Notice: For you have had as much Notice as Sir John Freind had, who was tryed Yeſterday.

Parkyns. As I am informed he was charged with ſingle Facts about the Town, but I am charged with many particular Things more than he was.

L. C. J. The Act of Parliament ſays nothing of Notice of Tryal; that ſtill continues as it was before; and you have had very convenient Notice: Go on Mr Hardeſty to ſwear the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkins, you the Priſoner at the Bar, Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them or any of them, you are to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Parkins. I hope your Lordſhip will be of Council for me then.

L. C. J. So we will; we will do you all the Right we can. Look ye, you know you may challenge 35 without Cauſe, and as many as you will with Cauſe, but no more than 35 without Cauſe.

Cryer. Oyez, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of the High Treaſon whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance. And all Jury Men of Middleſex that have appear'd, and are not ſworn, may depart the Court.

The Names of the Twelve Sworn were theſe.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkins, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.) You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe: He ſtands indicted by the Name of Sir William Parkins, late of the Pariſh of St Paul Covent Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Knight, that whereas (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis,) and againſt the Form of the Statute made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods, and Chattels, Lands, Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him not guilty, ye are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, tels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr Montague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Parkins. My Lord, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay, you would be my Council. I am ignorant in Matters of Indictments, I beg if there be any Fault in it, you will let me know it.

L. C. J. Truly, I have obſerv'd no Fault in it; I do not know of any.

Mr Montague. Gentlemen, this Indictment does contain as heavy an Accuſation, as can be laid upon any Man, for it not only charges the Priſoner with a traiterous Deſign of ſubverting the Government, and raiſing War and Rebellion within this Kingdom; which was to be done by adhering to the King's Enemies, and promoting a Foreign Invaſion, but likewiſe with a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King, which was to have been taken away by a bloody Aſſaſſination.

Gentlemen, the Indictment ſets forth, That Sir William Parkins, the Priſoner at the Bar, did meet ſeveral Times with Charnock, and other falſe Traytors; and there it was conſulted, and agreed how they ſhould procure French Forces to land within this Kingdom, and then they were to raiſe Rebellion amongſt his Majeſty's Subjects, to join with the Invaders. Mr Charnock was ſent from the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Reſt, as a Meſſenger into France, unto the late King James to acquaint him with this bloody Deſign; and to deſire him to borrow of the French King as many Troops as he could ſpare to make a Deſcent upon this Kingdom, and they at the ſame Time were to facilitate the Deſcent, by getting as many Men as they could to make the Aſſaſſination; and the Number of Forty was pitched upon, who were to be provided for that Purpoſe, of which the Priſoner at the Bar was to find Five, who were to lie in wait with the Reſt, and ſet upon the King as he came along in his Coach, upon his Return from Hunting. Some were to aſſault and attack the Guards, while others were barbarouſly to aſſaſſinate and murder the King in his Coach: and particulary it charges the Priſoner with undertaking to procure and provide Five Horſes, and Arms that were to be imploy'd in this bloody Aſſaſſination; and alſo with gathering together great Quantities of Arms and Ammunition that were to be uſed in the Inſurrection. To this Indictment the Priſoner has pleaded not guilty; if he be not guilty, God forbid he ſhould be convicted: But if he be guilty, and we prove the Fact, the Nation expects that you will do Juſtice to the King and Kingdom, and find him ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkins, ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing the Death of his Majeſty, and Adhering to his Majeſty's Enemies; and the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment to prove this Treaſon are, That he with others had ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations about this Deſign, and ſent a Meſſenger over to France to the late King James, to procure French Forces to invade the Kingdom, to depoſe the King, and ſubject the Kingdom to a French Power: And likewiſe that he did enter into a Conſpiracy with ſeveral Perſons for the Aſſaſſination of his Majeſty's Royal Perſon. Theſe are the Overt Acts mentioned in the Indictment, to prove this Charge of Treaſon againſt the Priſoner.

Gentlemen, the Evidence to prove theſe Overt Acts, and which we ſhall produce, will be in this Manner. It will appear that the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkins, has had a Commiſſion from King James to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, and about May laſt, he with ſeveral others had a Meeting at the Old King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, where were preſent my Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkins, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Mr Charnock, Mr Porter, and one Mr Cook; and Goodman came in to them after Dinner. And at that Meeting it was conſulted and concerted among them, how they ſhould bring back the late King James, and depoſe his preſent Majeſty; and in Order to that they did reſolve to ſend Mr Charnock as a Meſſenger to the late King James, to deſire him to obtain from the French King 10000 Men to invade this Kingdom; 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons: and to encourage the late King to this, they did aſſure him by the ſame Meſſenger, that they would meet him with 2000 Horſe upon his Landing; and they did all undertake and agree that they would do it; and Mr Charnock undertook to go of this Meſſage.

Gentlemen, about a Week after this Meeting, Mr Charnock not being willing to go upon this Errand without a good Aſſurance, that they intended to perform what they had reſolved upon, they therefore had another Meeting of moſt of the ſame Perſons that were at the former, and particularly the Priſoner at the Bar was one; and that was at Mrs Mountjoy's a Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet. And at that Meeting they did all agree, as formerly, and continued in their former Reſolution, to ſend Mr Charnock to aſſure the late King, that they would meet him, according as they had promiſed, if he would give them Notice where he was to land, and he ſhould not fail of their Aſſiſtance. And at theſe Meetings they did take Notice, that then was the moſt proper Time for ſuch an Invaſion: For the King was gone to Flanders, moſt of the Forces were drawn thither, and the People were diſſatisfy'd, and ſo it would be the fitteſt Opportunity to accompliſh their Deſign. And they deſired Mr Charnock to make Haſte to carry this Meſſage, and to intreat King James that he would be ſpeedy and expeditious in his Coming, that they might not loſe this Seaſon.

Gentlemen, after theſe Meetings, Mr Charnock did within a few Days go over into France, and did deliver his Meſſage to the late King James, who took it very kindly, but ſaid that the French King could not ſpare ſo many Forces that Year, having other Work to imploy them about: Upon which, within a Month's Time, or leſs, he came back again, and brought an Account of his Meſſage to thoſe Gentlemen that ſent him. This was in May or June laſt, and ſo the further Proſecution of the Deſign ceaſed at that Time.

But Gentlemen, the laſt Winter it was revived again, and attempted, and carried on very near to the obtaining a fatal Succeſs. And you will hear that the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkins, has had too great a Hand, and been a very great Inſtrument in both the Parts of this wicked Conſpiracy and Treaſon; not only in the Invaſion, which he with others ſent the Meſſenger over to procure; but alſo in the other Part, the blackeſt

blackeſt Part, even the Aſſaſſination of the King's Perſon.

About January laſt Sir George Barclay, a Lieutenant of the Guards to King James in France, was ſent over into England to engage Perſons to join in the Conſpiracy and Aſſaſſination; and for his Aſſiſtance there were ſent over with him, and before and after him, ſome 20 Troopers of the late King's, that were his Guards in France. And Sir George Barclay, to encourage the Perſons that were to join, and whom he had brought over with him, pretended an Authority to juſtify it, that is, a Commiſſion from the late King James, and he communicates this Deſign to Mr Charnock, Mr Porter, and ſeveral others, and amongſt the Reſt to the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkins, having a great Confidence in him, and did acquaint him he had ſuch a Commiſſion, and he ſhewed it him, and that Commiſſion was to levy War againſt the King's Perſon; which they took to be a ſufficient Authority for them to aſſaſſinate the King's Perſon.

Gentlemen, in order to the accompliſhing this horrid Conſpiracy, there were ſeveral Meetings, and Conſultations had, at which the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, and very active. Sometimes they met at Captain Porter's Lodgings, at another Time at the Nagg's Head in Covent-Garden, at another Time at the Sun in the Strand, and another Time at the Globe in Hatton-Garden, in order to accompliſh this Deſign: And at theſe Meetings, you will hear, they did propoſe ſeveral Ways and Methods for the Execution of it; and ſeveral Perſons, particularly one of them that have ſuffered the Puniſhment of the Law for this, were appointed to go and view the Ground, where the King's Perſon might moſt conveniently be aſſaulted. Mr King, that was executed for it, was one, Captain Porter was another, and one Knightley was the Third; and theſe did go to ſee the Ground. And the Day before they went there was a Meeting, at which was preſent the Priſoner at the Bar, and others, wherein 'twas concluded upon, that they ſhould go; and they went accordingly to ſee the moſt convenient Place for it. They went to Brentford, and afterwards to the other Side of the Water to Richmond, and ſurvey'd all the Ground, and the Place they pitched upon as the moſt proper for their Purpoſe was, when his Majeſty ſhould return from Hunting, to do it in the Lane betwixt Brentford and Turnham-Green. And accordingly, when they return'd in the Evening, they came by Appointment to the Place where the Reſt of the Accomplices were to meet, at the Nagg's Head Tavern in St. James's, and gave an Account of their Proceedings; and at that Meeting likewiſe was Sir William Parkins the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr Charnock, and ſeveral others, and upon the Report of Capt. Porter and Mr King's Expedition, they did reſolve the Thing ſhould be done in that Place, and that it ſhould be done in this Manner.

Sir George Barclay with about Eight or Ten in his Party, who were to be choſen out of all the other Parties, were to aſſault the King's Coach, and endeavour to kill the King, and all the Reſt that were in the Coach with him, whilſt the others in two Parties, were to attack the Guards; and the Number in all was to be about 40. This was fully agreed upon.

And, Gentlemen, the firſt Time that they reſolved to put this traiterous Deſign in Execution, was the Fifteenth of February, which was a Saturday, the uſual Day that the King was wont to go a Hunting on; but it happened by great Providence that the King did not go abroad that Day.

They had contrived further to make the Thing ſure, that there ſhould be two Perſons, whom they called orderly Men, who ſhould be placed at Kenſington, to give Notice when the King went abroad; and Chambers was one, and Durance that was a Fleming, was another; and Durance was likewiſe employed to view the Inns about Turnham-Green and Brentford, for the Lodging of their Men, who were to be placed Two or Three in an Inn, that they might not be obſerved.

Gentlemen, the firſt Day appointed for the accompliſhing this Deſign, which was the 15th of February, being over, and they diſappointed; yet they did afterwards reſolve to go on and execute it. And the next Saturday, which was the 22d of February, was pitched upon for the Time of Execution; and accordingly on Friday the 21ſt of February, the Day before, there was a Meeting at the Nagg's-head in Covent-Garden; and there was preſent Sir George Barclay, Capt. Porter, and ſeveral others, and amongſt the Reſt the Priſoner at the Bar was there: They had at firſt ſome Diſcourſe among them that they were in doubt, becauſe of the firſt Diſappointment, whether there had not been ſome Diſcovery, but that Doubt was ſoon over; for it was ſaid, it could not be ſo, for then they ſhould not have been there together. That ſeemed probable, and the Diſappointment was imputed to ſome Accident, and that gave them new Aſſurance to go on, and they were reſolved to do it in the ſame Manner, as they had formerly reſolv'd, on the next Day, which was Saturday.

Gentlemen, at that Meeting Mr Porter acquainted them that he had the Misfortune to have ſome of his Horſes fallen ſick or lame, and he acquainted the Priſoner with it; and Sir William Parkins was careful to ſupply him with other Horſes, and told him, he could get a Note from one Lewis, who I think is Major of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, to get three Horſes, and accordingly he did ſend a Note for three Horſes to Mr Lewis.

Upon the 22d of February in the Morning, which was the Time for the Execution of this bloody Conſpiracy, they had met together, and reſolved to go on with it, and put it in Execution; and that they had Notice from Chambers, that the King did go a Hunting that Day, and there was great Joy among them all, thinking themſelves ſure; and ſo they order'd all Things to be got ready. But afterwards, about One a Clock, there came other News, that the King did not go abroad, but the Guards were all come back in great Haſte, their Horſes being all of a Foam, and the King's Coaches were ſent back to the Mews; then they began to be in a great Conſternation, and they thought the Thing had taken Air, and was diſcovered. This, Gentlemen, is a ſhort Account, how it will appear upon the Evidence, as to the Conſpiracy of Aſſaſſinating the King, and the ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations about it; at which the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkins, was preſent.

But

But, Gentlemen, there will be a little more Evidence, if it be neceſſary, to confirm this former Evidence, and to ſhew the Part that the Priſoner at the Bar had in this treaſonable, this barbarous Conſpiracy: For it will appear, that, as the Priſoner had a Commiſſion from the late King James to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, and had ſent a Meſſenger into France, to invite the late King over, with 10000 French; ſo he had made great Preparation of Arms to be ready for that purpoſe. About Michaelmas laſt the Priſoner at the Bar ſent a Parcel of Goods, as he called them, which were put into Caſes, I think they were about Eight ſmall Boxes, put into very large Caſes, and ſent down by his Order into the Country, unto one Haywood. It ſeems this Haywood had married Mr. Charnock's Siſter, and Charnock writ a Letter to him, and deſired that he would give Sir William Parkyns Leave to lodge ſome Goods there, which were of great Value, and he durſt not truſt them at his own Houſe in Warwickſhire, becauſe his Servants were not there to look after them, and accordingly upon that Letter Mr. Haywood did give Leave that the Goods ſhould be carried thither, and they were ſo, and there they were lock'd up privately, and kept till this barbarous Conſpiracy was diſcovered; then you will find the Priſoner at the Bar ſent his own Servant down, the Tueſday after the Diſcovery, and gave him Orders immediately (his Name is Eubank, and he is the Groom, and looks after his Horſes) to go down to Warwickſhire to one Evans, who carried the Goods, to deſire him with all ſpeed to remove thoſe Goods, and to take Care to remove them privately, and to ſecure them, and to hide them. And accordingly on Wedneſday he came there, which was Aſh-Wedneſday; and acquainted Evans with what Sir William had ordered him, and they went that very Night with a Cart to Mr. Haywood's; and though it was late, and they were deſired to ſtay till the next Morning, they would not; they ſaid they could ſtay no longer, but would remove the Goods immediately; and accordingly they were carried from thence that Night, to Sir William Parkyns own Houſe in Warwickſhire; and there they were buried in the Garden. Theſe Goods that were of this great Value were put into the Ground to preſerve them. But after this Diſcovery, Sir William Parkyns being accuſed, and his Name put in the Proclamation, and a Search being ordered to be made at his Houſe, theſe Goods that lay hid at Haywood's, and upon the Removal thence were thus buried in the Ground, came to be diſcovered, and the Caſes were broken open, and then they did appear to be Goods of an extraordinary Nature indeed, for you will find they were Horſe Arms for Troopers; there were two and thirty Carbines, five and twenty Caſes of Piſtols, and about forty odd Swords without Hilts upon them, but the Hilts lay looſe by them; ſo that this will make it apparent, without Diſpute, how far the Priſoner at the Bar has engaged in this Conſpiracy, and what Preparations he had made for the Execution of it.

Gentlemen it will appear further againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, that he hath had a conſiderable Number of Horſes, that have frequently been brought up from his Houſe in Hartfordſhire, to the George-Inn in Holbourn.

But before we come to that, I would acquaint you with another particular Part of our Evidence, that is precedent in Point of Time. About Chriſtmas laſt, the Priſoner did acquaint one Sweet, who is an Officer in the Exciſe, (and I am very ſorry that we ſhould have any ſuch Officers, that ſhould be thought fit to be intruſted with Secrets of this Nature) Sir William Parkyns acquainted this Sweet, and gave him an Account that he had long had an Aſſurance that King James would Land, but now he had it under his own Hand, that he would Land very ſpeedily, and that he had made Preperations for that purpoſe to meet him. That great Things were expected from him; that his own Troop was ready, and it conſiſted chiefly of old Soldiers; and that ſeveral Perſons who had been Officers would be Volunteers under him. He ſaid he intended to go into Leiceſterſhiere, and there he was to meet ſeveral Gentlemen from the North, and from the Weſt, to conſider, and ſettle a Correſpondence how to meet the late King upon his Landing; and accordingly Sir William Parkyns did go and you will have an Account that he came to Leiceſter on Friday night, one Scudamore went along with him, there he ſtaid all Saturday, and a good Part of Sunday. There came ſeveral Perſons to him while he was at Leiceſter, particularly one Captain Yarborough, the Son of Sir Thomas Yarborough, and a Parſon, who, ſaid they came as far as from York to meet Sir William Parkyns at Leiceſter; and their was great Reſort thither at that Time, as you will hear from the Witneſſes. Sir William Parkyns came back again from Leiceſter to Brick-hill, that Night, and returned to his own Houſe on Monday Night; and after his return, he acquainted this Sweet, that he had been his Journey to Leiceſter; that he met with ſeveral Gentlemen there from the North, and other Places, and had ſettled a Correſpondency, and had found them all fully Ingaged, and well Inclined, all went well, and there was no Danger of any Miſcarriage at all; and this was about January laſt, that this Expedition was made by the Priſoner.

And now, Gentlemen, as to that Particular about the Horſes, which were ſo frequently brought up this laſt Winter from his Houſe in Hartfordſhiere, to the George-Inn in Holbourn, there is one very unfortunate Circumſtance that attends this Matter; that is, that theſe Horſes were brought to Town juſt the ſeveral Nights before the King was to be aſſaſſinated; for upon Thurſday the 13th of February, he being in Town, ſent Directions to his Groom, to bring up three of his Horſes on Friday, which was the 14th in the Afternoon, and all theſe Horſes were furniſhed with Piſtols and Furniture for Troopers; according to thoſe Directions his Servant brought up the three Horſes, and he came and acquainted his Maſter that they were brought up according to his Order; Sir William Parkyns was then at his Lodgings, which were in the ſame Houſe where Mr. Charnock did lodge; when his Man had told him the Horſes were come, he pretended at firſt that he had had ſome Thoughts of going out of Town that Evening, but that he had changed his Mind, and would go in the Morning; and he would have the Horſes ready againſt the next Morning, which was Saturday the 15th, the firſt Day upon which the Aſſaſſination was intended to be put in Execution.

The next Morning when his Man came to him again, he had changed his Mind, and he would not go out of Town in the Morning, but he would go in the Afternoon; and it will appear that he did not go out of Town that Day, nor the next Day, nor till Monday; and then the Design had miscarried by the King's not going abroad a Saturday, and the Horses were carried back; and when he went out of Town upon Monday, one Holmes went along with him, and he went with him to his House in Hartfordshire; and there he staid until Friday after, which was the Day before the next time that was appointed for the Execution of the Assassination. And upon the Friday they came up again, and then there were more Horses, four or five, that were brought up that Day; and all of them with Pistols, and Jack-Boots, and other Furniture and Accoutrements for Troopers; and these came to the George Inn, where Sir William Parkins gave his Man Eubank particular Orders, to be very early the next Morning at Kensington; that was the 22d; and he was to go, as he told him, to one Brown, that he said was concern'd in the King's Kitchin, and liv'd two Doors off the Gate that turns up to the King's House, and he was to tell him he was Sir William Parknys's Servant, but that he came from a Man that lodg'd at a Confectioner's House overagainst Gray's Inn; in which Place by the Description of the Person, you will find Sir George Barclay lodged.

The Man went accordingly at Eight a Clock in the Morning to Kensington, and inquired out this Brown, and met with him, and told him he was Sir William Parkyns's Servant, but came from the Gentleman that lodg'd at the Confectioner's in Holbourn. Brown said he had nothing to say to him, but bid him give him his Almanack, and he writ in it, that he would be in Town in two Hours himself, and wait upon him: And bid him carry that to the Man that lodg'd at the Confectioner's, and this Brown by the Circumstances of the whole, must probably be one of the Orderly Men who lodg'd at Kensington, to give Notice when the King, and the Guards went out.

Sir William Parkins's Servant came back to the Confectioner's House, and there he met with a Man that went by the Name of Rogers; he'll tell you he was a Scotch Man, for he spoke broad Scotch, and he'll give you a particular Description of the Man, by which I believe it will appear that it was Sir George Barclay. Sir Wsliam Parkins's Servant after he had deliver'd his Message to this Rogers, came back to his Master, and told him he had done his Errand according as he was order'd, and Sir William Parkins ask'd him what Rogers said, and he told him that he bid him tell his Master, if he wou'd come to him he wou'd be ready at home for him. This was upon Saturday Morning the 22d of February.

About Eleven a Clock that Day Sir William Parkyns, and this Lewis that we spoke of before, came to the George Inn, and there Sir William Parkins ask'd his Servant whether he had receiv'd any more than two Saddles, for there were two Saddles sent in thither, according to an Order that had been given, to furnish two other Horses that stood there at the George Inn, and which Sir William Parkins told his Groom belonged to two Friends of his, and bid him be sure to take care of them, and to see them well fed, and order'd two Saddles to be bought for them. Lewis said he did think they had more than two, but you will see by the Evidence that this same Lewis had provided thirty Saddles for Sir William Parkins; but there seem'd to be a Controversy between them at that time how many had really been sent in, and Lewis affirm'd there was twenty four, but Sir William Parkins said, I have had but twenty two of the thirty yet, for I have but two brought in here, and I had twenty before. This you will hear fully proved, and I think it is impossible for any Body to believe, but that all this Preparation of Saddles, Pistols, Boots, and other Things, must convince any Body of the Prisoner's being so far Ingaged in this Design, that he can never answer it without giving you a very good Account, what this Preparation was for.

Gentlemen, a great Part of this will be prov'd to you by one that Acted in it, as a Servant to Sir William Parkins, that is, as to the coming up of the Horses, Jack-boots, Pistols, and other Arms at that time; and that when on the last Saturday it was disappointed, all the Horses, not only those Sir William Parkins brought, but the other two went away in a great Hurry, and Confusion, and nothing was ever heard of them more; and that will be prov'd by the Servants in the very Inn.

Gentlemen, I have now open'd to you the Nature and State of the Evidence, we will call our Witnesses, and make it out very undeniably, and substantially, and therefore I will not give you any further Trouble.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Porter (who was sworn.) Mr. Porter, pray will you give the Court and the Jury an Account of the Meeting at the King's Head in Leaden-hall-street, and who was there, and what Resolutions, and Agreements they came to.

Capt. Porter. About the latter End of May last, or the Beginning of June, there were two Meetings had, the one was at the King's Head in Leaden-hall-street, the other was at Mr. Mountjoye's near Sir John Fenwick's. At the first Meeting there was my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parykns the prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Fenwick, Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and my self. Mr. Goodman came in after Dinner, and there we consulted which was the best Way for King James's coming in, and we all resolv'd to send a Messenger to him, to invite him over, and to desire him to interpose with the French King for the getting 10000 Men, to come over with him, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons. It was then consider'd who should be sent, and all the Company agreed Mr. Charnock was the propereſt Person. Says Mr. Charnock, if you send me, pray tell me what Errant I shall go upon: We did likewise then agree, that he should assure the King, if he would come over, at such a time, we would meet Him with a Body of 2000 Horse.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Charnock undertake to go upon that Message?

Capt. Port. Yes, he did, and to propose this Matter to him, that he might propose it to the French King for the getting of the Men.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you go away, I desire to ask of you one Thing, did Sir William Parkins, the Prisoner at the Bar agree to the Message?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any other Meeting about this Business, and when was it, and who was there?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, Capt. Charnock said at first he would not go of a foolish Message, and thereupon we all agreed to be at the Head of 2000 Men to meet King James at His landing, and every one should bring his Quota.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the second Meeting, and where was it, and who were there, and what was agreed upon?

Capt.

Capt. P. The ſecond Meeting was at Mrs Mountjoy's, where Captain Charnock deſired us once more to meet, before he went away, to know whether we kept to our Firſt Reſolution, and we did agree to what was reſolved upon at Firſt, and he ſaid he would go in two or three Days Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Company agree to it then?

Capt. P. Yes, they did, Sir, all that met at that Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray name them over again, who they were.

Capt. P. Sir William Parkins was actually there, and my Lord of Ailesbury, and Sir John Freind, and Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and my ſelf; I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery was there, or Mr. Goodman.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when did you ſee Capt. Charnock, or ſpeak with him after that?

Capt. P. It was when I was in Priſon about the Riot, and he told me he had been there; but there would be nothing done in that Matter at preſent, for King James ſaid, the French King could not then ſpare ſo many Men, though he thanked us for our kind Offer: And he ſaid he had been with my Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Parkins, and the ſeveral other People of Quality, which he did not name, and had carried them the particular Meſſages that he had in command from the King to carry to them.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, Pray tell us, what you know about the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, and what Hand the Priſoner at the Bar was to have in it.

Capt. P. About ſome Weeks before I heard of the Aſſaſſination, I came to lodge in the Houſe in Norfolk-ſtreet, where Captain Charnock lodged; and where Sir William Parkins lodged when he came to Town. Moſt commonly we uſed to go in the Evening to the Tavern, or drink a Bottle of Wine at our own Lodgings; and one Morning I ask'd Mr. Charnock, if I ſhould ſee him at Night, he ſaid he was engaged in private Company for that Night, and he could not go with me to the Tavern. For, ſays he, there are ſome Gentlemen that are lately come from France, and there is ſomething to be done for the King's Service. If there be ſo, ſays I, pray let me be concern'd: Says he, they are but newly come, and they will ſee no Body elſe but me at preſent. A little after I fell ſick of a Fit of the Gout, and Mr. Charnock came to viſit me, and we fell into Diſcourſe, and I ask'd him about thoſe Gentlemen that were come from France, what they came about? he told me it was Sir G. Barclay that came from France, and ſeveral other Officers with him, and that he had a Commiſſion from the late King James to levy War againſt the Perſon of King William, or the Prince of Orange, as I think it was named in the Commiſſion.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

Capt. P. It was Capt. Charnock: He deſir'd to know how many Men I could bring. I deſir'd a little Time to conſider, but I ſaid there would be a great many would join if the King landed, whom I did not think fit to truſt with a Thing of this Nature before-hand. Some few Days after, Captain Charnock came into my Chamber, and brought Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes that ſaid he was come from France; and there we had little more but a general Diſcourſe: But a little after that I got well of the Gout, and we had ſeveral Meetings at ſeveral Places; at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, at the Nagg's-head in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun in the Strand, where Sir William Parkins was always preſent. And there we did conſult of the beſt Ways to aſſaſſinate the King, as he came from Richmond after Hunting. Sir George Barclay ſaid, he had received 800 l. from King James's Secretary towards the Buying of Horſes, and furniſhing both Horſes and Men for the Expedition; and it was conſider'd of how many Men it would be neceſſary to bring. The Number agreed upon was about Forty, of which Sir George Barclay was to provide Twenty, I promiſed to bring Seven or Eight, Sir William Parkins engaged to bring Five, whereof Three ſhould ba mounted with his own Men, and the other Two my Men were to mount upon.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know the Names of thoſe People that he was to mount?

Capt. P. I never had the Names my ſelf.

Mr At. Gen. Well, what was done after theſe Conſultations?

Capt. P. I ask'd Captain Charnock one Time, if I might not ſee the Commiſſion that King James had given; he ſaid he had never ſeen it himſelf, but Sir William Parkins had. I ask'd Sir William Parkins, one Evening as we were ſmoaking a Pipe by the Fire ſide, whether he had ſeen the Commiſſion: He ſaid, he had; and that becauſe King James would not truſt any of his Miniſters, it was written and ſign'd with the King's own Hand.

Mr At. Gen. Pray did he tell you what it was for?

Capt. P. He ſaid it was for Raiſing, and Levying War upon the Perſon of the King, but I do not know whether he called him King William, or the Prince of Orange; but I ſuppoſe it was the Prince of Orange.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray then give us an Account of your going to view the Ground, where it was moſt convenient to do the Buſineſs.

Capt. P. There were ſeveral Propoſitions about the Place where it was to be done, one was to be on the other ſide of the Water by Ambuſcade in Richmond Park, the other was to be on this ſide of the Water after the King was landed. Sir G. Barclay was for that that was upon the other Side of the Water; I thought, that it would take up too much time to go over thither, that it was better to be done on this Side; but becauſe there was Difference of Opinions, it was reſolved upon that ſome Body ſhould be appointed to view the Ground; and I was appointed for one, Mr. Knightly for another, and Mr. King would needs go with us for a Third, and we three did go. We lay all Night at Knightsbridge, and the next Day went, and view'd the Grounds on both Sides the River; and came back that Evening to the Nagg's-head according to Appointment, where was Sir William Parkyns the Priſoner, and Sir George Barclay, and Mr. Charnock, and we gave an Account that we had view'd both Places: And upon our Report it was reſolved, that it ſhould be done on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green.

Mr. At. Gen. Are you ſure Sir William Parkins, the Priſoner at the Bar, was there, at that Meeting at the Nagg's-head?

Capt. P. Yes, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he agree to that Reſolution?

Capt. P. It was in general agreed to by all that were there.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Capt. Porter, then give us an Account of the Days that were fix'd for the Execution of this Deſign.

Capt. P. There was Saturday, the 15th, and Saturday the 22d, becauſe Saturday was the Day the King uſed to go a Hunting, and Shooting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Men at Kenſington, to give you Notice when the King went abroad?

Capt. P. There were two Men that had a Lodging at Kenſington, the one was one Chambers, who belonged to Captain Charnock, and the other was a Fleming, one Durance, who came over with Sir G. Barclay, and he went every Day, and thruſt himſelf among the Guards to bring Intelligence.

Mr Sol. Gen. What was the Reaſon the Deſign was not executed?

Capt. P. The firſt Day Durance brought Notice in the Morning, that the Guards were gone abroad; and afterwards there came Notice, that the King would not go abroad that Day, for which Reaſon we adjourn'd it to the next Saturday.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Method you was to take in the Execution?

Capt. P. The Method agreed upon was this: There was one Rookwood that came from France upon this Expedition, he was to command one Party, and Captain Charnock and my ſelf were to command another Party, to attack the Guards, and Sir George Barclay was to have Four Men out of each Party to attack the Coach, while we attack'd the Guards.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, you ſay the firſt Day you was diſappointed by the King's not going, when was the next Meeting?

Capt. P. The next Meeting was upon Friday the Day before the 22d. I was ſick all the Week, and I do not know whether I lay a-Bed all the Week, or no; but upon Friday they met, and it was at the Sun Tavern in the Strand: There was none but Sir George Barclay, Captain Charnock, Sir William Parkins, and my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe was there then?

Capt. P. Sir George Barclay came in, and ſaid, he was afraid the Thing was diſcovered; I told him I fancied not, for if it had, we ſhould not have been in that Houſe at that Time. Then ſays he, let us go on, and try another Day. Sir William Parkins was ask'd if his Horſes were come to Town: He ſaid they were come to Town that Night. Said I, I have had a Misfortune with my Horſes, two of them are fallen lame, and won't be fit for Service. Says he, If I had known that, I could have brought more Horſes out of the Country: But, ſays he, I will ſend to Mr. Lewis, who was Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, and I believe he can help us to more Horſes; he will be with me to morrow Morning, and I'll get a Note from him for two more. In the Morning I ſent to him, and he ſent me a Note for two Horſes to mount my Men, and he ſent me Word Mr. Lewis could help me to two or three others, that they were all three ſaddled, and one was accoutred with Holſters and Piſtols, but the other two had only Saddles. I did not ſee Sir William Parkins on Saturday the 22d, but I met ſome of my Friends, who were to go along with me upon this Enterpriſe, and we had firſt Notice that the Guards were gone abroad, and that the King would go, at which all were very glad: But when we had Notice that the King did not go, we were afraid the Thing was diſcover'd, and I went out of Town, and I did not ſee any of them afterwards, till they were taken.

Mr At. Gen. Pray Captain Porter, have you heard any Thing from Sir William Parkins of his having a Commiſſion from King James?

Capt. P. I had heard Captain Charnock ask Sir William Parkins, why he did not go along with us in this Expedition? he ſaid he did not go, becauſe he could not go.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he not to be one in the Number that was to act in the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. P. No, he ſaid he had other Buſineſs to do, he had a Regiment to look after.

L. C. J. How many Horſes had you from Lewis?

Capt. P. I had never a one, only Sir William Parkins ſent me Word, if I wanted I might have three, for I had told him I would not ſend for them, till I heard whether the King went abroad, and then I had Notice that the King did not go.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you a Note for them?

Capt. P. Not for thoſe three Horſes, but Cranbourn ſaid he had a Note for two Horſes.

Parkins. Did he ſay, he had a Note from me?

Capt. P. No, I don't ſay ſo, Sir William; Cranbourn told me, he had a Note whither to go for them.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Sir William?

Par. No, my Lord.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether at any of thoſe Meetings there was any Diſcourſe of the Aſſaſſination before Sir William Parkins?

L. C. J. What ſay you to that, Captain Porter?

Capt. P. Yes, he was at all the Meetings and Conſultations.

Juryman. Pray my Lord, I deſire to know, whether Sir William Parkins diſcourſed of it himſelf, and what he did ſay about it?

Capt. P. I cannot ſay exactly, what he did ſay in particular, only he agreed to it, and was to furniſh Five Horſes for it, and ſaid it was neceſſary to be done; for it would bring the King in more eaſily, though he could not perſonally engage in it himſelf, becauſe he had other Buſineſs, he was to look after his Regiment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Sir William Parkins will ask Capt. Porter no Queſtions, we will go on to our next Witneſs, which is one Abraham Sweet whom Mr. Attorney mentioned.

He was brought in and ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sweet, will you give the Court and Jury an Account, what Sir William Parkins ſaid to you about King James's Landing?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account what Diſcourſe you had with Sir William Parkins, the Priſoner at the Bar, about King James's Returning, and Landing with French Forces.

Sweet. Sir William Parkins did tell me, that he did expect King James's Landing, and he ſaid his own Troop was compoſed of old Soldiers.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known Sir William Parkins?

Sweet. This three Years.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Time when this Diſcourſe was, about what Time was it?

Sweet. This was ſince Chriſtmas, about Chriſtmas laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was it that you had this Diſcourſe?

Sweet. It was about his own Houſe.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe?

Sweet. We were talking about King James's coming.

L. C. J. Who told you, that Knig James was coming?

Sweet. Sir William Parkins.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay?

Sweet. He ſaid he had bought a great many Saddles, thirty Saddles; and that his own Troop was compoſed of all old Soldiers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you of any Aſſurance that he had of King James's Landing?

Sweet. Yes, he ſaid he had the King's Word for it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe between you about any Journey that Sir William was to take?

Sweet. Yes, he did tell me he was to go into Leiceſterſhire, and was to meet ſeveral Gentlemen in Leiceſterſhire; and he did go, and after he came back again, he ſaid he had met his Friends and all was well, and that the Weſt was as much inclined to King James's Intereſt as the North, and that a Lord's Brother was concerned.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Diſcourſe had you about this Matter?

Sweet. Nothing elſe, as to Particulars, that I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Orders had you to come up to Town in February, and when, and from whom?

Sweet. Sir William Parkins ſent for me, and he ſent me a Letter about the 11th of February, that I ſhould come to him the next Day, and I did come the next Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you come? Where did you find him?

Sweet. At his Lodgings in Norfolk-ſtreet, at the Houſe where Mr. Charnock lodged; and after I had ſpoken with Sir William Parkins about the Letter which he had ſent me to come up, he told me, that the Buſineſs that he had deſigned for me, he did not think fit I ſhould do, becauſe of my Family.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what Directions had you from him, what you were to do when you went into the Country?

Sweet. When I went into the Country, he order'd me to go to his Houſe, and ſend up three of the ſtrongeſt Horſes.

Mr. At. Gen. When was this, do you ſay?

Sweet. It was in February.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time in February?

Sweet. The Eleventh or Twelfth, which was Wedneſday; and at my going away, he told me if I had not a Letter from him, the Friday following I ſhould come to Town again. I did come to Town again, and then he asked me, if I had made Proviſion for my Family, I told him, no; then he asked me, why I came up to Town? he told me I might go into the Country again on the morrow Morning.

L. C. J. What did he tell you?

Sweet. He ſaid I might go back again into the Country. I came upon the Saturday Morning to him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what Day was that Saturday?

Sweet. I believe it was the 13th or 14th of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay. Wedneſday was the 12th.

Sweet. Yes, I believe Wedneſday was the 12th, and I came to Town the Friday after that 12th, that was the 14th, and on the Saturday I went home again.

Mr At. Gen. You ſay you came to him on the Saturday Morning, what paſſed between you then?

Sweet. I went the next Morning to Sir William Parkins's Lodgings, but he was gone out, and had left Word, that I muſt come again about Eleven of the Clock: I did go about that Time, and he was not come in, and there I met one Mr Chambers, and one Mr Lee, whom I had ſeen there the Night before.

Mr At. Gen. And what Diſcourſe had you then with them?

Sweet. We had little Diſcourſe, for I had only ſeen them the Night before; but I think Chambers told me he had been at Kenſington, and I deſired to know what News there; and he told me William kept as cloſe as a Fox; and he ſhew'd me his Wounds, and ſaid thoſe Wounds wanted Revenge.

Mr At. Gen. Where did he ſay he received thoſe Wounds?

Sweet. At the Boyne.

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr Sweet, did he tell you for what Uſe his Troop was?

Sweet. He did not tell me poſitively; but I underſtood it to be to join King James when he landed.

Mr Soll. Gen. Pray, Sir, where did you dine that Saturday?

Sweet. With Sir William Parkins, and Mr Charnock, and Chambers, and one or two more that I did not know.

Mr At. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Sir William?

Parkins. Did I tell you, Mr Sweet, that I had a Troop of Horſe?

Sweet. I will tell you your own Words, and no other: You ſaid, Your own Troop was compos'd of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you one Queſtion: How many Horſes were you to bid the Man to bring up to Town?

Sweet. Three, my Lord.

Mr At. Gen. And were they not his ſtrongeſt Horſes?

Sweet. Yes, my Lord, they were.

Mr At. Gen. Did he ſay any Thing to you about Voluntiers?

Sweet. Yes, he ſaid there were ſome Gentlemen that were Captains and old Officers, that would be Voluntiers under him.

Parkins. Pray, where were thoſe Words ſpoken?

Sweet. Either in your Houſe or in the Garden, I can't tell directly which, but ſome where about your Houſe it was.

Par. Where is that Houſe?

Sweet. In Herefordſhire.

Parkins. Then I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether Words ſpoken in Herefordſhire can be an Evidence of a Treaſon acted here in Middleſex?

L. C.

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, if there be a Deſign to kill the King, and there are ſeveral Overt Acts to prove that Deſign, and one is in one County, and another is in another County, the Party may be indicted in either of the Counties, and Evidence may be given of both thoſe Overt Acts, though in ſeveral Counties. It is true, you being indicted in Middleſex, makes it neceſſary that ſome Evidence ſhould be given of ſome Things done in Middleſex, as there is; as your Meeting at Mrs Mountjoy's, and at the Nag's Head in Covent-Garden, and the Sun in the Strand, where were ſeveral Conſults, which are Overt Acts of the ſame Treaſon; and if Treaſon be committed in ſeveral Counties, the Party may be indicted in any one, and the Evidence may be given of Facts done in all.

Par. Then, Mr Sweet, you do not ſay that I had raiſed a Troop, or would raiſe a Troop.

Sweet, I told you your own Words, That your Troop was made up of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. But yet I muſt tell you further, Sir William Parkyns, if I remember right there is Evidence given of a Diſcourſe you had in Norfolk-ſtreet, where you lodg'd, and that is in Middleſex.

Par. My Lord, I did not obſerve that he ſaid any Thing of me about Norfolk-ſtreet.

Mr At. Gen. Yes, this is what he ſays. You told him you had thought of a Buſineſs for him, but you would not engage him in it, becauſe of his Family.

Par. Pray, Mr Sweet, did I tell you any Thing what you were to do?

Sweet. No, Sir, you did not.

Parkins. I hope the Jury will take Notice of that: I did not tell him any Thing that he was to do.

L. C. J. Well, that was no great Matter. Will you ask him any more Queſtions, Sir?

Par. No, my Lord.

Mr Sol. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is James Eubank. (who was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know Sir William Parkyns?

Eubank, Yes, he is my Maſter.

Mr At. Gen. What Servant was you to him?

Eubank, I was Groom to him.

Mr Att. Gen. How long have you been his Groom?

Eub. Not a Twelvemonth yet.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, firſt give an Account what Journey you took with him.

Eub. I went into Leiceſterſhire with him.

Mr At. Gen. Pray tell us what you know of that Matter.

Eub. Yes, my Lord. We went from our own Houſe to Stony-Stratford, and there we lay all Night.

Mr At. Gen. What Time was this?

Eub. I cannot tell the Day of the Month, it was in January.

Mr At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Eub. It was on a Thurſday.

Mr At. Gen. And where did you go from Stony-Stratford?

Eub. We came the next Day to Leiceſter.

Mr At. Gen. Who went with him?

Eub. One Captain Scudamore.

Mr At. Gen. How long did you tarry at Leiceſter?

Eub. When we came the next Day to Leiceſter, we ſtaid there till Sunday Morning.

Mr At. Gen. What Company came to your Maſter when he was at Leiceſter?

Eub. Sir, I am a Stranger, I know none of them, I was never there before.

Mr At. Gen. Can you remember whether there was one Yarborough there?

Eub. There was one that ſaid his Name was Yarborough.

Mr At. Gen. Whence did he come?

Eub. He ſaid he came out of Yorkſhire.

Mr At. Gen. Who came with him?

Eub. There was a Gentleman in black Cloaths, that ſaid he was a Miniſter.

Mr At. Gen. Did you obſerve any others that came thither to your Maſter?

Eub. It was Market Day, and I had my Horſes to look after; there were a great many People went up and down Stairs, but whether they went to him, or no, I can't tell.

Mr At. Gen. When did you come back again?

Eub. We ſtaid there till Sunday Morning, and then we came away.

Mr At. Gen. To what Place did you go that Night?

Eub. To a Town call'd Brickhill, and the Night following we came home.

Mr At. Gen. Who came back with him?

Eub. None but Captain Scudamore, who went with him.

Mr At. Gen. Wither did you go the next Day?

Eub. We came to Buſhy about 8 a Clock a Monday Night.

Mr At. Gen. Well, after this, did you bring up any Horſes to the George Inn to your Maſter, and when?

Eub. Yes, three Horſes.

Mr At. Gen. Ay, when?

Eub. I cannot tell the Day.

Mr At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Eub. Upon a Friday.

Mr At. Gen. What Month was it in?

Eub. Indeed, I can't ſay that.

Mr At. Gen. Do you remember Valentine's Day?

Eub. Yes, it was upon that Day.

Mr At. Gen. That is the 14th of February, a remarkable Day, and was then of a Friday, the Day before the Aſſaſſination was to have been executed. Whither did you bring them?

Eub. To the George Inn.

Mr At. Gen. How were they furniſh'd? Were there Piſtols upon them?

Eub. No, the Piſtols were in Town, and the Horſes were ſent after my Maſter.

Mr At. Gen. Where were the Piſtols left?

Eub. Indeed, I don't know.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, when you came to Town, did you go to your Maſter, and acquaint him with it?

Eub. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, what did he then ſay to you?

Eub. He ſaid he thought he ſhould go home that Night.

Mr At. Gen. Did he change his Mind?

Eub. Yes, for he did not go till Monday.

Mr At. Gen. Did he tell you he ſhould go a Saturday?

Eub. Yes, he ſaid he thought he ſhould.

Mr At. Gen. Did you come to him to know his Mind, and what did he ſay?

Eub. He ſaid in the Morning, he would go in the Afternoon, but he did not.

Mr At. Gen. Afterwards wheu did he go?

Mr

Eub. Upon Monday.

Mr Att. Gen. Who went with him that Monday?

Eub. One Holmes, a fat, thick Man.

Mr At. Gen. Well, pray when did you come to Town again?

Eub. Upon the Friday following.

Mr At. Gen. How many Horſes did you bring up then?

Eub. On the Friday following we brought up Four; my Maſter himſelf came up with them.

Mr At. Gen. Who came with him?

Eub. Mr Holmes, and I, and another Servant.

Mr At. Gen. How were the Horſes furniſh'd?

Eub. Every Horſe had Piſtols.

Mr At. Gen. What did you bring beſide? were there any Boots?

Eub. None but what we rid in.

Mr At. Gen. Where did you leave thoſe Horſes?

Eub. At the George Inn in Holbourn.

Mr At. Gen. What Directions did your Maſter give you that Night for going the next Morning upon an Errand, and whither?

Eub. I had no Meſſage from him, but there was a Note that I was to carry to Kenſington to one Brown, and I was ordered to go to the Gentleman that lives within a Door or two next the Going into the King's Gate, I forget his Name, but this Man where Brown lodged belonged to the Court, ſome Officer in the Kitchin to the King; either a Confectioner, or Cook, or ſomething, and this Man lay there.

Mr At. Gen. What was your Meſſage to him?

Eub. I was to tell him, that I came to ſpeak with one Brown, and that I came from a Gentleman that lay at the Confectioner's in Holbourn over-againſt Grays-Inn. I know the Gentleman by Face again if I ſee him.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, what did he ſay to you?

Eub. He bid me ſet up my Horſe at the Red Lion, and he would come to me preſently; and ſo he did. Says he, I have no Buſineſs that I need to ſend; but I'll write in your Almanack, and you may carry it back aud ſhew it him, that I will come to Town betwixt nine and ten a Clock. I did go back and tell that Gentleman at the Confectioner's.

Mr Att. Gen. What Kind of Gentleman was it?

Eub. A luſty Man, with a great Noſe, and a black Wig, he ſpeaks broad Scotch, and he was a ſwarthy coloured Man, and he had a wide Mouth.

Mr At. Gen. What Age was he of?

Eub. A middle-aged Man.

Mr At. Gen. Pray what did he ſay to you?

Eubank. He ask'd me if I had ſeen the Gentleman. I told him, Yes. He ask'd me what the Gentleman return'd for Anſwer. I told him he had writ in my Almanack, which I had ſhewn him, that he would be in Town between nine and ten a Clock. He ask'd me then where I was going. I ſaid, to my Maſter. Says he, tell your Maſter that I will be in my Chamber ready for him.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you go to your Maſter, and tell him ſo?

Eub. Yes, I did.

Mr Att. Gen. And what did he ſay to you?

Eub. He ſaid he deſigned to go home in the Afternoon, and therefore bid me go to the Inn, and make ready the Horſes, and know what was to pay for them, and he would come by and by thither.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he afterwards come to the Inn?

Eub. Yes, Sir, about 3 or 4 a Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr Soll. Gen. Pray, who came with Sir William Parkyns?

Eub. One Lewis.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know him?

Eub. I have ſeen him before with my Maſter.

Mr Att. Gen. What is he?

Eub. They ſay he is my Lord Feverſham's Gentleman.

Mr At. Gen. What did he ſay to you about any Saddles?

Eubank. They ask'd me what Saddles, and how many had been ſent in there; and I ſaid but two.

Mr At. Gen. What ſaid Mr Lewis?

Eub. Mr Lewis ſaid there muſt be a Miſtake, becauſe my Maſter ſaid he had but Twenty two, for he reckoned he had more, there ſhould be Twenty four in all.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he ſay ſo, or Sir William Parknys?

Eub. It was Mr Lewis that ſaid there were twenty four, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr Att. Gen. Where were they ſent?

Eub. Indeed I know not, I never ſaw any of them but thoſe two.

Mr At. Gen. Who delivered thoſe two to you?

Eub. My Maſter, Sir William Parkyns.

Mr At. Gen. Who were thoſe Saddles for?

Eub. They were for two Gentlemens Horſes that were there.

Mr At. Gen. Whoſe Horſes were they?

Eub. They were not my Maſter's, but they ſtood at that Place.

Mr At. Gen. Did your Maſter ever ſpeak to you about them to look after them?

Eub. He ſaid, if at any time I was there, I ſhould ſee that the Oſtler gave them their Corn.

Mr At. Gen. Were they your Maſter's Horſes, or not?

Eub. Not that I know of.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time did you go out of Town?

Eub. I went out of Town with them about four a Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr At. Gen. When did you hear from your Maſter after that?

Eubank. Upon Monday I had a Letter from him.

Mr Att. Gen. What was that Letter for?

Eub. It was to go to my Maſter's Houſe in Warwickſhire, to one Richard Evans that was his Servant, to whom he ſent a Letter.

Mr At. Gen. What were the Contents of that Letter?

Eubank. I did not ſee what they were, it was ſealed.

Mr At. Gen. Did you carry that Letter to Evans?

Eub. Yes, I did.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time did you come thither?

Eub. I came there a Tueſday at four a Clock.

Mr At. Gen. What did Evans and you do after you had read the Letter?

Eub.

Eub. We went to fetch ſome Boxes that my Maſter had order'd Evans to fetch home. It was about two Miles or more from home, at a Tradeſman's.

Mr At. Gen. What was his Name, was it Haywood?

Eub. Yes, I think it was ſomething like that Name.

Mr At. Gen. Did you go with Evans to fetch the Boxes from thence?

Eub. They had a Man that drove the Team to fetch them.

Mr Att. Gen. Were they carried in a Team then?

Eub. Yes, they were.

Mr At. Gen. Were you there when the Goods were brought back?

Eub. Yes, I was at my Maſter's Houſe.

Mr At. Gen. What did they do with them?

Eub. They buried them in the Garden, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. What in the Boxes?

Eub. Yes, Sir.

Mr At. Gen. How many Boxes was there?

Eub. Five or ſix I think, I know not what was in them.

Mr Att. Gen. You help'd to bury them, did you not?

Eubank. No; but I was there, I ſaw them buried.

Mr Att. Gen. Did Evans tell you what they were?

Eub. Evans told me they were choice Goods.

Mr At. Gen. Evans told you ſo, did he?

Eub. Yes.

L. C. J. What Time of the Day or Night were they fetch'd home?

Eub. They went away about four a Clock in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. How far is it from Sir William Parkyns's Houſe to Haywood's.

Eub. I think about three or four Miles, I can't tell how far exactly.

L. C. J. What Time did they return?

Eub. About ten or eleven a Clock at Night.

Juryman. My Lord, I underſtand he ſays they buried them immediately, was he there, and did he help to bury them.

Eub. No, I did not help to bury them; but I ſaw Earth put upon them.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, Eubank, let me ask you one Queſtion: The Perſon that lay at the Confectioner's, did you obſerve whether he had a lame Arm or no?

Eub. No, I did not take Notice of any ſuch Thing.

Mr Sol. Gen. Will Sir William Parkyns ask him any Queſtions?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir William, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Parkyns. You ſay one Holmes went out of Town with me, pray give an Account what Holmes that is?

Eubank. It is Fat Mr Holmes, if it pleaſe your Honour, he lives at the Golden Key in Holbourn.

Parkyns. My Lord, I obſerve this to diſtinguiſh it that it was not, as Mr Attorney opened it, Major Holmes that is in the Proclamation; it was one that us'd to be at my Houſe frequently; he was at my Houſe all the Summer.

Mr At. Gen. You did well to ask him that Queſtion to explain it.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Par. No, my Lord.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is one Thomas Hipwell; (who was ſworn)

Mr At. Gen. Where do you live?

Hipwell. At in Warwickſhire.

Mr At. Gen. With whom do you live?

Hipw. I live of my ſelf, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know of any Goods that were carried from Mr Haywood's Houſe to Sir William Parkyns's Houſe?

Hip. I came from Litchfield Fair upon Aſh-Wedneſday, where I had been to carry Goods for my Maſter ——

Mr At. Gen. Did not you ſay you lived of your ſelf? I ask'd you before who you liv'd with; Who is your Maſter?

Hip. Mr Haywood.

Mr At. Gen. You ſaid before you had no Maſter.

Hip. That is, when he pleaſes to employ me, I work for him.

Mr At. Gen. Pray tell what you carry'd from Haywood's Houſe, and who came for them.

Hip. There were, to the beſt of my Remembrance, either 7 or 8 Boxes.

Mr At. Gen. Who came for them?

Hipwell. There was one of Sir William Parkyns's Men, one Richard Evans, that was his Servant, and one Wetſtone, that was Tenant to Sir William.

Mr At. Gen. Well, how did they come, and what did they do?

Hipwell. They brought a Waggon and Two Mares.

Mr At. Gen. About what Time was it?

Hip. It was about nine or ten a Clock at Night, when they went away.

Mr At. Gen. What Orders had you from your Maſter?

Hip. It was near upon ſeven a Clock, when the Waggon came, and my Maſter wiſh'd me to go to borrow a Mare of at I did ſo, and I brought the Mare I had borrowed with me home.

Mr At. Gen. What was that Mare borrowed for?

Hipw. I know not.

Mr At. Gen. What Uſe was ſhe put to afterwards? What did you ſee more?

Hip. Why, before the Team came (about a quarter of an Hour before) to fetch theſe Goods, my Maſter told me, that Sir William Parkyns's Men were to come to fetch ſome Bedding and other Goods, what they were he knew not, and he order'd me, when they knock'd at the Gate, to let them in; and I did ſo.

Mr At. Gen. Well Friend, did they carry away any Goods, and what were they?

Hip. They were in Boxes, at firſt in Three Boxes; and then Sir William Parkyns's Servant did knock of the outſide Lining, which was a Deal Board, and he drew the Nails, and took out of two Boxes three Boxes apiece, and two out of another, to the beſt of my Remembrance I think there were eight, but I am not ſure whether there were ſeven or eight.

Mr At. Gen. Did they carry them away that Night?

Hip. Yes, Sir William Parkyns's Man Richard and the Tenant carry'd them to the Waggon, and I lighted lighted them down with a Lanthorn, according to my Maſter's Order.

Mr At. Gen. When, what Day was this?

Hip. It was Aſh-wedneſday at Night.

Mr At. Gen. Then ſet up Mr Haywood. (who was ſworn before.) Pray give my Lord an Account, when Sir William Parkyns's Goods were brought to your Houſe, who brought them, and what Directions were given about the careful Keeping of them.

Haywood. My Lord, about Michaelmas laſt, Sir William Parkyns's Man came to me with a Letter from one Mr Charnock, and the Effect of the Letter, was to deſire the Favour of me to lodge ſome Goods of Sir William Parkyns at my Houſe; for he was taking his Servants from his Houſe, and he was loth to leave his Goods in an empty Houſe, and he deſired me to let them lye at my Houſe, which I did.

Mr At. Gen. How were they put up?

Haywood. I think in three Cheſts pretty big Cheſts, nailed up and tack'd; and there was a Bed, and Bedding, and a Piece of Tapeſtry or two.

Mr At. Gen. Pray did that Letter come from Mr Charnock?

Haywood. Yes, Evans, Sir William Parkins's Man brought it me.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, Sir, how are you related to that Mr Charnock? What a Kin is he to you?

Haywood. I married his Siſter.

L. C. J. You took the Goods into your Cuſtody upon that Letter from Charnock?

Hayw. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account, whether you were in Town before this Diſcovery, and had any Diſcourſe with Mr Charnock or Sir William Parkyns about theſe Goods? When did you ſee Mr Charnock afterwards?

Haywood, I came up to London the 16th Day, and I was in London the 17th, 18th, and 19th; I think thoſe three Days; and I went to ſee Mr Charnock at his Lodgings, but I was hardly with him a Quarter of an Hour: I told him Sir William Parkyns, had ſent ſome Goods to my Houſe, and I deſired to know when he would fetch them away. Says he, I can't ſay when I ſhall ſee him again. Said I, I ſhall have ſome Buſineſs at the Temple, and I will meet you at the Temple Coffee-Houſe. Says he, I will meet; and bring Sir William Parkyns with you if you can, ſaid I: He came about eight or nine a Clock on Tueſday Morning; ſays he, Sir William Parkyns is at my Lodgings, juſt a going out of Town, and would deſire to ſee you. So I went up, and Sir William Parkyns was ready to go out of Town: I told him I had ſome Goods of his at my Houſe, and I deſired to know how he would diſpoſe of them; what he would do with them: He would take them away, he ſaid, the firſt Opportunity, or to that Effect.

L. C. J. When was this, what Month?

Hayw. It was in February laſt.

L. C. J. What Day?

Hayw. I think it might be about the eighteenth Day.

L. C. J. It was you that deſired to have them taken away, it ſeems, was it not?

Hayw. I asked him when he would take them away, or what he would do with them.

L. C. J. And what Anſwer did he make?

Hayw. He ſaid he would take them away the firſt Opportunity, as ſoon as he could diſpoſe of them, or to that Effect.

Mr At. Gen. Now when you came home, tell us who came for thoſe Goods, and when?

Haywood, I think it was upon a Shrove-Tueſday that I came home, and my Wife ſaid Sir William Parkyns had ſent for his Goods, and deſired to have them away, but that ſhe had made anſwer, I was not at home, but ſhould be at home ſoon, and then he might have them away. The next Day I came home from Litchfield Fair, about five or ſix a Clock at Night: It was Aſh-wedneſday at Night when I came home, and the Man came to me between ſix and ſeven, and told me his Maſter deſired to have the Goods away. I told him he might have them when he would; he ſaid he would have them away that Night. I told him it was an unſeaſonable Time: But ſays he, the Waggon is a coming, and I deſire you would give me leave to take them away, which I did: Then he ſaid he had but two Horſes, and he deſired me to lend him a Horſe, which I did, and he took the Goods, and went away with them; but for what he did afterwards with 'em, I know nothing at all of it.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then ſwear Mr Whetſtone. (which was done.)

Mr At. Gen. Pray Sir, do you give an Account when you went with Evans to Haywood's Houſe, and what happened.

Whetſtone. His Man came to me——

Mr Att. Gen. Whoſe Man?

Whetſtone. Sir William Parkyns his Man, to deſire me to go to Mr Haywood's to fetch ſome Goods of Sir William Parkyns, ſome Bedding, and ſome odd Things, which I did; and ſaid he, I will go the next Way to the Houſe, and I will meet you before you can get thither; and he did meet me half a Mile off the Houſe, and told me I muſt ſtay and not come to the Houſe till it was Night, till it was later.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo?

Whetſtone. Sir William Parkyns's Man told me ſo; ſo he went forwards to the Gate, and then came back, and called me to come in; then we went to the Houſe; and loaded the Waggon with Boxes and Bedding that was there.

Mr At. Gen. How many Boxes were there?

Whetſtone. I cannot tell whether there were ſeven or eight.

Mr At. Gen. Whither did you carry them?

Whetſtone. We carried them to Sir William Parkyns's Houſe.

Mr At. Gen. What was done with them?

Whetſtone. There they were put into the Ground by the Wall-ſide where they were found.

Mr At. Gen. Why; was you preſent when they were found?

Whetſtone. Yes, I ſaw them dug up.

Mr At. Gen. Then you can give us an Account of them, What were they?

Whetſtone. They were Arms.

Mr Att. Gen. How many were there? what quantity?

Whetſtone. Truly I cannot tell.

Mr Baker. Where is the Conſtable Thomas Watts?

Watts. Here am I. (he was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Are you the Conſtable?

Watts. Yes Sir, I am the Conſtable, and ſearch'd Sir William Parkyns's Houſe, and upon ſearching in the Garden I found ſome Arms there.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what Quantity of Arms did you find there?

Watts. Four Dozen of Swords, Thirty two Carbines, Twenty five Brace of Piſtols.

Mr Att. Gen. What kind of Swords were they?

Watts. They were broad Swords, two-edged Swords.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Hilts to the Swords?

Watts. No, but there was a Box of Hilts that I ſuppoſe was prepared for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you find them?

Watts. In a Border under the Wall by the Wall-ſide.

Juryman. Did you ſee the Boxes broke open Sir?

Watts. Yes Sir, I took them and broke them open my own ſelf.

Juryman. Was Whetſtone by pray Sir when they were broke open?

Watts. He was not there by at the firſt, when we dug them up; but I brought them to my own Houſe, and there I broke them open and there we ſaw them.

Mr Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions Sir William?

Parkyns. No Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Turton, Freeman, Fielding. (who were all ſworn)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ſet up Mr Freeman. (which was done)

Mr Att. Gen. Where do you live?

Freeman. At the George Inn in Holbourn.

Mr Att. Gen. What are you?

Freeman. I am Hoſtler there.

Mr At. Gen. Pray do you give an Account what Horſes were kept there of Sir William Parkyns, and how many?

Freeman. He was a Gueſt to the Houſe all this laſt Summer, ſometimes more ſometimes leſs.

Mr Att. Gen. How was it laſt Winter about February laſt, how many Horſes had he then?

Freeman. He had ſometimes Three came in, ſometimes Four, the moſt that ever he had was Five.

Mr Att. Gen. What time was that that he had Five pray?

Freeman. To my beſt Memory it was juſt the Week before the Diſturbance, before the Plot broke out.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before the Proclamation you mean?

Freeman. Yes, before the Proclamation.

Mr Att. Gen. When was it, what Day of the Week was it?

Freeman. They came in on Friday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. What; did five come in then?

Freeman. Yes I think ſo.

L. C. J. H. Who was with him?

Freeman. I only ſaw his Groom and another Servant.

Mr Att. Gen. How were they accoutred?

Freeman. Four with Holſters and ſmall Piſtols, one was a led Mare with a Portmanteau; and in a Horſe-cloth wrap'd up there was one or two Pair of Jack Boots, and I think a Coller in one, I cannot tell whether there was one Bridle or two.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did they go away?

Freeman. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any Perſons to come there on Saturday Morning?

Freeman. There were two Men that were there that rid out between two and three Hours; they rid out between Nine and Ten, and they came in again between Twelve and One; where they had been I cannot tell, but they had rid pretty hard for the time they were out, for the Horſes came in in a Sweat.

Mr Att. Gen. Before this time that you now ſpeak of, what Horſes came up can you remember, how many Horſes came up the Week before?

Freeman. The Week before there were ſome, but how many I cannot remember; they very rarely ſtaid above a Night.

Mr Att. Gen. What do you know of any other Horſes that were left there?

Freeman. There were three Horſes that were at our Houſe a Week, that were very good Horſes, but I do not know whoſe Horſes they were, nor the Names of the Gentlemen that owned them. The Gentlemen that brought them in paid for the Horſes, only the Groom told me his Maſter Sir William Parkyns had ordered him to ſee the Horſes fed. I never received a Farthing of Sir William Parkyns but always of the Groom.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray did you obſerve any Particular Horſe that was brought in there, a Roan Horſe?

Freeman. Yes there was one Horſe brought in.

Mr Att. Gen. From whence did that Horſe come?

Freeman. As was told me from Montague Houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. I believe you miſtake the Place, recollect your ſelf a little.

Freeman. Somerſet Houſe, I mean, a Porter brought it.

Mr Att. Gen. Are you ſure it was Somerſet Houſe?

Freeman. Yes it was.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know one Lewis?

Freeman. I do not know him, perhaps the Tapſter does.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Horſes came from Somerſet Houſe?

Freeman. Only the Roan Gelding, and a very fat Man mounted him and rid out with Sir William Parkyns.

Parkyns. Pray Sir what Sort of Horſe was that Bay Gelding that you ſay the fat Man rid upon?

Freeman. I ſay he rid upon a little Roan Gelding about 14 Hands high.

Park. But the Bay Gelding how high was that?

Freeman. About 14 Hands high.

Parkins. There's your mighty Horſe for Service.

Freeman. They were no great ſized Horſes none of them.

Parkyns. And have not you known theſe Horſes to have been mine a great while?

Freeman. Yes I have known them to be yours a good while.

L. C. J. H. What; was the Roan Gelding Sir William Parkyns's?

Freeman. No, not the Roan but the others; they were no ſtrange Horſes, they were frequently there all laſt Summer; there was no new ſtrange Horſe but the Roan.

L. C. J. H. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Parkins. No my Lord.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then ſet up Mr Turton. (which was done)

Mr Att. Gen. Pray will you give an Account what you know of Horſes that were ſtanding at the George Inn in Holbourn.

Turton. I have known Sir William Parkyns to have uſed the Inn this four or five Years, ever ſince the Inn was built; and in laſt February he came to Town with three Horſes the firſt time.

Mr

Mr Att. Gen. What Day of the Month was that?

Turton. I cannot ſay what Day of the Month, but it was about the Week before his laſt coming there, which was juſt before the Diſcovery of the Plot.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know what Day of the Week it was?

Turton. No, truly I do not, for I keep no Account of Horſes going in or out. The laſt time of his coming was with about four or five Horſes to the beſt of my knowledge, and that was upon the Friday before the Plot broke out; and then upon that Friday, Sir William Parkins gave order to his Groom to get the Horſes ready againſt Saturday Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he go out with his Horſes on Saturday Morning?

Turton. He did not go out with all the Horſes according as he had given order; but two Gentlemen rid out with two of the Horſes, and ſtaid out about two or three Hours and came in again, as if they had rid pretty hard, the Horſes being in a Sweat; and in the Afternoon they all went fairly out of Town, and gave out that they expected to be in Town on Sunday or Monday following, but they did not return; but then came down one Mr. Lewis, I know not that that is his Name, only when I formerly belonged to my Lord of Oxford, I knew him to be Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, but I did not know his Name.

Mr Att, Gen. Had you not ſeen him there before, what time did he come?

Turton. I do not know that I ever ſaw him there before; he was on Saturday in our Yard.

L. C. J. H. You are ask'd when Lewis came?

Turton. The firſt time I ſee him was on Saturday, in the Yard asking for Sir William Parkyns.

L. C. J. H. What time on Saturday was that?

Turton. It might be Three of the Clock in the Afternoon, about an Hour or thereabouts before Sir William Parkyns's Horſes went away; and asking for Sir William Parkyns, and he not being there, he returned back again; and after they were gone he came again, and I told him they were gone, but the Groom had acquainted me, and given me an Account, that he would be there again on Sunday or Monday. On Sunday in the Afternoon about five or ſix, Mr. Lewis came to enquire if Sir William Parkyns's Horſes were come to Town; I told him no; and ſo he came again upon Monday Morning betwixt Eight and Nine of the Clock, and ask'd me if I heard nothing of his coming to Town; I told him no, I did not hear of his coming again.

Mr Att. Gen. The Horſes that came up on Friday Night, how were they accoutred?

Turton. Two or three of them had Holſters; I cannot ſay but for Piſtols they had four or five Caſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Had they no Carbines?

Turton. No, but only Horſe-Piſtols.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you not obſerve any other Arms, or other Furniture?

Turton. I did ſee a Pair or two of Jack-Boots that they rid in, but I did not ſee any more.

Mr. At. Gen. Were there any that were wrapt up in a Horſe-Cloth?

Turton. No, I did not ſee any, they were not brought into the Houſe.

Mr. Cooper, Do you know what Time the Horſes were ſaddled that Day?

Turton. No, I did not.

Parkyns. You obſerv'd, and ſaid there were two or three Caſes of Piſtols, did not I always ride with Piſtols?

Turton. Yes, you ſeldom came without two or three Pair when you came with Servants.

Parkyns. And as to the Jack-Boots you ſaid we rid in them?

Turton. I ſuppoſe ſo.

Parkyns. We alighted at Mr. John's Houſe, and ſo our Boots were ſent thither: And theſe were ſmall Horſes all of them; pray will you tell the Court what ſiz'd Horſes they were, was there ever a great Horſe among them?

Turton. Never a one, I believe that exceeded above fourteen Hands and a half, ſome under Fourteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee the Roan Gelding what Size was that?

Turton. A ſmall Padd that might be about Thirteen and a half.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever ſee him come with ſo many Horſes before?

Turton. I have ſeen more at the Sword and Buckler, when I lived there; and he uſed to inn there.

Mr. At. Gen. How many have you ſeen at the Sword and Buckler?

Turton. I have ſeen four or five at a Time, but this is many Years ago, Seven or Eight years ago, when he uſed to keep his Coach and four Horſes, and come up with ſeveral ſaddle Horſes with him.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you lived at the George Inn?

Turton. About two Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve any other Horſes that ſtood there?

Turton. There were two that were pretty ſizeable Horſes, larger than any of Sir William's own.

Mr. At. Gen. Whoſe were they?

Turton. I cannot tell.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any Body own them?

Turton. I don't know who owned them, there was one that paid for their Meat, and took them away.

Mr. At. Gen. Who is that?

Turton. Truly, Sir, I cannot tell, I do not know who he was; I never ſaw him in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has Sir William Parkyns, any more Queſtions to ask him?

Parkyns. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we ſhall call no more Witneſſes, unleſs he gives further Occaſion, we leave it here till we hear what he ſays to it.

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Attorney General, and the King's Council have done; now is your Time to make your Defence.

Parkyns. My Lord, I rely upon your Lordſhip for my Defence? for I am ignorant of theſe Proceedings; I rely wholly upon your Lordſhip, to give a true Account of them to the Jury: I hope your Lordſhip is ſo juſt, that you will repeat the Evidence to the Jury as it is, and no otherwiſe. But I do not obſerve, that as to the Aſſaſſination there is more than one Witneſs, and that is Captain Porter: There is not a Tittle more! and as to that, I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip will declare to the Jury, that I was not concerned in it; and Captain Porter declares, I was to have no Hand in it, onely I was to furniſh five Horſes, and accidentally I was at ſome Meetings, but he does not declare that I was to do any Thing in particular.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you agreed upon the Debates to the ſeveral Reſolutions, of Aſſaſſinating the King, and ſaid, that it was neceſſary and fit to take him off.

Parkyns. Still, that is but one Witneſs, I deny it utterly, and the Law ſays poſitively there ſhall be two Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Not to every Overt-Act, there is no Law ſays ſo.

Parkyns. As to the Aſſaſſination there is but one, no other but he; and ſo as to the Regiment he did not ſay that I was to raiſe a Regiment; but that he was told by a Gentleman that I had been deſired to be in the Matter, but I would not, becauſe I had engaged in another Buſineſs, about a Regiment, but this was all but hear-ſay.

L. C. J. Yes, he ſaid you own'd you had a Regiment. Beſides, it is ſaid, you own'd you had your Saddles, and your Troop conſiſted of old Soldiers.

Parkyns. No, Captain Porter never ſaid ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. That was Sweet.

L. C. J. You told Porter, you had a Regiment to look after.

Parkyns. Captain Porter is here, I deſire he would explain himſelf.

L. C. J. Yes, and you told Sweet, that your Troop conſiſted of Old Soldiers, and that you had bought thirty Saddles.

Parkyns. My Troop, aye! But ſtill there was nothing of a Regiment; nor did they ſay I had raiſed a Regiment, or a Troop, or was to raiſe a Regiment.

Sweet. You told me your Troop conſiſted of old Soldiers. I did not ſay that you ſaid you had raiſed or wou'd raiſe, but it did conſiſt of Old Soldiers.

L. C. J. He ſays that which makes it plain, that you were to have a Troop, or had a Troop, conſiſting of Old Soldiers, beſides Voluntiers that had been Officers: and that you had bought a great many Saddles, thirty Saddles; and you were to go into Leiceſterſhire, and accordingly you did go, and upon your Return, you did give an Account that all was well, and the Weſt was as well inclined to King James's Intereſt as the North.

Parkyns. That I went into Leiceſterſhire, and met ſeveral Gentlemen, and that they were all well inclined; I hope that is no Evidence of Treaſon againſt me: Every Body ought to be well inclined.

L. C. J. Aye! But they were all well diſpoſed or inclined to King James's Intereſt.

Parkyns. He did not ſay ſo, if your Lordſhip pleaſes to call him again.

L. C. J. Call him again.

Sweet was ſet up again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Sir William Parkyns tell you of his Journey into Leiceſterſhire?

Sweet. he ſaid he had been there and had met his Friends, and all was well.

L. C. J. What did he ſay? Did he Name King James?

Sweet. He did not Name King James to me at that Time.

L. C. J. What was the Diſcourſe about, that they were all well inclined to?

Sweet. He always named it the King's Intereſt, and did not name King James, but I underſtood it, and always took it to be King James he meant.

Mr. Mountague, What did he ſay of the North and Weſt?

Sweet. He ſaid that the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt as the North.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay before he went?

Sweet. He told me he was to go into Leiceſterſhire, to meet ſome of the King's Friends.

Parkyns. Pray, Recollect your ſelf, and conſider what you ſay.

Sweet. He ſaid ſome Gentlemen rid as far to him, as he did to meet them.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that the Time he talk'd about the Troop?

Sweet. No, that was before this Time. I cannot remember the particular Time; it was at his own Houſe, and Captain Scudamore was with him.

Mr. At. Gen. When was the Diſcourſe about King James's Landing?

Sweet. He told me that he believed now that King James wou'd land, he ſaid he had his own Word for it, it was about Chriſtmas.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay about Preparation for it?

Sweet. He ſaid his own Troop was to conſiſt of all Old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Did he tell you he had a Troop?

Sweet. I ſpeak his own Words, he ſaid, my Troop conſiſts of all Old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Was it conſiſts, or will conſiſt, though I think there may be no great Matter of Difference in this Caſe?

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, but there is a great deal ſure, for will conſiſt ſhews nothing yet done, and all is but Words.

L. C. J. Sweet, Anſwer to Sir William Parkyns's Queſtion.

Sweet. I tell your Lordſhip, I repeat his own Words, my Troop conſiſts or is compoſed of all Old Soldiers.

Mr. Cowper. What did he ſay of Voluntiers?

Sweet. He ſaid, there were ſome Gentlemen that would go along with him as Voluntiers, that had been Old Officers.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, let me ask another Queſtion; when he diſcourſed of the preſent King, by what Name did he uſe to ſpeak of him?

Sweet. He called him by the Name of the Prince of Orange.

Parkyns. Pray, recollect your ſelf, Mr. Sweet, and think of what you ſay, ſince he was declared King, did I ever call him Prince of Orange? I am upon my Life, and pray ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Conſider and Anſwer the Queſtion, what did he uſe to call him?

Sweet. Truly, my Lord, I am not poſitive as to that, I underſtood it ſo. I never knew that he allowed him to be King of England.

Parkyns. Did you ever hear me call him Prince of Orange ſince he was King?

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir, how long have you been acquainted with him?

Sweet. About three Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well that is long ſince his Majeſty was declared King, have you ever heard Sir William Parkyns call this King Prince of Orange?

Sweet. I am not poſitive in that, but I underſtood he did not allow him to be King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You frequently diſcourſed with him about the Government it ſeems; pray what, did he uſe to call him.

Sweet. I have heard him call him King William and the little Gentleman.

Parkyns

Parkyns. When ever did you hear me call him the little Gentleman? Mr. Sweet, pray, when you are upon your Oath conſider well, and recollect your ſelf, and don't anſwer raſhly and ſuddenly, but think of what you ſay. I always expreſs'd my ſelf, when I had occaſion to ſpeak of him, and called him King William, as other People uſe to do, I never uſed the Words, little Gentleman, nor Prince of Orange neither.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him call him otherwiſe than King William?

He pauſed a while.

L. C. J. Pray ſpeak the Truth and no more.

Sweet. I have heard him call him Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. But you have heard him call him King William too?

Mr. Sweet. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. But pray, when he Spoke of the King, what King did you underſtand by it?

Sweet. I uſed to underſtand King James?

Parkyns. What is that to me what he underſtood?

L. C. J. But I would obſerve to you one Thing, when you came from Leiceſterſhire, you talk'd how well diſpoſed they were to the King's Intereſt, he ſays, he underſtood that King to be King James, and you ſaid the Weſt was as well diſpoſed as the North; pray now, were you imployed by King William to ſee how the Gentlemen ſtood affected to him?

Parkyns. No, nor by King James neither.

L. C. J. Why then ſhould you concern your ſelf for the King's Friends, in the Weſt and the North?

Parkyns I never was in the Weſt in my Life, and therefore I can't tell why I ſhould tell him any Thing about the Weſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, when was it that Sir William Parkyns ſpoke about the King's Landing?

Sweet. It was about Chriſtmas, he ſaid he believed he would land.

Parkyns. Did I tell you poſitively it would be ſo then.

Mr. At. Gen. He tells you he ſaid you did believe it, for you had it from his own Mouth.

Parkyns. That ſhews it is not probable I ſhould tell him ſo, that I ſhould have it from his own Mouth, carries ſuch an Improbability with it that the Evidence is Felo de ſe, it deſtroys it ſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not ſay you had it from his own Mouth, but that you had his Word for it, and this being about Chriſtmas, long after our King was return'd, it could mean no other King but King James.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir William Parkyns, there is another Thing I would obſerve, why did you ſend your Man to Kenſington to one Brown? who is that Brown, and what was the Man that lodged at the Confectioner's in Holbourn?

Parkyns. I cannot tell who it was, I know neither Brown nor the other Man, but I ſent my Man at the Requeſt of Mr. Charnock, who lodged in the ſame Houſe with me; he deſired he might go upon an Errand for him to Kenſington, and I directed him to go upon ſuch an Errand, for he was formerly Mr. Charnock's Servant, and I deſired him to go of the Errand if he requeſted it. Who theſe Men were I know not, neither of them, nor any of their Buſineſs.

L. C. J. But he was bid by the Man that lodged at the Confectioner's to tell his Maſter that he would ſtay within for him.

Parkyns That might be Mr. Charnock, for he was his Servant once.

L. C. J. But he ſays he carry'd the Meſſage to you, and you receiv'd it. Well have you any more to ſay?

Parkyns. My Lord, I think there is but one poſitive Evidence of any one Overt-act.

L. C. J. Yes, what do you Think of the Deſign of bringing in King James, and conſulting about it, and aſſiſting in the Invaſion, and preparing a Troop, and providing Arms and Horſes, are not theſe Overt-Acts. Do you think your having a Troop of old Soldiers is no Overt-act.

Parkyns. There is no poſitive Proof of any Troop, or any Arms.

L. C. J. It is proved there were Arms ſent by you at Michaelmas laſt to Mr. Haywoods, Charnock's Brother-in-Law, and theſe lay there till Aſh-wedneſday laſt, after your Name was in the Proclamation, and then they were removed in the Night, and buried at your Houſe, and were taken up there, and here is an Account given what Arms they were, four Dozen of Swords, twenty five Pair of Piſtols, thirty two Carabines.

Parkyns. Firſt it does not appear when theſe Arms were bought, nor for what Intent they were brought from Haywoods.

L. C. J. But what Uſe had you, a private Man, for ſo many Arms, and then your going into Leiceſterſhire to meet ſome Gentlemen, and your giving an Account how they ſtood affected to the King's Intereſt, whether that be underſtood for the Intereſt of King James, I muſt leave to the Jury, ſince you give no Account that you were imployed by King William.

Parkyns. My Lord, I went upon my private Occaſions, and then talk'd of News as other People do.

L. C. J. But when you returned back again, you declared all was well, and gave an Account how Perſons were diſpos'd in the Weſt and North.

Parkyns. Is there any Perſons named, or Particulars? Can it be an Overt-act of Treaſon for me to diſcover my Acquaintance?

L. C. J. But your going with that Deſign to engage in an Intereſt againſt the King and for the late King.

Parkyns. He does not ſay diſcovered my Deſign. I went to meet with ſome Friends of my own.

L. C. J. Did he not tell you he was to go into Leiceſterſhire?

Sweet. Yes, he did ſo.

L. C. J. Did he tell you to what purpoſe?

Sweet. He ſaid he was to go to meet ſome of the King's Friends.

Parkyns. Did I tell you who?

Sweet. No.

L. C. J. But there was a Lord's Brother, what did he tell you of that?

Sweet. he ſaid all Things were well, and the Weſt was as well inclined as the North.

L. C. J. To what?

Sweet. To the King's Intereſt.

L. C. J. Treby. You ſpoke of a Lord's Brother that was concerned?

Sweet. He ſaid ſeveral Perſons of Quality in the Weſt were concerned, and a Lord's Brother was among them.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd when he ſaid the King would land, what King he mean't, whether he named the late King, or King James.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Well, Anſwer that? when he diſcourſed to you of the King's Landing, did he name the late King James? or did he ſay the late King James?

Juryman. Was he mentioned in the Diſcourſe?

Sweet. He never uſed to mention King James to me, but only the King, which I underſtood always of King James.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Time was it that he ſpoke of the King's Landing?

Sweet. It was about Chriſtmas.

Mr. Att. Gen. Therefore no other King could be meant but King James, for there was no other King to land at that Time; and he ſaid he had the King's Word for it. I ſuppoſe he can't pretend he had King William's Word for it.

Parkyns. I hope, to talk of the King's landing is no Treaſon; it is but Words: If I tell an idle Story of what I think may come to paſs, ſhall that be reckoned Treaſon? Then for him to ſay, I had it from the King's own Mouth, it is impoſſible to be true, and is no Overt-Act, being only Words, and cannot be reputed Treaſon. And then as to the other two Parts of the Charge, the Conſultations with my Lord of Ailesbury, and thoſe other Perſons, there is but one Witneſs; no Body but Porter; neither is there any more but he for the Aſſaſſination; his Evidence is but a ſingle Proof, and there ought to be two poſitive Witneſſes, by the Law, to each Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Holt. No: There ought to be two Witneſſes to each Species of Treaſon, that's all.

Parkyns. There ought to be two Witneſſes to both theſe Parts of the Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. I muſt tell you, Sir William Parkyns, if any Perſon does deſign and contrive that the Realm ſhould be invaded, or the King depoſed, and another ſet upon the Throne, That conſpiring to invade the Realm, or depoſe the King, are Overt-Acts of High Treaſon, within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. and the ſame Species of Treaſon as deſigning to aſſaſſinate him is. It is compaſſing, deſigning, imagining his Death and Deſtruction. Now the Queſtion is, Whether there is not another Witneſs, beſides Capt. Porter, to prove another Overt-act of this Deſign.

Parkyns. I don't find there is; for all the Reſt is only Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes: For what, do you think providing Arms for that Purpoſe, is only Diſcourſe?

Parkyns. The Witneſſes don't ſay, for what Purpoſe the Arms were bought.

L. C. J. H. Nor do you tell us of any other Purpoſe.

Parkyns. My Lord, it does not appear when they were bought.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, but what Occaſion had you for ſuch a Quantity of Arms?

Parkyns. My Lord, I did not buy them after all. I found them. If I had had liberty to have ſent down for Witneſſes, I could have proved that theſe Arms were in Boxes all ruſty in my Houſe, when I firſt came to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay: But why were they buried, juſt at the Time when the Plot was broke out, and the whole Deſign diſcovered?

Parkyns. I can't tell, my Lord, how to help it, if they will make an ill Interpretation.

L. C. J. Holt. What Interpretation would you have us make?

Parkyns. My Lord, it is very eaſy to imagine, People don't care to be found with Arms at ſuch a Time; but, however, the Having of Arms is no Treaſon. They are as much a Commodity as any Thing elſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. And then the Horſes coming to Town juſt at ſuch a Time, and the Saddles.

Parkyns. I have not bought a Horſe this two Years, and I travelled in no other Manner than I uſed to do. So the Groom tells ye, I uſed to come to Town with three or four Horſes always. I never kept leſs than ſix or ſeven Horſes this twenty Years; ſometimes a great many more; and they were very little Horſes, Padds, no way fit for the Service they are preſumed to be for.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any Thing more to ſay, Sir?

Parkyns. I hope, my Lord, as to the Aſſaſſination I am clear: Perhaps the World may imagine, I have had ſome Inclinations to King James's Service, and perhaps they may not think amiſs; but I never did any Thing, nor had an Opportunity to do.

L. C. J. Holt. God be thanked you had no Opportunity.

Parkyns. And I hope my Life ſhall not be taken away without Proof; I hope it will be rather thought, that every one ſhould be taken to be innocent; and it would better pleaſe the King, that I ſhould be acquitted, than to let me be found guilty upon ſlight Grounds, and Imaginations, of which little or nothing can be made.

L. C. J. Holt. No queſtion of it: It will pleaſe the King, and every Body elſe, that you ſhould be found Innocent.

Parkyns. Then, I hope, my Lord, you will not ſtrain the Law to take away my Life; according to the Rule, That it is better five guilty Men ſhould eſcape, than one innocent Man ſuffer: For the Blood of a Man may lie upon every Body, if it be cauſeleſly ſhed; and it is very ſevere to ſtrain the Law to take away any Man's Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, I muſt tell you, you may be under a very great Miſtake: You may think it neceſſary to have two Witneſſes to every Overt-act, but that is not ſo; for if there be one Witneſs to one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon, that is all that the Law requires.

Parkyns. Here are two Species of Treaſon, levying War is one Species, and Aſſaſſination is another.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Deſign was, originally, the Reſtoring of King James, and in order to that the Dethroning of King William.

Parkyns. That appears but by one Witneſs, which is not according to Law, which requires two.

L. C. J. Holt. One Way of effecting your Deſign was by Aſſaſſination, the other by Invaſion, or by Force.

Parkyns. Still, my Lord, here is the ſame Witneſs, and that is but one.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, there are two.

Parkyns. None but Capt. Porter.

L. C. J. Holt. What, not as to the Reſtoring of King James, which tends to the Dethroning King William?

Parkyns. In what Particulars, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Your providing Arms, and going to Leiceſterſhire, and ſending Charnock on that Errand into France. As to the Aſſaſſination, indeed, deed, there is but one poſitive Witneſs, beſides other Circumſtances, which have their Weight; but as to the other, you ſaid the King would come——

Parkyns. It was my Opinion, that's all.

L. C. J. But you ſaid you had his Word for it.

Parkyns. Does not that anſwer it ſelf, my Lord? Is it poſſible it ſhould be true, that I who was in England, ſhould have the Word of one that is at ſuch a Diſtance beyond Sea?

L. C. J. And then your Buying of Saddles, for what Purpoſe were they?

Parkyns. My Lord, does he ſay it was in order to it? I am ſure he does not, and I hope I ſhall not be preſumed out of my Life.

L. C. J. When you talkt of the King's Landing, and ſaid, you had his Word for it; you likewiſe ſaid, your Troop was made up of old Soldiers, beſides Voluntiers that had been Officers.

Park. Still there is nothing done; he does not ſay there was one Man raiſed.

L. C. J. And your going into Leiceſterſhire upon ſuch an Errand, as you told him you went upon.

Parkyns. Well, my Lord, I muſt leave it to your Lordſhip. I hope you will conſider well of it.

L. C. J. We muſt do that which is right between the King and his Subjects.

Par. And, I hope, my Lord, the Converſion of Subjects is more acceptable than the Deſtruction of them; and the Government is more concern'd to ſave the Innocent, than to ſtretch the Law to puniſh the Guilty.

L. C. J. It will be more acceptable, and indeed the King and Kingdom are very much concerned in this Matter, and at this Time, Sir William; and the Government ought to take Care to preſerve it ſelf. Have you any more to ſay, Sir, if you have pray ſpeak it?

Parkyns. I have no more. I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip: I think there is but one Witneſs, and all the other is but Conjecture and Nonſenſe; and one Witneſs is not ſufficient, by the Law of England, for by the Statute there muſt be two.

L. C. J. I have told you my Opinion.

Par. Beſides, your Lordſhip has known me this many Years, and you know that my Education was not to War, and Fighting, but the Gown; and your Lordſhip knows how peaceably I have lived.

L. C. J. I have known you heretofore, Sir William, while you kept your Profeſſion and your Gown.

Parkyns. And now in my old Age, my Lord, I am grown lame, and have loſt the Uſe of my Hands with the Gout, and ſcarce able almoſt to go on my Feet. Therefore it cannot in Reaſon be thought probable, that I ſhould engage in ſuch a Buſineſs as this; and therefore I hope you will interpret all Things in a milder Senſe, in Favour of Life, rather than for the Deſtruction of it, and the Ruine of a Man's Fortune and Family.

L. C. J. I tell you, You have had my Opinion concerning the Number of Witneſſes. I ſuppoſe my Lord and Brother will declare theirs.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lord Chief Juſtice, it ſeems, does pleaſe to have us deliver our Opinions; I think we ought to be very tender in a Caſe of Blood: I think the Life of Sir William Parkyns is at Stake, and we ought to be careful that he have no Wrong done him. But I think in the Caſes of Treaſon, eſpecially of this Nature, the Life of the King, and the Lives of all the innocent People of the Kingdom are alſo at Stake; and we muſt be indifferent in this Caſe, and by the Grace of God we will be ſo. The Queſtion that Sir William Parkyns propoſes, is, Whether there are two Witneſſes upon this Evidence, to this Matter of which he is indicted, which is, the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death. One Witneſs, at leaſt, does poſitively prove, That you Sir William Parkyns did agree to the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King's Perſon, and promiſe to provide and contribute Horſes and Arms to that Purpoſe. Now ſuppoſe this is prov'd but by one Witneſs, and the Evidence had gone no farther, then your Objection would have had a very good Ground, that this could not be a legal Proof of Treaſon; but I muſt tell you, That this Treaſon of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death may be made evident by other Overt Acts, beſides that of Aſſaſſination: To conſpire with a Foreign Prince, to invade the Realm, to provide Arms, to join with Invaders, and to make an Inſurrection againſt the King, theſe are Overt Acts of imagining the King's Death. For it cannot be ſuppoſed, but that he that would have an Invaſion and an Inſurrection againſt the King's Perſon, does intend the Deſtruction of the King; he that would take away all his Defence, which he might have by the Aſſiſtance of his Subjects, and leave him expoſed to his mortal Enemies, cannot but be preſumed to deſign the King's Ruine and Murder. Therefore, Sir William, ſuch Things being in their Nature a Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death; your Providing Arms and a Troop are Evidences and Overt Acts of this Treaſon; and ſo will your Going up and down and Meeting People in order to riſe, if that were your Buſineſs in Leiceſterſhire, &c. as it ſeems by the Evidence it was.

Parkins. But that is not ſaid, my Lord, I humbly beg your Pardon for interrupting you; it is not ſaid, That I met them to riſe, by no Evidence whatſoever; and therefore, pray my Lord, do not inforce it beyond what the Evidence has proved; he ſaid, I went to meet my Friends: Was there any Thing ſaid, it was in Order to a Riſing?

L. C. J. Treby. I think you miſtake your own Words, as you ſpoke them to the Witneſs, if I did take them, as I think I did, right, for they were ſeveral Times repeated. I will do you no wrong, Sir William, I aſſure you. You went into Leiceſterſhire, and you ſay, It was to meet your Friends, the Witneſs ſays, It was to meet the King's Friends; by the King, it is very plain, you meant not King William, but King James; for you ſpoke before of the King's Landing, which was at Chriſtmas laſt, when every Body knows King William was in England. Theſe coupled together——

Parkins. I beg your Pardon, my Lord; thoſe two Things are not both to be join'd together, the Diſcourſe of the King's Landing was at Chriſtmas, as he ſays, the other Thing, my Journey into Leiceſterſhire was a Month afterwards, and therefore they cannot be coupled together.

L. C. J. Treby. The Coupling of them, that I meant, was only to ſhew who was underſtood to be ſpoken of by you, when you named the King; ſo the Queſtion is, Whether you did not mean the ſame Perſon in January that you meant in December

December, by the Word King, especially since as a Discovery you had made, you said farther, that the West was as well inclined to the King's Interest as the North, and a Lord's Brother was concerned in it. If by the King, you had meant King William; how impertinent and insensible had been all this Discourse, that the West was as well inclined as the North, and that a Lord's Brother was concerned in it; concerned in what? In being inclined to King William; to what Purpose could that be said?

Parkyns. It may as well be interpreted that Way as the other.

L. C. J. Treby. I must leave that to the Jury. And I confess, if there was not somewhat more in the Case, you might the better argue upon this, as to the Interpretation. But laying aside the Consideration of your Riding into Leicestershire, &c. here is this providing of Arms, proved by Four or Five Witnesses, and the serving of them in that Manner; and there is no Account given by you, that they were provided for the Service of the Government, or that you were employed so to do. Certainly it is not lawful to provide Arms, especially for a whole Troop, as for ought I perceive here was, though indeed I am not skilful enough in those Businesses, to know how many make up a Troop; but it's plain here was an Insurrection intended, when the Invasion was made; and that is an Evidence, that these Arms were to be employ'd upon that Account, for no other Use was to be made of them, nor is pretended. If you had found those Arms in your House (as you say) it had been your Duty to have deliver'd them up, or disposed of them to the Use and Service of the Government, which Service too, could only be when you had a Commission from the Government, and not of your own Head. And then, besides all this, you acknowledg'd that you had a Troop of old Soldiers.

Parkins. It is but slidingly that, for he only tells you, that a Troop would be composed of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Treby. How can that be? when he says, he repeats your own Words, My Troop consists of old Soldiers; can any Body say, that his Troop consists of old Soldiers, without having a Troop.

Parkyns. Pray, Mr Sweet speak, my Life is at stake, Did I say to you, it did consist, or it was to consist? recollect your self, and consider well before you speak.

L. C. J. What was it that he did say? it did consist, or it would consist.

Sweet, He said, his Troop was composed all of old Soldiers.

Parkyns, But does it appear by any Evidence, that I had a Troop; if I had, who were they? none of these Men do appear. Does this Troop consist of Men in the Air? that I should list Men that are all in Nubibus, and not one of them to be known. Suppose I should tell him a Lie or make some Brags, is this Treason? here is no Person proved to be listed or named.

L. C. J. But Arms were found in your House for a Troop.

Parkyns, But where they were bought, and when they were bought, and made ready, it does not appear; and I affirm to your Lordship, if you would give me but one Day's Time, I would prove, that they were at my House in Warwickshire, when I first came down thither, which is two Years ago. And I'll fully make it out to your Satisfaction, or I'll be crucify'd, or any Thing in the World. I can prove it by a great many Witnesses, by my Friends, and all the Servants that belonged to me, they were there long before this Discourse was had or thought of.

Mr Justice Rokeby, If your Lordship expects that I should deliver my Opinion, I am ready to do it. As to this Matter of Law that Sir William Parkyns has proposed, he says, There are not two Witnesses to the same Overt Act, and therefore no Evidence of Treason; truly, I take it, and always did, that the Law is, there need not be two Witnesses to the same Overt Act; but if there be two Witnesses, one whereof speaks to one Overt Act, and another to another Overt Act of the same Species of Treason, these are two Witnesses within the Law. Now I think, there are two Overt Acts in the Indictment of this Treason. The Treason is Compassing the Death of the King; the Overt Acts are first, the particular Design of the Assassination upon his Person, and the other is, the Bringing in of a foreign Force, and preparing Horses and Arms to meet that foreign Force here: All this to the same Intent and Purpose, the Compassing and Imagining the King's Death. Now besides that of the Assassination, there are a great many Witnesses that prove there were Arms prepared; for there were found a great Quantity, when they opened the Boxes, which Boxes, it is plain, he himself sent down to Haywood's House: For though Charnock writ a Letter, yet it was by his Direction, as he own'd to Haywood, when he was here in Town. And then his Servant fetched them away from this Place, and this I take to be another Overt Act, and proved by several Witnesses. Sir William Parkyns speaks of his being a Gown-Man, but I do not know what a Gown-Man has to do with such a Quantity of Arms.

Parkyns, If you will give me Leave to send for some People, I will demonstrate it to you as clear as the Sun, that they were in the House two Years ago, when I came first thither.

Mr Justice Rokeby, There were Preparations two Years ago, it appears, for the Destruction of the King and Kingdom, however the Men that were accused of it, had the Luck to escape and be acquitted.

Parkyns, My Lord, I hope I shall not be interpreted out of my Life, I desire the Statute may be read.

Mr Just. Rokeby, What Statute do you mean.

Park. The 25 of Edw. 3. and the new Statute too, let them both be read to the Jury, that they may consider of it.

The Statute of the 25 of Edward 3. was read.

Parkyns, There is nothing of two Witnesses there.

L. C. J. No, but there is another Statute of the 5th Edw. 6. Cap. 11. that may be more for your Advantage, Will you have that read?

Park. Yes, if you please, I know there is another Statute that does direct it, and I expected to have found it in this Statute.

Cl. of Ar. This is an Act made in the 5th and 6th Years of King Edw. 6th.

The Statute was read to these Words, Unless without Trial he shall confess the same.

Park. There's enough.

L. C. J. You have heard the Statute read, would you infer any Thing from it?

Parkyns,

Parkyns. I infer that there ought to be two Witneſſes, and here is but one.

L. C. J. There are two Witneſſes.

Park. Not direct to the ſame Thing.

L. C. J. I ſhall leave it to the Jury, whether this Evidence does not prove an Overt Act, to demonſtrate a Deſign againſt the King; if the Deſign be to depoſe him, and that 's manifeſted by two Overt-Acts, undoubtedly that is Treaſon within the Statute of 25 of Edw. 3.

Park. That I agree, but yet there muſt be two Witneſſes of it.

L. C. J. Suppoſe Dethroning the King be the main Deſign that ſtrikes at his Life, and you reſolve it ſhall be done one Way or other. One Way by Aſſaſſination, the other by Inſurrection; or by Invaſion and Joining with a foreign Army.

Par. My Lord, I conceive there ought to be two Witneſſes for each.

L. C. J. No, no; for that very laſt Act that is to take Effect in a few Days, declares it is ſufficient, if there be one to one Overt Act, and another to another; but ſtill it muſt be of the ſame Head or Species of Treaſon; and Depoſing the King and Aſſaſſinating of him, and Preparing to raiſe an Army againſt him, or to excite an Invaſion, are but one ſort of Treaſon.

Par. It may be ſo, if they were Overt Acts of one ſort of Treaſon; but Riſing in Arms, and Aſſaſſination are as different Things as can be in the World, and therefore there ought to be two Witneſſes to each of them.

Mr J. Rokeby. That which I deliver'd as my Opinion was, that one Witneſs proving one Overt Act, and another Witneſs proving another Overt Act of the ſame ſort of Treaſon are two good Witneſſes, according as the Law requires. And I am the more fully confirm'd in it, by the Clauſe that is in this new Act of Parliament, made for Tryals in Caſes of Treaſon, That a Man ſhall not be convicted of Treaſon, but by and upon the Oaths and Teſtimony of two lawful Witneſſes, either both of them to the ſame Overt Act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt Act of the ſame Treaſon.

Park. Of the ſame Treaſon, aye.

Mr Juſt. Rokeby. And here it is the Imagining the Death of the King, that is the Treaſon.

Par. Then you may ſay every Thing elſe is ſo; but if you pleaſe to let the whole Statute be read.

L. C. J. You ſhall have it read if you will; but this is all that is in it concerning this Matter. Now a Deſign to depoſe the King, which is manifeſted by ſome Overt Act, is an Overt Act to prove the Deſign of the Death of the King.

Par. Then it muſt he manifeſt, and not by Interpretation; and all theſe Things are by Interpretation, except it be what Porter ſwears.

L. C. J. If by Overt Act it be proved, that you deſigned his Depoſition, that is an Overt Act to prove your Deſign of his Death.

Par. They are very different Things, Death and Depoſitions. We have ſeen a King depoſed, and yet he is alive.

L. C. J. Treby. I am ſure we have ſeen a King agreed to be aſſaſſinated, and yet, God be thanked, he is ſtill alive.

L. C. J. It is not the Succeeding in the Deſign, but the Deſign it ſelf that is the Treaſon. God forbid that it ſhould have Succeſs to make it Treaſon.

L. C. J. Treby. But whenever People will agree together to bring in foreign Forces, or to prepare Men and Arms againſt the King that is in Poſſeſſion, this is reckoned an Overt Act of a Deſign againſt his Life, and has always been reckoned ſo by my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales, my Lord Chief Juſtice Coke, and by all thoſe Men that have been reputed the moſt tender in Caſes of this Nature. For any Act that expreſſes an Intent of Dethroning the King, by means of an Invaſion by a foreign Force, and an Inſurrection againſt the King, is a proper Proof of a Deſign of his Deſtruction; and if not, then Agreeing to ſhoot him is not an Overt Act. Men may ſay alſo, that there need be actual Shooting to make out the Overt Act in that Caſe.

Park. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to have the Act read, I ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment.

L. C. J. Let it be read.

Parkyns. If you pleaſe to read the Act, the Preamble of it.

Cl. of Ar. This is an Act made in the 7th Year of our Sovereign Lord the King: Is that the Act? It is an Act for Regulating of Tryals in Caſes of High Treaſon, and Miſpriſion of Treaſon. Is that the Act?

Par. Yes, yes. (The Act was read.)

Mr J. Rokeby. I believe if you look into the great Caſe in Parliament, the Caſe of my Lord Stafford, you'll find it was declared for Law, that one Witneſs to one Overt Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt Act of the ſame Treaſon, they were two Witneſſes within the Law, and this was a ſolemn Reſolution in Parliament in the Houſe of Lords.

Park. I believe it has been done; but here is a beneficial Law made, which if my Tryal had been put off a few Days, I ſhould have had the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. It would have been the ſame Thing as to this Matter, for this Act declares the very ſame Thing, as to the two Witneſſes.

Par. And then, my Lord, I could have had Witneſſes to have taken off a great Part of this Evidence, and the Law comes to take Effect within one Day, and it turns here upon this Matter of Sweet, who is not a good Evidence; for it is manifeſt he has contradicted himſelf, and it is manifeſt he has ſworn what cannot be true.

L. C. J. Wherein?

Par. That I ſhould ſay the King would land here, for I had his Word for it.

Mr Juſt. Rokeby. You might have his Word, and not delivered by his own Mouth; there are other Ways to convey a Man's Word beſides Speaking.

Park. But then we don't call it his Word, that's Hearſay.

Mr Juſt. Rokeby. If a Man write his Note that he will do ſuch a Thing, we may very well ſay, we have his Word for it.

L. C. J. It is not impoſſible but that you might ſpeak with him.

Par. It is impoſſible I ſhould ſpeak from hence to France.

L. C. J. You might have been over with him, I believe a great many others have, and it's proved Mr Charnock went over.

Mr J. Rokeby. If any Man ſhould have ſaid at the latter End of the laſt Month, I believe that there was an Aſſaſſination intended againſt the King, becauſe I have his Word for it, merely from reading his Speech to the Parliament, wherein he affirms that he had ſeveral Proofs of it, that had been a proper Expreſſion, though he did not hear the King ſpeak it.

Par. Yes, if he had the Speech to produce.

Mr J. Rokeby. Then if it come by Letter or Meſſage or common Fame, he might ſend you Word by a particular Meſſenger.

Par. Yes, if there was any ſuch Authority as that it were true. But he has manifeſtly contradicted himſelf, and Capt. Porter ſwears for his own Life, and I muſt leave it to you, whether they are to be believed.

Mr J. Rokeby. Capt. Porter's Teſtimony has been ſufficiently confirm'd by the Acknowledgment of dying Perſons.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to ſay, Sir William Parkyns?

Parkyns. No, my Lord, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Direction.

L. C. J. Then what ſay you to it, Mr Attorney or Mr Sollicitor?

Mr Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King in this Matter, and it is my Turn to ſum up the Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: He ſtands indicted for Compaſſing the Death of the King, for Deſigning to depoſe the King, for Promoting a foreign Invaſion, for Intending an Inſurrection here at home, and for Aiding and Abetting the King's Enemies, and for Doing what he could to procure the Subjection of his own Country to Foreigners and Strangers.

Gentlemen, ſome of theſe Crimes run into one another; Deſigning the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, and Deſigning to depoſe the King, amount to one and the ſame Thing, with Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King.

My Lords, the Judges have given you their Opinion in that Point of Law, and I think it is agreeable to all the Reſolutions that have been ſince the Making of the Statute of 25 of Edw. 3d. I think that it has been explained ſo in the Time of Richard the Second; but this I am ſure of, that it was ſo reſolv'd in the Time of Harry the Fourth, when there was a Deſign to ſet up Richard the Second again, and it was adjudged to be High Treaſon in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King. For Depoſing the King, is Deſtroying him in his politick Capacity, as much as Aſſaſſination and Murdering of him is Deſtroying him in his natural Capacity, and the Conſpirators in ſuch Caſes know what the great End is they aim at, to ſubvert the Government as it is eſtabliſhed by Law, whereby every Man enjoys his own Property, and the Freedom of his Perſon, and thoſe that will be quiet may have their Liberty and Property preſerved entire to them; but ſome People are ſo very impatient of ſubmitting to the Law, that they cannot be content to be in Servitude themſelves, but they muſt needs do all they can, to bring it upon their Fellow-Subjects. And it were very well if that thoſe who are in Love with Slavery, would but go to ſome other Places, where they may have enough of it, and not bring it upon thoſe who are ſo little deſirous of ſuch a Thing, as we are, and I hope always ſhall be.

Gentlemen, to prove Sir William Parkyns guilty of this Treaſon, whereof he ſtands indicted, we have produced ſeveral Witneſſes; and firſt there is Mr Porter, and he tells you Sir William Parkyns told him he had ſeen a Commiſſion from K. James, written with his own Hand, for making War againſt the Perſon of K. William.

Parkyns. Sir, I beg your Pardon for interrupting you, but there was not one Word of that ſaid, here is Mr Porter, pray ask him, if ever I ſaw a Commiſſion from King James.

L. C. J. Porter did ſay ſo, if I remember any Thing Porter ſaid, you told him you had read the Commiſſion, and it was written with his own Hand.

Par. All that I heard of it was, that when I was deſired to make one in the Aſſaſſination, I refuſed it becauſe I ſaid I was buſy about the Matter of my Regiment.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray call Porter again. (Capt. Porter came in.)

Mr Soll. Gen. Pray Capt. Porter, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you heard Sir William Parkyns ſay about the Commiſſion that came from King James?

Capt. Porter. I ask'd Mr Charnock why I might not ſee the Commiſſion, and he told me he had never ſeen it himſelf, but Sir William Parkyns had. I did ask Sir William Parkyns, whether he had ſeen it, and he told me he did ſee it, and read it, and it was to raiſe War againſt the Perſon of the Prince of Orange.

Mr At. Gen. Whoſe Hand was in it, did he ſay?

Capt. P. It was written with K. James's own Hand.

Par. This was my Miſtake, I thought he had ſaid I told him I had a Commiſſion for a Regiment.

Mr Mountague. Did he give any Reaſon, why it was written with King James's own Hand.

Capt. Porter. We uſed to ſay amongſt our ſelves it was, becauſe he would not truſt any of his Miniſters with it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would not do Sir William Parkyns any wrong, but only ſum up what is material in the Evidence given againſt him. I remember very well Mr. Porter ſaid, Mr. Charnock told him Sir William Parkyns had ſeen the Commiſſion, but I would not offer that as Evidence againſt the Priſoner what another told him, but he ſays beſides that Sir William Parkyns told him himſelf, that he had ſeen it, and that it was written with King James's own Hand. He ſays that they had ſeveral Meetings together, Sir William Parkyns, and a great many others; and he names the Places, the Naggs-Head in Covent-Garden, the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden; he tells you particularly, that it was agreed that King (who was executed) and Knightley, and himſelf ſhould go and view a Place that ſhould be proper for the Aſſaſſination, and to give a Report to the Priſoner, and the Reſt of the Conſpirators, what they thought the moſt proper Place; and that accordingly they did view the Place, and came home at Night, and met the Company, whereof Sir William Parkyns was one; and they gave an Account how the Place was viewed, and which was thought moſt proper, and then all the Company agreed to it. He ſays indeed, that Sir William Parkyns was not one that was to execute it in his own Perſon, but one Scudamore was to be the Man imployed by him, and he did ſay it was a Thing that was very neceſſary to be done, and would facilitate the Introduction of King James, and the bringing him back again: And there is likewiſe this concurring Evidence of Mr. Porter's with what I ſhall obſerve by and by, that Sir William Parkyns was to procure five Horſes, three whereof he was to mount himſelf, and two he was to ſend Captain Porter to mount, and if there were further Occaſion he could procure more from Mr. Lewis, Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, and accordingly we have produced to you two Witneſſes, Freeman and Turton, the one a Tapſter, the other an Hoſtler that lived at the George Inn in Holbourn, who give you an Account that upon Friday before the firſt Day that was deſigned for the Aſſaſſination, there did come three Horſes to Town, for Sir William Parkyns, but it being put off upon the Diſappointment, they were ſent out of Town again. Upon the Friday afterwards, the Day before the Diſcovery, then there were four Horſes brought to Town, and a 5th was of Mr. Lewis which was a Roan Gelding.

Parkyns.

Parkyns. Pray, Sir, will you pleaſe to obſerve what Sort of Horſes they were; and particularly the Heighth of them, that it may be known how fit they were for this Buſineſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will do you no wrong Sir William if I can help it. The Jury have heard the Evidence; and by and by they will hear my Lords Directions: But they do ſay there were 4 brought to Town, and a 5th was ſent, a Roan Gelding; firſt the Witneſs ſaid the Horſe came from Mountague Houſe, but then preſently he recollected himſelf, and acknowledged the Miſtake; and afterwards ſaid it was from Somerſet Houſe. So there were the 5 Horſes, 3 whereof Sir William Parkyns was to mount, and 2 Captain Porter, as he himſelf ſays; and theſe Facts I inſtance in as making a concurring Evidence, and very near to two Witneſſes to prove this Part of the Conſpiracy.

Then, Gentlemen, Captain Porter goes further, and ſays, that he had heard (but Sir William Parkyns did not tell him ſo himſelf) that Sir William Parkyns had a Commiſſion to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, and was preparing ſo to do, againſt the Time of the Invaſion, to joyn with the Forces that were to come from abroad. To confirm which we have called Mr. Sweet to give you an Account that he had been acquainted with Sir William Parkyns for three Years, and that he had often talkt with him about the King, that is his preſent Majeſty, whom he called the Prince of Orange, and the little Gentleman; and about King James, whom he uſed to call always King; and he ſaid the King was to land very ſpeedily, and that he had a Troop which conſiſted of old Soldiers, and that there were ſeveral Volunteers that were Officers; he ſaid he was to take a Journey into Leiceſterſhire, and accordingly he went; and when he returned back again he ſaid, the Weſt and the North were very well inclined to the King's Intereſt, or to that Purpoſe. And to ſtrengthen his Evidence we prove, that he did go accordingly into Leiceſterſhire, and we prove it by his Servant that went with him, where he met with ſeveral Perſons, particulary one Yarborough, and a Parſon; what they did tranſact the Servant cannot prove, but he is a concurring Witneſs to prove, that he went into Leiceſterſhire; and we have all the Reaſon in the World to believe that he went on that Errand that he ſpoke of before, that is to meet the King's Friends, as he called King James. And then there is a further concurring Evidence of his having a Regiment, or a Troop, it is not material, whether it be one or the other; and that is the Matter of the Arms, 4 Dozen of Swords, 32 Carbines, 35 Caſes of Piſtols, that were hid in the Garden of his Houſe: And theſe Arms we have traced further, he ſent them from his Houſe to Haywood's Houſe, there he thought they would not lie ſafe, and therefore Sir William Parkyns ſends for them privately; they were to come away at Night, and be brought back to his Houſe, and they were accordingly brought back in the Night to his Houſe, and there they were buried; and the ſame Perſon ſaw them taken up afterwards, which brought them to Sir William Parkyns's Houſe, and proves they were the ſame Boxes that were buried, and which upon Opening proved to be theſe Arms, that were firſt ſent to Haywood's, and afterwards brought back to his own Houſe.

So that this, Gentlemen, is a concurring Evidence both to what Sweet ſays, and to what Porter ſays, and thoſe are the Two Witneſſes to this Part of the Treaſon, that there was a Proviſion of Arms and Men for this Purpoſe, which he ſaid he had a Commiſſion for.

Now, Gentlemen, againſt all this he makes but a very ſmall Objection. As to the Matter of two Witneſſes to every Overt Act, that has been overruled by the Court; and as to the Arms, he ſays he found them at his Houſe when he firſt came to it; and then they were old ruſty Arms, but of this he gives you no Manner of Evidence. But if they were there when he came to the Houſe, how came he at this Time of Day to hide them, and ſecret them? Why might they not be as publick now as they were before he came, which he has had Time enough to prepare to prove ſince the Finding of them? And he does not give you ſo much as any colourable Reaſon why he ſo ſecreted them. And therefore 'tis a moſt juſt and violent Suſpicion, that they were for the Purpoſes that the Witneſſes have given you an Account of; and you have Reaſon to believe they were provided for to arm that Number of Men, which he was to raiſe to aſſiſt the French when they came to land here. So that if you believe what the Witneſſes have ſworn, you cannot ſay but that he is guilty of the Treaſon charged upon him; and we doubt not you'll find him ſo.

Mr Cowper. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of the ſame Side of Council for the King. Sir William Parkyns has given us a good Caution, which I ſhall take care to obſerve: and that is, not to ſtrain either Fact, or Law, to his Prejudice. But, my Lord, When ſuch a Matter as this, a Crime of this Nature, is ſo far proved againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, that no Body can in his private Judgment reaſonably acquit him; then I think it a good Piece of Service to the Publick to make the Matter ſo plain, that it may be put beyond all Manner of Doubt, both for the Eaſe of the Jurors, and for the Satisfaction of all others that hear this Tryal.

My Lord, Sir William Parkyns has truly divided his Indictment into two Parts, the one that accuſes him of being concerned in the Aſſaſſination, and the other that accuſes him of being concerned in Inviting the French into the Kingdom, and Ingaging to meet them with an armed Force.

My Lord, As to the firſt Part, I muſt do Sir William Parkyns that Right, that there is but one poſitive Evidence as to the Aſſaſſination; but that Evidence tells ye he agreed to it at ſeveral Meetings, nay, that he was one who ſaid it was neceſſary to be done, in order to the other Deſign he was ingaged in, the facilitating the Landing of the French, and King James his Deſcent and Reſtauration. There is, I ſay indeed, but one Witneſs of that Matter, but the Evidence of that one Witneſs is confirmed by many concurring Circumſtances; by his ſending for Horſes to Town the Day before the firſt Saturday, when this execrable Treaſon was to have been executed; by ſending them out of Town again that Day upon the Diſappointment; by ſending for them again the Friday before the ſecond Saturday that the King was to have been aſſaſſinated; by his having more Horſes than were uſual with him that Day; by his taking care then of three Horſes that were none of his own, and one of them brought very ſuſpiciouſly from Somerſet-Houſe; and that all theſe eight Horſes ſhould be immediately hurried and carried away upon the Diſappointment the ſecond Saturday, and nothing ever heard of them afterwards. I ſay one of them was brought very ſuſpiciouſly; for, my Lord, you obſerve it came from Somerſet-Houſe, and ſent by Lewis according to the Priſoner's Promiſe to Capt. Porter, which Lewis, it is apparent by all the Witneſſes of this Matter, was privy to this Deſign.

My Lord, There is another Circumſtance beſides this, which, I think, has not been obſerved; and that is, his ſending for Sweet up to Town before the ſecond time that the King was to have been Aſſaſſinated; he came up indeed before both the times: The firſt time he was told by the Priſoner, he had once deſigned to have uſed him in a Buſineſs; but upon ſecond Thoughts he had Compaſſion for his Family. And when he came the ſecond time, he was firſt ask'd what Condition he had left his Family in, whether he had provided them Money. He ſaid, No; and thereupon he was chid: And the Priſoner ſaid, he might then as well have ſtaid at home. All theſe Circumſtances, beſides the one poſitive Evidence, ſavour ſtrongly of his having a great Hand in the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King.

But then, my Lord, As to the other Part; his Inviting the French, and preparing to meet them, that is poſitively proved by two Witneſſes. Capt. Porter tells you, That the Priſoner was at the two Meetings in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and St. James's-ſtreet, where it was expreſly reſolved by all that were preſent, and the Priſoner among the reſt, to ſend Charnock over to invite the French to invade this Kingdom, and to promiſe to meet King James at his Landing with two Thouſand Horſe. He ſwears, That Sir William Parkyns did particularly agree to what was ſo reſolved upon at both the Conſults. And Sweet tells you that he had prepared for the ſame Deſign; for that Sir William Parkins told him, the King would land, he had his Word for it; and he himſelf had a Troop of old Soldiers. My Troop does conſiſt (he ſpoke it in the preſent Tenſe; for it being a Doubt Sir William Parkyns did himſelf that Right as to examine the Witneſs again, and he repeated it as his Words, My Troop conſiſts) of old Soldiers, or is compoſed of old Soldiers. And he was to have ſeveral Volunteers that had been Officers.

My Lord, Theſe two poſitive Witneſſes are Evidence that goes to the ſame Species of Treaſon, nay to the ſame Deſign, the raiſing a Rebellion, and the Depoſing the King, which is Killing him in his politick Capacity; I ſay, theſe Two go home to the ſame Deſign.

And, my Lord, This Evidence upon this Branch of the Indictment, is corroborated too by very ſtrong Circumſtances. There is a Journey to Leiceſter, which Sweet ſpeaks of, that Sir William Parkins told him he would undertake: This Journey it is proved by his Servant that he did undertake; that he met there with ſeveral Perſons, and came back and made his Report to Sweet of the Succeſs of his Journey, and how well diſpoſed the King's Friends were, by which Name he always meant King James; for when he ſpoke of our preſent King he called him the Little Gentleman, or ſometimes King William, and ſometimes, as the Witneſs at laſt ſaid poſitively, the Prince of Orange: But when he ſpoke of the King, without any thing elſe, he always meant King James; and beſides, he ſpoke of a King that was beyond Sea at Chriſtmas laſt, which could not be King William, who was then, and had been in England ſo long before.

My Lord, the Priſoner in his Defence ſays, That this Servant of his that went with him into Leiceſterſhire, had been formerly Charnock's Servant, and was ſent by Charnock with the Meſſage to Kenſington, and not by him. Yet I muſt obſerve, that the Evidence ſwore poſitively he was ſent by Sir William Parkyns, his Maſter, and brought the Note in the Almanack back to the Perſon to whom he was directed to carry it, who lodged at the Confectioner's Houſe; and when he had ſo done, that the Perſon that lodged at the Confectioner's did not remit him to Charnock, but to his Maſter Sir Will. Parkyns, with a Meſſage that he would be at Home, and ſtay there ready, whenever he ſhould have Occaſion for him; and this was upon the very Saturday the King was to have been aſſaſſinated.

My Lord, Sir William Parkyns has complained, that if he could have had his Evidence here, he could have proved the Arms had been two Years in his Houſe, and that he found them there when he came thither firſt. If we ſhould admit that Matter, we might confeſs, and avoid it; for it is apparent, that theſe Arms were on this Occaſion put up in a ſuſpicious Manner in Boxes, and ſent to Haywood's, (who is a ſuſpicious Perſon by Reaſon of his Relation to Charnock, upon whoſe Letter and Recommendation they were received) and concealed till the Plot was diſappointed; and then they were carried away from that Place, and buried in Sir William Parkyns's own Garden. This was juſt after the Breaking out of the Plot; and they were buried for the better ſecuring them as choice Goods. And whereas the Priſoner ſays they were old and ruſty when he found them, it now appears they were clean and new-furbiſhed Arms, and the Hilts were off the Swords, and packed together.

My Lord, he has Recourſe to another Argument in the laſt Place, the moſt moving, I muſt confeſs of all, and that is the Argument of Pity: He has ſpoke of his Education in the Profeſſion of the Gown, of his Infirmities, his Age, and his Family. Arguments of Pity I am very unfit to give an Anſwer to, and ſhould be very unwilling to extinguiſh any Motions of it; but this I muſt obſerve even by Way of Anſwer to that Argument, That the Time was when he ſhould have pitied himſelf, and not engaged in ſuch an abominable and mercileſs a Deſign; That he ſhould have had Pity upon his Countrey, which he plotted to bring under the greateſt Confuſion and Deſolation; That he ſhould have had Pity upon the beſt of Kings, and the beſt of Men; but then there was no Pity, when they thought they had laid their Deſigns ſo that they had him in their Power, but they reſolved barbarouſly to murder him, and perſiſted in the Reſolution of Aſſaſſinating him after they were once diſappointed; That, it ſeems, did not diſcourage them, but they undertook it a ſecond Time, and it does not appear that they ever had any Remorſe at laſt for it; but the Plot broke out and ſo their whole Deſign was fruſtrated.

My Lord, This is the Sum, I think, of his Defence; I have as well as I was able given an Anſwer to the Objections made to it, and I muſt now leave it with you, Gentlemen of the Jury: And tho' theſe Conſiderations that I have mentioned may not quite remove all Compaſſion, yet they may ſerve to confirm you in a Reſolution of doing the King, and Kingdom, and your ſelves Juſtice; and that is all we ask of you.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir William Parkyns is indicted of High-Treason, for Designing, Imagining, and Compassing the Death of the present King. There have been several Witnesses produced that have given Evidence upon this Indictment; the first of them is Mr Porter, who has been a Witness heretofore against several upon the like Occasion; and he gives you this Account, That about the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June last, there was a Meeting of divers Persons at the Old King's Head Tavern in Leaden-hall-street in the City, where they dined together, and there was Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter himself, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, and divers others that he has mentioned to you. At that Meeting they did consult together, which Way the late King James might be restored, and it was thought very necessary that there should be a French Force sent over hither to join with others for his Restoration. And they did among themselves agree, and determine what Number of Forces might be convenient for that Purpose, they did propose 10000, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons: And that a Message should be sent over to King James, to persuade him to sollicit the French King, to furnish him with such a Number of Men to be sent over into England. Mr Charnock, that was then in the Company, was the Person agreed upon among them to be the Messenger to be sent upon this Errand, which Employment he did undertake, upon their Promise, that they would raise among themselves 2000 Horse for to meet the late King at his Landing.

This being at that Time determined, and Mr Charnock having accepted this Employment, he did make Preparation to go upon this Errand. In some Time after, (a Week or a Fortnight, or thereabouts) there was another Meeting at which were several of the same Persons, that were present at the former, and among them Sir William Parkyns was one: And this Meeting was at one Mrs Mountjoy's, that keeps a Tavern in St. James's-street, where they did discourse of what they had formerly agreed upon, and did again consider whether they should proceed to send Mr Charnock with that Message; to which they all agreed, that Mr Charnock should go, and he accordingly went; and Captain Porter met him about five or six Weeks after the Meeting at Mrs Mountjoy's, and Charnock told him he had been in France, and that since his Return he had been with the several Persons who had sent him, and had acquainted them with the Answer of K. James, which was, That at that Juncture of Time the French King had such Occasion for his Forces, that he could not spare them, or furnish him with so many to come over here. This is the first Matter that Porter gives you an Account of.

But then Captain Porter tells you farther, how the Design of Assassinating the King was set on Foot about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February last. About which Time Sir George Barclay was sent over with a Commission from the late King James; which seems to have given great Encouragement to that Party of Men: For Sir George Barclay, Captain Porter, and Sir William Parkyns, with divers others, had several Meetings at the Globe Tavern in Hatton Garden, the Nagg's-head Tavern in Covent Garden, the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and other Places. And at these Meetings they entred into Consideration, what was the best Way to restore the late King James to the Throne; and it was agreed among them, that the best Means for the Effecting that Restoration, would be to kill King William, which they resolved to undertake; and at these Debates and Resolutions, Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at the Bar was present. Captain Porter being ask'd whether Sir William Parkyns, at these Consults, did consent to the King's Murther, he said they did all agree to the Assassination of the King, and Sir William Parkyns said, he thought it was very necessary to be done, to facilitate the Restoration of the late King.

Gentlemen, This Design of the Assassinating the King being thus resolved upon; the next Thing considered among them was, how it might be effected; there were several ways proposed: One was by an Ambuscade; for the King having a House in the Country by Richmond, his Majesty used to go once a Week a Hunting thereabout, and to return at Night; and therefore an Ambuscade on that side of the Water, near the House, was proposed: Then another Proposal was made to fall upon the Guards on this side the Water, and at the same Time that the King's Coach was to be set upon. And these two Places being proposed, there was some Difference of Opinion among them, whereupon it was agreed that some Persons should be sent to view the Ground on both sides the Water, which Persons were Captain Porter, King that was Executed, and one Knightley; and so some Days before the 15th of February they did go on both sides the Water; and viewed the Ground, and returned in the Evening to the Nag's-Head Tavern, according to Agreement, where were met together Sir George Barclay, Mr. Charnock, and the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns. And there they made their Report done of their View of the Ground, and upon which both the Proposals were debated, and at last they did all agree that the Attack should be made upon the King on this side of the Water, in a Lane that was between Brentford and Turnham Green; and the Attack upon the Guards was likewise to be made thereabouts.

Sir William Parkyns was to furnish five Horses, whereof three of them were to be mounted by Men of his own providing, the other two were to be mounted by Men of Captain Porter's providing; Mr. Porter, Mr. Charnock, and one Rookwood, were to be principally ingaged in Attacking the Guards. The Number of Men agreed upon for the whole, were about forty or few more, and Sir George Barclay was to have a Party out of them all, of about eight, and as those others went to fall upon, and charge the Guards, Sir George Barclay, with his Party of Men, was to attack the King in his Coach, and by shooting into the Coach to kill the King and all that were with him.

The Time agreed upon for putting this Design in Execution was on Saturday the 15th of February. That Day it was expected the King would go a Hunting. And two Men were planted at Kensington to give Notice when the King went, and upon such Notice, these Men were to march out in small Parties, and to lodge in the Inns, and publick Houses about Brentford, and Turnham Green, upon Notice of the King's Return from the other side of the Water, and Sir George Barclay was to be in Readiness to set upon the Coach in the Lane; and the other Party to attack the Guards.

But this horrid Design was very happily discovered, which prevented the King's going Abroad on that Day; and though they were disappointed for

for that Time, yet the Deſign was not at an End: But their Reſolutions continue to make the like Attempt when they could have an other Opportunity. And for that Purpoſe there was another Meeting, as Captain Porter tells you, upon the Friday following at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, at which Sir William Parkyns, Sir George Barclay, Rookwood, and Charnock, and Captain Porter, were preſent, and they did agree to attack the King and the Guards, the next Day in the ſame Place, and Manner that they had formerly agreed upon. But by good Providence the King had Notice of it, ſo that he did forbear to go Abroad that Day, whereby theſe Conſpirators were totally diſappointed of their barbarous and villainous Deſign which they had reſolved upon, and had made ſuch Preparations to compaſs.

It is true, Captain Porter does tell you, Sir William Parkyns was not to be one that ſhould be actually preſent at the Aſſaſſination; but he was to furniſh five Horſes, three of them to be mounted by Men of his own Providing, and two by Men that Captain Porter was to provide. And you are told poſitively that Captain Porter, at this laſt Meeting, did complain that two of his Horſes were fallen lame, and acquainted Sir William Parkyns with it, and he promiſed to help him to two more by the means of one Lewis that was Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham.

Then you are told, that Sir William Parkyns ſent to Sweet to come to Town the 11th of February, and Sweet comes to Town accordingly, on Wedneſday the 12th of February, and then he had Diſcourſe with Sir William Parkyns at his Lodgings, where Sir William told him, that becauſe of his Family, he would not imploy him in the Buſineſs he intended for him, and therefore bid him go home again; and with all, directed him to return to Town the Friday following; and order his Groom to bring his Horſes to Town; he mentioned three Horſes which ſhould be the ſtrongeſt he had; the Groom brought up the three Horſes, and Sweet came to Town with him, and ſtaid till Saturday. Sir William Parkyns ſaid he thought to go out of Town in the Afternoon, but did not, but ſtay'd till Monday, when he went out of Town.

But upon the Friday following, the Horſes of Sir William Parkyns, were brought to Town again, which now were Four, and were ſet up at the George Inn in Holbourn; and it appears that Mr Lewis furniſhed one Horſe, for there were five Horſes upon the Account of Sir William Parkyns, of which a Roan Horſe was one which came from Somerſet-Houſe. This is proved by the Hoſtler; and that Lewis himſelf came in on Saturday in the Afternoon to inquire for Sir William Parkyns, but he was gone and the Horſes were taken away, and he once came with Sir William Parkyns to the Inn. Theſe are Circumſtances that do concur with, and confirm Captain Porter's Evidence concerning the providing Horſes for this Deſign.

Then there is another Particular of Captain Porter's Evidence concerning the Commiſſion from King James, which is remarkable: It was told you, that he askt Charnock whether he had ſeen the Commiſſion: He ſaid, No, but Sir William Parkyns had: And Sir William Parkyns was askt by Porter, as they were ſitting by the Fire-ſide, whether he had ſeen the Commiſſion; and Sir William Parkyns anſwered, that he had ſeen it, and had read it, and it was written with King James's own Hand; and that the Subſtance of it was to make War upon the Perſon of the Preſent King, who was called in the Commiſſion as you may ſuppoſe the Prince of Orange. So that, Gentlemen, as to the Deſign of the Aſſaſſinating the King, and of this Commiſſion which was underſtood by them to be for that Purpoſe; this is the Sum and Subſtance of Porter's Evidence ſo attended with, and confirmed by theſe Circumſtances, as you have heard.

Beſides the other Witneſs, Sweet, who was a great Acquaintance of Sir William Parkyns, tells you, That about Chriſtmas laſt, he was informed by Sir William Parkyns, that the King would come, which he underſtood to be meant of King James. He ask'd Sir William Parkyns how he knew it? and he ſaid, He had his Word for it; and that his Troop conſiſted of Old Soldiers, and he had thirty Saddles; and beſides, there would be ſome Volunteers, which were Old Officers. Then he ſaid, He was to go into Leiceſterſhire, and he did go with one Scudamore; and this was in January, about the latter End, as I remember. They lay that Night at Stony-Stratford, and the next Night at Leiceſter, and Scudamore went with him; and afterwards one Yarborough, and a Parſon, came to him out of Yorkſhire: And when he came back he ſaid, He found all there to be very well; and the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt, as the North; and a Lord's Brother was concerned.

Then in the next Place you are told, That at Michaelmas laſt, Mr. Charnock did write a Letter to one Haywood, who had married his Siſter, and lived near Sir William Parkyns in Warwickſhire, to deſire him to receive ſome Goods into his Houſe that were to come from Sir William Parkyns's, and lay them up very carefully; for they were choice Goods, which Sir William durſt not leave in his own Houſe, becauſe he had left it. And accordingly there were theſe Boxes and Cheſts ſent to Haywood's, and received by him into his Houſe, where they continued till the latter End of February. Haywood about this Time, when the Deſign of the Aſſaſſination was on foot, met with Sir William Parkyns in Town, and ask'd him how he would diſpoſe of thoſe Goods? Thereupon Sir William Parkyns ſent his Servant into the Country; and Notice was given on Aſh Wedneſday, the Wedneſday after the firſt Proclamation that iſſued upon the Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy, that theſe Goods ſhould be removed: And a Man, in the Evening, went to Haywood's Houſe with a Cart and Horſes, and removed theſe Cheſts; they were three in Number; and thoſe being opened, there were eight leſſer ones taken out, and carried away about Nine or Ten a Clock at Night, to Sir William Parkyns's Houſe in Warwickſhire, where they were buried in the Garden, and afterward were dug up, which was at the Searching Sir William's Houſe upon the Breaking out of the Plot; and when they were open'd, it did appear what Sort of Goods they were: They were Arms, a conſiderable Quantity of them; Four Dozen of Swords without Hilts, Twenty five Pair of Piſtols, and a great Number of Carbines, Thirty two as I remember, and a Parcel of Hilts pack'd up in a Box by themſelves. This, Gentlemen, is ſworn to you by the Perſons that were preſent at the Digging them up, and Opening the Boxes.

Then, Gentlemen, you are told, That though Sir William Parkyns pretends they were Arms that he found in the Houſe when he came thither, yet they were not old ruſty Arms, as he pretends, but they were very bright, and fit for Uſe and Service.

There

There is one Circumſtance more that ſeems to affect Sir William Parkyns, about the Buſineſs of the Aſſaſſination; and that is proved by Eubank, Sir Willliam's own Servant. There was a Note ſent upon Saturday, the 22d of February in the Morning, to one Brown, at Kenſington, by Sir William Parkyns's Man; and this Brown writ in the Servant's Almanack, that he would be in Town himſelf in a little Time, and bid him carry it to a Man that lodged at a Confectioner's over-againſt Grays-Inn Gate in Holbourn: Sir William Parkyns's Man accordingly goes to this Confectioner's, and ſpeaks with the Perſon there that he was directed to go to; and he ſays he was a Scotch Man, and talk'd broad like a Scotch Man, and he bid him go and tell his Maſter, That he would ſtay within for him till he came; and he did accordingly.

Gentlemen, This is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that is given againſt Sir William Parkyns. Now you are to conſider what Sir William ſays for himſelf: He does admit, and agree, That what Porter ſays is very poſitive and full; but that is but the Evidence of one Witneſs: For, ſays he, by the Law no Perſon ought to be convicted of High-Treaſon, upon the Teſtimony of one Witneſs. As to the Matter of Law he is in the right; No Man ought to be convicted of Treaſon upon the Teſtimony of a ſingle Witneſs. Now firſt ſuppoſe the Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King had not been proved; conſider then whether there be not Two Witneſſes beſides. Porter proves, That Charnock was ſent into France by Sir William Parkyns, and others, upon that Errand; to which, if you add the Teſtimony of Sweet, that ſwears, That Sir William Parkyns told him the King wou'd come, and he had a Troop, and had bought Saddles; and what is ſaid concerning his going into Leiceſterſhire, and his having a Quantity of Arms: If all which be underſtood in Purſuance of the Deſign againſt his preſent Majeſty, then there are at leaſt Two Witneſſes of ſeveral Overt-Acts of the ſame Treaſon.

For, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, tho' there had been no Evidence of a Deſign to Aſſaſſinate the King, but the Deſign and Purpoſe had been to Depoſe him, and ſet the late King upon the Throne, or join with a Force to invade the Realm, that is High-Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. the Third, as being a Deſigning the Death and Deſtruction of the King. There hath been a full Proof by Two Witneſſes, if what Sweet, and the other Witneſſes beſides Porter ſay, do prove Sir William Parkyns to be concerned in that Deſign, which ſhall be conſidered further of by and by.

But in the next Place, ſuppoſe that the Meetings at the King's-Head in Leaden-Hall Street, and at Mountjoy's, had not been proved; but the Deſign to Aſſaſſinate the King is proved by one Witneſs, and the Providing Men and Arms to fight againſt him is proved by one other Witneſs: This is a Proof of the ſame Treaſon; for though the Overt-acts be ſeveral, yet they both tend to the ſame End, the Deſtruction of the King, though in a different manner; and tho' the Law requires two Witneſſes to the ſame Sort of Treaſon, yet it does not require two Witneſſes to any one Overt-act. For if one Witneſs prove one Overt-act at one Time, and another Witneſs prove another Overt-act at another Time, theſe are two Witneſſes within the Meaning of the Law; and ſo it has been always practiſed, and never denied to be Law that I know of.

Beſides it is obſervable upon this Point, which my Brother has mentioned, That this new Act of Parliament, which does not yet take Effect, provides, that there ſhall be either two Witneſſes to one Overt Act, or one Witneſs to one, and another to another of the ſame Species of Treaſon; and you have had the Opinion of all us now that are here, that theſe are Overt Acts of one and the ſame Species of Treaſon.

But then Sir William Parkyns objects, That Sweet does not prove any Overt Act. Now for that, you are to conſider the Force of Sweet's Evidence, who tells you the Diſcourſe of Sir William Parkyns, about Chriſtmas laſt, of the King's Coming, of his Saddles, and of his Troop's Conſiſting of old Soldiers, and Volunteers that were old Officers: But ſays Sir W. Parkyns, this is only Words, and Words are not Treaſon. But then conſider, that they are Words that relate to Acts and Things. You hear he had a great Quantity of Arms, beyond what he, as a private Man, could have Occaſion for, or would uſe. He does not give you any Account what he was to do with thoſe Arms, or to what Purpoſe he ſhould keep them, nor why he cauſed them to be removed in the Night, after they had lain privately in Haywood's Houſe, and cauſed them to be carried back to his own Houſe, and buried them in the Ground, and at ſuch a Time when there was a Plot, and after the Plot was diſcovered, and a Proclamation out for his own Apprehenſion.

Sir William Parkyns's Diſcourſe with Sweet, of King James's Coming, and his Troop Conſiſting of ſuch Men, plainly ſhews what thoſe Arms were for. For, Gentlemen, Men's Diſcourſes and their Words explain their Actions; and an indifferent Action in it ſelf may be ſo explained by Words, that it will be unlawful. It is lawful for a Man to buy a Piſtol; but if it can be plainly proved from his Words or his Speeches, that the Deſign of Buying it was to uſe it againſt the Perſon or Life of the King, that will be an Overt Act. Now when Sir William Parkyns ſaid, The late King would come, and that he had a Troop which conſiſted of ſuch Soldiers; then theſe Arms being found in that Manner, I muſt leave to your Conſideration whether it is not a Proof, for what Purpoſe he did provide them, and to what Uſe he intended to put them; eſpecially ſince he gives you no Account, what Uſe or Occaſion he had for them. He ſays, indeed, he found them in the Houſe two Years ago, how probable that is, you may conſider.

Then there is another Thing, his Going into Leiceſterſhire with Scudamore, and his Meeting there with Yarborough, and other People in that private and haſty Manner. He went out on the Thurſday, and came Home again upon Monday Night; and then he meets with Sweet, and tells him that all was well; and the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt as the North. What King muſt he mean? he had no Commiſſion from King William to go into Leiceſterſhire to diſcourſe with People, to ſee how they ſtood affected to his Intereſt. Sweet comes and tells you, that when Sir William Parkyns ſpoke of the King, he underſtood he meant King James. I muſt leave it to your Conſideration, how you will interpret theſe Words.

It

It is true, Gentlemen, it is not fit there ſhould be any ſtrained or forced Conſtruction put upon a Man's Words or Actions, when he is tryed for his Life. You ought to have a full and ſatisfactory Evidence to convince you, that he is Guilty, before you pronounce him ſo; but however you are to conſider the Nature of Things, and the Circumſtances that attend them. If you can ſuppoſe that he went into Leiceſterſhire, to King William's Friends, and that he was of Opinion, the Weſt was as well Affected to King William, as the North; then you make a different Conſtruction from Sweet, who tells you, that always when he ſpake of the King, he underſtood it of King James; and at Chriſtmas, when he ſpoke of the King's Coming, it muſt be meant King James; for King William was here before, and he pretends not he had any Authority to raiſe a Troop for King William.

So that, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you upon the whole Matter; if you are ſatisfied, that Sir William Parkyns is guilty of the Matters of which he ſtands charged, you will find him guilty; you have heard the Evidence, and will conſider of it; and if upon the Whole, you are not ſatisfied, that he is guilty of the Matters charged in this Indictment, then you are to acquit him.

Then an Officer being ſworn to keep the Jury according to the Cuſtom, they withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and in leſs than Half an Hour, returned into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, Anſwer to your Names. William Northey,——

Mr Northey. Here.

(And ſo of the Reſt.)

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay ye, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

L. C. J. Jaylor, look to him, he is found Guilty of High-Treaſon.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Sir William Parkyns is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, the Court diſcharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

While the Jury was withdrawn to conſider of the Verdict, Sir John Friend was brought from Newgate to the Bar, in order to his being called to Judgment, and after the Verdict, he addreſs'd himſelf to the Court thus,

Freind. My Lord, I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to give leave to read this Paper.

(To which the Court gave no Anſwer.)

Friend. My Lord, will your Lordſhip give me Leave to read it.

L. C. J. Ay, if you will.

(Reads.)

Friend. My Lord, I humbly move in Arreſt of Judgment, that I am not convicted of Treaſon by Two Witneſſes, as I ought to have been within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third: For Mr Porter ſwears, That I with others, in May or June laſt, ſent to the French King to invade England; he is the only Witneſs to that Matter. Mr Blair ſwears, That I ſhewed him a Commiſſion in Surrey-ſtreet, about two Years ſince, ſign'd by King James, and couuterſign'd Melford, to be a Colonel of Horſe, and that I gave him ſome Moneys for the Cheriſhing of the Men. My Lord, here is no Levying of War, ſworn by Mr Blair; and Conſpiring to levy War not being Treaſon, I am convicted by one Witneſs, and therefore I pray Council may be aſſigned me, to plead this Matter.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, that which you move now, is not in Arreſt of Judgment, it is Matter that does ariſe upon the Evidence, and what you now ſay, arraigns the Verdict, and the Proceedings upon your Tryal. There were Two Witneſſes againſt you, that is plain. You were not indicted for Levying of War, but for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; and we told you the Deſign of the Invaſion, and Conſpiring to depoſe the preſent King, and reſtore the late King, was an Overt Act of that High-Treaſon. The Commiſſion was not ſo much ſtood upon, but the Advancing Moneys upon this Account, to Blair your Lieutenant Colonel, to give to the Men, that was a plain Overt Act, and ſo there were certainly two Witneſſes againſt you.

Friend. My Lord, I hope, I can clear my ſelf: I thank God, I am as Innocent as the Child unborn, of the Aſſaſſination of the King. I would not have the People think, that I am ſuch a Man.

L. C. J. But you remember, it was ſworn you knew of it, and we have told you, that the Deſign of Reſtoring the late King by Force, and Depoſing the King, are Overt Acts of imagining his Death, if ſuch an Intention be proved, as it was in your Caſe, and the Jury have found it ſo.

Friend. My Lord, I humbly beſeech you, becauſe I do not underſtand Matter of Law, and am adviſ'd to move this in Arreſt of Judgment; I deſire my Council may be heard to it.

L. C. J. We cannot hear Council, but upon a Matter that ariſes upon the Record it ſelf, that is, the Indictment. We cannot enter into any Examination of this Matter, that you now ſpeak of, you had a long Tryal yeſterday.

Friend. My Lord, I am ſorry to give your Lordſhip any Occaſion of Trouble; but I humbly beſeech you, if it may be, that I may be heard by my Council, for the Satisfaction of the World; pray, my Lord, hear what they can ſay.

L. C. J. They cannot ſay any Thing; no Council in the World that underſtand themſelves, can argue any Thing againſt what has been ſo often ſettled and always practiſed.

Freind. My Lord, if it be to be granted, I beſeech your Lordſhip to grant it.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. It cannot be granted; beſides the Matter you now move upon, is improper; it was all conſidered upon your Tryal. It was told you, we did all agree, that a Conſpiracy to levy War to depoſe the King is Treaſon, or to invade the Realm is Treaſon. All this was conſider'd at your Tryal, and that is now over.

Parkyns. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I deſire I may have the Liberty of ſome Friends and Relations, and a Miniſter to come to me.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all Means.

Parkyns. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, that they may come and be private with me, and pray let me have a Rule of Court for it, otherwiſe I ſhall not have any Benefit of it.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, it is very fit you ſhould have it; there ſhall be an Order of Court for it: See that the Keeper take Care it be done with Safety.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire the ſame Liberty of a Miniſter, and my Relations and Friends to come to me; that for what Time I have to live, I may make the beſt Uſe I can of it for my Soul, which I hope God will enable me to do.

Then the Court was adjourned until Five a Clock in the Afternoon, and about Six, the Juſtices returned, and the Court was reſumed.

Cl. of Arr. Set Sir John Freind to the Bar: (Which was done.) Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt convicted of High Treaſon, for traiterouſly Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of our Sovereign Lord King William the Third. What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf why the Court ſhould not give the Judgment according to the Law?

(Then being made to kneel, he afterwards ſtood up.)

Freind. I have ſaid already, what I have to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr Com. Serjeant. Sir, you have heard the Judgment of the Court, as to what you have ſaid, if you have nothing elſe to offer, the Court muſt proceed to Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. for Middleſex. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt convicted of High Treaſon in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies. What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die, according to the Law?

(He was made to kneel, and riſe up again.)

Parkyns. I have nothing more to offer.

Cl. of Arr. Then Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes; all Manner of Perſons are commanded to keep Silence, while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Which Proclamation was made on both Sides the Court; and then Mr. Common Serjeant ſitting with the Reſt of the Court upon the Bench, pronounced the Sentence.

Mr Com. Serj. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, you have been indicted for High Treaſon, in Compaſſing the Death and Deſtruction of the King: For your Tryal, you have put your ſelves upon the Country, which Country has found you Guilty. The Offence is the greateſt in the Judgment of the Law, that a Man can commit; and it is juſtly and reaſonably ſo. For Robbery and Murder are Injuries to private Perſons, but Compaſſing the Death of the King, is Compaſſing the Deſtruction of the Father of your Country, and letting in Rapine, Death, and Deſolation upon Thouſands of People. And even this, the hainouſeſt of Offences, is capable of Aggravation; for there have been always Excuſes, and ſometimes Juſtifications for Rebellion: And as to Murder and private Revenge, there may be ſomewhat ſaid in Mitigation from the Violence of Men's Paſſions. But to ſit, and conſpire, and conſult, and debate the Deſtruction of a Prince; no Man yet ever had the Confidence to make an Excuſe for it. I would not add to your Affliction; I am ſenſible of the ſevere Judgment that is to follow, and which you have brought upon your ſelves, and cannot but pity you for the great Burden of Guilt, that you have laid your ſelves under. I only ſay this to offer it to your ſerious Conſideration, in the few Moments you have to prepare for another World, and another Judgment. All that remains for me, is to pronounce the Judgment of the Law in theſe Caſes, and the Court does Award it.

That you, and each of you, go back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence be drawn on a Hurdle, to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally Hanged up by the Neck, and cut down alive; your Bodies ſhall be ript open, your Privy-Members cut off, your Bowels taken out, and Burnt before your Faces; your Heads ſhall be ſevered from your Bodies, your Bodies reſpectively to be divided into Four Quarters, and your Heads and Quarters are to be at the Diſpoſal of the King: And the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Priſoners were carried back to Newgate.

The TRYAL of AMBROSE ROOKWOOD.

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

Die Martis decimo quarto Aprilis, Anno Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii Octavo, Annoque Dom. 1696.

THE Court being ſat, at which were preſent the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, Mr Juſtice Nevil, Mr Juſtice Powell, and Mr Juſtice Eyres; the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez: All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do, at this Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the County of Middleſex, draw near and give your Attendance. God ſave the King.

Then the Grand Jury were called over, and the Appearances marked, and Witneſſes being ſworn in Court, to give Evidence to them upon a Bill of Indictment againſt Alexander Knightley, they in a little Time after withdrew to hear the Evidence.

Then the Keeper of Newgate was ordered to bring his Priſoners to the Bar; (which he did.) to wit, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne; who were thus arraigned.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.)

Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.)

Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.)

You ſtand indicted in the County of Middleſex, by the Names of Robert Lowick of the Pariſh of St Paul Covent Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman; Ambroſe Rookwood of the ſame Pariſh, Gentleman, and Charles Cranburne of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman; for that you, together with one Chriſtopher Knightley, of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, not yet taken; not having the Fear of GOD in your Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt ſerene, moſt illuſtrious, moſt clement, and moſt excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. your ſupreme, true, rightful, lawful, and undoubted Lord, the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh intending and contriving, and with all your Strength reſolving, deſigning, and conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and well eſtabliſh'd, altogether to ſubvert, change, and alter, as alſo our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Servitude to Lewis the French King to ſubjugate and inthral, the 10th Day of February, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid ſovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St Paul Covent Garden, aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, and contrive, reſolve, deſign, and intend, our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to kill, ſlay, and murther, and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cauſe, and the ſame your moſt impious, wicked, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, together with the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, and very many other falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſame 10th Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, Falſely, Maliciouſly, Adviſedly, Secretly, Traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, did Meet, Propoſe, Treat, Conſult, Conſent, and Agree, him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait, and Guile, to Aſſaſſinate, Kill and Murder; and that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination, and Killing the ſooner to execute, and perpetrate, afterwards (to wit) the ſame Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Traiterouſly did Treat, Propoſe, and Conſult, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place, where, when, how, and in what Manner, our ſaid Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait, the more eaſily you might kill; and did conſent, agree, and aſſent, that forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, whereof the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, ſhould be four; and every one of you traiterouſly took upon himſelf to be one, with Guns,

Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, charged with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, being Armed, ſhould lie in wait, and lie in Ambuſh, our ſaid Lord the King in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad, to invade, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe, Men ſo armed, ſhould ſet upon the Guards of our ſaid Lord the King then attending him, and being with him, and ſhould fight with them, and overcome them, whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo armed, our ſaid Lord the King ſhould aſſaſſinate, ſlay, kill, and murther; and you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, together with the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, the Treaſon, and all the traiterous Intentions, Deſigns, and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to Effect, afterwards (to wit) the aforeſaid Tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlike Things, and military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and cauſe to be bought, obtained, gathered together, and procured with that Intention, then in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, as aforeſaid to be uſed, employed, and beſtow'd; and the ſame Premiſſes the more ſafely and certainly to execute, do, and perform, the aforeſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, with one Edward King, late of High Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Conſent and Agreement of divers of the Traytors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the ſaid 10th Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, went and came to the Place propoſed, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King by lying in wait, ſhould be done, performed, and committed, to ſee, view, and obſerve the Convenience and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, Aſſaſſination, and Killing, there to be done, performed, and committed: And that Place being ſo viewed and obſerved, afterwards, (to wit) the ſame Day and Year, their Obſervations thereof to ſeveral of the ſaid Traytors and Conſpirators did relate and impart, (to wit) at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid: And you the aforeſaid Charles Cranburne, the ſame Day and Year there, in order the ſaid execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination, and Killing of our ſaid Lord the King, by the Traytors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perform, and commit, adviſedly, knowingly, and traiterouſly did bring and carry between divers of thoſe Traytors and Conſpirators, forward and backward, from ſome to others of them, a Liſt of the Names of divers Men of thoſe who were deſigned and appointed our ſaid Lord the King ſo as aforeſaid by lying in wait to kill and murder; againſt the Duty of the Allegiance of the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided.

How ſay'ſt thou, Robert Lowick, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Lowick. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Lowick. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee good Deliverance. How ſay'ſt thou, Ambroſe Rookwood, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Rookwood. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Rookwood, By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee good Deliverance. Charles Cranburn, How ſay'ſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Cranburne. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Cranburne. By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Cranburne. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip would grant me the Favour for my Wife to come to me in private, and that I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Pen, Ink, and Paper, you Sir John must have; but as to the other, we Holt. muſt conſider of it. Keeper of Newgate, What has been uſual in thoſe Caſes?

Keeper. My Lord, we let no Body come to them in private, but their Council.

L. C. J. That's provided for by the Act that allows them Council: But has it been uſual heretofore to permit any Body elſe to be with them in private; the Wife, or any other Relations?

Keeper. It has not.

L. C. J. It is very dangerous if it ſhould; therefore let him have his Wife come to him in the preſence of the Keeper.

Cranburne. And Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, that you ſhall have.

Cranburne. You don't deny me, my Lord, that I may have my Wife come to me?

L. C. J. No, we don't, but ſhe muſt not be in private with you, for fear of an Eſcape.

Rookwood. I beg the ſame Favour, my Lord, to have my Brother come to me, and Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. You ſhall have the ſame Rule; but you, Keeper, muſt have eſpecial Care who you do permit to come to them, and be private with them; for it is ſtill at your Peril if any ill Accident happens by your Indulgence to them: And yet it is fit they ſhould have all that is reaſonable for preparing for their Defence at their Tryals.

Lowick. And I deſire, my Lord, I may have my Siſter come to me, and the Liberty of her being in private with me.

L. C. J. Your Friends may come to you at ſeaſonable Times, in the preſence of the Keeper; you ſhall have any thing that is reaſonable, but the Safety of the Government muſt be look'd after. Therefore, Keeper of Newgate, take back your Priſoners, and bring them here this Day ſevennight at ſeven a Clock in the Morning, without any other Order.

They ſtaid at the Bar about half an Hour, the Judges conſulting among themſelves about the Precept for the Petty Jury upon a late Act of Parliament which has appointed ſix Days for the Jury to be ſummon'd before they appear to try any Cauſe, and upon the laſt Act in Regulating Tryals in Caſes of High-Treaſon; which requires that the Priſoner ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury duly return'd, at leaſt two Days before his Tryal.

Then the Priſoners were carried away; and the Grand Jury withdrew to conſider of the Evidence againſt Knightley, and in a Quarter of an Hour came back, and being called over, delivered in a Bill to the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, you are content the Court ſhall amend Matter of Form, or falſe Latin in this Indictment, without altering any Matter of Subſtance without your Privity.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Then, Gentlemen, you may go for this Time; and you are to take Notice if there be Occaſion at any Time to call you together, you ſhall have ſufficient Warning given you beforehand. This is Billa Vera againſt Alexander Knightley for High-Treaſon.

Then the Judges reſumed the Debate among themſelves, and at laſt reſolved that there ſhould go three ſeveral Venires for the Petty Jury, returnable this Day ſevennight; one to try between the King and Robert Lowick, the ſecond to try between the King and Ambroſe Rookwood, and a third between the King and Charles Cranburne; becauſe, though the Indictment be againſt them jointly, yet it was a ſeveral Offence in every one of them, and they might ſever in their Challenges, and that would be troubleſome, and therefore it was thought beſt to ſever them in their Tryals; and therefore the Court adjourned for an Hour or ſomething more, while the Precepts for the Jury were preparing, and according to the Adjournment met, and ſigned and ſealed the Precepts, and then adjourned the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer until this Day ſevennight, at ſeven in the Morning.

Die Martis Viceſimo primo Aprilis, Anno Regni Regis Willielmi Tertii Octavo, Annoq; Dom. 1696.

THE Court ſat about Eight a Clock, at which were preſent a great Number of Noblemen, and Perſons of Quality who were in the Commiſſion, and Seven of the Judges; to wit, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Juſtice Nevile, Mr. Juſtice Powel, Mr. Juſtice Eyres, and Mr. Baron Powis.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes. All manner of Perſons that have any thing more to do at this Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, adjourned over to this Day, draw near and give your Attendance. And God ſave the King.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, Sheriffs for the County of Middleſex return the Precepts to you directed, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

The Under Sheriff returned the Precepts.

Cl. of Ar. Mr. Baker, pray, Who do you intend to begin with?

Mr. Baker. With Ambroſe Rookwood.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, You good Men of the County of Middleſex ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoners that are, and ſhall be at the Bar, anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called, every one at the firſt Call, and ſave your Iſſues.

The whole Pannel was called over, and the Appearances of thoſe that anſwered Recorded; and the Defaulters were again called over.

Cl. of Ar. Keeper of Newgate, Set Ambroſe Rookwood to the Bar. (Which was done.) You the Priſoner at the Bar, Ambroſe Rookwood, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, We have a Doubt or two to propoſe to your Lordſhip, in reſpect of the Tryal this Day: But before I offer it, we beg your Favour for a Word in behalf of our ſelves.

My Lord, We are aſſigned of Council, in purſuance of an Act of Parliament, and we hope that nothing which we ſhall ſay in Defence of our Clients, ſhall be imputed to our ſelves. I thought it would have been a Reflection upon the Government and your Lordſhip's Juſtice, if being aſſigned we ſhould have refuſed to appear; 'twould have been a Publication to the World, That we diſtruſted your Candour towards us in our future Practice upon other Occaſions. But, my Lord, there can be no Reaſon for ſuch a Fear, I am ſure I have none; for we muſt acknowledge, we who have been Practiſers at this Bar eſpecially, that there was never a Reign or Government within the Memory of Man, wherein ſuch Indulgence, ſuch Eaſineſs of Temper hath been ſhewn from the Court to the Council, as there always hath been. Never was there ſuch Freedom and Liberty of Debate and Argument allowed to the Bar, and we thank your Lordſhip for the ſame.

My Lord, We come not here to countenance the Practices for which the Priſoner ſtands accuſed, nor the Principles upon which ſuch Practices may be preſumed to be founded; for we know of none, either Religious or Civil, that can warrant or excuſe them. But the Act of Parliament having warranted the appearing of Council for Perſons accuſed to make Defence for them, we hope your Lordſhip will give us leave to make what Objections we can on their behalf.

L. C. J. Holt. Look ye, Sir B. Shower, go on with your Objections; let us hear what you have to ſay.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, It appears to be a Doubt to us, upon this Act of Parliament, whether this Cauſe can be tryed this Day: And if it be a Doubt, we hope, though it ſhould not have that Weight with the Court, that we apprehend it has; yet your Lordſhip will excuſe us, and ſettle it according to your Judgment. The Act requires, That all that ſhall be Accuſed and Indicted for High-

High-Treaſon, whereby any Corruption of Blood may, or ſhall be made to any ſuch Offender or Offenders, or to any the Heir or Heirs of any ſuch Offender or Offenders, or for Miſpriſion of ſuch Treaſon, ſhall have a true Copy of the whole Indictment; and afterwards ſhall have Copies of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff and delivered unto them. And every of them ſo Accuſed and Indicted reſpectively two Days at the leaſt before he or they ſhall be Tryed for the ſame. Now if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to caſt your Eye upon this Venire Facias, and it will appear to be returned but this Day, and that is not according to the Intent of this Law. And it is impoſſible then, if it be as we apprehend it, and put it, that this Tryal ſhould go on at this Time; and that this Conſtruction ſhould be ſo as we ſay; not only the Words, but as we take it, the Intent and Meaning of the Act of Parliament too are for us, that there ought to have been a Copy of the Pannel after the Return two Days before the Tryal. For in the firſt Place, My Lord, the Words are plain: It muſt be a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff. Now though it be a Copy of the Array of the Pannel which we have delivered to us, yet it is not a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors returned; for it is no Return till it come into Court. And the King's Council muſt admit, that in the Caſe of all Writs returnable, it cannot be ſaid that there is a Return, where there is a Writing upon the back, or a Label annexed, till it be actually returned into Court. As in the Caſe of a Fieri Facias, or a Mandamus, an Action for a falſe Return cannot lye, till the Writ be actually returned. For ſuch Action muſt be brought into the County of Middleſex, where the Court reſides, before whom the Return is made, and not in the County where the Sheriff lived that made the Return; for it is not a Return till filed in Court. Now here the Words of the Act are; He ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try him, duly Returned by the Sheriff two Days before the Tryal. Now we humbly inſiſt that the Words duly Returned muſt be antecedent to the having the Copy, or elſe he cannot be ſaid to have a Copy of the Pannel duly Returned. The Act of Parliament does not ſay which ſhall be duly Returned; and therefore there does ariſe a Doubt, whether your Lordſhip will not direct us to have a Copy after the Return made, which is but this Day.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſpare me a Word of the ſame ſide: We take it, that by this Act of Parliament the Jury muſt be duly returned before the Pannel is delivered to us. Now the Return is the Anſwer that is Indorſed upon the Writ with the Pannel annexed, and delivered into Court; for the Return is to the Court, and till it be delivered into Court, it cannot properly be ſaid to be a Return. We acknowledge the Copy of this Pannel has been delivered unto us two or three Days ago. But the Venire being not returned till to Day, we think we have not a Copy of the Pannel within the Intent of, and according to the Act of Parliament. And I deſire to put your Lordſhip this Caſe: This Act of Parliament does likewiſe provide, that the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment five Days before his Tryal, to enable him to conſult with his Council how to plead and defend himſelf; ſuppoſe then a Copy of a Bill that is intended to be preſented to the Grand Jury, be delivered to the Perſon accuſed five Days before the Grand Jury are to meet, and they afterwards meet, and find it, and the Party is brought immediately, and arraign'd upon it: This is a true Copy of the Indictment, yet certainly the Intent of the Act of Parliament is not anſwered, for it was not a true Copy of the Indictment at the Time it was deliver'd. And I take this Caſe to be under the ſame Reaſon. This is not a Pannel duly returned, till now; and therefore by Conſequence we have not that Advantage that this Act of Parliament intended to give us; for which Reaſon we humbly apprehend we ought not to be tryed to Day; which we ſubmit to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, with Submiſſion, this Objection will receive a very plain Anſwer. If I underſtand it aright, they ſay that they ought to have a Copy of the Pannel after it is returned, and that it cannot be ſaid to be duly delivered, according to the Proviſion in this Act of Parliament, till after the Venire facias be duly returned into the Court, and then they are to have it two Days before they are tryed. They ſay the Venire facias is returned but to Day, and ſo the Copy delivered to them, is not purſuant to the Act of Parliament; and ſo they cannot be tryed to Day: This I take to be the Objection. But with Submiſſion, My Lord, it will be plain both by the Words of the Act, and the Reaſon and Intention of it, that there is no Occaſion at all, nor no Neceſſity of having the Writ returned before the Copy of the Pannel be delivered. The Words of the Act of Parliament are theſe; That every Perſon and Perſons who ſhall be accuſed, indicted, and tryed for Treaſon, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, after the 25th of March, 96, ſhall have Copies of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff, and delivered to them two Days before they be tryed. Now, firſt, My Lord, I think it is apparent what the Meaning and Deſign of the Act of Parliament was, that the Priſoner ſhould know two Days before the Tryal, who were the Jury that were to paſs upon him, that he might have an Opportunity to conſider how he ſhould make his Challenges as he thought fit, and Time to enquire into the Qualifications of them, that if there were any particular Ground of Challenge, he might not loſe that Benefit; ſo that if he has a Copy of the Pannel array'd by the Sheriff, which is afterward returned by the Sheriff into Court, and there is no Variation of that Pannel afterwards; then certainly the End and Intent of the Act is entirely purſued; for by that Means the Priſoner has the Names of all the Jury returned, and are afterwards called, and has a full Opportunity of making ſuch Challenges as he thinks fit. And as the Reaſon and Intent of the Act is anſwered by this Conſtruction, ſo the very Words of the Act are anſwered: For it is not ſaid in the Act, that he ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel after it is return'd, but it is ſaid a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff; that is, when the Sheriff has arrayed a Pannel, then he is to have a Copy of that Pannel; and if afterwards the Sheriff return the ſame Pannel into Court, is not this a Copy of the Pannel duly return'd? With Submiſſion it is, and ſufficient to anſwer both the Words and Intention of the Act of Parliament. It is true, My Lord, if the Act of Parliament had ſaid he ſhou'd have a Copy of the Pannel after it was return'd, then we cou'd not have ſaid but that the Objection wou'd hold. But when the Words are general, and it is moſt reaſonable to be interpreted that the Copy is to be delivered when the Array is made, becauſe that anſwers the Intent and End of the Act of Parliament, which was to enable the Priſoner to make his Challenges, we take that to be ſufficient; and if another Interpretation ſhou'd be made, it wou'd render the Tryal in ſuch Caſes liable to all the Miſchiefs in the World, and make it impracticable that any Perſon ſhou'd be try'd; at leaſt it wou'd introduce a new Method of Proceedings that never was practiſed, nor ought to be introduced, unleſs this Act of Parliament by expreſs Words, had appointed and conſtituted ſuch a new Method; and we ſuppoſe your Lordſhip will never make any ſuch Conſtruction, that the Act intended a new Method, unleſs expreſsly declared; for if it were, as they would have it, that the Copy of the Pannel was not to be delivered till after the Return of the Writ, then the Priſoner cannot be tryed upon the Return of the Writ; for upon the return of the Writ, the Jury muſt be brought to the Bar, the Priſoner muſt be brought to the Bar, and adjourned over to a further Time, that in the mean Time a Copy may be delivered to them. I believe that they can never ſhow any Preſident that there was ſuch an Adjournment of a Jury of Life and Death, over to another Day, for a Perſon to have a Copy of the Pannel, to enable him to his Challenges; and either that muſt be the Conſequence, or elſe the Jury muſt not come upon the Return of the Venire facias, but there muſt go a Habeas Corpora, and the Priſoner tryed upon that Habeas Corpora: For firſt there muſt be the Return of the Writ, then the Copy of the Pannel delivered, then the Habeas Corpora returnable another Day; and upon that the Tryal muſt be had: But I believe there can be no Inſtance given of a Tryal for Treaſon upon a Habeas Corpora. Now if the Parliament had intended that they wou'd not have the Copy of the Pannel deliver'd till after the Return of the Venire facias, they would certainly have expreſs'd and provided how the Method of Tryal ſhould have been; that is, that either the Jury ſhould have been adjourn'd over till another Day, or elſe brought to the Bar upon a Habeas Corpora; which is the only way that can be thought of. Indeed, My Lord, I do agree, that if the Sheriff ſhould give a Copy of the Pannel, and afterwards ſhould vary that Pannel, tho' but in one Name, that would not anſwer the End of the Act of Parliament, becauſe the Priſoner is deprived of the Opportunity of knowing the Name of the Perſon that he ſo altered, in Order to his making his Challenges againſt him: But if the Sheriff do return the ſame Perſons that are in that Copy delivered to the Priſoner, then we do, to all Intents and Purpoſes, anſwer the End of the Act of Parliament, and avoid the abſurd Conſtruction that they would make of this Act for the Changing the Method of Tryals, and no Body can well tell what Method ſhou'd be purſued: But certainly if the Act of Parliament intended a new Method ſhou'd be purſued, they wou'd have deſcribed and ſettled what it ſhou'd be.

Mr Sollicitor General. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſpare me a Word of the ſame ſide; my Lord, this is an Objection that has been foreſeen, and I think has been prevented; for, with Submiſſion, I take it the Act has been ſufficiently anſwered both as to the Words, and as to the Intent of it in the Priſoners having the Copy of the Pannel before the Jury be returned; there muſt be ſuch a Thing as a Pannel array'd before the Jury be ſummon'd, and therefore it is ſufficient that the Priſoner have a Copy of that Pannel ſo many Days before his Tryal; which was only intended for that particular Reaſon, that he might be provided ſufficiently to make his legal Challenges. Certainly within the Intent of the Act of Parliament it is well enough if he had but a Copy of the Pannel two Days before the Return of the Writ, provided the Jury was not alter'd that was array'd, nor any other Names put in but thoſe that he had a Copy of before: Now, my Lord, I think this Act of Parliament muſt be taken according to the Intent and Meaning of it, or elſe it will bear hard upon the Priſoner, and harder ſure than it was deſigned it ſhould: This Act ſays, he ſhall have a Copy of his Indictment ſo many Days before his Tryal; now I would fain know whether they would have it conſtrued, that the Copy does not need to be delivered till after Iſſue joyn'd, which muſt be if their Doctrine hold true, that the Act is to be conſtrued according to the ſtrict Letter of it, for Tryal is the Tryal of the Iſſue; what if the Indictment be delivered five Days before the Tryal, tho' after Iſſue joyn'd, it is well enough according to ſuch an Expoſition, for the arraigning of the Priſoner is no Part of the Tryal, and yet it was the Intent of the Parliament that he ſhould have a Copy of the Indictment five Days before he was arraigned, and that for this Reaſon, becauſe he might have ſeveral Pleas to plead and Objections to make before he pleaded the General Iſſue; he might have Pleas in Abatement, which after Plea pleaded of Not guilty he could not have the Advantage of, nor could he afterwards move to quaſh the Indictment, which he might otherwiſe have good Reaſon for, if he had the Copy before he was put to plead; ſo that I take it the Act is to be interpreted every where according to the Intention of it, and the Priſoner at the Bar according to the Intention of the Act, has had a Copy of this Indictment five or ſix Days before his Arraignment, and therefore we have acted according to the Purpoſe and Meaning of the Parliament, and likewiſe he has had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors that are to try him, which is duly returned by the Sheriff, which is likewiſe according to the Act of Parliament: As for what they ſay that even a Copy of the Indictment before it be found would not be good according to this Act; that's true, but the Caſe is not the ſame, nor the Reaſon of the Caſe alike between that and the Pannel of a Jury, becauſe it is ſufficient in Law to make it a good Pannel if it be array'd by the Sheriff before the Jury be ſummoned, for the Sheriff muſt array and compleat his Pannel to let his Bailiff know who muſt be ſummoned, but in the Caſe of an Indictment, tho' a Bill be firſt form'd by the Clerk, yet it is not look'd upon as a formal Indictment in point of Law till it be found by the Jury as their Verdict, and preferred to the Court, and it is not neceſſary that ths Indictment ſhould be formed for the Jury before they find it, for they are properly to make their own Preſentments themſelves; and the ancient Practice was, that they only preſented the Fact, and the Matter was put into Form afterwards by the Court, and in many Caſes it is ſo at this Day, as we have had ſome Inſtances lately; but as to the arraying of a Pannel it always was ſo, and always muſt be ſo array'd by the Sheriff before the Jury ſummoned, and there's the Difference between the giving a Copy of an Indictment and the Copy of a Pannel, the one is taken Notice of in Point of Law to be neceſſary, the other is not. This giving a Copy of the Pannel, my Lord, we ſay is within the Intent of the Act, which was only to enable Perſons accuſed to make their juſt Challenges and that they may as well do when a Copy is delivered after it is array'd by the Sheriff, as, when it is return'd by the Sheriff, and being ſo done, with Submiſſion, it is well done within the Words, and within the Intent of this Act of Parliament.

Mr Conyers. My Lord, the Words of this Act of Parliament are, that they ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them duly returned by the Sheriff and delivered to them, and this two Days before the Tryal: My Lord, that this is the Pannel of the Sheriff of the Jurors that are to try them aſſoon as it is array'd has been obſerv'd already; now it would be a forc'd Conſtruction to conſtrue theſe Words that follow, duly returned by the Sheriff, to be meant, that a Copy ſhould be delivered after the Jury is returned, becauſe that would be a Delay of Juſtice, and keeping off the Tryal longer than was intended by this Act of Parliament, and more than will anſwer the End of this Law, for the End of it was to give the Priſoner all Benefit and Advantage of Exceptions againſt any of thoſe that were to try him, and if he has this Pannel two Days before his Tryal, he has that Benefit the Law intended him. Now, my Lord, as to what has been ſaid of an Indictment, which by this Law he is to have a Copy of too, that is plainly quite another Caſe; for it is not an Indictment till it be found, and ſo anſwers not the Words nor Intention of the Act till found by the Grand Jury, till then it is not a Copy of his Charge, and therefore by no Conſtruction can it be called a Copy of the Indictment. I think I need not trouble your Lordſhip any further in this Matter, becauſe this Objection was foreſeen, and has been already conſidered of by the Court upon the Priſoners Arraignment.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in Anſwer to what Mr. Sollicitor has ſaid, that there is as much Reaſon to expect that the Copy of the Indictment ſhould not be delivered till after Plea pleaded, as that the Pannel ſhould not be delivered till after the Jury return'd, becauſe in the Caſe of the Indictment it is ſaid ſo many Days before the Tryal, and the Tryal cannot be till Iſſue joyn'd, there can be no Weight in that Objection at all; for the Words of the Act are quite differently penned in the Caſe of the Indictment, from what they are in the Caſe of the Pannel, for tho' it be ſaid it ſhould be done five Days before the Tryal, yet it is added, in Order to the adviſing with Council how to plead, which muſt be before Plea pleaded, and therefore it muſt be abſolutely neceſſary to be done before the Arraignment. My Lord, I have propoſed my Doubt, it may have Conſequences on the one Side and the other, we ſubmit intirely unto your Lordſhip's Judgment, it is a new Law, and never has received any Opinion; the Words of it are, duly return'd by the Sheriff, and the Queſtion is, Whether a Copy of the Pannel upon the Array before it be return'd be a Copy of the Pannel duly return'd, tho' the ſame Pannel be afterwards duly returned.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, Mr. Attorney General owns, that the Pannel after it is arrayed may be amended and altered by the Sheriff, and it was never intended by this Act of Parliament, that any Copy of the Pannel ſhould be delivered to the Priſoner but of thoſe Men that were really returned, ſo that we take it we ought to have it two Days after the Return and before the Tryal, for certainly it muſt be a Copy of the Men returned, which if the Sheriff may alter at any Time before the Return, the Intent of the Act of Parliament can never be anſwered by any Copy but what is a true Copy of the Return. Mr. Conyers would anſwer the Objection that I made about a Copy of the Indictment by this, that it is not an Indictment till it be found by the Jury, but I think it is no Anſwer to our Objection at all, tho' it be but a Copy of the Bill intended to be preſented to the Grand Jury, yet if the Grand Jury afterwards find it is as true a Copy of the Indictment, as this is a Copy of the Jury intended to be returned, and afterwards returned. As to what they ſay, that this will introduce a new Method of Tryal, contrary to all Form or Proceedings, that can be no Objection neither; for if it be ſo, we can't tell how to help it, the Parliament have thought fit to have it ſo, and we muſt ſubmit to take it as the Law has made it: If there be a Neceſſity for a Habeas Corpora upon the Proviſion made in this Act, ſo it muſt be, for we muſt take the Law as it is. We ſubmit our Objection to your Lordſhip; we think we have not had the Benefit of this Law.

Mr Comper. Surely, my Lord, what Mr Phipps has now ſaid has no Weight in it; that becauſe the Sheriff had it in his Power to alter the Pannel before it was returned, that therefore this is not now a true Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try the Priſoner, duly returned by the Sheriff; which are the Words in the Act. It is true, if the Sheriff had in fact altered the Pannel from what it was, and return'd it ſo altered into Court, no doubt of it the Priſoner would be very well intitled to make this Objection, that he had not a Copy of the Pannel, or the Names of the Jurors that were ſummoned to try him; but now we can aver, that we have purſued this Act of Parliament literally; for in Anſwer to their Objection, we may ask this Queſtion of them upon the Words of the Act, Have you not had a true Copy of the Names of thoſe that are to try you, and are duly returned by the Sheriff for that Purpoſe; and was not that Copy delivered unto you above two Days ago? They cannot ſay they have not had it ſo, and if they cannot ſay ſo, then both the Words and Meaning of the Act of Parliament are in every reſpect anſwered; if when the Jury come to be called the Priſoner finds the Pannel to be altered, he has Reaſon to object, and will have the Benefit of the Objection, that he has not that Advantage which the Law intended him, but till that prove to be the Fact, we think here is a full Compliance with this Law.

Mr Soll. Gen. Sir Barth. Shower miſtakes my Objections about the Copy of the Indictment, for we ſay, if the Intent of the Act of Parliament be complied with, it is ſufficient, eſpecially where the Words are any way doubtful; according to the Words of this Act of Parliament, a Copy of the Indictment need to be delivered but five Days before the Tryal; but it appearing that the Intention of theſe Law-makers was, that he ſhould

ſhould have a Copy of the Indictment to enable him to plead to it if he had Cauſe, therefore tho' the Words be before the Tryal, we have taken it that he ſhould have a Copy five Days before his Arraignment, and ſo we have complied with the Meaning of the Law in that point, as we have alſo in this, which was, we take it, only to enable the Priſoner to make his Challenges, and if that be done two Days before his Tryal, with Submiſſion, it fully anſwers this Law.

L. C. J. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Counc. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then look you, Sir B. Shower, as to this Point that you now inſiſt upon, we have had it under Conſideration heretofore; we were here this Day ſeven-night, and then we did conſider in what Method we ſhould proceed, ſo that the Priſoner might have the Benefit intended him by this Act of Parliament: The Act of Parliament does deſign in the firſt place, that every Priſoner that is to be tryed for High Treaſon ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment, at leaſt five Days before the Tryal, that I think was all that the Makers of this Act of Parliament intended at the firſt; but then there being ſubſequent Words, which ſhew the Reaſon why they gave him the Copy ſo long before the Tryal; which is, that he might adviſe with his Council what to plead; theſe Words we conceive have given the Priſoner a further Time than what was originally intended, therefore we have thought it neceſſary that the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment five Days before he be arraigned, which is five Days before he was put to plead; and your Client, the Priſoner at the Bar, has had the Benefit of this Act in that reſpect before we arraigned him; then after he has pleaded, the Queſtion was, when he was to have a Copy of the Pannel: Now the Deſign of this Act of Parliament was, That the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of the Pannel two Days before his Tryal, in Order that he might conſider of the Perſons that were to try him; that he might inform himſelf of their Qualities, Tempers, and Diſpoſitions; that ſo he might make uſe of the Benefit the Law gives him of Challenging Five and Thirty, without ſhewing any Canſe, if he did not like the Men, and as many more as he ſhould think he had good cauſe to challenge: Now in this Caſe, the whole Deſign of this Act of Parliament is anſwered, for he has had a Copy of the Pannel, as you your ſelves acknowledge, two Days before the Day of his Tryal, ſo that he has the full Benefit that the Act of Parliament intended; he is by this Copy as well enabled to make his Challenges as the Law deſign'd he ſhould be, and has had the ſame Time allowed him that the Act of Parliament meant he ſhould have; then ſuppoſing the Deſign of this Act of Parliament be fully anſwered and complied with in the Caſe. The next Queſtion is, whether the Words of the Act are ſatisfied, for we would be very loth, in a Caſe of this Nature, where an Act of Parliament intends a Favour to a Priſoner that ſtands at the Bar for his Life, to abridge him of any Part of that Favour which the very Words of the Act would allow him, tho' the Intent of the Act of Parliament were anſwered otherwiſe: Now in the firſt place it is obſervable, that the Act of Parliament does not ſay, that the Priſoner ſhall have a Copy of the Return, nor does it ſay, he ſhall have a Copy from the Court, but he ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors duely returned that are to try him; now if the Sheriff array his Pannel ſeveral Days before the Tryal upon the Venire facias, and does give him a Copy of that very Pannel, which Pannel is afterwards returned in Court. Has not he then a Copy of the Pannel duely returned? Does not this anſwer all the Words of the Act? For you your ſelves ſay that it is not ſaid in the Words of the Act, that the Copy ſhall be delivered after the Pannel returned, nor does there need a Copy of the very Return. Surely we muſt not carry it farther than the Words, if the Meaning be complied with, and we think this anſwers both Words and Meaning: It is a Copy of the Pannel, and a Copy of that Pannel that's duely returned. Now to make another Conſtruction would indeed not only alter the uſual Courſe of Tryals, but be contradictory to the very Proceſs it ſelf. We are by the Courſe of Law to award Proceſs to ſummon a Jury to appear at a certain Time, to try the Iſſue joined between the King and the Priſoner; and yet when we have done this, and the Jury thereupon are ſummoned and do appear, they may go as they came; for the Iſſue cannot be try'd, becauſe after the Return, the Priſoner muſt have a Copy of the Pannel two Days before he can be tried. I do think the Deſign of the Act of Parliament, and the very Words of the Act are fully ſatisfied in giving a Copy of the Pannel two Days before the Return. We had this Matter under our Conſideration before, and upon Debate among our ſelves, we did think fit to award the Precept returnable this Day, and reſolved to try the Priſoner this Day, unleſs better Reaſons were offered us to alter our Opinion, and we are not ſatisfied, that any ſuch better Reaſon has been given, but that this Tryal ought to go on, the Priſoner having the full Benefit that was deſigned him by this Act of Parliament. And the Giving a Copy of the Pannel that is return'd, tho' before the Return, ſufficiently ſatisfies the Words of the Act, no other Conſtruction can be made without great Abſurdities: This is my Opinion.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I hope we ſhall be excuſed for our Client, we have another Doubt to propoſe to the Court.

L. C. J. You have had my Opinion upon this Point, if my Lords and Brothers are of another Opinion, they will tell you.

Judges. No, my Lord, we are all of the ſame Opinion.

L. C. J. My Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, and my Brothers are all of the ſame Opinion.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we ſay we have another Doubt to propoſe upon this Act of Parliament: It is a new one, and never put in Practice till now, and therefore we hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to excuſe us, if we offer our Objections, becauſe there has yet never been a Determination about it, and we are aſſigned of Council by your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Never make Apologies, Sir Bartholomew, for it is as lawful for you to be of Council in this Caſe, as it is in any other Caſe where the Law allows Council. It is expected you ſhould do your beſt for thoſe you are aſſigned for, as it is expected in any other Caſe that you do your Duty for your Client.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, our Exception is this, we ſay that this Tryal cannot go on at this Time, upon this Act of Parliament, becauſe we have no true Copy of the whole Indictment, it does not appear, in the Copy we have delivered to us, before whom it was taken, or whether it was taken at all, or in what Place it was taken; it ſays only Middleſex in the Margent, and then Juratores pro Domino Rege preſentant: That might be before the Juſtices of the Peace at the Quarter-Seſſions, or it might be at the Monthly Seſſions at Hicks's Hall, or it might be at the Seſſions at the Old Baily; or it might be before Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, as perhaps it really was; but non conſtat where it was taken, nor how it comes hither: It might be before your Lordſhip here, as we believe it was, but this Copy not letting us know where and how it was taken, we think we have not the Benefit of this Law; for the Party accuſed is by this Act of Parliament to have a Copy to adviſe with Council, that he may be enabled to plead. And that is the Reaſon why the Words of this Act are ſo penned, that he ſhall have a Copy of the whole Indictment, which we cannot plead to, unleſs we know where it was taken, if we ſhould have Occaſion to plead any ſpecial Matter. And beſides, my Lord, there is another Reaſon why we ſhould have the whole Indictment to enable us to plead, becauſe if we had the Caption, it might perhaps appear, that the Indictment was taken before the Time of the Fact alledged in the Indictment, and then that would make it vicious; it might be before the 9th of February, when this Treaſon is ſaid to be committed, and then we ought not to be brought to Tryal. Now the Deſign of this Act of Parliament, in giving the Priſoner a Copy of the Indictment ſo long before the Tryal, was not only to enable him to make his Defence upon the Tryal, but alſo to adviſe with Council to plead; for ſo the Words are, the better to enable him to plead. Now we ſay to anſwer this End, it is neceſſary we ſhould have a Copy of the whole Indictment, as it ſtands before your Lordſhip in Court. And another Reaſon is this, it is no Indictment, unleſs it be preſented by the Jury, as their Inquiſition upon Oath, unto ſome Court that has Juriſdiction of the Matter: What we have delivered to us is only a Copy of a Bill, as to be delivered to a Grand Jury, to be found; non conſtat, that it is found. Now the Intent of the Act of Parliament being to give the Priſoner this Advantage to enable him to plead, he may have ſeveral Pleas, of which he might take a legal Advantage if he had a Copy of the whole, which he knows not how to come at now; and in truth it is very neceſſary, becauſe if he be tried upon an Indictment found in another County, then theſe Commiſſioners have not a legal Authority to try him; and if the Tryal ſhould go on, and he be acquitted, he is ſubject to be indicted and tried again, and never can relieve himſelf by the Acquittal upon ſuch an Indictment before Perſons that had no Authority to try him. I doubt he can never plead the Acquittal, becauſe he cannot make out that he was duely try'd and acquitted: And for theſe Reaſons we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether we have had the Benefit of this Law, in having a Copy of the whole Indictment to enable us to plead; and if we have not, till we have that Benefit, we humbly conceive this Tryal ought not to go on.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, the Queſtion is whether the Style of the Court, the Perſons before whom it was taken, and to whom the Preſentment is made, the Time when it was taken, and the Place where, ought not to appear in the Indictment. This Law requiring that the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of the whole Indictment to enable him to plead; for if it ſhould happen, that the Indictment was taken before Perſons that had no Juriſdiction, then I believe it will not be denied but that the Priſoner might plead to the Juriſdiction, and there might be ſeveral other Pleas that he might take Advantage of. I would deſire to know of the King's Council, whether ever they ſaw a Copy of an Indictment given in Evidence, or pleaded without the Caption. It is not a true Copy without it; there ought to be the Time, the Place, and the Style of the Court before whom it is taken.

Mr At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think I need ſay no more to this Objection, than that it does not come at a proper Time; for with Submiſſion, if the Priſoner will upon this Act ſay he has not had a Copy of his Indictment to enable him to plead, he ought to have taken the Advantage of it before he does plead, that is the proper Time for him to object this Matter to the Court, for if after he has had ſuch a Copy as this Priſoner has had, he does ſubmit to plead, with Submiſſion it is too late to come at his Tryal and make this Objection, he cannot be received to make it after.

L. C. J. That is a full Anſwer, Mr Attorney.

Mr At. Gen. I think it is, my Lord, with Submiſſion, not that we would wave giving other Anſwers to it, if it were in a proper Time; but the Method of proceeding muſt be, and we think we have no Occaſion at this Time to ſay any Thing more to this Objection.

L. C. J. No, no, that is a full Anſwer in this Point, for look ye, you that are of Council for the Priſoner, when once you have pleaded, you admit you have had a Copy; for the Copy was given you to enable you to plead, and when you have pleaded, you have paſs'd by all Advantage that you could have from the Copy, as to any Plea that you can make: For it's taken for granted ye had a Copy to enable you to plead, and to adviſe with your Council about it; ſince you did plead, and do not inſiſt upon it at the Time of your Arraignment that you had not ſuch Copy.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we have propoſed one Doubt, and we humbly ſubmit it to the Court.

Mr Sol. Gen. It was their own Fault that this Objection was not made in Time.

L. C. J. That Doubt of yours may ſerve at another Time, but now certainly it is quite out of Time.

Mr Sol. Gen. Nay, my Lord, even upon the Arraignment that would not ſerve their Turn neither.

L. C. J. We will not enter upon that now, pray go on to ſwear the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. You the Priſoner, look to your Challenges, as I told you before. Cryer, call Sir Jeremy Sambrook.

Cryer. Vouz, avoz.

Sir B. Shower. Mr Rookwood, you are to make your own Challenges.

Rookwood. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Then hold Sir Jeremy the Book.

Sir Jer. Sambrook. My Lord, I am uncapable of ſerving upon this Jury, for I have been deaf this ſeveral Years, this Dozen Years; I cannot hear what is ſaid in Court, though I am now ſo near the Court, I could not hear what your Lordſhip ſaid; nor what was ſaid at the Bar. I have a Certificate here, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to have it read; and moſt of the Perſons of Quality here about the Court know it to be true.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, I am afraid it is ſo.

L. C. J. Nay, if it be ſo, it is not fitting that he ſhould be upon the Jury, when he can't hear what's ſaid: You muſt excuſe Sir Jeremy Sambrook. Go on to the next.

Cl. of Ar. George Ford.

Cryer. Vous avoz.

Cl. of Ar. Look upon the Priſoner.

Rookwood. I challenge him.

L. C. J. Mr Ford, you muſt not go away, for you are upon another Pannel, wherein you may be employed, tho' you are now challenged.

Cl. of Ar. William Underhill.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Withers.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Powell.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. Then ſwear Mr Powell.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner. You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Trench.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolſe.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Marſh.

Rookw. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Hooper. (He did not anſwer.)

L. C. J. Did Mr Hooper appear?

Cl. of Ar. Yes, my Lord, he is mark'd as appearing.

L. C. J. Then you ought to call him again, and ſet a Fine upon his Head.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call Samuel Hooper.

Cryer. Samuel Hooper, come into Court and give your Attendance upon Pain of ten Pound, for the Court has recorded your Appearance.

Cl. of Arr. John Hall.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Roberts.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Partridge.

Bookw. I challenge him.

Sir B. Shower. How many has he challenged Mr Hardeſty?

Cl. of Ar. I will tell you Sir Bartholomew, —— he has challenged 24.

Sir B. Shower. Well then, go on, Sir.

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Noble.

Rook.

Rook. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, count them. Samuel Powell,——

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Noble.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn were theſe.

Samuel Powell,
Arthur Bailey,
John Webber,
George Tredway,
Timothy Lennoy,
John Harris,
George Carter,
William Atley,
John Marſh,
Samuel Freebody,
Daniel Byfeild, and Benjamin Noble.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr Phipps, your Objection upon the Indictment ſlipt me, and therefore I would ſpeak to it now: You ſaid it might be as well a Copy of the Indictment before it be found, as well as this a Copy of the Pannel before it be returned. Now that can't be, for an Indictment is not an Indictment till it be found, it is only a Writing prepared for the Eaſe of the Jury, and for Expedition; it is nothing till it is found, for the Jury make it an Indictment by finding it, they may alter what they pleaſe, or refuſe it abſolutely. And if the Jury, upon examining the Witneſſes, would only preſent a Matter of Fact, with Time and Place, the Court might cauſe it to be drawn up into Form, without carrying it to the Jury: Again, There needs no Billa vera; for that is only the Jury's Owning that which the Court has prepared and drawn up for them: But a Pannel is a Pannel when it is arrayed, before it be returned, and a Copy of the Pannel given before it be returned, is a Copy of the Pannel returned, if it be afterwards returned, as it muſt.

Sir Barth. Shower. But, my Lord, that Notion ſtrengthens our Objection that we laſt made, that makes it neceſſary that we ſhould have a Copy of the Caption, as well as the other Part, to make it a true Copy of the whole Indictment.

L. C. J. That's another Thing, we will talk of that another Time; but I ſpeak of this only as to his Objection which ſlipt my Memory, becauſe I would have nothing remain unanſwered.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, when the Bill is found, the Copy that we delivered before is as much a true Copy of the Indictment as our Copy of the Pannel is a Copy of the Jury returned.

L. C. J. A Pannel is a Pannel when it is arrayed, but a Bill is not an Indictment till it be found; one cannot ſay a Man indictatus exiſtit, till it be found; all that we ſay of it before it be found, is that there was quædam Billa preferred to the Grand Jury, and if the Jury bring it in Ignoramus, whereby they diſown the Preſentment, it is cancelled, and there is no Record of it, nor nothing, only a Memorandum in the Clerk's Book perhaps, that ſuch a Thing was. Well, go on.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, before this Inqueſt be taken, of the High Treaſon whereof Ambroſe Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

Cl. of Ar. Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Ambroſe Rookwood, of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. for that he, together with Chriſtopher Knightley, not yet taken, Robert Lowick, and Charles Cranburne, and divers others, falſe Traytors, &c.——prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis—— and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and upon his Arraignment hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods ot Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him not guilty, ye are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Mr Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, this Indictment that has been read to yon, does charge the Priſoner with High Treaſon for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, for endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, and to ſubject the People of England to the Slavery of Lewis the French King, and for this End the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner at the Bar did privately meet with ſeveral falſe Traytors, to conſult how they might compaſs the Death of the King, and commit thoſe other Treaſons; and that the 10th of February, at Covent Garden, in this County, it was agreed among them, that they ſhould get together Forty Horſemen whereof the Priſoner at the Bar was to be one, and they were to lie in Ambuſh, and ſet upon the King in his Coach upon his Return from going abroad; ſome were to attack the Coach, others to attack the Guards, and there were to kill the King in the Coach: And the Indictment does likewiſe charge the Priſoner with gathering together Horſes, and providing Arms for this Purpoſe. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, he hath pleaded not guilty; we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove the Fact, and when we have ſo done, we do not at all doubt but you'll do your Duty.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, before the Witneſſes are called we have a Doubt to propoſe to your Lordſhip upon this Act of Parliament, and that is, whether we are to take our Exceptions to this Indictment before the Evidence be opened or given?

L. C. J. It ſhould properly be before the Jury is ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. The Words of the Act, my Lord, is before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. That Act provides, That if you do not take the Advantage of it, before the Evidence given, given, you ſhall not move that in Arreſt of Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. It only ſays before Evidence given, and no Evidence has yet been given.

L. C. J. But you are certainly very irregular in point of Practice, no Body ever took Exceptions to an Indictment after the Jury was ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhips pleaſes to let the Words be read of the Act of Parliament, they are theſe, That no Indictment ſhall be quaſh'd, unleſs Exception be taken in the Court where the Tryal ſhall be, before any Evidence given in Court upon that Indictment. Which, we ſay, ſtrongly implies that the Law-makers thought it might be done at any Time before the Evidence was given in open Court, beſides that the Law takes Notice that after Conviction it ſhould be of no Avail, it would have been a very improper Expreſſion before Evidence given in open Court, if it had meant before the Jury were ſworn and charged; for the Word Evidence ſuppoſes the Tryal commenced: If they had intended it otherwiſe, that is, that it ſhould be before the Jury is ſworn, they would have expreſs'd it to be done at the Arraignment; but mentioning it to be done in the Court where the Tryal is to be, before Evidence given, that ſuppoſes the Indictment to be at Iſſue before the Party needs to make his Exceptions. Therefore, my Lord, we hope we are regular in offering our Exceptions now.

L. C. J. Pray, what ſay you to it, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think they are no Way regular; for, with Submiſſion, I take it, that though this Act of Parliament has indulged them in ſeveral Things which were not allowable by Law before, yet as to this Part they are not allowed to take Exceptions to the Indictment, otherwiſe than they could before this Act was paſs'd: Nay, ſo far from that, that if your Lordſhip looks into the Act, you find they are reſtrain'd in this Point from an Advantage that they had before, that is they ſhall not move any ſuch Things as are there mention'd, after Verdict, in Arreſt of Judgment: So that this Part is reſtrictive to the Priſoner, and takes away ſome Advantage that he had before; which was, moving in Arreſt of Judgment after Verdict; but it leaves the making Exceptions as to any Time before the Verdict, as it was before, which was before Plea pleaded, but not after the Jury ſworn: For it cannot be denied that in point of Practice, ſuch a Thing as this that is now offered could not have been done before the Act. I would be glad to know whether they can ſhew any Precedent of any ſuch Thing as they now contend for. They ſay, the Words of the Act are, Exception muſt be taken before Evidence given; but that muſt be taken at ſuch a Time as they might by the Courſe of Law do it before: For when the Jury is ſworn, they muſt give a Verdict, and I do not know how they can be diſcharged without giving a Verdict; therefore unleſs the Act had given Directions for a particular Manner of Proceeding in this Matter, which it has not done, your Lordſhip will not, I preſume, do it in any other Manner than as it was before the Act made; and if there be no Precedent to be ſhown of any ſuch Thing as this, of taking Exception to an Indictment after the Jury ſworn and charged with the Priſoner; then there is no Power in this Act of Parliament, given to them to take Exceptions to this Indictment at this Time, we take it the Motion is very irregular upon all Accounts.

Mr Sol. Gen. My Lord, we firſt ſay, that it is not proper for them to make any ſuch Motion as this upon this Act of Parliament, till they tell us what their Exception is, that we may ſee whether it be within the Words and Meaning of this Act of Parliament. The only Thing now that is proper for us to conſider, is the Iſſue joined, and the Inquiry whether the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of the High-Treaſon of which he is indicted, to which Indictment he has pleaded not guilty: That's the Thing that is now before your Lordſhip to be tried, they have Room for Exceptions to the Indictment afterwards, for ſome Exceptions I mean, (I do not know what their Exceptions are) but if they be ſuch as may be taken after the Verdict, then I am ſure they are irregular now in their Motion, and they can ſhew no Precedent, when it was done after Plea pleaded and Iſſue joined, as it is in this Caſe.

Mr Conyers. The Advantage that the Act gives the Priſoner, of having a Copy of his Indictment ſo long before Tryal, is to enable him to plead, or to take Exceptions to quaſh it; but I never heard a Motion to quaſh an Indictment after a Jury is charged to hear the Evidence, Certainly they ought to do it before Plea pleaded, and not now to come to make a Motion to quaſh the Indictment, after they have pleaded, and the Jury ſworn: Therefore we ſubmit it, upon the conſtant Practice in like Caſes, to the Judgment of the Court.

Sir B. Shower. In Anſwer to that which Mr Attorney has ſaid, That it is an improper Time; I thought truly I had moved it for the Advantage and Eaſe of the King's Council, that they might not proceed upon this Tryal, when perhaps after all their Trouble, the Foundation, which is the Indictment, may fail. I have a great many Exceptions to the Indictment; they ſay we ſhould name what our Exceptions are: I will acquaint them with them, as faſt as I can, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, the Indictment is very looſe and uncertain.

L. C. J. Certainly the Motion is irregular in point of Practice.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we were afraid we ſhould be excluded from taking theſe Exceptions after the Evidence given.

L. C. J. So you are by the expreſs Words of the Act.

Sir B. Shower. Then certainly we may do it before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. But the Act does not ſay, Ye ſhall do it at any Time before the Evidence given, eſpecially in ſuch an irregular Manner, after Iſſue joined, and the Jury ſworn. Suppoſe Mr Attorney had given ſome Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, I agree we had been without the Words; therefore I now move it before the Evidence, becauſe the Act of Parliament has given me a Liberty to do it before the Evidence given: For the Law having given this Liberty to the Priſoner, to make ſuch Exceptions within ſuch a Time, your Lordſhip will not reſtrain us from making Uſe of that Liberty further than the Law has reſtrained, but we may make Uſe of our Exceptions before the Evidence given, either either to induce your Lordſhip to quaſh the Indictment, or the Jury to find us not Guilty, as we hope your Lordſhip will direct them to do: For what is more common upon Indictments after the Jury are ſworn, than if Facts appear upon the Record not to be ſufficiently alledged, the Court will direct the Jury to find the Party not guilty. We think this Act does give us this Liberty, otherwiſe I know not to what Purpoſe it was made, the very Meaning ſeems to be, that the Exceptions of the Counſel for the Priſoner might be of Prejudice to the King; and therefore it ſays, After the King's Evidence given, and the Fact diſcovered, no ſuch Exception ſhall be made: Therefore we muſt make it before the Evidence given, otherwiſe this Act of Parliament that was deſigned in Favour of the Priſoner, will prove a very great Hardſhip upon him, eſpecially in Caſe of an imperfect Indictment, as we apprehend this is, and he will be in a worſe Condition than ever he was; he muſt take his Exceptions now or not at all. The Act ſays, He is not to take it after Evidence given; and by Conſtruction the King's Council would have it, That he ſhould not give it before: And conſequently he has no Time at all to give it.

L. C. J. Have not you had Time to do it before now Sir Bartholomew Shower, certainly you had? You had Time this Day Sevennight, when you were arraign'd; you have had your Opportunity if you would have taken it; the Jury are now charg'd, the Indictment is opened, they have been told what they are to enquire of, and now you would break in and take Exceptions to the Indictment.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, This is a new Act of Parliament, it ſays we ſhall take our Exceptions before the Evidence given; which we take it, is any Time before the Evidence given; and if your Lordſhip will not allow us to do it now, it may be we may loſe the Benefit of it abſolutely.

L. C. J. It is one Queſtion whether we ſhall allow it or no, and another Queſtion whether you can claim it or no: Certainly it is an irregular Motion, and the like of it was never offered in any Caſe before, be it Criminal or Civil: For if it be a Criminal Caſe that is not Felony or Treaſon, when the Iſſue comes to Tryal upon an Indictment, Did you ever know any Exception taken to the Indictment after the Jury were charged? Certainly it is contrary to all Practice; and it is not fair, the Court is not well dealt with, you have had an Opportunity before, and will you now put the Court and the Jury to ſo great deal of Trouble, to ſtay till the Jury be called over, the Priſoner called to his Challenges, he has challenged Thirty four, the Jury is ſworn, the Indictment is read to them, the Charge given them, the Council have opened the Indictment, and now when the Buſineſs is only to try the Iſſue with which the Jury are charg'd, you come to turn us quite round, by taking Exceptions to the Indictment.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, We take it the Act gives us this Time to do it in.

L. C. J. You know you had another Time more proper to do it in.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, If we have not time now, then this Clauſe, with humble Submiſſion, ſignifies nothing at all.

L. C. J. The Clauſe was made in this Reſpect, to your Diſadvantage, becauſe you ſhould have a Copy of the Indictment, whereby you might have an Opportunity to adviſe with Council, that they might inſtruct you how to plead, and to take any manner of Exception before Plea pleaded, it ought to be before the Tryal, and now becauſe of this Advantage, it provides that you ſhall take your Exceptions before the Tryal, and not move them in Arreſt of Judgment; that is the Meaning of the Act.

Mr Phipps. Then, my Lord, there needed no Time at all to be mentioned in the Act, but have left it as it was at Common-Law.

L. C. J. Yes, Yes, there did need a Time to be limited, for this Clauſe was made I ſay in your Diſadvantage, in depriving the Priſoner of the Benefit of ſuch kind of Exceptions in Arreſt of Judgment, becauſe of the Advantage that was given in the former Part of the Act, where you had Time given you to make your Exceptions, for which End you are to have a Copy of the Indictment five Days before you are called to plead.

Sir B. Shower. We could not come before, my Lord, as we apprehend, becauſe the Words of the Act are before Evidence given.

L. C. J. But I tell you, this Clauſe was not for your Benefit, but for your Diſadvantage.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, What we preſs, ariſes from the very Words of the Act of Parliament, if the Meaning of the Law-makers was as the King's Council now contend to have it; they would never have uſed thoſe Words before Evidence given in open Court, but have ſaid they ſhould have had no Advantage of the Exception, unleſs it were before Plea pleaded; it does not ſay it ſhall be after the Verdict, or before the Verdict, but before the Evidence given: Now if they had meant what theſe Gentlemen ſay, they would have appointed it to be before the Verdict, which would have included the Tryal; becauſe then it had been like the Penning of other Acts of Parliament, the Statutes of Jeotailes and the like, which ſay, That after a Verdict, ſuch and ſuch Exceptions ſhall not Arreſt a Judgment: But if they can ſhew me any Statute that is penn'd like this, they give me an Anſwer: All thoſe Statutes are, That no Judgment ſhall be arreſted or delay'd upon ſuch or ſuch Exceptions after a Verdict: But here it ſays, They ſhall not arreſt Judgment, unleſs the Exception be taken before Evidence given in open Court. My Lord, We ſubmit it to you, we think the Law-makers did intend ſomewhat by that particular Way of Expreſſion, different from all other Acts of Parliament; and truly if it be not as we offer to your Lordſhip, we think it can have no Meaning at all.

Mr Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we think it is very plain what the Parliament meant by this Clauſe in this Act, the Deſign was, to reſtrain the Priſoner from moving in Arreſt of Judgment, for Miſ-ſpelling, or falſe Latin, or little Matters of Form, if he did not move it in a proper Time, having ſuch a Liberty allow'd him, as to have a Copy of the Indictment ſo many Days before he was compelled to plead: They inſiſt upon it, that the Words are, Before Evidence given; It is ſo: But what can be the Meaning of that? It muſt be at ſuch Time as the Law allows; it is not making a new Method of Tryal; you ſhall take Exception before the Evidence, that is, before the Tryal, for it can never be intended, that they meant to alter the Courſe, and let the Council break in between the Time of the Jury's being ſworn, and the Evidence given, that by no Law could ever have been done before.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mr. Attorney, when would you have us do it?

Mr Att. Gen. Regularly before Plea pleaded, at leaſt-wiſe before the Jury be ſworn.

L. C. J. Undoubtedly this is not regular, it is contrary to all the Courſe of Practice, it is not fair Dealing with the Court. But then there is another Conſideration in the Caſe, that I would have you think upon: If ſo be this had been at a Tryal by Niſi Prius, then the Judge of Niſi Prius is only to try the Iſſue; but now here the very Record is before us, and we are Judges of the Record, as well as we are to aſſiſt the Jury in Trying the Iſſue. Now take it in any other Caſe of the like Nature, Suppoſe a Tryal at the Bar in any Civil Cauſe, though this be contrary to Practice, and the Court not fairly dealt with, yet when we have the Record before us, and find an Error in the Record, cannot we quaſh the Indictment and diſcharge the Jury. That is the Queſtion, Mr. Attorney, though I muſt confeſs, I do not know that it has been practicable.

Mr Att. Gen. No, my Lord, in a Caſe of Treaſon, where the Jury are once charg'd, they are to give a Verdict, they muſt either acquit or convict.

Sir B. Shower. It was done in Whitebread's Caſe.

Mr Att. Gen. But I know what has been uſually thought in that Caſe, and I believe they cannot ſhew me another.

L. C. J. Nay, that this is a very irregular Motion, is very plain.

Mr Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, you muſt take it as the Law was before this Act, for this Clauſe does nothing for the Priſoner, but is againſt him.

L. C. J. I know it is not for the Advantage of the Priſoner, therefore I put it as a Caſe in an Action, or an Indictment, as the Law was before, whether this being a Tryal in the ſame Court where the Indictment was found, and we find an Inſufficiency in the Record before us, whether we cannot quaſh the Indictment.

Mr Soll. Gen. Your Lordſhip mentions Civil Actions, with Submiſſion, nothing of that kind could be done after once the Cauſe came to Tryal, but in Criminal Cauſes according to the Courſe of Practice, which will always be the Law till particularly altered, I believe no Body can pretend, that after Iſſue joyn'd, and a Jury charg'd, any one can move to quaſh the Indictment. I think I have heard it often ſaid in this Court, that in Capital Caſes, as High Treaſon, you may put in a Plea in Abatement of, but not a Motion to quaſh an Indictment; I am ſure it was diſallowed where I moved to quaſh an Indictment of Murder, let them but ſhow any Preſident of this Nature.

Sir B. Shower. We will ſhow you, tho' this is the firſt Caſe upon this Act of Parliament, therefore to ſhow any practice upon it would be very hard to require of us.

L. C. J. But can you ſhow it before this Clauſe in this Act of Parliament, which, as I told you, is not for your Advantage, it does not give that Liberty that you deſire.

Sir B. Shower. All the Clauſes in this Act of Parliament ſhow'd their Intention was this, that the Senſe of the Law-makers was, that we ſhould have this Liberty at any Time before Evidence given, for if there be ſuch Words as ſhow'd they thought it might be quaſh'd at any Time, tho' they were miſtaken in the Practice, yet we ſhall have the Liberty that they intended us, and the Wording of this Act ſhows, that the Parliament thought it might be done after the Tryal begun before Evidence given, becauſe they reſtrain us from taking thoſe Exceptions after the Evidence given, and it is no Prejudice to the King at all really, it is rather for the Advantage of the Proſecution, becauſe there is none of the Evidence diſcloſed, and therefore if the Indictment ſhould be found faulty, ſtill the Evidence remains undiſcovered upon another Indictment; and I have often heard it ſaid at this Bar in Caſes of Indictments for Felony or Treaſon, as Murder, or the like; if any one did come as amicus curiæ, and acquainted the Court, that they were going to proceed upon an erroneous Record, or give an erroneous Judgment, or do any other erroneous Act, he ought to be received with Kindneſs, becauſe he would prevent a Wrong doing.

L. C. J. That is in the proper Time not to interrupt the Tryal when the Jury is once ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. We are ready to offer our Exceptions, and we hope it is no Prejudice at all to the King before the Evidence of the Fact is given.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, I perceive that this Clauſe, as they would have it, is intended to prevent us from moving that in Arreſt of Judgment, which we could have moved before, and ties us up to do it before Evidence given; now I would fain know, if we could not before this Act move in Arreſt of Judgment, for miſ-ſpelling, or falſe Latin, or improper Latin.

Mr Att. Gen. You might, no Doubt of it.

Mr Phipps. They ſay we might; why then, if we could have a Time to move it after the Verdict, and that Time is abridg'd by the Act of Parliament, which directs that it ſhall be before Evidence given in open Court, ſure we may take any Time before the Evidence given, and ſhall not be reſtrain'd further than the Letter of the Law has reſtrain'd us, for this Act was intended for the Benefit of the Subject, and ought to be conſtrued as much in their Favour as the Letter of it will permit.

Mr Att. Gen. No doubt of it, it is to be done before Evidence given; but the Queſtion is, at what Time it muſt be before the Evidence given, whether it muſt not be at ſuch Time as by the Courſe of Practice and Uſage of the Law it ſhould have been done before; if you will ſatisfie my Lord and the Court that ever ſuch an Exception was taken, or an Indictment quaſh'd between the Swearing of the Jury and the giving the Evidence, ye ſay ſomething; but I believe not one Inſtance of that Nature can be given, and therefore it is very irregular for them to do it.

L. C. J. They don't pretend to it, for ought I hear, for I would put them upon it, to ſhow me whether they could do it before.

Sir B. Shower. I don't queſtion, my Lord, but it might be, with Submiſſion.

Mr Conyers. Did you ever know it before that any one undertook to inform the Court as amicus curiæ, but it was to prevent a wrong Judgment, and for that you have your proper Time either before before Plea pleaded by Motion to quaſh the Indictment, or after Verdict to arreſt a Judgment; this Act of Parliament has reſtrain'd you in particular Inſtances that are mention'd from doing it after Verdict in Arreſt of Judgment, but having given you a Copy of the Indictment before you pleaded, you have had a proper Time to make theſe Exceptions, and if you have laps'd your Time you come too late to do it now, for ſure no Body ever made a Motion to quaſh an Indictment after Iſſue joyn'd and the Jury ſworn.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, I would only mention one Caſe, and that was of Sir Richard Manſell, upon an Indictment of Murder for Killing the Apothecary in Holbourn; I did my ſelf move to quaſh the Indictment, becauſe it was not expreſs'd in what Year of the King the Fact was done; but the Court was of Opinion we could not move to quaſh an Indictment for that or any ſuch notorious Crime, till after the Fact determined.

L. C. J. No, we were always of that Opinion, never to allow Motions to quaſh Indictments for Perjury, Murder, or any great Offence, but it muſt be moved in Arreſt of Judgment afterwards.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, theſe Gentlemen ſeem to beg the Queſtion upon this Act of Parliament, as if it had appointed this to be the Time of making Exceptions to the Indictment, the Act of Parliament does not ſay you ſhall make your Exception immediately before the Evidence given in open Court, as if it had pointed out and directed to them that particular Time, that then they ſhould take their Exception and no other Time: The Act has only ſet a Bound, that they ſhall not do it afterwards, but as to the particular Time, it is left as it was before, to the regular Courſe and Method of Proceedings, which is before Plea pleaded.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, they do not anſwer my Objection, it is, it ſeems, a Reſtriction of a Liberty that we had before of moving in Arreſt of Judgment; if ſo, we ought not to be reſtrained further than we are by the Words of the Act of Parliament, which ſay, before Evidence given, that is at any Time before Evidence given, as well after as before Plea pleaded.

Sir B. Shower. I would ask theſe Gentlemen, whether the Law-makers intended that we ſhould have no Advantage of excepting againſt falſe Spelling and improper Latin.

Mr Conyers. Yes, they did, but that you ſhould do in your proper Time.

Sir B. Shower. Then the Time for doing it muſt be that which the Words of the Law ſay, before the Evidence given in open Court, and that's now.

Mr Conyers. No, you might have come at the Day of Arraignment, and have taken the Advantage of it then before you had pleaded.

L. C. J. Ye have had my Opinion what I think of it, my Lords and Brothers, I ſuppoſe will tell you theirs.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lord Chief Juſtice has delivered his Opinion in this Matter, and he thinks fit that we ſhould deliver ours. I think this Motion of the Priſoner's Council to quaſh this Indictment after the Jury ſworn, is irregular and quite out of Seaſon; the Intent of this Clauſe in this Act of Parliament, certainly was not in Favour of the Priſoner, it abridgeth him of a Liberty he had before, but gives him nothing: For the Law-makers did think they had given the Priſoner an extraordinary Favour in the foregoing Part of the Act, in giving him a Copy of the Indictment five Days before he ſhould plead, and a Copy of the Pannel two Days before he ſhould be tryed, and allowing him Council, and all theſe Advantages were to enable him to quaſh the Indictment, or the Proceſs returned, for the Clauſe extends to both; the Words are, That no Indictment nor Proceſs or Return thereupon, ſhall be quaſh'd on the Motion of the Priſoner or his Council for Miſ-writing, Miſ-ſpelling, falſe or improper Latin, unleſs Exception concerning the ſame be taken and made in the reſpective Court where ſuch Tryal ſhall be by the Priſoner or his Council aſſign'd before any Evidence given in open Court upon ſuch Indictment, nor ſhall any ſuch Miſ-writing, &c. after Conviction be any Cauſe to ſtay Judgment: Therefore they made this extraordinary Proviſion to reſtrain the Priſoner, in Part, by this Clauſe; as much as to ſay you have an Advantage of the Copy of the Indictment, and you may make uſe of that to quaſh it by Motion, if you think fit, as you may alſo the Proceſs, but it ſhall be before Evidence given. 'Tis true, thoſe are the Words, but the uſing that Term, viz. quaſhing ſuch Indictment or Proceſs, ſhows it muſt be done in ſuch a Way and Time as is proper for quaſhing; and the very Words are, that it ſhall be upon Motion. Now we are to expound thoſe Words. And I ſay, a Motion to quaſh an Indictment, muſt be underſtood a Motion in the proper Seaſon, which I think is before Plea pleaded; but at leaſt before the Jury is ſworn. There were three Times when the Priſoner might have had the Advantage of a Fault in the Indictment before this Act: 1. By Motion to quaſh it before Plea pleaded. 2. Then afterwards in Arreſt of Judgment: And 3. After that by Writ of Error. Now this Clauſe of this Act takes away the Privilege of moving in Arreſt of Judgment for Miſ writing, &c. but ſaves the Advantage upon a Writ of Error, and upon a Motion to quaſh the Indictment. We are to conſider what is a proper Time for a Motion to quaſh an Indictment, the Motion is to be made to the Court, and to them alone. It is not to be made to the Court and the Jury. When the Jury is ſworn, all Application is to be made to the Court, as having a Jury preſent which they are to aſſiſt in the Tryal and Determination of the Fact only. What Uſe then is there of the Jury, when you make this Motion, which conſiſts only in Points of Law? They muſt ſtand by and be out of Office all the while this Motion is making: And it is not reaſonable, nor certainly ever was intended that after a Jury is ſworn to try a Matter of Fact, they ſhould ſtand idle, while you move a Thing which you ſhould have moved before they came to the Bar, ſuppoſe you ſhould now move ſome Exception to the Venire, and the Return thereupon, ſhould we, when we and you alſo have admitted the Jury to be ſworn, quaſh the Proceſs whereby they are return'd? And yet we may as well do that as this. For, the Act provides in the very ſame Words concerning Quaſhing Proceſs and Indictments. But, when the Jury is ſworn, and ready to receive their Evidence, ſure, then it is out of all Seaſon to make ſuch a Motion, therefore I do not think the Parliament intended by this Clauſe (which was a kind of Exception to the Favour the Priſoner receiv'd ceiv'd by having the Copy of the Indictment) to inſtitute a new Method of Proceedings for Motions to quaſh Indictments, even when a Jury is at the Bar and ſworn to try the Iſſue, and there is nothing proper to be proceeded upon but only to hear the Evidence produc'd for the Proof of that Iſſue, till the Jury is diſcharged. But ſtill this I would ſay; this is a new Caſe, and upon a new Statute. I am truly of Opinion, that the Motion is altogether unſeaſonable and irregular, and it ſhould have been made before, and you had a full Opportunity to make it this Day Seven-night before Plea pleaded, and you might likewiſe to Day before the Jury was ſworn; therefore when the Jury are now at the Bar actually enter'd into, and imploy'd upon the Service, the Court ought not to be interrupted by ſuch a Motion. Yet nevertheleſs I would propound this, that, ſeeing it is a new Caſe and upon a new Statute, the Court would forgive the Irregularity (for I think it does need Forgiveneſs) and if the King's Council will conſent to it (to prevent any Error or any Pretence of Hardſhip upon a new Law) that we ſhould hear their Exceptions.

L. C. Baron. This Act of Parliament, as it has given a Benefit to the Priſoner that he had not before, in allowing him a Copy of his Indictment, in Order to his making Exceptions; ſo it has reſtrained him as to the Time of making thoſe Exceptions: That he ſhou'd have Time, there is no Doubt; the Time limited for it, as this Act ſays, muſt be before Evidence given, becauſe they thought it unreaſonable that there ſhou'd be any Quaſhing of the Indictment after ſuch Time as the King had given any Evidence whatſoever in the Caſe, for that wou'd be a Diſcovery of the King's Evidence, and great Inconveniencies wou'd enſue thereupon; but the Queſtion is at what Time this is to be done; Whether it may be at any Time before Evidence given, or no; it did intend ſurely that the Motion to quaſh the Indictment and the Exceptions to it might have their proper Effect, and that muſt be before the Tryal; for it was not the Intent of the Act to alter the Method of Proceedings, and it is to no Purpoſe after the Jury is ſworn, for then their proper Office is to determine the Fact; now if before this Act of Parliament it never was allow'd to take any ſuch Exception as this after the Jury ſworn, it will be conſiſtent with the Words of the Act of Parliament, which are, That it ſhall be done before Evidence given: If then it be in the regular Time for Motions, which is before Plea pleaded or Jury ſworn, that is, before Evidence given; for it is not ſaid, as Mr. Comper obſerved, that it ſhou'd be immediately before the Evidence given, I think ſure ſuch an Expoſition as was formerly made ought to be made in this Caſe, the Time not being preciſely fix'd by this Act, if there were a certain Time determin'd when Men ſhould take their Exceptions, as we know it has been in Practice before Iſſue joyn'd, then after the Jury is ſworn it is an improper Time then, I think, to make ſuch Exceptions: I do not ſuppoſe this Act, as to the Method of Proceedings—, than it was before, but this Exception ought to be taken before Plea pleaded: Truly it is a new Act of Parliament, and this is ſo far within the Words of the Act that it is before Evidence given, as the Council for the Priſoner ſay. If this can be govern'd and ruled by Proceedings and Practice in former Times in Caſes not of Felony or Treaſon but only in Criminal Caſes. If no Body ſhould ſuffer by any Interpretation, I ſhould think it ought to bear a conformable Conſtruction to what the Practice was before, I take it you have loſt the regular Time for making your Exception, and you invert the whole Method of Proceedings upon Tryals; for to what Purpoſe is it to take Exceptions to quaſh the Indictment when the Jury are once charged with it: If it be an Indictment that ought to be quaſh'd, the Jury ought not to be charged, you have had two Times, and they are both of them elaps'd for this Matter, that is, at the Arraignment, and before the Jury ſworn; yet I would propoſe it to the King's Council as my Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas has done, it being a new Caſe, that it ſhould be better conſider'd of and agreed upon, that in theſe Caſes we may go on upon a certain Rule that it may be eſtabliſh'd for all Time to come.

Mr J. Nevile. I wou'd begin with the Propoſal, becauſe, I believe, I may not be ſo clear in my Opinion, otherwiſe I muſt deliver my Thoughts according to my Judgment, but I wou'd have the King's Council conſider of the Propoſal.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, for us to conſent to that in ſuch a Caſe as this, where the Court thinks it not regular, would be pretty hard to deſire of us, if any Thing of Advantage ſhould happen on the other Side, I verily think the Council for the Priſoner will not be ſo ready to conſent to wave any ſuch Advantage, nor am I for asking them to do it; this Clauſe goes only to ſome Faults in the Indictment; Miſ-ſpelling, Miſ-writing, falſe and improper Latin, that is all that they are reſtrain'd from moving in Arreſt of Judgment; any Thing elſe, any Uncertainty or other Matter that is not comprehended under theſe Particulars they may take Advantage of to move in Stay of Judgment after a Verdict, this Clauſe does only abridge them from moving in Arreſt of Judgment for Miſ-writing, Miſ-ſpelling, falſe or improper Latin, therefore if your Lordſhip ſhould think it reaſonable we ſhould conſent to let them in to make any Exception now, it muſt be confin'd to thoſe particular Objections of falſe and improper Latin, there can be no Colour to make the Liberty larger, becauſe for any Thing elſe they are not reſtrain'd from moving it in Arreſt of Judgment, for there can be no Hardſhip in that Caſe, as I think, they have no Reaſon to complain that there has been in any other Part of the Caſe, but for thoſe Particulars that there may be no Complaint of Hardſhip, if your Lordſhip thinks it reaſonable we ſhould conſent, it may be we may be prevail'd upon to do it, though whatever Hardſhip does happen it is their own Fault, and the Priſoner may thank his own Council for that Hardſhip: If we aſſiſt them now to let them in, it ought to be taken as a great Kindneſs; and truly, my Lord, I am unwilling to do any Thing that your Lordſhip and the Court ſhould think hard upon the Priſoner. Certainly it is the Fault of their own Council now the Law has allow'd the Priſoner Council, not to take the proper Time, and purſue the uſual Methods; and it is a Strain beyond what is uſual, that we muſt help their Faults by our Conſent; however, if the Court think it reaſonable, I ſhall not be againſt it, but then I am ſure the Court will take Care they ſhall be confin'd to thoſe Particulars that are mentioned in the Act.

L. C. J. No Doubt of it: Therefore Sir Bartholomew Shower, are your Exceptions for Miſſpelling, Miſ-writing, or falſe or improper Latin? for if they be ſuch Things as you may move in Arreſt of Judgment, and have that Advantage, then there is no Colour that we ſhould break through all the Rules of Proceedings to admit ſuch an irregular Motion as this.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in the Caſe of a Life of a Man I will not take upon me to ſay what is Miſ-ſpelling, Miſ-writing, or falſe or improper Latin, or what is ſubſtantial, but all that I ſay is, I have Five Exceptions, every one of them imports a Doubt, as I take it, worthy the Conſideration of the Court, and ſome of them effectual enough to quaſh the Indictment; but for me, when a Man's Life is at ſtake, and it partly depends upon me as his Council, to ſay what is proper or improper Latin, or to admit it to be Matter of Subſtance, and then to Morrow to have it come and told me, you ſhould have mov'd this to Day, then I am ſure they would have Reaſon to ſay, it was the Fault of the Priſoner's Council; for he would have choſen very ill Council, in me, I confeſs, if I ſhould conſent to put any ſuch Diſadvantage upon him. I beg the Favour that I may have the Liberty to propoſe my Objections, which I think are worth Conſidering of; it is for the Advantage of the King for us to take our Exceptions all together, becauſe, elſe if any of them prove material, the Trouble of the Tryal will be but Miſpence of Time.

L. C. J. No, we cannot hear all your Objections, but thoſe that are mention'd particularly in the Act of Parliament, for ſuch as are not mentioned in the Clauſe, you have a proper Time to move them in Arreſt of Judgment.

Sir B. Shiwer. Then we will put thoſe that are within the Act.

Mr Att. Gen. If we do any Thing by Way of Conſent in this Matter, we muſt inſiſt upon it, that they be confin'd to the Particulars in the Act, we deſire they may open their Objections to the Court, and if the Court ſhall think they are properly under thoſe Heads, then they will conſider of them, if the Court be of another Mind, then they muſt be reſerv'd till the proper Time.

L. C. J. Do you conſent then, Mr. Attorney, that they ſhall now take thoſe Exceptions that are mentioned in the Act of Parliament?

Mr Att. Gen. If the Court think it reaſonable upon thoſe Terms, I do.

Mr J. Powys. Let them open them if your Lordſhip pleaſe, and let us keep the Power in our own Hands to do as our Diſcretions ſhall direct.

L. C. J. Truly I do not know whether we can do any Thing in this Matter, I queſtion much whether it be diſcretionary in us to break through all the common Method of Proceeding, and admit of ſuch Irregularities.

L. C. J. Treby. I have a great Inclination to hear them, that we may get rid of theſe pretended Exceptions, which I am apt to think will, when opened, diſappoint the Expectations that may be raiſed by this mentioning them in general; for, I have that Opinion of the Ability and Circumſpection of the Council, that I believe if they had had Exceptions ſufficient to quaſh the Indictment, we ſhould have heard of them at a Time more proper than this now between the Swearing the Jury and giving Evidence to them. But, poſſibly, the Council may think fit to make an Eſſay, and try what can be got out of this unuſual Expreſſion in this new Act.

L. C. J. No, no, I know this is a Piece of Art, and the Court is not well dealt with in it.

L. C. J. Treby. Indeed I am very willing to hear them for that Reaſon.

L. C. J. I look upon it only as meer Trick, and a Piece of Art to taſte the Opinion of the Court.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, it was my Miſtake then, for I take it, if the Act of Parliament had intended otherwiſe they would have expreſt it otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Does the Act of Parliament give you another Liberty, and a greater than you had before? Does it not deſign to abridge you of a Liberty that you had before? Certainly it never intended that the Court ſhould admit of any irregular Proceedings.

Mr J. Powell. You ſhould have tim'd your Motion better, for certainly now the Jury is charg'd they muſt give a Verdict either of Acquittal or Conviction; and if you move to quaſh the Indictment, and your Exceptions are material, the Jury cannot proceed; you ſee what a Paſs your Motion has brought it to, 'tis certainly a mighty irregular Motion.

L. C. J. Treby. What Judgment would you have us give? I would ask you that: If any Exception were moved before the Jury were ſworn, and it proved material, the proper Judgment were, that the Indictment be quaſh'd; but now they are ſworn, what Judgment muſt we give? Muſt we not expect the Verdict of the Jury firſt upon the Fact? And muſt we then give Judgment upon your Exception?

Sir B. Shower. I know not whether your Lordſhip may not give Judgment firſt to quaſh the Indictment, and then diſcharge the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. And what, if we do not find Cauſe to quaſh it, then you'll ſay, we muſt go on with the Evidence, as we were going before this Interfering? Are we to be doing two Things at once. I am pretty certain you can ſhow me no Preſident for any like Proceedings in any Caſe: It is confounding the Offices of the Judge and Jury.

Mr Phipps. If your Lordſhips try'd the Validity of our Exceptions, and find Occaſion to quaſh the Indictment, there will be no need of a Jury.

L. C. J. Upon the Statute of Jeofailes in a civil Cauſe, ſuppoſe at a Tryal at Bar, it appears upon the Face of the Declaration, that there is ſuch a Miſtake as will be cured by the Verdict; but if the Party had demurred, and ſhown it for Cauſe, it would have been fatal. Do you think when he has wav'd the Benefit of Demurrer and pleaded to Iſſue, that you ſhall move this and help your ſelf by ſuch a Motion, becauſe it will be helpt after a Verdict?

Sir B. Shower. If this Act had been worded as that Statute of Jeofailes is, it may be we might not.

L. C. J. Why, it is not ſaid in the Statute of Jeofailes, that it ſhall be good after Iſſue joined, before the Jury is charg'd or ſworn, but that it ſhan't be good after the Verdict.

Sir B. Shower. It is before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. Could he do ſo in any Caſe before this Act, and does the Act enlarge your Liberty or abridge it?

L. C. J. Treby. Sir Bartholomew Shower, you inſiſt upon Part of the Words of the Act of Parliament, it ſays, no Indictment or Proceſs ſhall be quaſht upon the Motion of the Priſoner or his Council, unleſs it be made before any Evidence, &c. Now, I ſuppoſe, the Parliament uſe that Expreſſion, upon the Motion, in the ſame Senſe as it is uſed in Law, viz. for ſuch a one as ſhould be in the Time when Motions for quaſhing the Indictments are properly to be made; now, when is that? It is plain, it was always before the Jury come to the Bar, nay before the Plea of the Party. If that be the proper Time to make ſuch a Motion, then that Expreſſion in this Act of a Motion to quaſh the Indictment will very well help to conſtrue the other Part of the Clauſe that you inſiſt upon: For if the Motion be made before Plea pleaded, it is certainly before the Evidence given in your Senſe. And I conceive, that under that Expreſſion [Evidence given] which ſignifies the main Part, the Parliament intended to comprehend the whole Proceeding to Tryal, beginning, if not from the Pleading Not Guilty, at leaſt, from the Swearing the Jury. Before Evidence given in Court, may reaſonably be expounded, Before the Priſoner hath fully entred into that Conteſtation of the Fact, which is to be determined only by Evidence in Court. I attended the Court of King's-Bench a long Time, and I believe that I have heard it ſaid a hundred Times, upon Motions to quaſh Indictments of great or odious Offences; No, try it, ſays the Court, we will not quaſh it, plead to it, let the Fact be tryed, you may then move it in Arreſt of Judgment. Thoſe Expreſſions ſhew'd that the proper Time for a Motion to quaſh an Indictment was before Plea, tho' they, in their Diſcretion, would not grant a Motion to quaſh, in Caſes of ſuch great Offences. But ſure they did not think that when a Jury came to the Bar, it was a tolerable Time to move to quaſh an Indictment, there was no Expectation of hearing of ſuch a Motion then. And certainly this Clauſe which is made wholly againſt the Priſoner, ſhould not be conſtrued to help him to ſuch a new extraordinary and abſurd Liberty.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, with Submiſſion, that Practice goes upon another Reaſon, the Court would not quaſh it at all upon a Motion; this Act of Parliament ſuppoſes that you will quaſh upon a Motion at any Time before Evidence given; We never heard of a Motion to quaſh an Indictment for Felony or Treaſon, but ſtill the Court would always ſay, Demur, or Plead, or move in Arreſt of Judgment, but by this Law it ſeems the Senſe of the Parliament was, that it might be quaſht upon a Motion.

Mr Sol. Gen. Sir B. Shower is come to what I ſaid, that in Truth there is no ſuch Thing as Quaſhing an Indictment for Treaſon or Felony, as I mention'd in Sir Rich. Manſel's Caſe, and I think the Rule that was given in that Caſe will ſerve now in this Caſe; I am for conſenting if they be kept within the Limits of the Act of Parliament, but I muſt deſire the Opinion of the Court before we do conſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Aye, aye, Go on Brother Nevile.

Mr. J. Nevile. I muſt confeſs I cannot but doubt, as this Act is, there were two Times that they had Liberty of taking theſe Exceptions to Indictments; but indeed, in Murder and Treaſon they were ſeldom admitted, till they came to move in Arreſt of Judgment; but ſtill there was always a Privilege, and a Time given to the Priſoner, be the Crime what it would, to take that Advantage which the Law gave him, to prevent Judgment againſt him. Now I agree, it is irregular and unſeaſonable to offer it now, and quite different from all former Practice; you might have done it before now, the Act ſays expreſly it muſt be done before Evidence; but you might have taken Advantage before the Jury was ſworn nay before you had pleaded, but you have lapſed your Time. Yet truly, notwithſtanding you have lapſed your Time, I cannot ſatisfie my ſelf to take away the Liberty that the Law has given the Priſoner ſometime or other, to except againſt the Indictment. It is plain that before this Act after Verdict he might have moved in Arreſt of Judgment, now he cannot do ſo, whether the Fault be in the Council I cannot tell, but the great Prejudice is to the Perſon that is to be try'd, who will now be wholly precluded from making any Advantage of the Exceptions he has to the Indictment, becauſe by the Act he cannot move in Arreſt of Judgment. This ſeems a ſtrong Implication that the Parliament intended he muſt have ſome Time or other, but before Evidence given, to offer his Exceptions. I ſay this only to thoſe particular Things that are mentioned in the Act, Miſwriting, Miſſpelling, Falſe or Improper Latin; as to theſe four particular Things which the Party is barr'd from moving in Arreſt of Judgment, I cannot ſatisfie my ſelf but that he ſhould have one Time or another to take this Advantage before the Evidence given, and therefore I think he ſhould have it now: It is true, it is altogether irregular, the Jury being ſworn, and it ought to have been done before; but I hope if it be admitted now, it will be with ſuch Obſervation, that no Body will ever offer at it for Time to come. As this Caſe is before us, and the Act of Parliament, which perhaps may have led the Council into that Miſtake, that it might be any Time before Evidence given, tho' they know the proper Time, and the regular Method in other Caſes, yet I doubt it is hard to put ſuch a Conſtruction upon this Act on the ſudden, quite to debar the Priſoner of the Benefit of his Exceptions to the Indictment.

Mr. J. Powell. I have already declar'd my Opinion, that the Priſoner has had his proper Time for making his Exceptions, but he has elapſed that Time; but I am not againſt that Motion in a Caſe of Life, upon an Indictment for ſo great a Crime as Treaſon is, and where the Conſequence is ſo great, if it may conſiſt with the Rules of Law, and it be the Senſe of the Court, and the King's Council conſent to let them be heard, I ſubmit to it, nay I would Second or Third that Motion that they may be heard.

Mr. J. Eyres. Truly I am of the ſame Opinion, I think we ought not to alter the ancient Courſe of Law by Words of Implication, nor go any farther than the Act of Parliament does expreſs. The Act appoints that a Copy of the Indictment ſhould be delivered to the Priſoner ſo many Days before, to enable him to make his Exceptions, and therefore deprives him of the Benefit of thoſe Exceptions after Conviction in Arreſt of Judgment. I ſee no

no Words in the Act of Parliament that do alter the Courſe of Proceedings, as to this Matter, from what it was in all Civil and Criminal Cauſes before; Perſons muſt take their Advantage of Excepting in their proper Time, but when it comes to Iſſue, the next Thing to be done is the Tryal; and truly I muſt needs ſay the Council are to blame, that knew this ſo very well, that if they have any Advantage of Excepting, they did not take that Advantage ſooner, it is their Fault; but ſeeing it is ſo, I am of Opinion not to foreclose the Priſoner, as the Caſe ſtands. I would be Tender of Life, but at the ſame Time I declare my Opinion upon this Act of Parliament as the reſt of my Brothers have done, to prevent the Objection for the Time to come; yet ſeeing there is this Misfortune, and there would be a Hardſhip upon the Priſoner by the Default and Neglect of his Council in the Caſe of a Man's Life, I would be ſo tender as to indulge them to make their Objections now.

Mr. B. Powys. I am of the ſame Opinion the Priſoner has lapſt his Time, for I take it this Clauſe of this Act of Parliament has not altered the common Courſe of Proceedings, nay, I take it ſignifies very little in this Caſe, for certainly it was intended to diſable the Priſoner, and not enable him at all; and therefore, as the Caſe is, I think it very Irregular and Impracticable to introduce ſo great a Novelty, as to admit the Motion for quaſhing the Indictment; when the Jury is ſworn, and when the Fact is the only ſingle Point to be determin'd and every Thing elſe ought in legal Courſe to come before or after; but for us to confound Time, one Time for Pleading, another Time for Tryal, and another for Arreſt of Judgment, all at once, and to have a Jury attending meerly to hear Council at the Bar moot Points of Law, which might be determin'd either before or after the Tryal, is ſo very irregular, that it really introduces nothing but Confuſion, which Courts of Juſtice ought to avoid above all Things, and ought to keep to the proper Seaſons that the Law allows. Therefore, truly I think in Strictneſs of Law we ought not to allow it; but it being in a Caſe of Life, and it being a new Caſe upon a new Act of Parliament, if the King's Council think's fit to Conſent, I ſhall be for it, if not, I think in Strictneſs of Law we cannot allow it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord I am very unwilling to deny the Priſoner any Advantage, that he might have had by this Act of Parliament, though his Council have ſlipt the proper Time; if Sir Bartholomew Shower will ſay his Exceptions are to any of the four particular Heads mentioned in this Clauſe of the Act of Parliament, for we muſt confine them to that, then we do conſent that he ſhould make them now.

L. C. J. Truly Mr. Attorney, if you do conſent that they take their Exceptions now, we may conſider of it whether it can be; but I know not how we could admit them to that Liberty otherwiſe, for if there be any Thing material, they may move it in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. At. Gen. And I believe they won't ſay their Objections are ſo ſlight, as to be only Matter of Form, they ſay they are Subſtantial, and then your Lordſhip will hear them in a proper Time.

Sir B. Shower. I don't kuow whether I am miſtaken in the Law, I am ſure you are mikaken in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Well, do you conſent to let them make their Objections, as to thoſe four Heads in the Act of Parliament.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, if it be any Matter of Subſtance, that is out of the Caſe at preſent, for the Proviſion of the Act of Parliament is onely for meer Matter of Form, and I ſhould be very unwilling in any Point that is material, to make a Preſident in ſuch a Caſe as this.

L. C. J. I confeſs if you had conſented farther, I do not know how we ſhould have admitted of it.

L. C. J. Treby. I tell you how I thought it might be done, you might have committed an Irregularity, for which in a Caſe of Life, and upon a new Law, I believe and hope we ſhould have been forgiven.

L. C. J. Well, for my Part I will not commit any Irregularity upon any Account whatſoever; I cannot ſee how by Law they can take any Exceptions to the Indictment, Mr. Attorney cannot conſent, and if he did, I think it could not be, unleſs he did alſo conſent to diſcharge the Jury; but I ſee they will not offer any Objections according to your Conſent, Mr. Attorney, and therefore pray go on to open the Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Ambroſe Rookwood, ſtands Indicted for High Treaſon, in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of his Majeſty. Gentlemen, the Overt Acts that are laid in the Indictment to prove this Treaſon, are, that He, together with divers Others, had frequent Meetings and Conſultations, in order to Aſſaſſinating His Majeſty's Royal Perſon, and did provide Horſes and Arms for that purpoſe.

Gentlemen, the Evidence that you will hear, to prove theſe Facts that are thus laid, will be of this Nature; you will hear by the Witneſs, That there has been for ſome Years a Deſign carried on to Murder the King's Perſon; that this was diſcourſed of, and ſeveral Debates and Conſultations were had about it the laſt Year, ſome Time before the King went to Flanders; there was ſeveral Meetings, where were Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, and Charnock that was Executed, and ſeveral others, and there they did conſider in what way to take off the King at that Time; and you will hear they did expect a Commiſſion to authoriſe it from the late King James; but then the Commiſſion did not come, they had not any ſuch at that Time; but they did think fit to put it in Execution without any ſuch Order and Authority, and therefore they endeavour'd to have got a Veſſel to have carry'd them off after they had Executed this bloody Conſpiracy; but it happen'd His Majeſty went to Flanders ſooner then they Thought, and they could not provide Themſelves of a Security for a Retreat, and ſo at that Time the Deſign was laid aſide.

But Gentlemen, you will hear this Conſpiracy was renewed, and ſet on Foot this Winter, and in Order to the Accompliſhment of it you will hear, that about Chriſtmas laſt there were ſeveral Perſons ſent from France by the late King James, on purpoſe to put this horrible Deſign in Execution. Sir George Barclay was to be at the Head of it, he was a Lieutenant in one of the late King James's Troops of Guards in France, he was ſent over with a Commiſſion, and Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, was a Brigadier in the Guards there; theſe came over, and ſeveral other Troopers of the late K. James's Guards, by two or three at a Time, that they might not be obſerv'd; particularly you will hear, that when Sir George Barclay was come over, ſeveral Troopers were ſent to by King James himſelf to come to him at St. Germains, and there he told them he had a Piece of Service for them to do in England, and that they ſhould obſerve Sir George Barclay's Orders and Directions. More particularly there was one Harris and Hare, two Troopers in the Guards, were ſent for by the late King James into the late Queen's Bed-Chamber at St. Germains, where Collonel Parker was preſent; they were told by the late King, He was ſenſible they had ſerved him faithfully, and He would advance them, and he had now a Piece of Service for them to do, which would enable him to do it; He told them, they muſt go over into England, and be ſure to obey Sir George Barclay's Directions, and they were ordered to endeavour to find out Sir George Barclay when they came into England; and were told by him, that they would meet Sir George Barclay twice a Week in Covent-Garden Square, in the Evening, and the Token by which they ſhou'd know him, was, he would wear a white Handkerchief out of his Pocket; this they were told by the late King, when he ſent them upon this Errand; Colonel Parker was by at the ſame Time, and being there he was ordered to go to Mr. Carol Secretary to the late Queen, who had order to furniſh them with Money, to bear the Charges of their Journey into England, and if they were detained by contrary Winds, they had Letters of Recommendation to Monſieur Latour, the French King's Preſident at Callis, to furniſh them with Money, to bear their Charges over into England, and accordingly they went; but being detained at Callis for want of a Wind, they were furniſhed by the French Preſident; and by the Beginning of February, they came over.

But I omitted one Thing, Gentlemen: Before they came over, the late King when they were with him took a Liſt out of his Pocket of Names, and told theſe two, Harris and Hare, what Names they ſhould go by in England; Harris was to go by the Name of Jenkins, and Hare by the Name of Guiny, and accordingly they came over in a Boat, and landed in Kent, and when they came to Town they endeavoured to find out Sir George Barclay: The firſt Time I think they did not find him; but the ſecond Time they did find him; and he ſaluted them, and told them he was glad to ſee them come over, and he would furniſh them with Money, and he ſent Major Holmes to them, and accordingly he did come, and give them Subſiſtence Money.

Now Gentlemen, you will hear that Sir George Barclay being come over with theſe Troopers and many others, to the Number of Sixteen, that at ſeveral Times were ſent upon this Conſpiracy, I ſay, after they were come, Sir George Barclay had frequent Meetings and Conſultations with ſeveral other Perſons that were to be engaged in the ſame Deſign; and they met at ſeveral Places, ſometimes at Captain Porter's, ſometimes at the Nags-head in Covent-Garden, at another Time at the Sun Tavern in the Strand; and you will find by the Evidence, that the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood, was preſent at moſt of thoſe Meetings, and there they did conſult of the beſt Ways and Methods for putting this Conſpiracy in Execution; ſometimes they thought of doing it by an Ambuſh, laid on the other Side of the Water, by Perſons on Foot, in a little Wood there near Richmond, where the King was to paſs by whilſt others on Horſeback were to take Notice of their Firing, and then to Attack the Guards. This was propoſed, but there was another Propoſal to do it on this ſide the Water; and therefore to ſettle the Matter, one of the Conſpirators, King, was ſent to view the Ground on the other Side of the Water, and he did glory that he had found a very proper Place, and thought it a very convenient Method, but yet they were not all ſatisfied, and at the Nags-head Tavern in Covent-Garden they did debate the Matter again, and it was reſolved to have the Ground viewed again, and Porter, and Knightley, and King that was executed went to view the Ground on both ſides the Water, to ſee which was the moſt convenient Place; this was about the 12th of February, they did take an Account of the moſt convenient Places on either Side, and when they had done it, they came back in the Evening to give an Account what they had done, to ſeveral others of the Conſpirators, who met for that purpoſe, and I think the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood was preſent there at this Meeting; and you will hear, the Place agreed upon was the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford, that they thought the moſt convenient Place becauſe there were ſeveral Inns in and about Turnham-Green and Brentford, where they might place their Men by two or three in an Inn, that they might not be liable to Obſervation: This was the Place that was approved of.

Then next, the Manner of doing it was to be conſidered and adjuſted, and that was thus: That the whole Number, ſhould be divided into three Parties, one Party to be commanded by Sir George Barclay to attack the Coach, and kill the King, and all that were in it, while at the ſame Time the two other Parties to be commanded by Captain Porter, and Mr. Rookwood the Priſoner at the Bar, were to ſet upon the Guards; and the Time agreed upon to put it in Execution was the Fifteenth of February on Saturday, that being the uſual Day the King went to Richmond a Hunting, and you'll find that on Saturday Morning they met in ſeveral Parties, not all together, but under the ſeveral Heads of the Parties in order to be ready, if the King had gone out that Morning, to have Aſſaſſinated him.

Gentlemen, I ſay, you will hear of ſeveral Meetings that Day; there was one Meeting at Mr. Charnock's where were preſent Mr. Porter, Sir William Parkyns, and ſeveral others; and another Meeting you will hear of where the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, at the Lodgings of one Counter, another of King James's Friends, that came over for this purpoſe, and there was Sir George Barclay, and there was the Priſoner at the Bar; and thoſe that were to be under Sir George's Command met that Saturday Morning in order to make ready, in Caſe the King had gone abroad, to have Attackt him: You will find by the Evidence that the Priſoner was there, and Harris that was one of the Troopers ſent over from France, was ſent for, and came in and found them in a great Hurry, for Harris was not acquainted at St. Germains with the immediate Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, but finding them in a great Hurry, he askt them what was the Matter? And they told him they were to make ready immediately upon the Deſign. He wonder'd at it, and ask'd what it was, and then they told him they were to go to attack the Prince of Orange to aſſaſſinate him, and Rookwood the Priſoner at the Bar told him, if he would go to Counter, he ſhould have particular Orders and Inſtructions from him what to do. Accordingly Harris went to Counter, he told him where his Horſe, and Hare's Horſe, and Hungate's Horſe were; and their Horſes happen'd to be placed in Somerſet-Houſe, by Mr Lewis, in a Stable there recommended by him, to the Care of my Lord Feverſham's Servants, who were to take Care of them, and of two or three more that were placed there, in all, ſix of theſe Conſpirators Horſes by the Recommendation of Mr. Lewis were lodged in that Stable in Somerſet-Houſe, and look'd after by my Lord Feverſham's Men; and thither Harris, Hare, and Hungate, were directed by Counter to go for their Horſes.

But it happen'd by very good Providence, that his Majeſty did not go abroad that Day; and Durance, one of the Orderly Men that lodged at Kenſington to give Intelligence, came from thence and acquainted them, that the King did not go out that Morning, ſo there was nothing more done; but Harris was told that he ſhould have his Horſe at that Time, and take it away, and in the mean Time till they were to go upon their Deſign, they were to ride out upon their Horſes, as they had Opportunity, to make them fit for Service, or elſe it would be thought the Rider's Fault, if, at the Time of the Attack, they did not come up in good Time and Order to join with the reſt, and it would be thought Want of Courage in the Rider; and accordingly Major Holmes, another of thoſe Conſpirators, went with Harris and Hare to Somerſet-Houſe to take away their Horſes, and they carried them to a Stable in Soho; but for ſeveral Nights they had been kept at Somerſet-Houſe.

You will find, Gentlemen, that Mr Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar was concern'd in all theſe Conſultations and Meetings, in making Preparations for the Aſſaſſination they intended, as I ſaid, to do it on the 15*th* of February; but that not taking Effect at that Day, between that and the Saturday following, Mr Harris was frequently in the Company of Mr Rookwood and Mr Lowick, and others, where they did diſcourſe of this Aſſaſſination, and they did think it a very barbarous Thing; but however they reſolved they would do it, for they had Orders to obey Sir George Barclay: And this was expreſsly declared by Lowick and the Priſoner, that they had Directions to obey Sir George, and what he would have them to do they would do: They muſt and would obey Orders; that was their Reſolution even upon diſcourſing of the Hainouſneſs of ſo bloody and barbarous a Deſign.

You will likewiſe hear, Gentlemen, by the Evidence, that the next Saturday being the Two and Twentieth of February, they reſolved to put it in Execution again; and accordingly there was a Meeting on the Friday before at the Sun Tavern, where were preſent Sir G. Barclay, Mr Porter, and others; and there they did reſolve upon it, tho' they had at firſt ſome Apprehenſion the Thing was diſcovered, but they were ſoon ſatisfied there was no ſuch Thing, becauſe they ſaid among themſelves, that if it had been ſo they ſhould have been taken up, and not have been permitted to meet there: Therefore they reſolved the next Day to put it in Execution, and accordingly they met at ſeveral Places, and got ready in the Morning in Caſe the King had gone abroad; the Priſoner met that Morning at Porter's Lodging, with ſeveral other Troopers, to make ready for the Enterprize, and there the Priſoner at the Bar did, at that Time, give a Liſt of the Names that he was to command, for he was to have one Party of thoſe that were to attack the Guards, of whom Harris was one, and Hare was another, and Richardſon was another, and Blackburne was another, and his own Name was Chief, and he ordered Harris to go and ſee to get them ready, for they muſt go out that Morning: Accordingly Harris did go, and got them ready, and came back and gave an Account of it. His Majeſty did not go abroad that Day, as it happened very fortunately by Reaſon of the happy Diſcovery; ſo that News being brought back again, though they had made all Things ready, thoſe Preparations were put off, and they did nothing that Day, and quickly after the Diſcovery was fully made, and made publick by the Apprehenſion of the Conſpirators.

Gentlemen, you will have this Matter fully proved to you by ſeveral Witneſſes, that I think there can be no Room to doubt the Truth of it, that there was ſuch a Conſpiracy, and that the Priſoner was as highly concerned in it, as thoſe who have ſuffer'd the juſt Puniſhment of the Law. We will call our Witneſſes to prove this, and I believe they will be able to give you an Account of the whole Affair, better and more fully than I can do, or can pretend to open it.

Mr Sol. Gen. Call Mr Harris and Mr Porter.

Sir B. Shower. We oppoſe the Swearing Mr Porter: I muſt beg the Favour of the Court to hear us in it; if my Inſtructions be true, we inſiſt upon it, that he is not capable of being a Witneſs, he ſtands convicted of Felony: Here we have the Record, and we deſire it may be read.

Capt. Porter. I know nothing of the Matter, that there is any ſuch Thing ſtanding out againſt me.

Sir B. Shower. Then ſure we are miſtaken in the Man. Pray let us hear it read.

Cl. of Arr. (Reads the Record.) This is an Indictment of Murther againſt George Porter, for the Killing of Sir James Hacket, Knight.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know any Thing of this, Mr Porter?

Capt. Porter. I came off with Manſlaughter, and pleaded the King's Pardon in Court.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, read what was done upon it.

Cl. of the Crown. Here's the Jury's Verdict. Quod prædictus Georgius Porter eſt culpabilis de felonica Interfectione prædicti Jacobi Hacket, & non culp. as to the Murder. Here is a Curia adviſare vult, and I ſuppoſe there was a Pardon afterwards.

Mr Juſtice Powell. Was he not burnt in the Hand?

Capt. Porter. No, I pleaded the King's Pardon.

L. C. J. And there are ſeveral Acts of Pardon ſince.

Mr Cowper. See the Time when the Indictment was.

Cl.

Cl. of Arr. It is the Eighth of December in the Thirty Sixth Year of King Charles the Second.

Sir B. Shower. We agree that he did plead the King's Pardon, and then the Caſe is no more than this, a Man is convicted of Manſlaugter, and the King pardons him, he ſtill remains unqualified to be a Witneſs; we ſay, this has been the Caſe that has been much debated in Weſtminſter Hall, and upon Debate it has been reſolved.

Mr J. Powell. It has been ſo, but always againſt you.

Sir B. Shower. It was in the Caſe of my Lord Caſtlemaine at this Bar; one of my Lords the Judges went to the Court of Common Pleas to ask their Opinion, and theſe Caſes were put: In Caſe a Man be out-law'd of Felony and pardon'd; in Caſe a Man be convicted of Felony and had the Benefit of his Clergy, and in Caſe a Man was convicted and not attainted, but pardoned upon the ſecond Caſe; they were of Opinion, that the Receiving the Puniſhment of Burning in the Hand, had purged the very Guilt, and did ſet him upright by the Statute of the 18th of Queen Elizabeth, they thought it did operate to that Purpoſe; but in the Caſe of a Pardon of a Man attainted or convicted, it was agreed he was not qualified to be a Witneſs; and Dangerfield, againſt whom the Objection was made, being burnt in the Hand, was received to be a Witneſs; and it was only made uſe of againſt him to take off his Credit. The Record of that Caſe is in this Court, and I looked upon the Print of the Tryal this Day. We ſay, that there is a Caſe in 1 Brownlow 47. a Man attainted of Felony cannot be of an Inqueſt, though pardon'd; and we think, he that cannot be a Juryman, ſure cannot be a Witneſs; there is the ſame Exception to his being a Witneſs as there is in the Caſe of a Jury-man; for the one ought to appear as free, and ſtand as clear and unſuſpected, in Reſpect of his Probity and Verity as the other, as the one is ſworn to try and determine upon Oath, ſo the other is ſworn, and his Oath is to ſway and determine the Jury, and in Conſequence it is all one, and upon theſe Reaſons we hope he is not a good Witneſs.

L. C. J. Where is that Caſe in Brownlow?

Sir B. Shower. It is 1 Brownlow 47. and then there is 11 H. IV. 41. 2 Bulſt. 154. there my Lord Cook ſays, if a Man be convicted of Felony, and pardoned, he cannot be a Jury-man; for though the Puniſhment is pardoned, the Guilt remains, ſo that he is not probus & legalis Homo, and every particular Perſon has an Intereſt in it, that they have free and clear Perſons to be Jury-men and Witneſſes.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, that is the Diſtinction we go upon, which was taken in Dangerfield's Caſe upon the Tryal of my Lord Caſtlemaine, where the whole Court were of Opinion that a Pardon from the King only would not make him a good Witneſs, but if he were burnt in the Hand, that by the Statute of decimo octavo Elizabethæ, amounted to a Statute Pardon, and ſet him right to all Intents and Purpoſes: And there they did take Notice of that Book that Sir Bartholomew Shower cited of 11 of H. IV. that a Man attainted could not be a Jury-man, though pardoned by the King: It was objected he might be a Witneſs; but Mr Juſtice Jones ſaid, it was the ſame Reaſon if he be not fit for a Jury-man, he is not fit for a Witneſs; they ought to be both probi & legales Homines, thus the Caſe ſtood there. And that other Book of Bulſtrode is the ſame, it was in the Caſe of a Prohibition for a Modus Decimandi, where the Suggeſtion is to be prov'd by two Witneſſes, it was objected he had not prov'd it by two Witneſſes, becauſe they were both attainted of Felony, and though they were pardoned, yet that did not make them good Witneſſes in the Opinion of the Court.

L. C. J. This is quite another Caſe, it does not come up to your Point, here is no Attainder, and here is Pardon upon Pardon, by Act of Parliament.

Mr Phipps. As to that we think the Parliament Pardon is out of the Caſe; for if the Pardon from the King be a good Pardon, there is no Guilt for the Act of Pardon to work upon.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this we think to be a good Diſtinction as to that Matter, a Man that is actually pardon'd the Puniſhment by the King's Pardon, and afterwards an Act of Pardon comes and pardons all Offences, that we ſay does nothing, for he is not a Subject of Pardon, for he was diſcharged of his Puniſhment before.

Mr At. Gen. Sure theſe Gentlemen are not in earneſt when they make this Objection.

Sir B. Shower. When the King has once pardon'd him he is not an Offender within the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, and therefore the Act works nothing as to him, and ſo he ſtands as much diſabled from being a Witneſs, as he was before.

Mr J. Powell. In the Caſe of Cutington in Hobbard, there it is ſaid the Pardon takes away tam Reatum quam Pœnam, &c. an Action being brought for calling a Man Thief, who had been indicted for Felony, and convicted, and pardon'd, the Court adjudged, that he ought not to be called ſo; for he was no Thief, for the Pardon had waſhed him entirely clean, and he was diſcharged both of the Guilt and the Puniſhment, and all the Conſequences of it.

L. C. J. Thoſe Caſes that have been put are no Authorities at all in this Matter; for where there is a Conviction of Manſlaughter, and the Party is pardon'd, we think that Pardon of the King works in a Way of Diſcharge as much as the Burning in the Hand. I take it, it is the ſame Thing: They admit, that will diſcharge him to all Intents and Purpoſes, and ſo we think does this as effectually; for having his Clergy, and being burnt in the Hand, works by Way of Statute Pardon; for the Caſe of a Jury-man, I take it not to be the ſame with this Caſe; but even in that Caſe, I do not think that the Party convicted, after the King hath pardoned him, is diſabled from being of a Jury; but ſuppoſing that to be ſo, yet there are many Caſes wherein a Man may be a Witneſs, that cannot be a Jury-man. It is true, the Credit of ſuch a Witneſs is left to the Jury, but it is no Objection againſt his being a legal Witneſs; and it is a very ſtrange Argument to me, that becauſe he was pardoned by the King, if that ſhould be deficient, that therefore, the Act of Pardon ſhould have no Effect. Truly, that is to ſay, that the King's Pardon works ſo, as to have nothing left for the Parliament Pardon to work upon, and certainly it ſets him ſo right, that to all Intents and Purpoſes he is as good a Witneſs as ever he was; and if any Thing remained to be done, the Act of Parliament has done it, and ſupplied the Defect; but I think the King's Pardon is ſufficient.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, I ſuppoſe they do not inſiſt upon it, as thinking there is any great Weight in it, but only for Objection ſake, but we hope that notwithſtandiug this Objection Mr Porter ſhall be ſworn.

in

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, they take this Exception at an improper Time, for they ſpeak to his Credibility.

L. C. J. No, they except to his being a Witneſs.

Mr Soll. Gen. If ſo, your Lordſhip remembers a Caſe that was before your Lordſhip not long ſince, but in Eaſter Term laſt, when one was try'd at this Bar for Treaſon, and Aaron Smith was produced as a Witneſs, and the Priſoner took Exception againſt him as no good Witneſs, becauſe he had ſtood in the Pillory, and your Lordſhip and the Court did ſay, that the Act of Pardon did reſtore him to all Intents and Purpoſes ad liberam Legem.

Mr Conyers. In the Caſe of the Earl of Caſtlemaine, both the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, held Dangerfield a legal Witneſs, tho' burnt in the Hand for Felony, and ſo was the Opinion of Rolls: In Stiles Reports 388, one that hath been burnt in the Hand for Felony, may notwithſtanding be a Witneſs.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in anſwer to that Caſe that was put, that after the King's Pardon for one convicted of Felony another Man has not the Liberty to call him Thief, that was an Objection in my Lord Caſtlemaine's Caſe, that may ſtand as good, and our Notion that we contend for, be good too; he cannot be impeach'd, or have Guilt imputed to him, when once the King has forgiven him, and yet that may not reſtore him to his entire Credit, as was my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs's Diſtinction in the Caſe of Dangerfield; and as to the Caſe of Aaron Smith, that was very different: The Reaſon in that Caſe was, becauſe the Crime for which Mr Smith was indicted, did not import any ſuch ſcandalous Offence for which his Credit could be impeached.

L. C. J. No, no, we did not meddle with that, we went upon the Pardon.

Sir B. Shower. But in that Caſe, they did not inſiſt upon it that he had a Pardon antecedent to the Act of Pardon, ſo that he was Subjectum capax, for the Act to work upon, he was an Offender that needed a Pardon, whereas Mr Porter being pardon'd before, could not be an Offender needing a Pardon, and conſequently not within the firſt Words of the Act of Indempnity, becauſe he was pardon'd by the King before, but he was not by that Pardon, ſay we, reſtor'd to his Credit to make him a good Witneſs, and the Act of Parliament did not affect him, he being not ſubjectum Materiæ, as not being an Offender.

Mr Phipps. As to Mr Sollicitor's Caſe of Aaron Smith, we agree the Act of Parliament did reſtore him, becauſe he never was pardon'd before by the King, ſo there remained an Offence for the Parliament Pardon to work upon.

L. C. J. Do you agree that, then you may agree the other; for the Act of Parliament pardons none but thoſe that the King can pardon generally.

Mr Phipps. It is true, my Lord, but we ſay that an Act of Parliament Pardon, removes thoſe Diſabilities which the King's Pardon does not, for every one is in Law a Party to an Act of Parliament, and therefore no Perſon ſhall be permitted to alledge in Diſability of another, any Crime which he himſelf hath pardon'd, for that is to aver againſt his own Act, but 'tis otherwiſe in the Caſe of the King's Pardon.

L. C. J. Why, the very Parliament Pardon comes from the King; the King has a full Power of Pardoning, and where he does pardon under the Great Seal, it has the full Effect of the Parliament Pardon. A Pardon before Attainder, prevents all Corruption of Blood, ſo that tho' a Man forfeits his Goods by Conviction, yet after a Pardon he is capable of having new Goods, and ſhall hold them without any Forfeiture whatſoever, for the Pardon reſtores him to his former Capacity, and prevents any further Forfeiture. Indeed if he had been attainted whereby his Blood was corrupted, no Pardon, whether it were by the King or by the Parliament, could purge his Blood without Reverſal of the Attainder, by Writ of Error, or Act of Parliament, or expreſs Words in the Act to reſtore Blood; but either Pardon makes him a new Creature, gives him new Capacity, and makes him to all Intents and Purpoſes, from the Time of the Pardon, to be probus & legalis Homo, and a good Witneſs. Indeed this Crime might be objected againſt his Credit, but it is not to be urged againſt the Sufficiency of his Evidence, that is, his being a Witneſs.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we deſire he may be ſworn. (Which was done.)

Mr Soll. Gen. Now, Mr Porter, do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account, what you know of this intended Aſſaſſination, how it came to your Knowledge, and what Share the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, the firſt Account that I had of this Aſſaſſination, was from Mr Charnock, who brought to me Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes to my Lodging in Northfolk-ſtreet, where I was ſick of the Gout. Sir George Barclay did not then particularly acquaint me with the Buſineſs, but ſaid, he would leave it to Mr Charnock to tell me what it was.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barclay; and after that we had ſeveral Meetings, at which the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, where it was conſulted of the beſt Ways and Means to aſſaſſinate the King as he came from Richmond: Some were of Opinion that it was beſt to be done on the other Side of the Water; others were of Opinion that it ſhould be done on this Side, by a Party of Men on Horſe-back: Upon this Difference of Opinion, there were Perſons appointed to go and view both Places; I was appointed for one to go with Captain Knightley, and Mr King went along with me, and we did view the Ground on both Sides, and when we came back, we gave an Account to Sir George Barclay, and thoſe that ſent us, and upon our Report, Sir George Barclay's Mind was chang'd, who was for the other Side of the Water before. And he agreed to do it in the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford; afterwards there was a Meeting at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, and there it was agreed that the King ſhould be attack'd on Saturday the 15th of February, by Sir George Barclay and his Party; and Mr Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, was to command a Party of Men that came over from France, who were to aſſault the Guards on one Side, and I and Mr Charnock were to ſet upon the the Guards on the other Side. Sir George Barclay, with four Men out of each Party, was to attack the King in his Coach, and to kill him and all that were there in it.

L. C. J. Who were at that Meeting?

Capt. Porter. There were Sir George Barclay, Captain Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, My ſelf, Major Holmes, Captain Rookwood, and Captain King.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Capt. Porter. At the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, upon Saturday Morning the 15th, we having two orderly Men that lay at Kenſington to give Intelligence, had Notice brought us firſt that the King would go out; Durance, who was one of them, uſed to go every Morning to Court to get us what Intelligence he could, and Sir George Barclay told me upon the Friday, that he ſhould give me an Account as ſoon as ever he could the next Morning; and the next Morning at my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet in St. James's, he came to me, and told me, the Advance Guards were gone out, and the King's Kitchin was gone, and all was preparing for the King's going abroad, and there went a great many Noblemen and Gentlemen a Horſe-back with him, and therefore he thought there would be no Opportunity of effecting the Thing; ſaid I, that's no Objection at all, nor any Reaſon for putting it off, becauſe when the Sport is over, all the Company goes away, and the King comes only in his Coach with the Guards; he ſaid, he would give Sir George Barclay an Account of it, and he came back with Sir George Barclay and Mr Rookwood to my Lodging, and upon repeating that Objection, and my giving the ſame Anſwer, it was agreed if the King had gone out that Day to have put the Deſign in Execution.

Mr Att. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar there at that Time when that was agreed upon?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Where do you ſay was that Meeting?

Capt. Porter. At my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet.

L. C. J. Had you that Diſcourſe with Sir George Barclay, in the Preſence of the Priſoner?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir George ſaid, he doubted we could not do it, becauſe there would go ſo many with the King; but I objected againſt that, that after the Sport was over, all the Company went away, and the King came back in his Coach; then it was agreed to go on, there was Sir George Barclay, Durant, and the Priſoner at the Bar and my ſelf, in the Room.

L. C. J. This you ſay was Saturday the 15th, in the Morning.

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot ſay I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar at any Meeting after that.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Method you were to take in putting this Deſign in Execution.

Capt. Porter. There were to be ſo many Horſemen armed and prepared for the Purpoſe. Sir George Barclay told me, we ſhould be about 40 or 45 Horſe-men, and they were to be divided into two Parties, and Sir George Barclay was to have four Men out of each Party, and his Buſineſs was to attack the King, and all that were with him in the Coach. Captain Rookwood was to command thoſe that were come out of France to ſerve under Sir George Barclay, and Captain Charnock and I were to command the other Party, and both Parties were to ſet upon the Guards at the ſame Time that Sir George Barclay attack'd the King's Coach.

Mr Att. Gen. If the Priſoner will ask him any Queſtions, let him.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Captain Porter, when was that firſt Meeting at the Globe-Tavern?

Capt. Porter. It was one Day in the Week before the 15th.

Sir B. Shower. Was Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, there that Day?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was.

Sir B. Shower. How long before the 15th?

Capt. Porter. One Day that Week, but I cannot tell what Day.

Sir B. Shower. He ſays it was agreed ſo, and ſo I deſire to know what Words Mr. Rookwood uttered at that Time.

Capt. Porter. It was diſcourſed by every one round, which was the beſt Way and Method. I heard Mr. Rookwood ſay, indeed, he believed it a very deſperate Thing, and he was not very willing to engage in it; but when Sir George Barclay told him he ſhould command his Party, he replied in French ———.

Mr Soll. Gen. What's the Meaning of that?

Capt. Porter. There's an End of it.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay the Priſoner was at your Lodging Saturday the 15th, in the Morning, What Diſcourſe had you there?

Capt. Porter. He was there upon Saturday in the Morning, the 15th of February, and Durant brought an Account that the King's firſt Guards were gone, and the King's Kitchin was gone before, and it was expected that the King would go about eleven a Clock, but it was ſaid, that there were a great many were preparing to go with him, and therefore it would not be convenient to do it that Day; ſaid I, that is no Objection at all, for the Nobility and Gentry go out of the Field as ſoon as the Sport is over, and the King uſed to go with a few People to Mr. ——— Houſe at Richmond, and therefore it might be as well done at that Time, as any Time: Durant made that Objection at firſt himſelf, and when I made him that Anſwer, he went to Sir George Barclay, and he came back with Sir George Barclay, and the Priſoner was there by at the ſame Time, and Sir George Barclay made the ſame Objection; it was at my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet. and when I told them my Reaſon againſt the Objection, as I had done before, they all agreed to do it that Day.

Mr Phipps. At that ſecond Meeting, did Mr. Rookwood make any Propoſal there?

Capt. Porter. I only ſay he came with Sir George Barclay, and what I heard, I tell you Sir George Barclay made that Objection, and I gave it that Anſwer.

Mr Phipps. But what did he ſay?

Capt. Porter. I cannot ſay that I heard Mr. Rookwood ſay any Thing in particular, but they all agreed to do the Thing that Day.

Sir B. Shower. You remember nothing that he ſaid?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barclay ſaid, we will go and prepare, and he went away with him.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, when did Sir George Barclay come into England?

Capt. Porter. Truly, Sir, I don't know that; the firſt Time that I ſaw him after he came, Mr. Charnock brought him to my Lodging in Norfolk-

Norfolk-ſtreet, but before that, Mr Charnock told me, he was come into England.

L. C. J. Hark you, Mr Porter, when you came back from Viewing the Ground before the firſt Saturday, and you ſaid you made your Report, and then it was agreed that it ſhould be done at ſuch a Place; Do you ſay the Priſoner was there?

Mr Att. Gen. No, my Lord, he does not ſay ſo. Do you ſay Mr Rookwood was there at that Time?

Capt. Porter. No, my Lord, I don't ſay ſo.

Sir B. Shower. I am ſure he did not ſay ſo before; and beſides, your Lordſhip will obſerve there is no ſuch Overt-Act as that laid in the Indictment againſt the Priſoner, that Mr Porter made his Report upon the View, that only concerns Mr Knightley.

L. C. J. No, that is not an Overt-Act, I agree it; but I only ask the Queſtion, whether the Priſoner was there.

L. C. J. Treby. If it were an Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, it would not affect the Priſoner, becauſe the Viewing of the Ground, and making the Report, is Captain Porter's Act, and it muſt be the Conſulting and Debating afterwards that muſt affect the Priſoner, if he be concern'd.

Mr Conyers. The Meetings and Conſultations that are laid in the Indictment are the Overt-Acts.

Mr Soll. Gen. Well, if they have done with Captain Porter, we deſire Mr George Harris may be ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we beg Leave to oppoſe Mr Harris's being ſworn; here was a Proclamation that did take Notice of this barbarous Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate the King, and the Proclamation did ſignifie, That the King had received Information of ſeveral Perſons concerned in that Conſpiracy; and for the Encouragement of taking thoſe ſo accuſed, he did promiſe a Thouſand Pounds Reward for the taking of any of the Conſpirators; and in the Concluſion of the Proclamation there is a Clauſe, That if any of the Conſpirators ſhould diſcover or apprehend any of the other Perſons that were therein named, ſo as that they ſhould be brought to condign Puniſhment, ſuch Conſpirator ſo diſcovering ſhould receive a Thouſand Pounds Reward for any of the other Perſons apprehended, and his own Pardon. My Lord, we have a Witneſs here ready to prove that this was Mr Harris's Caſe; he was himſelf in the Proclamation, he did actually diſcover Mr Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, and was inſtrumental in the taking of him; and conſequently upon this Clauſe of the Proclamation, if he be brought to Juſtice, then is Mr Harris intitled to this Reward and his Pardon; and conſequently he has ſuch an Intereſt and Advantage to himſelf as will prevent his being a Witneſs. It is true, indeed, where it is at the King's Suit, in a capital Caſe, it is pretty hard to ſay that a Man has an Intereſt; but we think, as this Caſe is circumſtantiated upon this Proclamation, that the ſame Objection lies againſt him as would do if this were a civil Cauſe; if we ſhew how he is to have an Advantage by the Event of this Cauſe, then he is not to be admitted a Witneſs.

L. C. J. Did he apprehend any Body upon the Proclamation?

Sir B. Shower. Yes, he apprehended Mr Rookwood himſelf, or was the Cauſe of it, and thereby is intitled to the Reward and his Pardon.

Mr Phipps. That upon which we ground our Objection is the different Penning of the Proclamation; for if any one that is not a Conſpirator do but diſcover and apprehend any of the Perſons named in the Proclamation, he is entitled to the Thouſand Pounds; but the Conſpirators themſelves muſt go further; for a bare Diſcovery and Apprehending any of their Accomplices will not entitle them to the Reward mentioned in the Proclamation, but they muſt diſcover and apprehend their Accomplices ſo as they be brought to Juſtice before they can be entitled to the Reward: And to be brought to Juſtice for any Crime, is in common Underſtanding to be brought to ſuch Puniſhment as the Law inflicts for the Offence. Now Mr Harris's Caſe is this, he diſcovered Mr Rookwood, and went with the Guards to the Compter and ſeiz'd him: And if Mr Rookwood ben't convicted, Mr Harris is not to have any Thing for his Pains; but if he be convicted, Mr Harris is entitled to the Thouſand Pounds and his Pardon. And therefore ſurely Mr Harris cannot be admitted an Evidence againſt Mr Rookwood, ſince he is to receive ſo great a Benefit by his Conviction. Upon an Indictment for a uſurious Contract, the Perſon whoſe Deed it is cannot be a Witneſs, becauſe 'tis to avoid his own Act: So in an Indictment for Perjury, on the Stat. 5. Eliz. the Party injured by the Perjury cannot be a Witneſs, becauſe he is to have half the Forfeitures.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſuppoſe they will make out their Objection before they expect an Anſwer from us.

Sir B. Shower. I hope your Lordſhip will not put us to prove a Copy of the Proclamation from the Inrolment, but that we may have the ſame Favour as in the Caſe of the Statute-Book, that the Print of it may be allow'd for Evidence.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we will not ſtand with them for that, we know they are miſtaken throughout, we conſent the Proclamation ſhould be read.

Cl. of Arr. Reads,

By the King a Proclamation.

William R.

WHereas His Majeſty has received Information upon Oath, that the Perſons herein after named, have with divers other wicked and traiterous Perſons entered into a horrid and deteſtable Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate and murder His Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, for which Cauſe ſeveral Warrants for High Treaſon have been iſſued out againſt them, but they have withdrawn themſelves from their uſual Places of Abode, and are fled from Juſtice: His Majeſty has therefore thought fit by the Advice of his Privy Council to iſſue his Royal Proclamation, and His Majeſty does hereby command and require all His loving Subjects to diſcover, take, and apprehend James Duke of Berwick, Sir George Barclay, Major Lowick, George Porter, Capt. Stow, Capt. Walbank, Capt. James Courtney, Lieutenant Sherborne, Brice, Blair, Dinant, Chambers, Boiſe, George Higgins, and his two Brothers, Sons to Sir Thomas Higgins, Davis Cardell, Goodman, Cramburne, Keyes, Pendergroſs, alias Prendergraſs, Bryerly, Trevor, Sir George Maxwell, Durance, a Fleming, Chriſtopher Knightley, Lieutenant King, Holmes, Sir William Parkyns, Rookwood, wherever they may be found, and to carry them before the next Juſtice of Peace or chief Magiſtrate, who is hereby required to commit them to the next Goal, there to remain until they be thence delivered by due Courſe of Law. And His Majeſty doth hereby require the ſaid Juſtice, or other Magiſtrate, immediately to give Notice thereof to Him or His Privy Council. And for the Prevention of the going of the ſaid Perſons, or of any other, into Ireland, or other Parts beyond the Seas, His Majeſty does require and command all His Officers of the Cuſtoms, and other His Officers and Subjects of and in the reſpective Courts and Maritime Towns and Places within His Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, that they and every of them in their reſpective Stations and Places, be careful and diligent in the Examination of all Perſons who ſhall paſs or endeavour to paſs beyond the Seas, and that they do not permit any Perſon whatſoever to go into Ireland, or other Places beyond the Seas, without a Paſs under His Majeſty's Royal Sign Manual until further Order. And if they ſhall diſcover the ſaid Perſons above-named or either of them, then to cauſe them to be apprehended and ſecured, and to give Notice as aforeſaid. And His Majeſty does hereby Publiſh and Declare to all Perſons who ſhall conceal the Perſons above-named, or any of them, or be aiding and aſſiſting in the Concealing of them, or furthering their Eſcape, That they ſhall be proceeded againſt, for ſuch their Offence, with the utmoſt Severity, according to Law. And for the Encouragement of all Perſons to be Diligent and Careful in endeavouring to Diſcover and Apprehend the ſaid Perſons, We do hereby further Declare, That whoſoever ſhall diſcover and Apprehend the Perſons above-named, or any of them, and ſhall bring them before ſome Juſtice of Peace, or chief Magiſtrate, as aforeſaid, ſhall have and receive as a Reward, the Summ of One Thouſand Pounds; which ſaid Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, the Lords Commiſſioners of His Majeſty's Treaſury are hereby Required and Directed to pay accordingly. And if any of the Perſons above-named ſhall Diſcover and Apprehend any of their Accomplices, ſo as they may be brought to Juſtice, His Majeſty does hereby Declare, That every Perſon making ſuch Diſcovery, ſhall have His Majeſty's Gracious Pardon for his Offence, and ſhall receive the Reward of One Thouſand Pound, to be pay'd in ſuch manner as aforeſaid.

Given at our Court at Kenſington, the 23d Day of February, 169⅞, in the Eighth Year of our Reign.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, The different Penning of the Clauſes is not only in that Proclamation, but it is the Language of every Proclamation that has gone out for the Apprehending any of the Conſpirators.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, All that we ſay in Anſwer to this Objection, is, That Mr Harris is not nam'd in that Proclamation.

L. C. J. What ſay you to that Sir Bartholomew Shower? He is not named in the Proclamation: And ſo if he hath diſcovered and apprehended the Priſoner, he has earn'd his Money, whether he be Convicted or not, becauſe Rookwood's Name is in the Proclamation, tho' his is not.

Mr Phipps. Then, my Lord, with humble Submiſſion, here is another Proclamation wherein he is nam'd, we deſire that may be read.

Mr Soll. Gen. And when it is read, it will be as little to your Purpoſe as the other.

Mr Att. Gen. Let them read what they pleaſe, we need ſay nothing at all to it.

L. C. J. Certainly upon this Proclamation, there's no Objection; for he is intitled to his One Thouſand Pound already, tho' Rookwood be never convicted.

Mr Phipps. But is he not by this Proclamation which mentions his Accomplices, intitled to his Pardon? If ſo, he ſwears to ſecure himſelf.

L. C. J. By the Apprehending and Diſcovering, he's intitled to his Pardon.

Mr Phipps. But not without he be brought to Juſtice; that is to ſay, till he be convicted; therefore he cannot be an Evidence to convict him.

L. C. J. That is, as to any that are there named, if any of them diſcover and apprehend one another, it muſt be ſo as that they be brought to Juſtice; But if any Perſon that is not named there does apprehend any that is, he is intitled to the One Thouſand Pound, barely by the Apprehenſion.

Mr Phipps. Then there is another Proclamation where they are both named, as Mr Rookwood tells me.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, We will ſet this Matter right; we will ſhow the other Proclamation, in which, if I am rightly inform'd, for I have not read it, Mr. Harris is nam'd.

Mr Att. Gen. If you have not read it, I would adviſe you not to trouble the Court with it; for you will find the latter Part is reſtrain'd to three or four particular Perſons, of which he is none.

Rookwood. I am named in the Proclamation.

Mr Att. Gen. Ay, but read the latter Part of it, and you will find you are not nam'd in that Clauſe that they referr'd to: You need not read the former Part of the Proclamation, we agree the Priſoner is named there; but only look towards the bottom, which is the Clauſe that they refer to.

Cl. of Arr. (Reads) And we do hereby further declare, &c.

Mr Att. Gen. They have not conſidered the Proclamation, and therefore make an Objection of they don't know what.

Sir B. Shower. We are in your Lordſhip's Judgment.

L. C. J. For what? See if you can make or ſtate a Caſe for our Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. Mr Rookwood is mention'd in the firſt Proclamation, and Harris is not, but there are the Word Accomplices: He is likewiſe mentioned in the laſt Proclamation, but not in the laſt Clauſe of it. I confeſs, if he had it had been plain it would have taken off his Teſtimony; but now we muſt ſubmit it to you, whether he is not an intereſted Perſon, and conſequently no good Witneſs.

L. C. J. Truly I do not ſee any Colour for the Objection. Is he not as well intituled to his One Thouſand Pound, tho' Mr Rookwood had never been try'd, by the bare Apprehending of Mr Rookwood, as if he was convicted?

Sir B. Shower. No, my Lord; becauſe the Words are ſo as he may be brought to Juſtice.

L. C. J. That is not ſo, as to any Perſon that apprehends one mentioned in the Proclamation, if the Perſon that apprehends be not mention'd in it, and named himſelf; if any one that is not mention'd apprehend one that is mention'd, he is intituled, by the Apprehenſion, to the One thouſand Pound. If any one that is mention'd apprehend another, then he is to bring him to Juſtice; now Mr Harris is not named in this Proclamation, and ſo, as to the One thouſand Pound, he ſtands in the ſame Condition as any other Perſon that diſcovered or apprehended one of the Perſons there nam'd.

Sir B. Shower. But it ſeems he was one of the Con-ſpirators, becauſe he is himſelf deſcribed in another Proclamation.

Mr Att. Gen. If it were ſo, it would not be material, nor any manner of Objection; but as they have made their Objection upon theſe Proclamations, we think there is nothing for us to give an Anſwer to.

Mr Cowper. Nay, my Lord, if it were ſo, will Sir Bartholomew Shower ſay his Client is not brought to Juſtice, unleſs he be convicted? I am ſure the Words Convicted or Attainted, are not in the Proclamation.

L. C. J. There is nothing in it; you muſt ſwear Mr. Harris. (Which was done accordingly).

Mr Sol. Gen. Will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life, from the firſt Time you were acquainted with it, and what Hand the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of the whole Thing, your Coming over, and who ſent you, and upon what Errand, and the whole that you know of this Conſpiracy.

Capt. Harris. Upon the 14th of January laſt, the French Stile, New Stile, I was at St. Germains, where I was ſent for by King James, and was ordered to wait his Dinner till it was over, and accordingly I did wait till his Dinner was over, and then I came in, and Col. Parker was with him, and one Mr Hare, who is alſo mention'd in the Proclamation, was there alſo: The King told me he was ſenſible I had ſerved him well, and now he had an Opportunity of doing ſomething for me; he told me he would ſend me into England, where I ſhould be ſubſiſted, and I was to follow the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and accordingly he order'd me ten Lewidores to be paid by Mr Caroll, who is Secretary to the late Queen, and Col. Parker went along with me, and Mr Hare, to Caroll, and told him he came from the King, and we had the Lewidores, and we went to Calais, in Order to our coming over hither: But we were told if we were wind-bound, that the Money we received would not bear our Charges; there was Orders given for our further Subſiſtance at Calice, to the Preſident there. Accordingly we came to Calice, and the Wind did not ſerve us for eight or nine Days; and while I ſtay'd there, the Money that I ſpent at Calice was paid by the Preſident of Calice, Monſieur Latour. Afterwards I landed in England, near Romney Marſh, as I was told, and I came to the Houſe of one Hunt, and he provided me and my Comrade with a couple of Horſes; and coming from thence, I came in the firſt Place to one Tucker's an Apothecary in Sandway, and next from thence we came to Rocheſter, to Charles Croſts's, and from thence in a Coach to Graveſend, and from thence by Water to London: That Night we lay in Grace-Church-ſtreet at an Inn, it being Night, the Night-Tide, and ſomething late. The next Day I came to a Lodging at an Acquaintance of my Comrade's, Mr Hare, at the Unicorn in Brownlow-ſtreet, one Mr Wateman's. The next Night I went to look for Sir George Barclay, whom the King told me I ſhould certainly find by ſuch a Sign of a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, on Mondays and Thurſdays, in Covent-Garden, where his Walk was to be in the Evening, becauſe he was not to appear in the Day-Time openly. It happen'd that upon Monday Night after I came to Town, I went there, and did not find Sir George Barclay according to the King's Direction, which I admired at; but there was one Mr Berkenhead, who told my Comrade, a Day or two after, That Sir George Barclay would needs ſpeak with me, and accordingly I met with him; and he asked me how the King, Queen, Prince, and Princeſs did, and I told him they were very well; I told him I was appointed to attend him, and obey his Orders. He told me he had no Money at preſent, but in two or three Days he would ſend ſome; and ſo he did, by Major Holmes. I had five Shillings a Day for Subſiſtance, and I had no Horſe; and when I had a Horſe, it was ſix Shillings a Day; after which rate I had Subſiſtance for a Month at five Shillings a Day, Guineas going then at Thirty Shillings. Major Holmes paid me the Money by Sir George Barclay's Order, as he told me, and he afterwards gave me a Guinea, and that was the firſt Saturday when the Aſſaſſination was deſign'd; for that we told him we wanted Money, and it was not reaſonable we ſhould take our Horſes out of the Stable before we paid for them: And I met Sir George Barclay ſeveral Times at Covent-Garden, and he told me it was a ſuſpicious Place, and deſired me not to come any more there; but when he had any particular Orders to give me, he would give me Notice of it where I ſhou'd meet him; and accordingly I did meet him ſeveral Times.

Mr Att. Gen. Now, Sir, will you tell what you know as to the Priſoner at the Bar.

Capt. Harris. As to Mr Rookwood, the Saturday that the Aſſaſſination was deſign'd to be, the firſt Time that I knew of it, I met Mr Rookwood, at one Mr Burck's Lodging, where he was up, and I ſaw him in a great Hurry and ſome Conſternation, and in came Mr Bernarde; I ask'd him the Meaning of it, and what they were going about; and Mr Rookwood told me, If I wou'd go down to Captain Counter I ſhou'd know; accordingly I went, and to the beſt of my Remembrance, he gave me a little Note to Captain Counter, but that I am not poſitive in. I went to Captain Counter, and as ſoon as ever I came, he told us, We muſt be immediately ready to go to Turnham Green.

Mr Att. Gen. Where was that?

Capt. Harris. At the Woolpack, that was the Sign ——— as near as I remember. Mr Hare and I were ordered together to come there, and there was Mr Hungate, who had been there ſome Time, and when I came in, Sir George Barclay did declare Laughing, Theſe are my Janiſaries: And he talk'd ſomething of bringing the Garter, and of attacking the Coach; but he went out of the Room, and afterwards he came in and declared, We were all Men of Honour, and that the Buſineſs we were going about, was to attack the Prince of Orange; but Durant came in after that, and ſaid, The Prince of Orange did not go out that Day. When he talk'd of attacking the Prince of Orange, I was very much ſtartled, not knowing any Thing of it before; and I came the next Morning to Mr Rookwood, and ask'd him if we were to be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange, ſays Mr Rookwood to me, I am afraid we are drawn into ſome ſuch Buſineſs; but if I had known of it before I came over, I ſhould have beg'd the King's Pardon at St. Germains, and not have come over hither; and ſaid I, This is very fine, we have ſerv'd to a very good Purpoſe, to be ſent over upon ſuch an Errand and Account. After this this Mr Rookwood, and Mr Lowick, and I, had a Meeting at Red-Lyon Fields, where we did diſcourſe about the Matter. I did often declare againſt it, That it was ſo barbarous a Thing, that no Man of Honour almoſt wou'd be guilty of it; but Major Lowick anſwered, That we were to obey Orders, for ſure Sir George Barclay wou'd not undertake a Thing of that Nature without Orders.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what ſaid Mr Rookwood.

Capt. Harris. He own'd it was a barbarous Thing; but he was ſent over to obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, which he had ſeveral Times declared he was reſolved to do; upon that we parted: ſo afterwards I came to Mr Rookwood's Lodging; it was the Saturday Morning I came to him, and ſo went to Sir George Barclay's; while he was there, Mr Rookwood gave me a Note, naming ſo many Names, particularly Mr Hungate, Mr Hanford, Mr Hare, and his own Name at Top, not the Name that he is arraigned by here; but a ſham Name that he had, as the reſt of us all had ſham Names, which at that Time we went by.

L. C. J. What was your Name?

Capt. Harris. My Name is Jenkins.

L. C. J. Who gave you that Name?

Capt. Harris. King James at St. Germains, and he gave Mr Hare the Name of Guiney, and Mr Rookwood's Name was Roberts. King James told us in his Bed-chamber, We were to go by thoſe Names.

Mr At. Gen. Pray Sir, what did Rookwood ſay to you, when he gave you that Liſt?

Capt. Harris. He told me, he was to go to Turnham-Green, and I was to go along with him, and ſays he to me ſmiling, You ſhall be my Aid de Camp; and get the Reſt of the Gentlemen ready, and accordingly I went to look for ſeveral of the Perſons ——— particularly for Mr Blackburne: When I came back again, I found him lying on his Bed, and that Sir George Barclay had told him the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day, and from thence we went to Dinner, where Major Lowick din'd with us, and Mr Bernarde and Major Lowick ſeeing me in a Heat, ask'd me, Why I was in ſuch a Sweat; I told him I were getting thoſe Men ready for Mr Rookwood, who had made me his Aid de Camp: Says Major Lowick to me, You may very well do it, for you have Six Shillings a Day allow'd you, and I have nothing; I bring two Men at my own Charge. Said I, Major Lowick, I wonder you don't apply your ſelf to Sir George Barclay, and then I believe, you may be ſubſiſted too. He anſwer'd me, He did not think it worth the while to trouble him, ſince he had never ſpoke to him of it before: and Rookwood, and Bernarde, and Lowick, and my ſelf, ſeveral Times met in Red-Lion Fields, and talk'd of attacking the Prince of Orange.

Mr Att. Gen. Who did?

Capt. Harris. Rookwood, Bernarde, Lowick, and my ſelf.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray Sir, let me ask you one Queſtion. Where was your Horſe at firſt?

Capt. Harris. At firſt it was at my Lord Feverſham's Stables, as they told me, in Somerſet-Houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Where were the other Perſons Horſes?

Capt. Harris. There was Mr Hungate's and Mr Hare's Horſes in the ſame Place, at the ſame Time, as they told me.

Mr Att. Gen. How came you by your Horſe there?

Capt. Harris. Maj. Holmes did deliver my Horſe, and committed it to my Care, and I carry'd it thence to another Place.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you obſerve there was any more Horſes there?

Capt. Harris. I believe there was Five or Six, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr At. Gen. Do you know where Rookwood was to have his Horſe?

Capt. Harris. He had a Horſe; but whence he had it I don't know.

Mr Att. Gen. Had you any Arms delivered you?

Capt. Harris. Yes, I had by Capt. Counter.

Mr Conyers. Were you at no other Place together that Saturday Night, the 22*d* of February, becauſe you ſay you din'd together?

Capt. Harris. Yes, we were at the Bear Tavern.

Mr Conyers. What Diſcourſe paſs'd between you there?

Capt. Harris. They were talking about the Aſſaſſination; but what any particular Perſon ſaid, I cannot tell.

Mr Conyers. Pray who were there?

Capt. Harris. There was Mr Knightley, Captain Rookwood, and Mr King; and Knightley went out, and came in again, and declared, we muſt have a great deal of Care of our ſelves, or we ſhould be taken up: and he whiſper'd it firſt, and afterwards I asked him what it was; and he told me, and ſaid, We muſt have a Care of our ſelves. Says Mr King, ſtaring this Way with his Eyes, Surely God Almighty is on our Side; and ſo we parted.

L. C. J. When was this?

Capt. Harris. This was the Night of Saturday the 22d, when it was diſcover'd; for ſome of them were taken up the next Day.

Mr At. Gen. Was Rookwood there at that Time at the Bear Tavern.

Capt. Harris. I cannot poſitively ſay whether he was or not.

Mr At. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you there?

Capt. Harris. We talk'd of Aſſaſſinating the King; but what it was in particular, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was Rookwood there?

Capt. Harris. Yes, I believe he was; but I cannot poſitively ſay.

L. C. J. You ſay it was the laſt Saturday that the King was to go abroad, that you apprehended you were diſcovered?

Capt. Harris. Yes, we apprehended we were diſcover'd before that; for Mr Lowick told me, that three or four Days before, in that Week, that his Name, and one Harriſon's, were given into the Council, and another, and another, Two or Three of them, as he told me; I think Three or Four; and upon that Account Major Lowick went from his Lodging, and did not lie at his Lodging the Night before; and I came to Major Lowick, and he told me the ſame Thing at the King's Arms Tavern.

Mr At. Gen. Can you remember what Diſcourſe you had that Saturday Night?

Mr Cowper. You ſay that on Saturday the 22d, Mr Rookwood gave you the Liſt.

Capt. Harris. I do not ſay it was the 22*d*, for I cannot ſwear to the Day of the Month; but it it was the ſecond Saturday that we were to have gone about this Buſineſs.

Mr Cowper. You ſay he gave you a Liſt of Names: Pray, when he gave you that Liſt, what Diſcourſe happened in the Room, juſt before, or after the giving of the Liſt?

Capt. Harris. Sir, I think I told the Court that before.

Mr Cowper. Sir. I deſire you would repeat it.

Capt. Harris. My Lord, I humbly deſire to know whether I am to anſwer that Gentleman that Queſtion?

L. C. J. Yes, you are to anſwer, being upon your Oath, and to tell the whole Truth.

Mr Cowper. I asked him the Queſtion ſo fairly, what Diſcourſe introduced the giving of the Liſt, and what followed upon it, that I perceive this Gentleman does not know which Side I am of.

Capt. Harris. Mr Rookwood ſaid we were to go to Turnham-Green; and he told me, that I was to be one of his Party, that we were to attack the Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. You ſay you were to be one of his Party; pray was it there that he told you, you ſhould be his Aid de Camp?

Capt. Harris. Yes, he did tell me I was to be his Aid de Camp.

Mr Phipps. Whoſe Hand-writting was that Liſt?

Capt. Harris. I cannot tell, I had it from that Gentleman.

Mr Phipps. But whoſe Writing was it?

Capt. Harris. Indeed I know not his Hand-writing, and therefore cannot tell whoſe it was: He is for his Life, but I believe he cannot deny any Thing that I have ſaid, I ſuppoſe not: I ſhould be very ſorry to accuſe Mr Rookwood of any Thing that was not true.

Mr Phipps. Pray whoſe Names were in that Liſt?

Capt. Harris. I have mention'd Mr Hare, Mr Hanford, Mr Blackburne, my ſelf, and you, Mr Rookwood, had your own Name at Top.

Rookwood. What is that Blackburne?

Capt. Harris. He is a Lancaſhire Man.

Rookwood. It's a very ſtrange Thing I ſhould give you a Liſt with a Man's Name that I don't know, I declare it, I know no ſuch Perſon.

Capt. Harris. Mr Rookwood, I believe you are very ſenſible I do not accuſe you of any Thing that is not true.

Mr Phipps. When did you ſee that Liſt laſt?

Capt. Harris. He gave it into my Hands, and had it from me again, or I threw it away afterwards.

Rookwood. But you that were to be an Evidence ought to have kept it to juſtify your Evidence.

Capt. H. Truly I did not intend to have been an Evidence at that Time.

Mr At. Gen. If they will ask him any Queſtions, let them.

Sir B. Shower. No, indeed, I will ask him no Queſtions.

Mr Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have another Piece of Evidence which we would offer to your Lordſhip, which is not direct Evidence againſt the Priſoner, but only to prove a Circumſtance or two of what has already been ſworn: We do acknowlege, my Lord, it does not affect Mr Rookwood, but only to ſtrengthen and confirm what they have ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. With Submiſſion we hope it will not be Evidence fit to be given as to the Priſoner at all; for becauſe a Man may ſwear true in the particular Circumſtance of a Thing, that therefore he ſwears true what he ſwears againſt the Priſoner, I think is no Coſequence in the World.

L. C. J. It is a Thing diſtinct and foreign to the Matter, as to Mr Rookwood.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, we do not ſay it directly affects Mr Rookwood; but when your Lordſhip has heard it, we ſhall ſubmit it to you, how far it confirms even the Evidence given againſt him.

Mr Conyers. My Lord, we ſay the Priſoner was to have his Horſe from Somerſet-Houſe; and that there were Horſes plac'd there for that Purpoſe we are going to prove.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, it is one entire Conſpiracy, in which every one had his Part; one was to have his Horſes and his Party in one Place, and another in another: Now that there were at ſuch Time ſuch Horſes at Somerſet-Houſe, and thoſe Horſes were delivered out from Somerſet-Houſe, is certainly a Confirmation of the Truth of what the Witneſſes have ſaid.

L. C. J. It is ſo. If that be it you offer, it is very material.

Mr Conyers. We ſhall prove, That upon the Diſappointment on the firſt Saturday, the 15th of February, they were to be ready againſt the 22d; and you will hear how the Horſes were diſpos'd of in the mean Time. Call Chamberlain, Maskel, and Allen.

Mr Att. Gen. Call any one of them, I believe it is enough.

Mr Chamberlain appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr At. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord, and the Jury an Account what you know of any Horſes that were brought to Somerſet-houſe about February laſt and how long they ſtay'd there?

Chamberlain. There was ſix Horſes.

Mr At. Gen. Who brought them in.

Chamberlain. They were ſent in by ſome Perſons in Mr Lewis's Name.

Mr At. Gen. Had you any Direction to take Care of them?

Chamb. Mr Lewis ſent in a Note to take Care of them for a Night or two.

Mr At. Gen. Who carried them away?

Chamb. I cannot tell: Some People came to ſee 'em that I never ſaw before, and they took care of them; I know not who they were, and I never ſaw them ſince.

Mr At. Gen. What Time was it that they came for them?

Chamberlain. It was about the Middle of the Day.

Mr At. Gen. What Month was it in?

Chamb. I think it was much about the latter End of February, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr At. Gen. How long was it before the Plot was diſcover'd.

Chamb. It was about a Week, or a ſmall Matter, before the Plot was diſcover'd, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long ſtaid the Horſes there at Somerſet-Houſe?

Chamb. Three of them ſtaid a Night or two; but the other three of them about a Matter of a Week or ten Days.

Mr At. Gen. Who own'd thoſe Horſes?

Cham-

Chamberlain. They were ſent in, in Mr Lewis's Name; but who own'd them I cannot tell indeed.

Mr Conyers. Then ſwear John Allen. (Which was done.)

Pray tell my Lords and the Jury, what you know concerning any Horſes about the Time of the Breaking out of the Plot.

Mr Att. Gen. We mean in Somerſet-Houſe Stable.

Allen. There were ſeven Horſes came in.

Mr Conyers. Who brought them?

Allen. There was Six in the firſt Place; one came in afterwards in the Evening.

Mr Conyers. By whoſe Order were they brought there?

Allen. By Mr Lewis's Order.

Mr At. Gen. How long did they ſtay there?

Allen. Some of them ſtaid there ſeveral Days; Three of them went away the next Day, as I think.

Mr Conyers. Do you remember about what time thoſe Horſes were brought thither?

Allen. They were brought there, I believe, about ſeven or eight Days before the Plot broke out.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, We only call theſe Witneſſes to confirm the Teſtimony of the others, that there were ſuch Horſes there at that time, and for the Preſent we reſt it here.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, what ſay you to it for the Priſoner?

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we are of Council for the Priſoner; and that which we are to inſiſt upon is this, which we ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment. In the firſt place, whether here be two Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner to prove this Treaſon according to the Statute of Edw. 6. which requires two Witneſſes in High-Treaſon, and lawful Ones; but that in the firſt Place we ſay there are not two Witneſſes at all, at leaſt not to any Overt-Act that is laid in this Indictment. As to what Captain Porter ſays of what paſs'd between him and Durant, the Dialogue between them where Rookwood was preſent, we are in your Lordſhip's Direction; and we doubt not but the Jury will take it into their Conſideration, how far that affects the Priſoner; that he ſhall not be concern'd in any Tranſaction between Mr Porter and any other Perſons; none of their Declarations, none of their treaſonable Practices, can be imputed to or affect him in any way whatſoever. Now all that Captain Porter ſays of Mr Rookwood, is, that he was once at the Globe Tavern, and there was a Diſcourſe about this Matter; and then he tells your Lordſhip of a Dialogue between him and Durant, and an Account of what paſs'd between them; but he does not ſay any Thing of Mr Rookwood being any Ways concern'd in the Matter, but only that he dropped this Expreſſion, It was a deſperate Adventure, a dangerous Enterprize, and he ſeemed againſt it, but in the End he concluded with ſomething in French, which what they are, and what they mean, we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip and the Jury; he interprets it, when Sir George Barclay ſaid he muſt have a Share in it, then Rookwood replied, There's an End of it. But there is not one Word of Agreement ſworn to that Mr Rookwood ſpoke, to ſhew his Conſent. There is but one Time more that Mr Porter ſwears to, about the Priſoner at the Bar, and that is, at his Lodgings in Little Rider-ſtreet; for as to the other Conſults, Mr Rookwood was not preſent there: It ſeems there was a Diſcourſe about the Affair, but that Rookwood ſaid nothing, but went away; there was not ſo much as the leaſt Intimation of an Agreement to any ſuch Deſign, or Approbation of what was agitated in the Company, and we inſiſt upon it as to this in Point of Law, that it amounts to no more than Miſpriſion of Treaſon at moſt. My Lord, I will not now contend about Notions, nor will I argue whether Conſulting and Agreeing be Evidence of an Overt-Act; I ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Directions, notwithſtanding the Variety and Difference of Opinions that have been.

L. C. J. Sir Bartholomew Shower, I know not what Variety of Opinions you mean; there have been ſome Diſcourſes in Pamphlets I agree, but it was always taken and held for Law, that Conſulting and Agreeing was an Overt-Act.

Sir B. Shower. Here is no Evidence of any Agreement.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear what you ſay to that.

Sir B. Shower. It is not the being preſent where Traytors do conſult and conſpire the Death of the King, unleſs they actually agree; nor is it Evidence ſufficient to guide or prevail upon a Jury's Conſcience, to affirm upon their Oaths, that ſuch a one is guilty of High-Treaſon, becauſe ſuch a one was there and ſaid nothing at all; for the not diſcovering afterwards, nor accuſing is no Evidence at all againſt Mr Rookwood. As to Mr Harris, he gives you an Account of a great deal that does not affect Mr Rookwood, neither all that paſt at St. Germains, nor in their Journey into England, for all that may be true, and yet the Priſoner no way concern'd in it. As to what he affirms of the Priſoner, we ſhall ſubmit it to your Conſideration: What it amounts to, and all that his Depoſition comes up to, is, That Mr Rookwood complain'd that he was to obey implicitly Sir George Barclay's Orders; and Harris gives an Account but of one particular Time that Mr Rookwood undertook or did agree to be concern'd in this Matter; it was but once, and that was, when he gave him the Note of thoſe that were to go to Turnham-Green, and that he was to be his Ayd du Camp: And as to that, we ſhall give you an Account by Witneſſes whom we ſhall call, that theſe two Witneſſes ought not to be believed as to what they have ſworn, tho' they do not come up to make two Witneſſes according to Law upon this Indictment: What they have ſaid as to this Man is not credible, tho' they may ſpeak true as to others; and no Doubt there was a barbarous Conſpiracy; it appears there was ſuch, beyond all Exception and Contradiction; and the Perſons that have been condemn'd as Conſpirators have acknowledg'd it: But, my Lord, that which is now before your Lordſhip and the Jury, is, to enquire whether the Priſoner is concern'd in this Affair at all, and how far; and we hope the Jury will be of Opinion he is not concern'd. The Heinouſneſs of the Crime, and the Aggravations of it, being to be abhorred by all Mankind, we think ought not to ſway with the Jury, nor influence their Judgments to believe a Witneſs ever the ſooner in accuſing any other Perſon; it ought rather to have a contrary Allay, for the greater the Crime is, and the farther off from having any tolerable Opinion in the World,

World, they ought to expect the greater Proof; and no one is to be preſum'd guilty of ſuch an Act, without very ſufficient Evidence of it; and the greater the Crime, the Proof ought to be the more poſitive and undeniable: It is not their being plainly poſitive that is ſufficient, but whether it is ſuch that is good in Law; and about that we are ſure your Lordſhip will give true Directions in point of Law: and whether the Witneſſes be credible or no, muſt be ſubmitted and left to the Jury, after we have call'd ſome Witneſſes who will give you an Account of their Reputation.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, we humbly inſiſt there are not two Witneſſes, ſuch as the Law requires, to prove the Charge upon this Indictment againſt the Priſoner: The two Overt-Acts that touch Mr Rookwood, are firſt Conſulting and Agreeing how to kill the King; the other is the finding Arms and Horſes for that purpoſe: But as to this latter, the finding Arms and Horſes, there is not one Evidence that comes up to it: And as to the former, the Conſultations, whether there be ſufficient Evidence that comes up to that, is very much a Queſtion with us: But we ſay, with Submiſſion, there are not two Witneſſes in that Caſe; for Mr Porter ſays only what he was told by Sir George Barclay, that Sir George propoſed this Matter; but withal he tells you, that when Sir George Barclay propoſed it, and Mr Rookwood was inform'd what the Deſign was, he was ſo far from Conſpiring, Conſulting, or Agreeing to do it, that he ſaid it was a barbarous Act, and he recoil'd at it. Then at laſt ſays Sir George Barclay, You muſt command a Party.

L. C. J. Well, and what ſaid Rookwood then?

Mr Phipps. Porter ſays, he then ſaid, There's an End of it. Now, my Lord, what Evidence is this of a Conſultation and Agreement? And this is all that Porter ſays. As to what Mr Harris ſays, we are to conſider whether the Liſt given to him be an Overt-Act; and there the Point in Queſtion is, Whether that Liſt can be given in Evidence againſt Mr Rookwood, upon this late Act of Parliament, as an Overt-Act, it not being laid in the Indictment? There is indeed an Overt-Act of a Liſt laid in the Indictment, as given to Granburne, but none as given to Mr Rookwood.

L. C. J. Pray take the Evidence right: Firſt, What will you make an Overt-Act? What do you think when there is a Debate among divers Perſons about killing the King?

Sir B. Shower. With Submiſſion that will be no Overt-Act, if there be a Debate of ſuch a Matter, tho' he be preſent.

L. C. J. Aye; but when there is a Conſult, and upon Debate a Reſolution is formed, and tho' he does at firſt diſlike it, yet when he is told he muſt command a Party, he ſays he is content, or there's an End of it; What do you make of that?

Sir B. Shower. He ſaid he did not like it, it was a barbarous deſperate Deſign.

L. C. J. It's true, but when Sir George Barclay ſaid he ſhou'd command a Party, he acquieſced, and ſaid there was an End of it: There was a Diſcourſe about Cutting off the King, and that was agreed upon in the Company at that Time; and tho' at firſt he did not like it, yet he might afterwards agree to it.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, that is it which we deny; we ſay there is no Proof of his Agreement to it.

L. C. J. Capt. Porter ſays, he did declare that he ſaid he look'd upon it as a deſperate Deſign, and was averſe from being engag'd in it, but afterwards did agree to it; Whether is not that ſuch an Overt-Act, as is laid in the Indictment?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, We muſt beg Leave for the Priſoner in a Caſe of this Nature, that it may be recollected what the Evidence did ſay. Mr Porter did not take upon him to affirm that Mr Rookwood conſented to it, but only ſaid, There was an End of it. Now we muſt leave that to the Jury, what they can make of ſuch a doubtful Expreſſion.

L. C. J. Call Mr Porter in again.

Mr Conyers. My Lord, the firſt Meeting Mr Porter ſpeaks of, where the Priſoner Mr Rookwood was, is at the Globe Tavern, where this Diſcourſe was; the next Meeting that he ſpeaks of, was on the Friday Night, before the firſt Saturday when the Buſineſs was to be done, and afterwards he met at Porter's Lodgings, on Saturday Morning, in Ryder-ſtreet.

Then Capt. Porter came in again.

L. C. J. Hark ye, Mr Porter, the firſt Time that this Matter was propoſed, when Mr Rookwood was preſent, you ſay was at the Globe Tavern.

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. And you ſay he diſlik'd it, and did not care to be concern'd in it.

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, he did ſo.

L. C. J. Well, What ſaid Sir George Barclay?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barclay ſaid he ought to obey his Orders, for he had ſuch a Commiſſion for ſuch a Thing, and he drew out a Scheme how it was to be done; and when Sir George Barclay told Mr Rookwood he ſhou'd command his Party, he replyed in French,

There's an End of it.

L. C. J. This was at the Globe Tavern, Was it not?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray then, Capt. Porter, let me ask you another Queſtion, Was he afterwards with you at any other Meeting, and when and where?

Capt. Porter. He was with me upon Saturday the 15th, at my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet, where was Sir George Barclay and others.

Mr Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe happen'd then, I pray?

Capt. Porter. They did there diſcourſe the whole Matter, and Sir George Barclay was not for going at that Time, becauſe there was ſo many People that went with the King; that there wou'd not be a good Opportunity to effect the Deſign: But I told him they wou'd go off after the Hunting was over, and ſo it was agreed upon to go on with the Undertaking.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, at that Time did Mr Rookwood pretend to diſlike the Affair, or refuſe to be any Way at all concern'd in it?

Capt. Porter. No, my Lord, I can't remember that he ſpoke one Word.

L. C. J. Was Mr Rookwood there?

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was Mr Rookwood, Sir George Barclay, and Mr Durant.

Mr Att. Gen. And had you Diſcourſe at that Time about this Buſineſs?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, there was that Objection made of ſo many People going with the King, and I made that Anſwer that I tell you.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Why then, ſuppoſe at the Globe Tavern, ſuch an Expreſſion had not dropt from the Priſoner, but a Man is preſent at two Conſults that are held about the Death of the King, but ſays nothing either at the firſt or ſecond, What wou'd you make of that Caſe?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I confeſs this is a Caſe of a very barbarous Nature, of which I hope my Client will acquit himſelf: But I think we have the Authority of Parliament on our Side, that this does not amount to a Proof of Treaſon. It ſeems they lay a ſtreſs upon this, that Mr Rookwood came to Captain Porter's Lodgings on the Saturday Morning the 15th: But then take the Caſe as it is; for ought that does appear upon the Proof, he knows not upon what Account the Meeting is beforehand. I think that is the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, upon which the Reverſal of his Attainder went, that the Evidence came ſhort, and that it was but Miſpriſion; for the Evidence was, That he was preſent at the ſuppoſed Declaration's reading, but ſaid nothing at all to it.

L. C. J. But I ſpeak of two Meetings; there was but one.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I do not know whether there were two Meetings or one then: But this is the Ground we go upon, there ought to be two Witneſſes: And if there be two Meetings upon ſuch a Deſign, the ſecond may be is accidental, and it does not appear to be a deſign'd Meeting; and there was no Appointment of Mr Rookwood to be there, nor any Negotiation by way of Meſſage or otherwiſe, to that Purpoſe. Is this, my Lord, an Overt-Act? Suppoſe a Man be preſent at a Conſult about treaſonable Practices, and he uſes Words that are indifferent; it is true, in the Caſe of a Wager it amounts to an Aſſent, but it hardly will come to that when People meet by Accident, or for they don't know what.

L. C. J. How is this by Accident?

Sir B. Shower. It does not appear that it was by Deſign or Appointment.

L. C. J. They were Acquaintance.

Sir B. Shower. He had no Acquaintance with him but in Sir George Barclay's Company.

L. C. J. But beſides, there was an expreſs Conſent at the Globe Tavern, when Rookwood ſaid there is an End of it.

Sir B. Shower. That is as much as to ſay, I will not do it, I will not go with you——

Mr Sol. Gen. Sir G. Barclay was the Perſon whom they were to obey; and Harris tells you he told them what they were to do, and ſix Horſes were firſt plac'd, and three of them afterwards remov'd.

Sir B. Shower. That won't affect him what Sir George Barclay ſaid, any more than Lewis's appointing of the Horſes.

L. C. J. Then here is another Thing, Why did he give a Liſt to Mr Harris? the Liſt that was given had Mr Rookwood's Name a Top, as he was to command the Party, and there was Harris's Name and Hare's Name as of his Party; that is, their feign'd Names: Mr Rookwood's feigned Name was Roberts that was at Top, and they were to go to Turnham-Green, and Rookwood told Harris, he ſhould be his Aid du Camp.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, for that I think we have a Point of Law, that we apprehend will turn off all that Evidence, and ſure we may take that Exception now: The Words of the Act are, That no Evidence ſhall be given of any Overt-Act that is not expreſsly laid in the Indictment. Now cannot I ſhew upon this Indictment, that there is no Overt Act in ſuch a poſitive direct Manner as they now urge about this Liſt. Will not that ſatisfy your Lordſhip's Judgment to ſet aſide all this Evidence? To make the Indictment good for Treaſon, there ought to be a Compaſſing of the Death of the King laid, and an Overt Act laid declaring that Compaſſing; but no Evidence is to be given of any Overt-Act that is not laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You are not to take Exceptions to the Indictment now, but only to the Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. I have this one Exception more; there is never a Quodque, nor a Juratores ulterius preſentant.

L. C. J. There does not need; but that is a Fault, if any, in the Indictment, and is not to be ſtirr'd now.

Sir B. Shower. If there be not a Preſentment by the Jury, then there is no Overt Act alledged: And if there be no Overt Act alledged, or no ſuch Overt Act, then we are within the Words of the Act, That no Evidence ſhall be given of any ſuch Overt Act but what is alledg'd; and it is, if not expreſsly alledg'd, as if it were not alledg'd at all: Now here it is very looſe, & iidem Chriſtophorus Knightley, and ſo it goes on with the reſt, did ſo and ſo. There is a Preſentment at firſt, that they did compaſs and imagine the Death of the King; and then the Indictment comes farther, and ſays, that Forty Men ſhould do this Buſineſs, and of thoſe Forty theſe four ſhould be ſome; and then the iidem bought Horſes and Arms, and ſo it muſt go to the laſt Antecedent, and then there is no expreſs alledging of any Overt Act, and then it is as if no Overt Act at all was alledg'd.

L. C. J. This Exception is not to the Evidence, but to the Indictment: It begins, Juratores preſentant quod; Does not that relate to all?

Sir B. Shower. No, my Lord; and I can tell you a Reaſon why not: If it be not ſo well alledg'd as it ſhould be, it is in an Indictment as if it were never alledg'd at all; and ſo within the Words of the Act of Parliament this is not an Overt Act alledg'd, and therefore they cannot give Evidence upon it.

Mr Sol. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I can't imagine what they are doing, they are moving in Arreſt of Judgment before a Verdict given: They ſay the Overt Act is not expreſsly laid; Is that an Exception to the Evidence, or to the Indictment?

Sir B. Shower. If my Lord will pleaſe to give us the Liberty, we would ſhew there can be no Verdict given upon this Indictment.

L. C. J. Certainly this is an irregular Proceeding; this is not a Time of Exception to the Judgment.

Mr Phipps. Then, my Lord, we are in your Judgment, as to the Proof that has been given: If a Man be preſent at a Meeting of ſeveral Perſons, and there is a treaſonable Debate about Killing the King, and this Man is only preſent, but neither aſſents, nor makes the Propoſal how it ſhall be done, whether the bare being ſilent, and ſaying nothing, is ſuch an Overt Act as ſhall convict a Man of Treaſon.

L. C. J. I tell you, Conſenting to a traiterous Deſign is an Overt Act of High Treaſon, if that Conſent be made to appear by good Proof: Now the Queſtion is, What is a good Proof and Evidence

dence of this Conſent? A Man is two or three Times at a treaſonable Conſult for Killing the King, and though perhaps at the firſt he did not, yet at the ſecond he did know that the Meeting was for ſuch a Deſign, (ſuppoſe for the Purpoſe there was but two Meetings) and at the ſecond it is determined to go on with the Deſign; Is not that an Overt Act, tho' it cannot be proved that the Priſoner ſaid any Thing?

Mr Phipps. If the firſt Meeting is not a Conſent, or an Overt Act, neither will a ſecond or a third be, if there was no more done than at the firſt, but they are like ſo many Cyphers without a Figure.

L. C. J. The firſt Meeting poſſibly might be accidental, he might not know what it was for, though that will go a great Way if he does not diſſent or diſcover; but then he meets again with the ſame Company, knowing what they had in Deſign; Does not that prove a Conſent? That was the Caſe of Sir Everard Digby in the Powder Plot.

Mr Phipps. But where it may be uncertain, my Lord, whether it were with a good Deſign, or a bad Deſign, that he met with that Company, it ought to be taken moſt favourably for the Priſoner: This Man might be preſent in Order to a Diſcovery.

L. C. J. But beſides, that is not this Caſe; you are mooting upon Points that are not in the Caſe. When Mr Harris came to Mr Rookwood, and finding them in ſome Diſorder, and being inquiſitive what was the Occaſion, he was ſent to Counter; and when he diſcovered what they were to go about, he afterwards meeting Mr Rookwood, ſays to him, Are we ſent over to murder the Prince of Orange? ſays Rookwood, if I had known of this Deſign before I came from France, I would have begg'd the King's, that is, King James's Pardon, and deſir'd to have been excuſed. Hereby he expreſſes his Knowledge of the Deſign, and what he was to do; and though he diſliked, yet would obey Orders.

Mr Phipps. There is no Doubt, my Lord, but he knew of it; but whether your Lordſhip will conſtrue his Silence as a Conſent, in Treaſon, is the Queſtion.

L. C. J. A Man is at frequent Conſults about Killing the King, and does not reveal it, it is a great Evidence of his Conſent.

Mr Phipps. But it is not prov'd that he did actually conſent to it.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether this is not totally improper and irregular at this Time; they are arguing how far the Evidence is to be believ'd, before the Time proper for ſuch an Argument comes.

Mr Att. Gen. If they will call their Witneſſes, let them; or if they ſay they have none, then they may make their Obſervations upon the Evidence; but elſe we deſire we may be kept to the uſual Method of Proceedings.

Mr Phipps. With Submiſſion, we thought it fit to know the Opinion of the Court firſt, if there be two Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners; for if there be not two Witneſſes, as the Law requires, we need not trouble the Court with our Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, we muſt deſire that the Record may be read of Captain Porter's Conviction of Manſlaughter; a Man that has been guilty of doing ſuch an Act, feloniouſly, maliciouſly, and voluntarily, as that is, ſure is not a competent Witneſs.

Cl. of Ar. It has been read already.

Mr At. Gen. I thought we had been over that Objection before.

Sir B. Shower. We think it is proper for us to move it now again; for though it is no Objection to his being a legal Witneſs, yet we hope it will influence his Reputation as to his Credit; for he that has been guilty of killing a Man in ſuch a Manner as the Indictment lays it, will find but little Credit, we hope, with a Jury of Countrymen. But ſince it has been read, and your Lordſhip and the Jury have taken notice of it, we will call ſome other Witneſſes as to Mr Porter's Reputation and Behaviour, we think they will prove Things as bad as an Attainder. I ſhall not open them to your Lordſhip, but beg Leave to call our Witneſſes, who will acquaint you what they have to ſay.

Mr At. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, you will not think fit to let them do ſo. I deſire they would not uſher in any Thing of Evidence without acquainting the Court what they call them for: For that were the Way to let them in to call Witneſſes to Things that are not proper.

L. C. J. Nay, without doubt it is not regular to produce any Evidence, without opening it.

Mr At. Gen. For if it be for any Crime that a Man may be preſented for, and there is no Conviction; I think that ought not to be given in Evidence to take away a Witneſs's Credit: If it be only to his general Reputation and Behaviour, ſo far they may go, and we can't oppoſe it. Therefore I deſire Sir Bartholomew Shower will open to the Court of what Nature his Evidence is.

Sir B. Shower. Well, I will tell you then what I call them to.

L. C. J. You muſt tell us what you call them to.

Sir B. Shower. Why then, my Lord, if Robbing upon the High-way, if Clipping, if Converſing with Clippers, if Fornication, if Buggery, if any of theſe Irregularities, will take off the Credit of a Man, I have Inſtructions in my Brief, of Evidence of Crimes of this Nature, and to this Purpoſe againſt Mr Porter; and we hope that by Law, a Priſoner ſtanding for his Life is at Liberty to give an Account of the Actions and Behaviour of the Witneſſes againſt him. I know the Objection that Mr Attorney makes, a Witneſs does not come prepar'd to vindicate and give an Account of every Action of his Life, and it is not commonly allowed to give Evidence of particular Actions; but if thoſe Actions be repeated, and a Man lives in the Practice of them, and this Practice is continued for ſeveral Years, and this be made out by Evidence; we hope no Jury that have any Conſcience, will upon their Oaths give any Credit to the Evidence of a Perſon againſt whom ſuch a Teſtimony is given.

Mr Phipps. We are ſpeaking only, my Lord, to the Credit of Mr Porter, and if we can ſhew by Evidence that he is ſo ill a Man as to be guilty of thoſe Crimes that we have open'd, according to the Inſtructions in our Brief; we hope the Jury will not think him fit to be a good Evidence againſt us in this Matter.

L. C. J. What ſay you to this, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, they themſelves know, that this Sort of Evidence never was admitted in any Caſe, nor can be, for it muſt tend to the Overthrow of all Juſtice and legal Proceedings; for inſtead of trying the Priſoner at the Bar, they would try Mr Porter. It has been always deny'd where it comes to a particular Crime that a Man may be proſecuted for, and this it ſeems is not one Crime or two, but ſo many and ſo long continued as they ſay, and ſo often practis'd, that here are the whole Actions of a Man's Life to be ript up, which they can never ſhew any Precedent when it was permitted, becauſe a Man has no Opportunity to defend himſelf. Any Man in the World may by this Means be wounded in his Reputation, and Crimes laid to his Charge that he never thought of, and he can have no Opportunity of giving an Anſwer to it, becauſe he never imagined there would be any ſuch Objection: It is Killing a Man in his good Name by a Side-wound, againſt which he has no Protection or Defence. My Lord, this muſt tend to the preventing all Manner of Juſtice; it is againſt all common Senſe or Reaſon, and it never was offer'd at by any Lawyer before, as I believe, at leaſtwiſe never ſo openly; and therefore I wonder that theſe Gentlemen ſhould do it, who acknowledge, at leaſt one of them did, that as often as it has been offer'd it has been over-rul'd; and I know not for what End it is now offer'd, but to make a Noiſe in the Court: They know that it is irregular as much as any thing that could be offer'd.

Mr Soll. Gen. Indeed, my Lord, if the Priſoner at the Bar had offer'd this Matter, it had been excuſable; but, that Gentlemen of the long Robe, and who are ſo well acquainted with the Practice of the Courts of Law, ſhould pretend to do ſuch a Thing, is unaccountable. There was ſomewhat like this that was offered at Mancheſter, but that was by the Priſoner, to prove that one Lunt who was a Witneſs had two Wives, and they brought a Copy of an Indictment upon which there was no Proceſs; after that they endeavour'd to prove him guilty of ſeveral Robberies; but all that Sort of Evidence was refus'd. I only give them this Inſtance to ſhew, that where the Priſoner has attempted it, it has been always rejected; and I am ſure they cannot ſhew me that ever it was allowed, even to the Priſoner himſelf to give any Thing of this Kind in Evidence; and this I muſt ſay, they can never ſhew me any one particular Inſtance, when Council ever endeavoured to do it, before this Time.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I mentioned the particular Crimes, the Faults which I had in my Inſtructions to object againſt the Credit of the Teſtimony of Cap. Porter, in Anſwer to Mr Attorney's Deſire, that I would open the Particulars of the Evidence, that I would call my Witneſſes to the Truth of it; I was loth to repeat the Words, I think the Things themſelves ſo abominable; but we conceive with Submiſſion, we may be admitted in this Caſe to offer what we have offered. Suppoſe a Man be a common, lewd, diſorderly Fellow, one that frequently ſwears to Falſehood for his Life: We know it is a common Rule in Point of Evidence, that againſt a Witneſs you ſhall only give an Account of his Character at large, of his general Converſation; but that general Converſation ariſes from particular Actions, and if the Witneſſes give you an Account of ſuch diſorderly Actions repeated, we hope that will go to his Diſcredit, which is that we now are labouring for, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Opinion whether we may not do it.

L. C. J. Look ye, you may bring Witneſſes to give an Account of the general Tenour of his Converſation, but you don't think ſure that we will try now at this Time, whether he be guilty of Robbery or Buggery.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we will give you an Account that he uſed to have a private Lodging, and come in with his Horſe tir'd, and ſeveral other ſuch Things, as that he us'd to go out in Diſguiſes, and the like.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, I cannot imagine why a Man that has been guilty of any ſuch Crimes, and is not taken, ſhould be of greater Credit than a Man that has been taken and puniſh'd.

L. C. J. What is that you ſay Mr Phipps?

Mr Phipps. My Lord, I ſay 'tis the Crime that renders a Man infamous, and I do not know why a Man that has had the good Fortune not to be taken and puniſhed for great Crimes by him committed, ſhould be in a better Condition as to the Credit of his Teſtimony, than one that is taken and undergoes the Puniſhment of the Law.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Charnock urg'd that as far as it would go, but we are oblig'd, it ſeems, to hear Things that have been over-ruled over and over; but I deſire to know of them, whether they can ſhew he has been guilty of a greater Crime than he has confeſt himſelf guilty of in Court, I mean of the intended Aſſaſſination.

Mr Phipps. No, we agree we can't, but pray let us prove him guilty of as many Crimes as we can.

Mr Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, I hope you'll keep them to the general Queſtion of the common ordinary Tenour of his Converſation.

Sir B. Shower. Call Mr Oldfield, Mr Nicholas, Mr Milford, Black Will.

(Mr Milford appeared)

Cryer. Lay your Hand on the Book. The Evidence that you ſhall give on behalf of the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: So help you God.

Sir B. Shower. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you know Capt. Porter, and how long you have known him.

Milford. I have known him about Four Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Reputation is he of.

Milford. I never knew any Hurt by him in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Pray what is your Name?

Milf. Frederick Milford.

Sir B. Shower. But the Name in my Brief is John Milford, that is my Man.

L. C. J. But you ſee this Man knows him.

Sir B. Shower. Call Mr Oldfield.

(Which was done, and he appear'd accordingly.)

Mr Phipps. Do you know Capt. Porter?

Oldfield. Yes I do.

Mr Phipps. How long have you known him?

Old. I believe about Twenty Years.

Mr Phipps. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of his Life and Converſation.

Oldfield. I can ſay nothing, he was always civil in my Company, but he was lewd in his Diſcourſe.

Sir

Sir B. Shower. What do you mean by being lewd in his Diſcourſe?

Oldfield. Why he would be talking very extravagantly.

Mr Phipps. What do you mean in talking, was it of what he had done himſelf, Sir?

Oldfield. No otherwiſe than that he had whor'd, and thoſe Kind of Things.

Sir B. Shower. What other Things beſide Whoring?

Old. I know no other Part of it.

Sir B. Sh. Where is Edward Bowchey?

(He did not appear.)

Mr Phipps. Call William O Bryan.

(He did not appear.)

Sir B. Shower. Where is Mr Page and Mr Hardiman?

(None of them appeared.)

Cryer. There is not a Man of them here, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Mr Webber, Do you know where they are, for the Court ſtays for them.

Mr Webber. Indeed I do not, they were ſummon'd to be here.

Sir B. Shower. Where is black Will?

Cryer. Black Will.

(He appear'd, and was a Moor.)

L. C. J. Ask him if he be a Chriſtian.

Cryer. I have ask'd him, and he ſays he is a Chriſtian.

(Then he was ſworn.)

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him?

Rookwood. Will, Pray give an Account of your Maſter, and of his Life and Converſation.

Mr Phipps. You are ſworn to tell the Truth, Sweet-heart.

Will. I ſerved him almoſt Eight Years, and he has been a very good Maſter to me, my Lord.

Sir B. Sh. What do you know him to be guilty of?

Will. Nothing at all.

Sir B. Sh. I believe they have put in theſe Men to confirm his Reputation.

L. C. J. Indeed, I think the King's Council ſhould have called theſe Witneſſes, if there had been Occaſion.

Sir B. Shower. We ſubmit it to your Direction, how far this Evidence will affect him; there is nothing ſaid, as we apprehend that will amount to Treaſon: If the Priſoner has a Mind to ſay any Thing himſelf, we hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to hear him.

L. C. J. Ay, if he will, let him.

Rookwood. My Lord, Mr Porter does not ſay, that I conſented to command a Party.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to ſay? Then, Gentlemen, will you ſum up?

Mr Conyers. My Lord, we are agreed, we ſubmit to the Court on both Sides.

L. C. J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr Rookwood is Indicted for High Treaſon, in Compaſſing, Imagining, and Intending the Death and Deſtruction of the King, by a moſt barbarous and wicked Aſſaſſination; you have had an Account of this Deſign from Two Witneſſes that have been produced, the One is Captain Porter, and the Other is Mr Harris, who ſwear they were both concerned as Actors in it.

Captain Porter tells you, about the latter End of January or the Beginning of February laſt, Sir George Bartlay came over into England from France; and there was a formed Deſign to murder the King; and after ſeveral Meetings and Conferences among the Conſpirators, they came to a Reſolution that he ſhould be Aſſaſſinated; but which way to effect it, admitted of a Diſpute among them, for the King, as you have heard, going frequently, about once a Week a Hunting, on the other ſide the Water near Richmond, the Deſign was firſt to Aſſaſſinate him at Richmond Park, or thereabouts, as he returned from Hunting; and Preparation was made accordingly; but that not being ſo fully agreed upon, the Conveniency of the Place held ſtill ſome Debate; for ſome were of Opinion, that it was better to make the Attempt on this ſide the Water, than on the other; therefore as Mr. Porter tells you, to determine that Difficulty, there were ſeveral Men ſent, whereof he was one, Knightley another, and King a Third, to View the Ground on both ſides the Water, and to make their Report; the Ground being View'd and the Report made to ſome of their Accomplices, who to receive it met at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, which was about the Tenth or Twelfth of February laſt; it was then agreed, that the King and his Guards ſhould be attack'd on this ſide the Water about Turnham-Green.

Mr. Porter has told you, that at ſeveral Meetings for the carrying on this Deſign, the Priſoner Mr. Rookwood was preſent, more particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, where were alſo Sir George Barclay, Mr. Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, himſelf, and others, and there they did enter into a Conſult how they might Aſſaſſinate the King; and it being propoſed, Mr. Rookwood did not like it, as Mr. Porter ſays, but ſaid it was a deſperate Attempt, and thereupon Sir George Barclay pulled out a Scheme that he had and ſhew'd it at that Time to Mr. Rookwood, and ſaid you are ſent over from France and are to Obey my Orders, and you are to command a Party, and then Mr. Rookwood made an Anſwer in French, there's an End of it, which, as he ſays, Imports a Conſent.

Then at another Time, which was the Saturday Morning the 15th of February, they met at Captain Porter's Lodging; and there was a Diſcourſe about going on to put the Deſign in Execution, and one Durant, one of the Men that was to watch the King and the Guards going out at Kenſington, came in, and the Queſtion was, whether they ſhould go that Day upon the Deſign; they had Diſcourſe about it, and Mr. Rookwood the Priſoner was there preſent, and there did not appear any Diſſent in him to the Proſecution of the Deſign, but it ſeems it was readily agreed among them, to purſue it according to the former Determination.

Then the next Witneſs that is produc'd is Mr. Harris, who gives you a large Account of the Beginning of his Knowledge, and of his being concern'd in this Matter; he tells you he was in France, and at the Court of St. Germains, where the late King then was, and that he ſpoke with him, and where was alſo Colonel Parker, and King James took Notice of him and of his faithful Service, and told him, he always deſigned him a Kindneſs, and then had Opportunity of doing it, and ſaid he would ſend him over into England, where he ſhould be ſubſiſted, and directed him to obey the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and there being one Hare by, who was to come over with him, King James gave them both Names of Diſguize, which they were to go by in England, and, as it ſeems, others that came over did alſo aſſume, for Mr. Rookwood went by the Name of Roberts, Harris was to go by the Name of Jenkins, and Hare by the Name of Guiney; they were directed to apply themſelves to Sir George Barclay, and had Directions how they ſhould find him, which were to go into Covent-Garden in the Evening, upon a Monday or a Thurſday, and if they ſaw a Perſon that had a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, they were to take Notice of him to be Sir George Barclay, and they had Ten Lewis d'Ores a-piece for their Journey's to carry them off, and you have heard from whom they had them; and they were told, that if at Calais they were kept longer than they expected, whereby their Money was ſpent, Care was taken that they ſhould be ſupplied from the Governor of Calais, the Preſident there; and it ſeems Mr. Harris and Mr. Hare went together to Calais, and lay a conſiderable Time for want of a Wind, whereby their Money fell ſhort of defraying their Expences, but they were afterwards ſupplied by the Governor of Calais, according as was promiſed at St. Germains.

Gentlemen, he tells you, that after they came into England, the firſt Time they went to ſeek Sir George Barclay, was upon the Monday Night, but they did not find him at that Time, but afterwards they met with him, and Mr. Harris had Subſiſtence-Money from him, according to King James's Promiſe, which was at the Rate of 5 s. a Day when he had no Horſe, and afterwards when he had a Horſe at 6 s. a Day; this is the Account he gives you how he came over, and of his Journey and meeting with Sir George Barclay.

And now he comes to ſpeak particularly concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood: He tells you that on Saturday Morning the 15th of February, the firſt Day when this Aſſaſſination was deſigned to be committed, he went to the Lodging of one Burk, where Mr Rookwood was, with others, and he found them all in great Diſorder; and thereupon he ask'd them, What was the Matter, and what they were going to do? And Rookwood bid him go to one Counter, and he ſhould know of him what was the Matter: Accordingly he went to his Lodging, and Counter told him and thoſe who were with him, That they muſt get ready to go to Turnham-Green; and at the ſame Time and Place he met with Sir George Barclay, and after ſome Diſcourſe of Attacking the Coach, Sir George Barclay at the firſt ſaid, They were his Janizaries; and afterwards going out, he came in again and ſaid, They were Men of Honour, and that they were to go abroad to attack the Prince of Orange.

The next Day, or a little Time after, Mr Harris met with Mr Rookwood, and enters into Diſcourſe with him to this Effect: What! are we ſent over to murder the Prince of Orange? It is a ſtrange Sort of Employment: (for it ſeems they were not informed in France what they were to do here, but they were to put themſelves under the Conduct of Sir George Barclay, and obey his Orders.) Mr Rookwood ſaid, He was afraid the Thing was ſo, and that they were drawn in; but ſaid, If he had known of the Deſign before-hand, he would not have come over but have begg'd the King's Pardon. Which ſhews not only his Knowledge of the Deſign, but his being engaged in the Proſecution of it.

And then, Gentlemen, you are told further, That upon the Going out upon Saturday the 22d, which was the ſecond Time it was to have been put in Execution, there was a Liſt of Men that Mr Rookwood gave to Mr Harris of ſeveral Names that he has mentioned to you; he ſays, Mr Rookwood's Name was at the Top, as one that was to command the Party, and the Name he went by was Roberts; and there was Harris's Counterfeit Name, which was Jenkins; and Hare's Counterfeit Name, which was Guinea; and they were to make ready to go to Turnham-Green. He told him, There was the Liſt, and that he and Harris was to be of his Party, that he was to attack the Prince of Orange, and that Mr Harris ſhould be his Aid-du-Camp.

Gentlemen, I forgot to tell you, That between the firſt Saturday and the ſecond, Mr Harris, Mr Rookwood, and Mr Lowick, walking in Red-Lion Fields, and there in Diſcourſe among themſelves, Mr Harris and Mr Rookwood did expreſs themſelves to be much concerned that they were to be imployed upon ſuch a Deſign as this was, which they owned to be very barbarous; but Mr Rookwood and Lowick ſaid, They were under Command, and muſt obey Orders, tho' Mr Rookwood did not like the Deſign they were engaged in.

Gentlemen, they have told you of Horſes that were placed at Somerſet-houſe in a Stable there, under the Care of Mr Lewis my Lord Feverſham's Gentleman of the Horſe, about ſix or ſeven Horſes, and thoſe ſix Horſes that were there at that Time were afterwards taken away; but that is only a Circumſtance.

So that, Gentlemen, this is now the Sum and Subſtance of this Evidence that has been given you as far as it relates to the Priſoner; his Council in his Defence have inſiſted upon ſeveral Things; in the firſt Place, tho' it was laſt mentioned in Time, yet it ought to have the firſt Conſideration; The Council for the Priſoner have endeavoured to take off the Credit of Mr Porter, and have opened indeed very great Crimes that he ſhould be guilty of, which muſt render him a Perſon not to be believed, but they have not proved any Thing; no Witneſs that they have called againſt Mr Porter ſays the leaſt againſt him to invalidate his Teſtimony, or to induce you to disbelieve what he has ſaid.

Then they ſay in Point of Law, There is no Overt-Act proved of any Deſign againſt the King's Life that affects Mr Rookwood; now that Matter you are to conſider of, Whether or no it does appear by the Teſtimony of two Witneſſes, that Mr Rookwood was concerned in this Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King; Capt. Porter is poſitive that he was at the Conſult at the Globe Tavern, where it was propoſed, debated, and reſolved upon; but Mr Rookwood ſays, he did diſlike it; ſo ſays Captain Porter, he did not approve of it at the firſt upon his being acquainted with it; but being ſent over to obey the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and Sir George Barclay producing a Scheme ready drawn, wherein he was to command the Party, telling him, That he muſt obey Orders. You hear what he ſaid, and the Anſwer he return'd in French, There's an End of it; Whether that does not amount to a Conſent and Agreement to be engaged in this Deſign, is left to your Conſideration, for if it do, it is plainly an Overt-Act.

Then, Gentlemen, you hear further that Harris was told by Mr Rookwood, that he ſhould be of his Party, and be his Ayd du Camp, and go to Turnham-Green, to attack the Prince of Orange, and he had a Liſt of Men given him by Rookwood, and was directed to get the reſt ready.

Rookwood. That was not in the Indictment.

L. C. J. But you were at that Meeting, which is laid in the Indictment.

Rookw. My Lord, that Liſt is not in the Indictment; the Liſt in the Indictment refers to Mr Cranburne.

L. C. J. No, but that is an Evidence of your being in the Deſign; I hope that Liſt of Men will be ſome Evidence of the Conſent and Agreement that Mr Rookwood was to command a Party.

Sir B. Shower. With Submiſſion, my Lord, the Words of the Act ſeems otherwiſe, and that no Overt Act ſhould be given in Evidence, that is not expreſsly alledged.

L. C. J. But cannot there be one Act, that may be Proof of another Act which is alledged.

Sir B. Shower. Then there is no Advantage of this Law; for my Lord, the End of the Act was, That they ſhould know the particular Crimes that they were to anſwer to.

L. C. J. That could never be the End of the Law, that all particular Facts that are but Evidence of the Facts alledged ſhould be ſet forth in the Indictment, it was ſufficient before the Act, to alledge any Overt Act, and any other Overt Act, though not alledged, and had no Relation to the Overt Act that was alledged, yet if it were to the ſame Sort of Treaſon, might be given in Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. The Law ſays, ye ſhall not give Evidence of any Overt Act that is not expreſsly mentioned.

L. C. J. It is not urged as an Overt Act, but as Evidence of an Overt Act that is alledged; for Inſtance, the Overt Act alledged, is, That they did meet and conſult, ſhall not they give in Evidence what was ſaid and done at thoſe Meetings, tho' not alledged? Sir George Barclay produced a Scheme at the Globe Tavern, ſhall not the producing of that Scheme be given in Evidence, if it may, why not the giving the Liſt to Harris?

Mr Phipps. My Lord, it is plain it was Mr Attorney's Opinion, it could not be given in Evidence, unleſs it was alledged in the Indictment; becauſe he has particularly alledged the Liſt in Cranburn's Caſe, in this very Indictment.

Mr Sol. Gen. I know not what thoſe Gentlemen mean by this Sort of Practice; certainly there never were ſo many Irregularities committed in any Trial as in this, and now particularly to break in upon the Court in the midſt of the Charge.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, if there be any Miſtake, let us hear them, that it may be rectified.

L. C. J. Treby. I think we ſhould receive them, to try if they can make it out. But the Objection I do not very well underſtand yet; for, as I take the Matter to ſtand, it is alledged in the Indictment, That they had prepared Men, and Arms, and Horſes, for the Execution of this Deſign. Now is it not reaſonable, or can there be any Thing more proper, than to give in Evidence, and prove that the Priſoner had, and delivered to ſome of the Complices, a Liſt of thoſe Men that were to do it. Why, it proves the very Thing alledged, but let us ſee whether it be ſo?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, there is no ſuch Thing alledged.

L. C. J. That is ſtrange, pray ſee if it be not in the Indictment.

Clerk of Arraignment. (Reads.) Conveniebant, propoſuerunt, tractaverunt, conſultaverunt, conſenſerunt, & agreaverunt, ad ipſum Dominum Regem nunc ex Inſidiis & Dolo percutiendum, Anglice, to aſſaſſinate, interficiendum, & murdrandum, & ad execrabilem, horrendam, & deteſtabilem Aſſaſſinationem, Anglice, Aſſaſſination, & Interfectionem illam citius exequendum & perpetrandum poſtea, ſcilicet eiſdem Die & Anno, ac diverſis aliis Diebus & Vicibus, apud Parochiam prædictam in Comitatu prædicto, proditorie tractaverunt, propoſuerunt, & conſultaverunt de Viis, Modis & Mediis, ac Tempore & Loco, ubi, quando, qualiter & quomodo dictum Dominum Regem ſic ex Inſidiis facilius interficerent; & conſenſerunt, agreaverunt & aſſenſerunt, quod quadraginta Homines equeſtres aut eo circiter, quorum iidem Chriſtophorus Knightley, Robertus Lowick, Ambroſius Rookwood & Carolus Cranburne forent quatuor, & quilibet horum proditorie ſuper ſe ſuſcepit eſſe unum, cum Bombardis, Sclopis & Sclopetis Pulvere bombardico & Globulis plumbeis oneratis, & cum Gladiis, Enſibus & aliis Armis armati inſidiati forent, & eſſent in Subſeſſu, Anglice, in Ambuſh, ad eundem Dominum Regem in Rheda ſua, Anglice his Coach, exiſtentem, quondo foris iret invadendum; quodque quidam & competens Numerus de Hominibus illis ſic armatis in Satellites, Anglice the Guards, ipſius Domini Regis eum tunc attendentes & ſecum exiſtentes aggreſſi forent, & eos expugnarent & devincerent, dum alii eorundem Hominum ſic armatorum ipſum Dominum Regem percuterent, interficerent, occiderent & murdrarent.

Mr Conyers. And my Lord, there is Evidence of ſome of theſe Forty Men, whoſe Names were given in a Liſt, by Rookwood to Harris.

Mr Phipps. But now in Cranburne's Part, the Liſt is expreſsly alledged as an Overt Act.

L. C. J. Never talk of Cranburne, we have not him before us now, but what do you ſay to this of the Liſt given by Rookwood to Harris.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we ſay this is not Evidence of an Overt Act, according to this Act of Parliament; which ſays, No Evidence ſhall be given of any Overt Act, that is not expreſsly alledged in the Indictment; now the Indictment ſays, they did agree that Forty Horſemen armed, of which the Four named were to be Four, and every one undertook to be one, who ſhould lie in wait to ſet upon the King in his Coach, and a competent Number ſhould ſet upon the Guards; and then it ſays, in order to fulfil this, they did prepare Horſes and Arms, and one of them by the Conſent of all the reſt, did carry forward and backward a Liſt, that is, Cranburne; and that particular Liſt is a particular Overt Act alledged in the Indictment, which makes it plain, they thought it neceſſary to be particularly alledged by this Act of Parliament, or they could not give any Evidence of it; now the Liſt that Evidence is given of, is ſuppoſed to be delivered by the Priſoner to Harris. Now firſt we ſay, it is not Evidence that Forty ſhould do it, for they may do it without a Liſt, and next it is not Evidence of the Liſt that they have mentioned, for that is alledged to be carried about by Cranbourne, and as the Priſoner himſelf himſelf has obſerved, this Liſt given to Harris is not in the Indictment, and therefore no Evidence can be given of it.

Mr Conyers. It is an Evidence of that Overt Act which is expreſsly alledged in the Indictment, that they met together to conſult how to effect this Treaſon.

Mr Comper. My Lord, we are in a very ſtrange Caſe here, if we be not very proper in this Part of our Evidence; the Overt Act laid, is, That the Priſoner met together with others to conſult how to aſſaſſinate the King, and there the Priſoner among the reſt did agree it ſhould de done ſo and ſo. 'Tis admitted the Priſoner was there; but, ſay they, if you only prove that he ſate by while there was a general Diſcourſe of ſuch a Matter, but do not prove that he ſaid or did any Thing, expreſſing his Aſſent, that will not amount to a Proof of the Overt Act laid, and yet, if we go about to prove further, any Act done that manifeſts his Aſſent, then they ſay you go too far, and prove an Overt Act that is not mentioned in the Indictment: Thus they grant, the Agreement is a ſufficient Overt Act, but object, that being preſent barely is not a ſufficient Proof of his Agreement; then when we go to make Proof of any Thing that is a ſufficient Proof of his Agreement, they tell us it is not proper upon this Act of Parliament, becauſe not laid in the Indictment, though his Agreement be laid in the Indictment: And ſo they would amuſe us, rather than make any ſolid Objection to our Evidence. This Doctrine is certainly very odd, my Lord, and we doubt not will have little Weight with the Court or the Jury.

Mr At. Gen. According to this Doctrine all the Evidence muſt be put in the Indictment.

L. C. J. They ask you what this giving this Liſt does prove?

Mr At. Gen. His Agreeing at that Meeting to the Conſpiracy, and the Execution of it, by giving that Liſt of the Names of them that were to be of his Party, and his own Name as Commander of that Party, this he gives to one that was to be of the Party, and particularly was to be his Aid du Camp, in order to get them ready for the Execution; is not this an Evidence of the Agreement, which is the Overt Act? No Man in the World can be convicted of Treaſon, if this Doctrine be true.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, they have not expreſs'd ſomething in the Indictment that has been read, which will make it plain that this is the moſt proper Evidence of the Overt Act laid in the Indictment. The Indictment ſays, they agreed there ſhould be forty Men or thereabouts armed, of which a certain Number ſhould make an Aſſault upon the King's Coach, while another Part ſhould ſet upon the Guards: Now the Proof we make is, that Mr Rookwood the Priſoner, was to command a Party that was to ſet upon the Guards, and in order to it, he gives a Liſt of his Men to Harris who was to be his Aid du Camp, and bids him get thoſe Men ready; and this was upon the Day that this Matter was to be acted: So that it proves very plainly that Overt Act that we ſuggeſt in the Indictment, that a certain Number of thoſe Men were to aſſault the King's Perſon, and another Part the Guards. And therefore they needed not to have interrupted your Lordſhip; for this Liſt that Harris ſpeaks of, is a very good Proof of the Overt Act that is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, as to this Matter which they have objected, that this Liſt given on the Day of the intended Aſſaſſination, ought not to be allowed as Evidence to prove the Treaſon, becauſe it is not ſpecially laid in the Indictment, but is by the late Act of Parliament excluded from being proved to convict the Priſoner; now tho' the Act doth exclude the giving in Evidence of any Overt Act that is not laid in the Indictment, yet it doth not exclude ſuch Evidence as is proper and fit to prove that Overt Act that is laid in the Indictment. Therefore, the Queſtion is, whether this giving of the Liſt does not prove ſome Overt Act that is alledged in the Indictment? There is in the Indictment an Agreement laid to kill the King, and if that be proved, that's an Overt Act of this Treaſon; now when the Conſent and Agreement of Mr Rookwood to that Deſign is proved, ſurely the Proof of his giving a Liſt of Men is a further Proof that he did agree to it, and then it is very proper to be given in Evidence; for if by the new Statute no one Act can be given in Evidence to prove another, then muſt not only the Overt Act, but alſo the Evidence of that Act be expreſſed in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, you have heard the Witneſſes what they ſay concerning this Matter. In the firſt Place, if you do believe that there was ſuch Conſults and Meetings, where this intended Aſſaſſination of the King was debated and reſolved upon, and that Mr Rookwood was preſent and did agree to it, that is an Overt-Act; and again, if you are ſatisfied that there was an Agreement to prepare and provide a Number of Men to ſet upon the King and his Guards, in the Manner you have heard, and he was concerned in making this Proviſion, and was to have a Poſt, and command a Party in that Attack, that is a further Proof of that Conſent and Agreement, that is laid in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you, upon the Evidence that you have heard; if you are ſatisfied upon the Teſtimony of theſe two Witneſſes that have been produc'd, That Mr Rookwood is guilty of this Treaſon of which he is indicted, in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, then you will find him guilty: If you are not ſatisfied that he is guilty, you will acquit him.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, ſwear an Officer to keep the Jury. (Which was done)

L. C. J. Now if you have any Thing to move on Behalf of your other Clients pray do it.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, we have an Exception, but never a one of falſe Spelling.

L. C. J. If ſo be it be any ſuch Matter as you can move in Arreſt of Judgment, it had beſt be reſerv'd till after the Verdict.

Sir B. Shower. Our Exceptions will ſerve if Occaſion be for Mr Rookwood in Arreſt of Judgment, and they will ſerve for the others alſo to prevent the Trouble of the Tryal, if we have your Lordſhip's Opinion that they are good Exceptions.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and after a Quarter of an Hour's ſtaying out return'd, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, Anſwer to your Names. Samuel Powell.

Mr Powell. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez. (And ſo of the Reſt.)

Cl. of

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Ambroſe Rookwood is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr Powell. We deſire we may be diſcharged.

L. C. J. We cannot do that, till we ſee whether there be enough upon the other Pannel, we will give you as much Eaſe as we can, we ſhall not I ſuppoſe try the other till the Afternoon, therefore you may take your Eaſe for the preſent, but you muſt be about the Court when the other Tryals come on.

While the Jury was withdrawn, the Court offered to the Council for the Priſoners, that they might move what Exceptions they had before the Jury was ſworn as to any of the other; which accordingly they did; but that relating to the Caſe of Mr Charles Cranburne, in whoſe Preſence, being then at the Bar, the Objections were made, that Part is left to his Tryal.

The TRYALS of CHARLES CRANBURNE and ROBERT LOWICK,

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

Die Martis viceſimo primo Die Aprilis, Anno Dom. 1696. Annoque Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii Octavo.

At the Seſſion of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Middleſex, ſitting in the Court of King's-Bench at Weſtminſter.

AFTER the Tryal of Ambroſe Rookwood was over, while the Jury were withdrawn to conſider of their Verdict, the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Sir John Holt. L. C. J. Mr Attorney, Who will you have try'd next?

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr Att. Gen. Cranburne, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

Cl. of Arr. Then, Keeper of Newgate, ſet Charles Cranburne to the Bar.

L. C. J. You, Gentlemen, that are of Council for the Priſoner, if you have any Thing to move for your Clyent, you may move it; but firſt let the Priſoner be here.

Then Charles Cranburne was brought to the Bar in Irons.

L. C. J. Look you, Keeper, you ſhould take off the Priſoners Irons when they are at the Bar, for they ſhould ſtand at their Eaſe when they are try'd.

Keeper. My Lord, we have no Inſtruments here to do it juſt now.

Cl. of Ar. You may ſend to the Gate-houſe, and borrow Inſtruments.

Mr J. Powell. It ſhould be done indeed; they ought to plead at Eaſe.

L. C. J. Well go on Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, before Sir Bartholomew Shower enter upon his Exceptions, unleſs thoſe Exceptions of his are ſome of the Particulars mention'd in this Act he muſt not do it now, after Plea pleaded, before the Tryal; but he muſt do it in Arreſt of Judgment.

L. C. J. Treby. It is true, regularly; but let him uſe his own Judgment.

L. C. J. It is very true; the Courſe has not been to allow them to move to quaſh an Indictment for Treaſon, or Felony; but it may be done.

Mr Att. Gen. Sure it muſt be only for ſuch Things as they cannot take Advantage of in Arreſt of Judgment after the Verdict.

L. C. J. It has not been the Courſe, but it may be done.

Mr Att. Gen. Not where there is an Iſſue join'd, and a Jury return'd to try that Iſſue; I believe that never was done, nor attempted.

L. C. J. Treby. If there were any Prejudice to the King by it, it were not fit for us to alter the Courſe; but let us hear what his Exceptions are.

Sir B. Shower. I have ſeveral Exceptions; five at leaſt; one of them is within the very Words of the Act, that is, improper Latin; I am ſure ſome of it is ſo.

L. C. J. Well, let's hear what that is.

Sir B. Shower. It ſays, Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc Septimo, and Lewis is the laſt King mention'd tioned before; and ſo here is no Year of the King of England mention'd. It is a certain Rule, that Relatives muſt refer to the laſt Antecedent, and that Rule holds always, unleſs there be Words that accompany the Relative, which undeniably ſhew to what it refers.

L. C. J. Ay; but do we call the French King Dominus Rex?

L. C. J. Treby. He would have been ſo, if he had ſucceeded in his Invaſion, and this Aſſaſſination.

Sir B. Shower. In every Indictment, if there be Occaſion to mention a former King, it is always nuper Rex, and ſuch a one, naming the Name of the King, where the preſent King's Name does intervene, to prevent Confuſion; and ſo in Civil Actions it is the ſame; and ſo it ſhould have been here.

L. C. J. Ay; but I tell you, it is Dominus Rex nunc, which is our King.

Mr Phipps. It is not ſaid Angliæ.

L. C. J. But wherever it is Dominus Rex, we underſtand it of the King of England, and no Body elſe. Read the Indictment.

Cl. of Arr. Necnon eundem Dominum Regem ad Mortem & finalem Deſtructionem ponere & adducere, ac ſubditos ſuos fideles, & Liberos Homines Hujus Regni Angliæ in ſervitutem intolerabilem, & miſerrimam Ludovico Regi Gallico ſubjugare, & mancipare, Decimo Die Februarii, Anno Regni dicti Domini nunc Regis, ſeptimo, & diverſis aliis Diebus, &c.

L. C. J. Can any Man imagine this to be the French King?

Sir B. Sh. My Lord, your Lordſhip is not to imagine one Way or other.

Mr Cowper. In the ſtricteſt Senſe and Grammar in the World, it muſt mean King William, and no other. We do not need any Imagination, when in the ſtricteſt Conſtruction, it is plain who it refers to.

Sir B. Shower. I am ſure no Grammar can make it good; nothing but a Suppoſition can help it.

Mr Cowper. When it is ſaid Dictus Dominus Rex, if Sir Bartholomew Shower can find out another Dominus Rex in the Indictment, then he may make ſomething of his Objection; but the Dominus is only apply'd to our own King throughout.

L. C. J. Treby. Beſides, as to the Rule that Sir Bartholomew Shower mentions, it is that ad proximum Antecedens fiat Relatio niſi impediat Sententia. That's the Reſtriction of the Rule, it muſt relate to the next Antecedent, unleſs the Senſe would be prejudiced; but here if this Conſtruction ſhould be, it would make this Clauſe to be no better than Nonſenſe, viz. That the Subjects and Freemen of this Realm were to be brought into intolerable Slavery to Lewis the French King, ſuch a Day in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our Lord the French King.

Sir B. Shower. We ſay it is little better than Nonſenſe, I am ſure it is looſe, and uncertain, and not Grammar, but carries a new Form with it.

L. C. J. No, It is as well as it can be.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, there is another Exception; it is ſaid, Diverſis Diebus & Vicibus tam antea quam poſtea; and then afterwards it ſays, poſtea ſcilicet eodem Decimo Die Februarii; that is repugnant; it is as much as to ſay, That upon the Tenth of February, and two Days afterwards (to wit) the ſaid Tenth Day of February; that is, after two Days after the Tenth of February, viz. upon the ſame Tenth Day.

Mr Att. Gen. That Poſtea is another Sentence and relates to other Matters.

Sir B. Shower. It can't in Propriety of Speech be ſaid to be afterwards the ſame Day.

Mr Sol. Gen. If Sir Bartholomew Shower remembers the Evidence that we have given this Day, he will find it was in Fact ſo; they met on the Saturday Morning, and afterwards met again the Night of the ſame Day.

L. C. J. There is nothing in that Objection ſure, it is a common Form, when they tell of different Matters.

Sir B. Shower. Well then, if you will hear the reſt which are not of the ſame Nature, we ſhall come to what we think a fatal Exception; we ſay this Indictment of High-Treaſon being againſt a Subject born, ought to have had the Words in it, Contra ſupremum naturalem Ligeum Dominum ſuum; according to Calvin's Caſe in the 7th Report, Fol. Septimo.

L. C. J. It is Contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum, is it not?

Sir B. Shower. That won't help it, my Lord, for all that is applicable to an Alien born: And ſo is the Caſe in my Lord Dyer, 144. where it is ſaid, That if an Indictment of Treaſon be againſt an Alien, you muſt not put in the Word naturalem, if you do, it will be faulty, becauſe he owes but a local Allegiance to the King of England; and not a natural one. Now we ſay, there are none of theſe Priſoners but are Subjects born, and the conſtant Form in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and Queen Mary's, was to put in the Words Naturalem Dominum, and they cannot ſhew me any of thoſe Precedents without it. There was Occaſion in Tucker's Caſe to look into this Matter, and ſearch all the Precedents. I have look'd into my Lord Coke's Entries, and all the Precedents; I have ſeen my Lord of Eſſex's Indictment, and all the others in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and thoſe of the Traitors in the Powder-Plot, and thoſe of the Regicides, and Tucker's own Indictment it ſelf; all along it is Naturalem Dominum ſuum; and the Reaſon for it is, he that is Alien born, you never put in naturalem Dominum ſuum, becauſe he owes a double Allegiance; one Natural, to his own King under whoſe Dominion he was born, and the other Local, to the King in whoſe Dominions he reſides, for he is bound to obſerve the Laws of the Place where he lives: And if he violate them, he does break the Allegiance that he owes to the Government where he lives, upon Account of the Protection he enjoys under it. But if he be born a Subject of the King of England, he has but one natural Liege-Lord: and he being an Engliſhman born, the King ſtands in that Relation to him, as he does to all his Native Subjects, but not to Foreigners; and therefore it was thought requiſite to be, and has always been inſerted into Indictments of Treaſon againſt Subjects born. And, my Lord, we think the very Reſolution of the Court, afterwards affirm'd in the Houſe of Lords that revers'd Tucker's Attainder, went upon this Opinion, That the Law required naturalem Ligeum Dominum to be put in. There the Exception was, that Contra Debitum Ligeanciæ ſuæ was omitted; To which it was objected, that there was Dominum Supremum Naturalem, which was Equivalent: No, it was anſwered, both were requiſite, becauſe every Act charg'd in the Indictment ought to be laid againſt a gainſt the Duty of his Allegiance. Now in Indictments of Treaſon, there are certain Words that are eſſential, becauſe of their Relation between the King and his People. There are certain Forms of Words, which if the conſtant Practice has been to make Uſe of them, the Omiſſion is an Error. Thoſe uſual Forms ought to be obſerv'd, and the Want of them will be a fatal Exception; ſo we think it would be in this Caſe, as much as if the Word Proditorie had been left out; or as if in a Caſe of Felony and Burglary, the Words Felonicè, and Burglariter had been left out.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, we take the Practice, and Precedents to be the Rule of Law in the Caſe; and I have look'd over a great many Precedents, beſides thoſe that Sir Bartholomew Shower has cited; and I never ſaw any one Precedent of an Indictment of Treaſon againſt a Subject born without the Word naturalem; and all the Caſes cited by Sir Barthol. Shower are full in the Point. Counter's Caſe in my Lord Hobbart, 271. where 'tis ſaid, that if there be an Indictment againſt a Subject born, it muſt be Contra naturalem Dominum; if againſt an Alien, naturalem muſt be left out. To ſay Contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum will not do, it is not enough, for that may be ſaid againſt an Alien, becauſe he owes a local Allegiance, tho' not a Natural one. And I take it, upon this Difference, this Indictment is not good.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not know how far you will think it proper to enter into this Matter before the Tryal.

L. C. J. Mr Attorney, I think you had as good ſpeak to it now as at another Time; tho' I muſt confeſs it is not ſo proper in Point of Practice.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, my Lord, then we will ſpeak to it now. The Objection is, That the Word naturalem Dominum is not in the Indictment; which they ſay is contrary to the uſual Form: As to the Precedents, there are a great many where it has been, and I am ſure a great many where it has not been; and I am ſure for this Six, Seven, or Eight Years laſt paſt, it has always been omitted: And, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, it is not at all neceſſary, if there be Words in the Indictment which ſhew, that what he did was againſt the Duty of his Allegiance to his Lawful and Undoubted Lord (which are the Words in this Indictment.) It is true, if he be not a Subject born, naturalem cannot be in, becauſe that is contradictory to the Obedience which he owes, for it is not a natural Obedience that he owes, but a Local; but if a Man be a Subject born, and commits Treaſon againſt the Allegiance that he owes, that is againſt his natural Allegiance; for whatſoever he does againſt his Allegiance, he does againſt his natural Allegiance, and ſo there's no need to put in the Word naturalem; becauſe he owes no other Allegiance but that; it is ſufficient if that be put in which ſhews its being againſt his Allegiance. If they could ſhew that a Subject born has two Allegiances, one that is natural, and the other that is not natural; then if you would proſecute him you muſt ſhew, whether it was againſt his natural, or againſt his other Allegiance. But when he has none but a natural Allegiance, certainly againſt his Allegiance, without putting in natural, will be well enough, It is true where there is no natural Allegiance, it muſt be wrong if you put it in, becauſe you put in that Allegiance which he does not owe; but where he is a Subject born, to put in natural Liege-Lord there is no Ground at all for it; there are Words enow that ſhew it was againſt his Allegiance to his Lawful and Undoubted Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Bartholomew Shower, how does it appear, that theſe Men are Subjects born? The Matter you go upon does not appear upon the Indictment, and you are not to go off from that.

Sir B. Shower. Every Man is preſum'd to be ſo, unleſs the contrary appears.

L. C. J. You quote Calvin's Caſe, and the other Caſes that are there put; thoſe are all Caſes of Aliens; there is Dr. Lopez's Caſe; He being an Alien comes into England, and commits High-Treaſon: Why, ſay they, how ſhall we indict this Man? We cannot ſay it is Contra Naturalem Dominam ſuam; for he owes no natural Allegiance to the Queen of England; How ſhall we do to frame a good Indictment againſt this Man? They conſidered of this; and they ſaid it will be a good Indictment, to charge him with High-Treaſon, or any one elſe, leaving out the Word Naturalem: For if it appear he has committed an Offence againſt the Laws of the Kingdom, and againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, which is High-Treaſon, that's enough. Now as to Tucker's Caſe, it was reverſed for want of the Concluſion, contra Debitum Ligeantiæ ſuæ. Thoſe Words are material; for let the Offence be never ſo much againſt the Perſon of the King, as to aſſaſſinate him, or levy War againſt him, yet ſtill if it be not againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, as it cannot be if he owes him none, it is not High-Treaſon. And therefore if it be againſt his Allegiance, whether that Allegiance be natural or local, it is all one, it's enough to make it High-Treaſon.

Mr Soll. Gen. In that Caſe in Dyer, they ſhew where it was a Fault to put the Word in, but they can ſhew no Caſe where it has been adjudged to be a Fault to leave the Word out.

L. C. J. No Doubt it would be a Fault to have that in, Contra Naturalem Dominum ſuum, where there is only a local Allegiance due.

Mr Phipps. How does it appear whether it is the one or the other that is due?

L. C. J. It is no Matter whether the one or the other do appear, it is High-Treaſon be it the one or the other, if it be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance.

Mr Phipps. Suppoſe an Indictment againſt an Alien were, Contra Naturalem Dominum.

L. C. J. That would be ill, becauſe then you had laid it more ſpecially, and otherwiſe than really it is, and reſtrained it where you ought not to do it.

Mr Phipps. How then, my Lord, ſhall it appear that he only ow'd a local Obedience?

L. C. J. It may be given in Evidence, That he is an Alien born.

Mr Soll. Gen. He may plead it in Abatement to the Indictment.

L. C. J. He ought to be acquitted, for you have indicted him of a Crime againſt his natural Allegiance, when he owes no ſuch. But Allegiance generally comprehends all Sorts of Allegiance, Natural, and Local.

Sir B. Shower. How then, my Lord, come all the Lawyers of all Ages to put in thoſe Words in Indictments of High Treaſon againſt Subjects born?

L. C. J. No, I have ſeen Abundance of Precedents, that have only Contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum Generally, and for the moſt part are; for Allegiance is the Genus, and if that be ſuggeſted, all the Species are contain'd under that.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, have they any more.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, we have more.

L. C. J. Well, you ſhall have them all in time.

Sir B. Sh. My Lord, here is another Objection, and that's this; here is one Fact that they have laid, and that's the 2d Overt-Act in this Indictment, that they conſented and agreed that Forty Men (whereof theſe Four were to be Four) but do not lay it to be done traiterouſly. They ſay Conſenſerunt Agreaverunt & Aſſenſerunt, but not proditorie; and I never ſaw an Indictment that laid an expreſs Overt Act, without repeating the Word again. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, the Words in the Indictment are thus; as to the firſt Overt Act, it is laid in this manner, Et ad execrabilem Aſſaſſinationem illam exequend. at ſuch a Time and ſuch a Place proditorie tractaverunt propoſuerunt & Conſultaverunt de vijs modis & medijs, &c, and then comes this which we except againſt; & Conſenſerunt Agreaverunt & Aſſenſerunt quod Quadraginta Homines, &c. Now this is a plain diſtinct Act, and there is no proditorie to it; and if ever they can ſhew me any Indictment, in which an Overt Act was laid, of which they gave any Evidence, and it had not the Word proditorie in it I am very much miſtaken. I am ſure, I never ſaw any ſuch. And it is not enough to ſay, that the Nature of the Thing is ſuch, as that it cannot but be a Treaſonable Act; but they muſt alledge it to be ſo, by the expreſs Uſe of that Word, which the Law has appointed to expreſs this Crime by. In the Caſe of an Indictment for Felony, if it be not ſaid Felony, it is not good. They are not to deſcribe that by Circumlocution, which is a particular Crime fixt by Law, they muſt uſe the Verba Artis, the Terms of Art, and no other: If your Lordſhip pleaſes it may be read.

Mr Sol. Gen. Let it be read if you pleaſe; but take it in Engliſh, and it is no more than this, they did traiterouſly compaſs the Death of the King, and for that purpoſe they did traiterouſly meet, and conſult about the Ways and Means, and did conſent and agree that forty Men, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Reads, Et ad execrabilem Horrendam & Deteſtabilem Aſſaſſinationem Anglice Aſſaſſination & Interfectionem illam Citius exequendum & anno ac Diverſis aliis Diebus & vicibus apud parochiam prædictam in Comitatu prædicto proditorie tractaverunt, propoſuerunt & Conſultaverunt de viis modis & mediis ac Tempore & Loco ubi quando qualiter & quomodo Dictum Dominum Regem ſic ex Inſidiis facilius Interficerent.

Sir B. Shower. There is an End of that, now go on.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, Sir Bartholomew, you miſtake there is no End of it, that's done at the ſame time with that which follows.

Sir B. Shower. No it is not the ſame Overt Act; but let him go on.

Cl. of Arr. Et Conſenſerunt Agreaverunt & Aſſenſerunt quod quadraginta Homines Equeſtres.

Sir B. Shower. Well, you need read no further for our Objection. We ſay, there wants the Word Proditorie: For there are two Overt-Acts, the One is, that they traiterouſly did conſult of the Ways and Means, how to kill the King, and that Overt-Act we agree to be well laid: But then it ſays they conſented, and agreed that there ſhould be Forty Men, whereof theſe Four ſhould be Four, but does not ſay they traiterouſly agreed are not theſe diſtinct Acts?

Mr Phipps. Surely, My Lord, they are diſtinct Acts, for this Part of the Indictment upon which Sir Bartholomew grounds his Objection, is that Overt-Act of which the Liſt in Mr Rookwood's Caſe was urg'd by the King's Council, and agreed by the Court to be an Evidence.

Then the Jury againſt Mr. Rookwood came in, and delivered in their Verdict, as it is in his Trial, then afterwards the Court went on thus.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, the Objection is, that Proditorie is not inſerted into that particular Clauſe of the Indictment, which ſhews their particular Agreement that there ſhould be forty Men, whereof the Four named in the Indictment were to be Four. Now your Lordſhip obſerves how the Indictment runs, it is for compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King; and it ſets forth for this Purpoſe, that to affect this Compaſſing and Imagination, they Proditorie tractaverunt & Conſultaverunt de viis mediis & Modis, how they ſhould kill the King. Now that which immediately follows after is, the particular Method and Means that were agreed upon, that is, that there ſhould be forty Men. Now this is the ſtrangeſt Suggeſtion that ever was, when we have ſet forth, that traiterouſly they did ſo agree of the Ways and Means, and then ſet forth the particular Means that here muſt be proditorie again to that. This is ſuch a Conſtruction as I cannot but admire how it could come into any one's Head. It is Part of the Sentence; for the other Part, as we have laid it, is not compleat before: It may be it might be ſufficient without ſetting forth the particular Way and Means, but when it is ſet forth, it is Part of the Sentence, and refers to the firſt Begining.

L. C. J. Aye ſure it does.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot tell what they would have unleſs they would have us repeat the Word proditorie in every Line.

Mr Soll. Gen. Or before every Verb.

Sir B. Shower. No, but I think it ought to be repeated at every Overt-Act.

Mr Conyers. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, after that they have ſet forth that this was the particular Method and Way agreed upon at their Conſultation, that forty Horſemen or thereabouts ſhould go about it, of which the Perſons Indicted were to be Four, it goes on, Et Quilibet eorum proditorie ſuper ſe Suſcepit eſſe unum there it is put in, and it appears to be as particular as poſſible can be.

Mr Cowper. Sir Bartholomew Shower ſays, that when we have alledg'd that they did traiterouſly treat, propoſe and conſult of the Means and Ways of killing the King, there we have done the Sentence and made that one Overt-Act. Now how is the Sentence done? The next Word is a Conjunction Copulative, & Conſenſerunt &c. And what is the Uſe of a Conjunction Copulative? But to convey the Force of the Words in a former Sentence to the Sentence following, and to prevent the Repetition of every Word in the ſubſequent Sentence that was in the Precedent: But it is plain, they are both one and the ſame Overt-Act, and theſe ſubſequent Words are only an Explanation planation, more particularly of the Overt-Act ſet forth in the precedent Words.

Sir B. Shower. In Anſwer to that, that has been ſaid, if they ſhew me any Precedent, where an Indictment has been for High-Treaſon, ſetting forth ſeveral Overt Acts, and not the Word proditorie ſet to every Overt-Act, then they anſwer my Objection. If the Word Quod had come in, that would have made them diſtinct to be ſure; and I think they are as diſtinct Acts now; ſuppoſe they had concluded at the End of the Word Interficerent, that had been a good Overt-Act, I am ſure they will agree that: And if it be ſo, then the other is a good Overt-Act too. For it is a diſtinct Thing from that which was a perfect Sentence before; and it either requires a Likewiſe, or the Word Proditorie muſt be repeated. They have not ſo much as ſaid ſimiliter Conſenſerunt or ſimili modo there is an (&) indeed, but that does not ſo couple the Sentences together, as not to make them diſtinct Acts. There are ſeveral Ets thorough the whole Indictment, but that does not, as Mr Cowper would have it, couple altogether to make one Overt-Act.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, if what Mr Cowper ſays be allow'd, (viz.) that the (&) makes it one intire Sentence, then there is no Overt-Act at all; for after the Treaſon alledg'd, and the Clauſe is coupled to one another by an Et, and conſequently by Mr. Cowper's Way of arguing the whole Indictment is but one intire Sentence.

L. C. J. I do not underſtand your Meaning as to that, they tell you Proditorie it is alledg'd to the Conſulting, Contriving and Agreeing, then they tell you what was the ſubject Matter of that Contrivance and Agreement to aſſaſſinate the King, and in order to that they agreed there ſhould be 40 Men, is not that good enough, without Proditorie to every Line.

Sir B. Shower. No, it is not ſaid in Ordine ad, there is no ſuch Thing; but only they did conſult of the Ways and Means, and did agree that 40 Horſemen ſhould do it, and afterwards did agree to provide Horſes and Inſtruments of War. Now that being with a Quodque, they ſay makes a new Overt-Act; but I cannot underſtand why Quodque is not as much a Copulative as Et, and the one ſhould not have the ſame Effect as the other.

L. C. J. Firſt it tells you there was a Conſult and Agreement to aſſaſſinate the King, and for the Accompliſhment of the ſaid Aſſaſſination, afterwards eiſdem die & Anno Proditorie Tractaverunt & Conſultaverunt de viis & modis, how they ſhould kill the King.

Sir B. Shower. That is one Overt-Act, ſay we, and there you ſhould ſtop.

L. C. J. Et Conſenſerunt & Agreaverunt quod quadraginta Homines, &c. it is all at the ſame time, and muſt be intended the ſame Conſult and Contrivance; that they conſulted of the Ways and Means, and then agreed ſo many Men ſhould be provided.

Mr Phipps. No, My Lord, we ſay that is another Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Treby. It ſeems to me to be a ſpecifying, and particulariſing the Ways and Means, that they had conſulted of, and concluded on.

Sir B. Shower. If it had been a ſpecifying, it had been much better to put in either then and there, or that this was the Reſult of the Conſultation.

L. C. J. Treby. It does ſeem to me ſo, that it was the Reſult of the Conſultation, and it is well enough.

L. C. J. You had better have ſav'd theſe kind of Exceptions till the Trial was over.

Sir B. Shower. But, my Lord, if there be one Overt-Act ill laid, I ſubmit it whether they can give any Evidence of that Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Treby. No doubt of that they cannot; but we think it is as well laid as it could be laid.

L. C. J. Truly I am not well ſatisfied, that it is neceſſary after you have laid the Proditorie, as to the particular Treaſon, to lay it again to the Overt-Act. For the Overt-Act is but Evidence of the Treaſon: The Treaſon it ſelf lies in the Compaſſing which is an Act of the Mind.

L. C. J. Treby. You cannot Indict a Man of Treaſon for Aſſaſſinating or killing the King; but you muſt in every ſuch Caſe frame the Indictment upon the Article for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; which muſt be laid to be done traiterouſly. Then when afterwards you ſay the Perſon accuſed did wound him, or impriſon him, or conſult and agree to aſſaſſinate him, or did actually aſſaſſinate him, theſe are but ſo many Overt-Acts of compaſſing the Death, and you having firſt ſaid that he did Proditorie compaſs and imagine the King's Death, you have thereby ſhewn that you charge him with a greater Offence than Felony (which my Lord Coke ſays is the Uſe of the Word Proditorie;) and that being thus done, I do not apprehend it to be neceſſary that you ſhould add Prodtorie to all the reſt of the following Particulars; for they are only external Diſcoveries of the inward Treaſon; and more properly deemed to be Evidence of the Treaſon, than to be the Treaſon it ſelf.

L. C. J. The Treaſon is conſummate in the Intention, beſides the Words of the Statute make that the Treaſon, not the Overt-Act, that is but Evidence, and ſo it was held, (not upon this Exception, but upon the Reaſon that my Lord ſpeaks of) in Caſe of the Regicides of King Charles the Firſt, That the Indictment ſhould not be for killing the King, but for compaſſing and imagining his Death, and the Killing was alledg'd as an Overt-Act.

Sir B. Shower. It muſt be ſo if it were for levying of War.

L. C. J. Moſt true, for levying the War is the Treaſon, but in this Caſe we think it is no Exception.

Mr At. Gen. Then let us have the Fifth.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, here is another Thing. It is a Queſtion whether there be any Overt-Act preſented by the Jury at all. The Indictment ſays, Juratores pro Domino Rege præſentant, that they as falſe Traytors did compaſs the Death of the King, and the Slaughter of his Subjects, and they did meet, and conſult, and agree how to do it, Et iidem Chriſtophorus Knightley and the reſt, to fulfil their ſaid traiterous Intentions and Imaginations did, afterwards, the tenth of February, buy Arms and Horſes. Now our Objection is, that it does not appear, that any one of theſe Overt-Acts are the Preſentment of the Jury; with Submiſſion they ought to have begun it again, either with a Quodque, or ſomething that ſhould have referred it to the firſt, Juratores præſentant, or elſe they muſt have begun quite again, with a Juratores Ulterius præſentant, and not have coupled them, as this is with an ulterius præſentant, and not have coupled them as this is with an Et. The moſt Forms begin with an ulterius præſentant, but here we find no Overt-Act is ſo introduced. They might preſent Part, and not preſent the other Part, for any Thing that does appear. Every Thing ought to be laid poſitively, as the Jury's Dictum, it may be only the Clerk's Saying, and not the Juries, for any Thing that does appear. Your Lordſhip remembers the Caſe of the King and Trobridge upon a Writ of Errour to reverſe a Judgment for erecting and continuing a Cottage againſt the Form of the Statute, now Contra formam Statuti was in the Beginning of the Indictment, but not in the Concluſion; to the erecting but not the continuing. And though there was there Juratores ulterius dicunt, it was not ſuper Sacramentum ſuum, and they did not ſay, he did continue it againſt the Statute, and there being no formal Preſentment, that he maintain'd the Cottage notwithſtanding the Act, Et did not ſo couple it to the firſt Part, as to make it a good Preſentment. So we ſay in this Caſe, this is a Fault, and different from all the common Forms; there ought to be a direct Preſentment of each Overt-Act, and not coupled by an Et. For Et will not do it; for it is a diſtinct Overt-Act every one, and ſhould have been Et quod conſultaverunt, quodque Agreeaverunt, that a certain Number ſhould do ſo and ſo, and to be ſure, it ſhould have been ſo at the laſt Overt-Act, which is only, Et eidem Chriſtophorus Knightley did buy Arms and Horſes. Now this laſt Et, being a looſe Conjunction Copulative, in common Senſe ought to refer to that which they had agreed upon, for that is laſt mention'd there, and the natural Senſe leads thither, and not to the Beginning of the Bill Juratores præſentant quod.

Mr Phipps. I ſhall not tronble your Lordſhip further, they ought to have put in a Quodque, or an Ulterius præſentant.

Mr At. Gen. Where would you have the Quodque, or the Ulterius præſentant ?

Mr Phipps. Either to every Overt-Act, or at leaſt to that laſt.

Mr Att. Gen. The Indictment ſets forth, that they committed ſuch, and ſuch Treaſon; Their Objection is, that Quodque is not put into every Overt-Act, and our Anſwer is, that the firſt Quod governs all that relates to that Treaſon. It may be if there were two diſtinct Treaſons in the Indictment, when you come to ſet forth the Second Treaſon, you ſhould ſay Juratores ulterius præſentant the Second Treaſon; but the Overt-Acts to prove the ſame Treaſon, are all Parts of that Treaſon, and make but one Species of Treaſon, which is the Imagining the Death of the King. There's the Treaſon; and to bring it to paſs, they did ſo, and ſo: This, my Lord, muſt be Part of the finding of the Jury as well as the Treaſon it ſelf, of which theſe are the Overt-Acts. But then if you will lay the levying of War in the ſame Indictment, then it may be you muſt ſay Juratores ulterius præſentant quod, &c. But it had been a ſtrange Abſurdity to ſay, Juratores ulterius præſentant, ſuch and ſuch Overt-Acts: For the Overt-Act is not a further Indictment, but only a ſetting forth that which is Evidence, upon which they found the Indictment for Treaſon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What the Indictment ſays, is as direct Affirmation as can be all along in the Preſentment of the Jury, that the Priſoner and others did compaſs and imagine the Death of the King, and to bring it about, they did conſult together, and did agree to make uſe of ſuch and ſuch Means, and were to have a Party of 40 Men, and they bought Arms and Horſes. Now it does not repeat quodque, or ulterius præſentant quod, to every one of thoſe Sentences, that they did ſo and ſo, and that they did ſo and ſo. Now I would fain know the Difference between Saying, and they did ſuch a Thing, and Saying, and that they did ſuch a Thing. That's all the Difference that they think to overturn this Indictment for. The omitting of a Juratores ulterius præſentant, certainly is nothing; for the firſt Preſentment runs through the whole Indictment, and there does not need an Ulterius.

Sir B. Shower. Certainly there ſhould have been a Quodque at leaſt.

L. C. J. No indeed, I think it is better as it is, than as you would have had it; becauſe the firſt Quod goes through the whole, That in order thereunto he did ſo and ſo, would you have it ſaid & quod in order thereunto he did ſo and ſo, but that may be good Senſe, I think it is not ſo good as the other. This Indictment is for one Sort of Treaſon, and that is, for compaſſing the Death of the King; and it is, I think, more proper to have but one Quod, than to have more; for it makes the whole Indictment more entire. As to the Juratores ulterius præſentant, that is never proper, where the Species of Treaſon is the ſame: For indeed if there had been two diſtinct Treaſons, the one for compaſſing the Death of the King, and the other for levying of War, in that Caſe you muſt bring it in by ulterius præſentant: Becauſe they are two ſeveral Offences, though compris'd in one Bill, and they are in Law as two Indictments. And ſo it is in the Caſe that you mentioned of Cottages: It is one Offence to erect a Cottage, and another Offence to continue a Cottage, and they are to have ſeveral Puniſhments; and becauſe they there jumbled them both together in one Indictment, that Indictment was held to be nought: For by Law, the Indictment for erecting a Cottage, ought to conclude contra formam Statuti, and then the Jury muſt begin again, & ulterius præſentant quod the Cottage was continu'd againſt the Form of the Statute; becauſe they are ſeveral Offences. But here the High-Treaſon is but one and the ſame Offence, and the other Things are but Overt-Acts to manifeſt this Treaſon, the Compaſſing the Death of the King; and truly I think it is better as it is.

Mr Phipps. I have ſeen ſeveral Precedents of Indictments, where the ſeveral Overt-Acts were to the ſame High-Treaſon, but ſtill they had each an ulterius preſentant.

At. Gen. I believe it is hard to find many Indictments in the ſame Words: I am ſure all are not.

L. C. Baron. Is it not as great an Affirmation to ſay, and they did ſuch a Thing, as to ſay, and that they did ſuch a Thing.

L. C. J. I cannot reconcile it to my Reaſon, but it ſhould be as good Senſe without that as with.

L. C. J. Treby. In a long Deed it begins, This Indenture witneſſeth, that the Party granted ſo and ſo, and the Party covenants thus and thus; and ſo it goes on commonly, without renewing the Word That to the ſubſequent Clauſes: But yet the firſt Expreſſion (This Indenture witneſſeth, that) governs the whole Deed, though it be many Skins of Parchment.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. If you begin with an Indenture, you begin, That it witneſſeth ſo, and ſo, without renewing, unleſs it be a very diſtinct Thing.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think that Similitude makes for us. A B. covenants ſo and ſo in a Conveyance, and then further, that ſo and ſo.

L. C. J. But there you reſtrain that in the Beginning of the Covenant to every Particular in that Covenant.

Mr At. Gen. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to call the Jury now?

L. C. J. Have you a Mind to go on with the Trial, or to go to Dinner?

Mr At. Gen. I believe your Lordſhip can try but one more to Night, and that may be as well after Dinner as before.

L. C. J. Well than, adjourn till 5 a Clock, and in the mean time, you Keeper, knock off the Priſoners Fetters.

Keeper. They ſhall, my Lord.

Then the Court adjourned till 5 a Clock in the Afternoon, it being then about 3.

Poſt Meridiem, the 21ſt of April, 96. The Court returned, and was reſum'd about 6 in the Evening.

Cl of Ar. Keeper of Newgate, bring Charles Cranburne to the Bar (which was done.) Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Thoſe good Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; and therefore if you will challenge them or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Cranburne, My Lord, I humbly deſire I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Court. Aye, Aye. He had them.

Cl. of Ar. Where is George Ford?

Cryer. Vouz Avez.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Underhill.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Withers.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Mr Phipps. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, thoſe that were of the laſt Jury I hope ſhall not be call'd of this Jury: This Priſoner being tried upon the ſame Indictment the laſt was.

L. C. J. If they be not, it ſhall be in Eaſe to them, but it is not in Favour of you.

Mr Phipps. We humbly conceive, having given their Verdict upon the ſame Indictment, they are not ſuch indifferent Perſons, as the Law intends they ſhould be, and think it is good Reaſon they ſhould not ſerve upon this Jury.

L. C. J. What though it be upon the ſame Indictment? the Evidence is not the ſame; for they are diſtinct Offences.

Mr Phipps. I do not know whether it be a good Cauſe of Challenge, but ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Well, you may doubt of it if you pleaſe, and try the Exception.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Trench.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolfe.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Arthur Bailey.

Cranburne. I challenge him; he was upon the laſt Jury.

L. C. J. That is no Reaſon; Will you challenge him peremptorily?

Cranburne. I do challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Caine.

Cranburne. I do not except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. Hold Mr Caine the Book, Cryer.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner, Sir. You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to your Evidence, ſo help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Glover.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cranburne. I ſay nothing againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Wyborne.

Sir B. Shower. I hope you take an Account of the Challenges, Mr. Hardiſtey.

L. C. J. Nay, you ſhould take care of the Challenges, who are his Council; if he had no Council we wou'd take care of him.

Cryer. Here is Mr Wyborne, What ſay you to him?

Cranburne. I have nothing to ſay. (He was ſworn.)

Sir B. Shower. I hope your Lordſhip will alſo be of Council for him.

L. C. J. We are to be equal and indifferent between the King and the Priſoner: But you that are now his Council by Law, ought to take care that he loſe no Advantage.

Cl. of Ar. William Strode.

Cranburne. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Richard Bourn, Eſq;	John Wyborne, Gent.
Nicholas Roberts, Gent.	William Strode, Gent. and
Andrew Cook, Gent.	Thomas White, Gent.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney General, before this Inqueſt be taken of the High-Treaſon, whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: And all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

L. C. J. Mr Attorney, Do you think we ſhall be able to try the other to Night.

Mr At. Gen. That is according as this holds, my Lord.

L. C. J. I ſpeak it for the Eaſe of the Jury, that they might be diſpatched, and not attend another Day.

Mr At. Gen. I doubt we cannot try any more than this to Night.

L. C. J. Well it is no great Matter, it will be but a Morning-Work; it may be too great a Streſs and a Hurry to do any more to Night; and therefore we will diſcharge the Jury for to Night, thoſe of them that are not ſworn; but we will be here to Morrow Morning by Seven a Clock; and therefore pray Gentlemen attend early.

Cl. of Ar. C. Cranburne Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Charles Cranburne, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Yeoman, for that he, with Chriſtopher Knightley, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, Robert Lowick, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, and Ambroſe Rookwood, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, the Fear of God in their Hearts not having, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being mov'd and ſeduc'd by the Inſtigation of the Devil, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Soverign Lord, William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme, True, Righful, Lawful, and undoubted Lord, the Cordial Love, and the true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance which every Faithful Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhou'd bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing and wholly to extinguiſh intending and contriving, and with all their Strength, purpoſing, deſigning and conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and very well eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change and alter; as alſo our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King to ſubjugate and enthral, the 10th Day of Feb. in the 7th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine and contrive, purpoſe, deſign and intend our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to Slay, Kill and Murder, and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of him our ſaid Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England to make and cauſe; and their ſaid moſt wicked, impious, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and very many other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown. Afterwards, to wit, the ſame Tenth Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aboveaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and wile, to Aſſaſſinate, Kill and Murder: And that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing the ſooner execute and perpetrate. Afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, and diverſe other Days and Times, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, traiterouſly did treat, propoſe, and conſult of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what manner our ſaid Lord the King ſo by lying in wait the more eaſily they might Kill: And did conſent, agree, and aſſent, that Forty Horſemen, or thereabouts (of whom they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, ſhould be four; and every one of them traiterouſly took upon himſelf to be one) with Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, charged with Gun-powder and Leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, Armed, ſhould lie in wait, and be in Ambuſh our ſaid Lord the King, in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad, to ſet upon; and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed, upon the Guards of our ſaid Lord the King, then attending him, and being with him, ſhould ſet upon, and them ſhould fight with, and overcome; whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo armed, him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould Aſſaſſinate, Slay, Kill, and Murder. And they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, the Treaſons, and all their treaſonable Intentions, Purpoſes and Contrivances aforeſaid to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to effect, afterwards, (to wit) the aforeſaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Swords and Rapiers, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and Military Inſtruments, falſely, malitiouſly, ſecretly and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and to be bought, obtained, gathered together, and procured, did cauſe with that Intent them in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, as aforeſaid, to be us'd, imploy'd, and beſtowed: And the ſame Premiſſes the more ſafely and certainly to execute, do, and perpetrate, the aforeſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, with one Edward King (late of High Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted) by the Conſent and Aſſent of divers of the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the aforeſaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, traiterouſly did go, and came unto the Place propoſed, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King, by lying in wait, ſhould be done, perpetrated and committed, to view, ſee, and obſerve the Conveniency and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, Aſſaſſination, and Killing, there to be done, perpetrated and committed; and that Place ſo being ſeen and obſerved, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, his Obſervations thereof to ſeveral of the ſaid Traitors and Conſpirators did relate and impart, to wit, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid; and the ſaid Charles Cranburne the ſame Day and Year there, in order the ſame execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing of our ſaid Lord the King, by the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perpetrate, and commit adviſedly, knowingly, and traiterouſly did bear and carry among divers of thoſe Traitors and Conſpirators forward and backward from ſome to others of them, a Liſt of the Names of divers Men of them who were deſigned and appointed our ſaid Lord the King, ſo as aforeſaid, by lying in wait, to Kill and Murder, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him not guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Mr. Montague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment of High-Treaſon that is found againſt four Perſons; but the particular Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar is for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, and enſlave the Nation to Lewis the French King: And the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner at the Bar did for this purpoſe meet and conſult with ſeveral falſe Traitors to the King and Government, of the Way, Manner, and Means how, and the Time and Place when and where to Aſſaſſinate the King; and at length they agreed that forty Horeſemen ſhould go together, and ſet upon the King in his Coach, as he returned from Hunting; ſome to attack the Coach, while others ſet upon the Guards. The Indictment does further charge him with getting Horſes and Arms, and particularly with carrying a Liſt of the Aſſaſſinators from one to another. Theſe are the particular Things charged in the Indictment, and to this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty; if we prove the Fact, Gentlemen, we don't doubt your Juſtice.

Mr At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Priſoner at the Bar, Charles Cranburne, is indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. Gentlemen, the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to prove the Priſoner guilty are, That he was at ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations about the Manner of putting this Deſign in Execution; at which Meetings it was agreed, that there ſhould be about forty Horſemen in Number prepar'd, and arm'd for that Purpoſe, and they did provide Horſes and Arms for that very Thing, and did agree to put it in Execution.

Gentlemen, the Evidence that you will hear produc'd againſt the Priſoner at the Bar will be of this Nature. You will hear from the Witneſſes, that about Chriſtmas laſt, or the Beginning of January, Sir George Barclay, did come over from France from the late King James, to whom whom he was an Officer in his Guards, with a Commiſſion for attacking the Prince of Orange, or levying War upon his Perſon. He came over about that Time, and ſeveral Troopers of the late King James's Guards, to aſſiſt him in that barbarous Conſpiracy. When Sir George Barclay came over, he did acquaint with this Deſign ſeveral Perſons in England, that he thought proper to be Accomplices with him in it, particularly Capt. Porter, Mr Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, and ſeveral others whoſe Names you will hear of, and they had ſeveral Meetings about it the Beginning of February, at Capt. Porter's Lodgings, at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, at the Globe Tavern in Hatton Garden, and ſeveral other Places where they conſulted in what manner they might attempt and accompliſh this bloody Deſign

Gentlemen, you will hear, that at theſe Meetings it was propos'd, that they ſhould do it by Ambuſcade as the King came from Richmond a Hunting, whither he uſed to go upon Saturdays: Others were for doing it on this Side the Water. And ſo their Opinions being divided, it was thought neceſſary to find out and ſettle which was the beſt Place; and in Order thereunto they employ'd Capt. Porter, Mr Knightley, and Mr King (who was executed) to view the Ground, and accordingly they went, and pitch'd upon the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green for this Purpoſe, as the moſt convenient Place: And having ſo done, they came back and gave an Account to thoſe that had appointed to meet 'em, to hear the Succeſs of their Expedition, to the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, and in that Place you will find by the Evidence, that thoſe Perſons, who were the Heads of the Conſpiracy, undertook to find their ſeveral Proportions of Men, for whom they would undertake, that would go with them, and be concern'd in this Deſign. Sir George Barclay was to furniſh about twenty. He had the Command of the Troopers that came from France, and thoſe other Officers that came thence, were under him. Capt. Porter was to furniſh ſeven, Charnock was to furniſh eight, Sir William Parkyns was to furniſh five Horſes and three Men, and, I think, Lowick was to furniſh ſome more: In the whole Number they reckon'd there ſhould be about forty.

It will appear, Gentlemen, that the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr Cranburne, was one of the Men that Capt. Porter undertook to get, and engage in this Deſign; and accordingly Capt. Porter did acquaint Mr Cranburne with it; and he did undertake to be one, and to be ready to go with him, and be concerned in this Aſſaſſination. You will find he was acquainted with it about the 14th of February, the Day before the firſt Time that they intended to aſſault the King: Then he did undertake and agree to prepare himſelf againſt the next Day. The next Day, which was the 15th of February, they had ſeveral Meetings, and they were making Preparation in Order to go out. It happen'd, by great Providence, his Majeſty did not go abroad that Day, and thereupon they diſpers'd themſelves; but they had Meetings afterwards, at which Meetings the Priſoner was preſent, with Capt. Porter, Mr Pendergraſs, La Rue, and ſeveral others that were concerned in the Conſpiracy, particularly the 21ſt of February, the Day before the ſecond Time they were to have put this in Execution. Capt. Porter being at the Sun-Tavern, with ſeveral other Gentlemen, and they reſolving to have it executed the next Day, if the King went abroad; Capt. Porter ſent for Cranburne, and Keys that was executed, and Kendrick and Sherborn, four of thoſe that he had undertaken for, (of whom, I ſay, Cranburne, the Priſoner at the Bar, was one) and then he acquainted 'em that they were reſolv'd to go on with it the next Day. And then they agreed to be in a Readineſs accordingly. The next Day the Priſoner, with ſome others, met at Mr Porter's, where they were preparing to go out and attack the King, and they had ſeveral Diſcourſes about the Ways and Means of doing it; and particularly Capt. Porter at that Time ſaid, that he had a very good Gun that held about ſix or eight Bullets, and that Mr Pendergraſs was to have, who was to attack the Coach, and ſhoot into the Coach: Mr Cranburne was there preſent at that Time, and Mr Cranburne was employ'd particularly by Capt. Porter to carry a Liſt that Porter writ of the Names of ſeveral Men that were to act in it under him, and this he was to carry to Charnock. Porter writ it and gave it him, and he carry'd it with Directions to bring it back with the Liſt of the Names of Mr Charnock's Men. Cranburne did accordingly at that Time carry the Liſt of the Names to Capt. Charnock, and brought it back with an additional Liſt, from Capt. Charnock, of his Men.

At that Time, you will hear farther, when Cranburne brought the Liſt, he brought an Account that he heard the King did certainly go abroad: For Mr Charnock had Intelligence ſo from Chambers, who lay at Kenſington to get Intelligence: At which there was very great Rejoycing among all that were preſent at that Time, hoping they ſhould have an Opportunity to put this execrable Deſign in Execution; and ſo they prepar'd all of 'em to go out. There were ſeveral Inns in Turnham-Green and Brentford, and thereabouts, and they were to be plac'd two or three in an Inn, that they might be ready to get together when Time ſhould ſerve. It happen'd the King did not go abroad that Day neither, there being ſome Diſcovery of this Deſign, and ſo they did diſperſe themſelves, as apprehending it was diſcover'd.

Gentlemen, it will appear by ſeveral Witneſſes, that the Priſoner at the Bar was engag'd in this horrid treaſonable Deſign, and was to have acted a Part in it. We will call our Witneſſes that will make the Particulars out to you, and we do not queſtion but you'll do what is right. Firſt, call Capt. Porter; (who was ſworn.)

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray, if you pleaſe, Capt. Porter, give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know of this wicked intended Aſſaſſination, and what Share the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, before this wicked Aſſaſſination was on foot, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr Cranburne, was employ'd by me to buy Arms. I us'd to give him Money to go to the Brokers to buy Arms at ſecond-hand, and he brought a Sword-Cutler to me, of whom I bought about twenty Swords. And when Sir George Barclay came into England, and this Buſineſs was reſolv'd upon, I acquainted him with the Deſign, and promis'd to mount him. He never was at any of the Meetings with Capt. Charnock, Sir George Barclay, or Sir William Parkyns; but he went to look for a Horſe, and was ready both Saturdays to go along with me. On Saturday the 22d I ſent ſent him with a Meſſage to Sir William Parkyns, for the Note for the two Horſes, which he had promiſed me to furniſh me with, out of his five that he was to furniſh; he came back again, and told me that there was a Meſſenger came and ſaid that the King did go out, and he knew where to have the two Horſes; that Mr Charnock was afraid we ſhould not have the full Number of Men, and deſired me to ſend him the Names of my Men; I did write a Liſt of the Names of my Men, and I went afterwards to the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, whither he was to come to me; he did ſo, and he brought back the Liſt of my Men, with the Liſt of Mr Charnock's Men written underneath it, and at the ſame Time News was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day.

L. C. J. You ſay, that before the Aſſaſſination was ſet on foot, you imployed him to buy Arms and Horſes.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I acquainted him with it the Friday before the firſt Saturday.

L. C. J. You ſaid before the Aſſaſſination you imployed him to buy Arms: When was that?

Capt. Porter. I ſaid before the Aſſaſſination was on foot I imployed him to buy Arms. I told him I was to be a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment, and promiſed to make him my Quarter-Maſter.

L. C. J. How long ago was this? Was it a Week before the Aſſaſſination was on foot?

Capt. Porter. He has known of my being a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment this two Years.

Mr Att. Gen. I do doubt my Lord, he does not diſtinguiſh the Times when he bought the Arms, and when the Aſſaſſination was.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, he does now; I miſapprehended him at firſt, and thought he ſaid he had imployed him to buy Arms a Week before the Aſſaſſination was on foot; but he ſays it was a longer Time.

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire my Lord, he may be askt what Time he bought Arms before this Aſſaſſination: When was the laſt Time he bought Arms?

Capt. Porter. It was ſeveral Months before the Aſſaſſination.

Mr At. Gen. Was it within a Year before it.

Capt. Porter. Yes I believe it was within a Year. I gave him ſeveral Times Money for that purpoſe, in all above ten Pounds, and he told me one with another, he had bought ten Caſe of Piſtols, and kept them in the Houſe till there were Occaſion.

Mr Att. Gen. How long ago is it?

Capt. Porter. I believe about a Year; within a Year.

Mr At. Gen. When did you firſt acquaint him with the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. Porter. Preſently after Sir George Barclay acquainted me with it, I ſent to him, to deſire him to get the Piſtols clean and ready.

Mr At. Gen. Did you tell him of the Deſign?

Capt. Porter. I told him there was a Deſign on foot, and I would tell him more when I ſaw him next; and I deſir'd him to get the Swords from the Sword-Cutlers, and the Piſtols clean and ready. And I met him afterwards, and told him of the Deſign, and that we intended to do it on Saturday the fifteenth; and he engaged to be ready and make one. On the Friday before the twenty ſecond he went with me to the Cock-pit, and there we met with one Mr Gunn, and I askt him if he knew where any good Hackney-Horſes might be had? He ſaid he believed he did; and I ſent Cranburne with him, and he came back, and told me he had found two or three out in Bloomſbury.

L. C. J. Look ye, Capt Porter, you muſt not ſpeak ſo faſt, it is impoſſible to underſtand ſo much Matter as you deliver without diſtinguiſhing of Times. You ſaid, that ſome long Time before the Aſſaſſination was on foot you ſent him to buy Arms, for what Purpoſe were thoſe Arms?

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, he has told you——

L. C. J. Pray let me hear it from him again.

Capt. Porter. I ſay, my Lord, he knew of my being a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment this two Years.

L. C. J. But what were thoſe Arms for that he bought?

Capt. Porter. To be ready againſt King James landed, which was deſigned ſeveral Times.

L. C. J. Why now you make the Matter clear to me.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, that is not the Thing we go upon, that is but introductory to the Buſineſs that we are now a Trying. Therefore we deſire to know of him: Captain Porter, when did you firſt acquaint Cranburne of the Aſſaſſination of the King?

Capt. Porter. As ſoon as Sir George Barclay acquainted me with it, and deſired me to get what Men I could to effect it. I ſent for Cranburne to my Lodgings in Norfolk ſtreet, and he came to me one Morning; and I told him there was a Deſign on foot, and I would tell him more of it afterwards.

Mr Sol. Gen. When was it that Sir George Barclay acquainted you with it?

Capt. Porter. About the latter End of January.

Mr At. Gen. And what ſaid he to it when you acquainted him with it?

Capt. Porter. He did agree to go with me, and I promiſed to furniſh him with Horſe and Arms; and on Friday before the fifteenth I ſent him with three Caſe of Piſtols to Sir William Parkyns, to furniſh the three Men he was to mount with his own Horſes.

L. C. J. Who was to have thoſe three Caſe of Piſtols.

Capt. Porter. Sir William Parkyns was, and he carried them to Sir William Parkyns's.

Mr At. Gen. How long was this, do you ſay, before the Aſſaſſination was to have been?

Capt. Porter. It was Friday before the fifteenth.

Mr Att. Gen. That was before the firſt Time that it was to have been done.

Capt. Porter. Yes, and Friday before the laſt, I ſent him to look after the Horſes that Gunn ſaid he believed he could help me to, and he came to me to the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and told me he and Jeffrey Gunn had found three Horſes in Bloomsbury, and I came out of the Room where I was with Sir George Barclay and others, and there was Kendrick and Keys, and Cranburne, and I told them we were reſolved to put it in Execution the next Day.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, pray what Diſcourſe had you with him the next Day?

Capt. Porter. The next Day, the 22d, he came to my Lodging at Maiden-Lane, and I ſent him to Sir William Parkyns for a Note for the two Horſes, that I was to mount of his: He came back and told me he knew where to have them, and that Captain Charnock was affraid we ſhould not have our Compliment of Men, and desired me to send him an Account what Men I could bring, which I did by Mr Cranburne, and being to go to the Blue-Posts, ordered him to bring it to me thither, and he did bring it back to me to the Blue-Posts with Captain Charnock's List underneath.

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray Captain Porter, was there any Body present when you sent the List, and the Prisoner brought it back to you?

Capt. Porter. Yes there was Mr La Rue, and Captain Pendergrass, and Mr King, I know of none else.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray do you remember what Healths were drunk after you heard the King was not to go abroad?

Capt. Porter. I don't remember what Healths were drunk that Day particularly, but whether it were Thursday or Friday, (I cannot tell particularly the Day) We drank a Health to the squeezing of the Rotten Orange upon the next Saturday.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was present that Day when that Health was drunk?

Capt. Porter. Mr Cranburne was there present at that Time, and did drink the Health.

Mr Cooper. Pray Sir did he meet you by Appointment on Saturday the 15th, or was it by Accident?

Capt. Porter. By Appointment, as all the rest did, to get ready as all the rest did, to go upon the Design; and so it was both Days.

Sir B. Shower. If they have done with Mr Porter, we would ask him a Question or two for the Prisoner: We desire to know when it was that those Arms were bought that he talks of: For we must acknowledge that Mr Cranburne heretofore went upon several Messages for Capt. Porter; When was that buying of Arms?

Capt. Porter. I tell you I cannot exactly tell the Month.

Mr Cranburne. Do you remember the Year?

Capt. Porter. I believe it was less than a Year before the Assassination was on Foot.

Mr Cranburn. If you remember, Sir, it was a Month before Col. Parker was put in the Tower.

Capt. Porter. It was several Times, I cannot tell the particular Times.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I desire to know when he first communicated this Design to Mr Cranburne, and who was by, and where was it?

Capt. Porter. I told you I sent for Mr Cranburne one Day in the Week before the 15th, and he came to me at my Lodging in Norfolk-street, and I acquainted him that Sir George Barclay was come, and there was such a Design on Foot; and I desired him to get those Pistols that he had of mine ready, and cleaned: that they might be ready for the Execution.

Sir B. Shower. What Day was that?

Capt. Porter. One Day in the Week before the 15th.

Mr Cranburne. Did you ever name Sir George Barclay to me in your Life?

Capt. Porter. Yes I did, I told you he was come from France.

Mr Cranburne. Where was that, at Mr ——

Capt. Porter. In Norfolk-street, where I lay?

Mr Cranburne. Who was by?

Capt. Porter. No Body but my self.

Sir B. Shower. Upon what Occasion did you meet there?

Capt. Porter. I sent for him to my Lodging.

Sir B. Shower. How long had Sir George Barclay been in Town, before that Time?

Capt. Porter. I cannot tell the Time when he came to Town.

Sir B. Shower. How long was it after he came to Town before you saw him? Had you seen him a Week or a Fortnight before? Pray recollect your self.

Capt. Porter. I told you that the first Time I heard of him, was the latter End of January; Capt. Charnock told me he was come, but I was then sick of the Gout.

Sir B. Shower. Now then I would desire to know, who was by upon the Friday before the 22d at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, when you and Mr Cranburne were there?

Capt. Porter. I did tell you, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. I desire to know, whether there was any Body besides Mr Cranburne, Kendrick, and Keys?

Capt. Porter. Sir, I will tell you all I can remember; I was in one Room with Sir George Barclay, and there was Sir William Parkyns, Capt. Charnock, and my self; and afterwards I went into another Room, where there was Kendrick, and Cranburne, and Keys, and Jeffrey Gunn came in afterwards, I remember no Body else.

Mr Phipps. Was not Gunn there when you first came in?

Capt. Porter. To the best of my Remembrance, he came in afterwards.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this may be a very material Part of our Defence, and therefore we must enquire a little the more into it. Mr Porter is pleased to say, that he was in a Room with Sir George Barclay, and Charnock, and Sir William Parkyns; and he came out into another Room where was Mr Cranburne, Kendrick, and Keys; and there he says, after he had been there some Time, Gunn came in, I desire to know, whether Gunn was there when he first came in?

Capt. Porter. To the best of my Remembrance, he came in afterwards, but I cannot positively tell, for I was in and out several Times.

Mr Phipps. At the Time that you communicated this Design to Mr Cranburne, what said he to you?

Capt. Porter. When I first communicated the Thing to him, I told him there was a Thing on Foot for the Service of King James, and desired him to go along with me.

L. C. J. What Kind of Service did you tell him it was?

Capt. Porter. He asked me, what kind of Service it was? I told him Sir George Barclay was come over, and I told the whole Design of the Assassination of the Prince of Orange, that it was intended to take him off, as he came from Richmond from Hunting.

Mr Phipps. And pray what did Mr Cranburne say to you?

Capt. Porter. He said he would be ready to go along with me.

Mr Phipps. You say, you sent by him three Case of Pistols to Sir William Parkyns, at that Time did you tell him for what Design those Pistols were?

Capt. Porter. I told him, they were for the three Men that Sir William Parkyns was to mount upon three of his five Horses.

Mr Cranburne. Did you speak to me to carry those Pistols to Sir William Parkyns?

Capt. Porter.

Capt. Porter. I think ſo, to the beſt of my Remembrance I ordered you my ſelf to carry them.

Sir B. Shower. Captain Porter, I deſire you to recollect your ſelf, and tell us plainly, whether the Deſign was communicated to Mr Cranburne before the 15th.

Capt. Porter. Certainly Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Are you ſure of it?

Capt. Porter. Yes Sir, I am ſure of it.

Sir B. Shower. I ask you, becauſe you know what has been ſaid upon this Occaſion in other Trials.

Cranburne. Where did you write the Note, that you ſay you ſent to Sir William Parkyns? Was that Note ſealed or was it not?

Capt. Porter. I did not tell you that I writ a Note.

Cranburne. You ſwore that you wrote a Note, and ſent it by me to Sir William Parkyns for two Horſes.

Capt. Porter. I ſaid no ſuch Thing, Sir.

Mr Sol. Gen. Look you, Capt. Porter, let him ask you any Queſtions, and if they be proper anſwer them, and let not his Affirmations, or Miſtakes provoke you to be angry.

Capt. Porter. I ſaid, I ſent him to Sir William Parkyns, for a Note to have the Horſes from Mr Lewis.

Mr Phipps. Did you ſend him with a Letter, or was it a Meſſage by Word of Mouth?

Capt. Porter. I did ſend him by Word of Mouth, for a Note.

L. C. J. Pray, Gentlemen, obſerve the Evidence, Sir William Parkyns was to give a Note for two Horſes, and Capt. Porter ſent Cranburne for the Note.

Mr Phipps. The Queſtion therefore that I ask, is, Whether he ſent a Letter for the Note, or whether by Word of Mouth?

Capt. Porter. I ſent by Word of Mouth.

Mr Cranburne. Pray will you tell the Court what you ſaid upon the 22d to Mr Pendergraſs and me, after you came down from the Blue-Poſts leaning upon the Rail.

Capt. Porter. I don't remember a Word of it, for I cannot remember every Word that I have ſpoken.

Sir B. Shower. If you can remember one Particular, ſure you can remember another. If you can't remember this, how came you to remember any Part of the Diſcourſe that happen'd at the Blue-Poſts.

Capt. Porter. Becauſe that was material to this Buſineſs, for I had very ſoon after a particular Occaſion to recollect it upon the breaking out of the Plot.

Mr Cranburne. Pray what Hour was it this Saturday the 15th that you communicated this Deſign to me?

Capt. Porter. I cannot tell what Hour, but I ſay you met me at the Blue-Poſts Saturday the 15th.

Mr Cranburne. You ſay, you communicated it to me the 15th.

Mr Att. Gen. He ſays he communicated it to you, before the 15th.

Mr Cranburne. I deſire to know where he was the 14th.

Capt. Porter. I ſay, one Day before the 15th, in that Week I ſent for you to come to my Lodgings, and you did come, and there I communicated it to you.

Cranburne. Sir, I was not at your Lodgings that Week.

Mr Phipps. What Day of the Week?

Capt. Porter. I cannot be poſitive whether it was Thurſday, or Friday, or what Day; but one Day that Week it was.

Mr Phipps. You ought to be poſitive when it was.

Capt. Porter. I do tell you as near as I can.

Mr Phipps. With Submiſſion, my Lord, he ought to be poſitive one Way or other.

L. C. J. Nay, I don't ſee that he ought to be poſitive to a Day; he may be ſo if he can.

Cranburne. Pray what Day did you ſay you ſent me to Sir George Barclay?

Capt. Porter. I do not ſay that I ever ſent you to Sir George Barclay?

Mr Phipps. Can you take upon you to ſay, That he was at your Lodgings that Week before the 15th?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Knowledge it was one Day that Week.

Mr Phipps. To the beſt of your Knowledge: Are you ſure of it?

L. C. J. Speak as certainly as you can.

Capt. Porter. Indeed, I believe ſo, it was before the 15th. I am ſure, I think, it was within three or four Days after Sir George Barclay had acquainted me with it, I ſent to the Priſoner to come to me to my Lodgings, at Mrs —— —— in Norfolk-ſtreet, and acquainted him with it.

L. C. J. And when you acquainted him with it, What did you tell him? What Part was he to act in it?

Capt. Porter. I told him, I would have him go along with me, and that I had ſet him down for one of my Party, and would provide him Horſe and Arms; and he did agree to go along with me.

Sir B. Shower. Mr Webber, Pray let me ſee Charnock's Tryal.

Mr Sh. Buckingham. Why, Sir Bartholomew, is the Tryal any Evidence?

Sir B. Shower. Mr Sheriff, I know what Uſe I can make of it.

Mr Soll. Gen. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Sir B. Shower. No, Sir.

Mr Sol. Gen. Then ſwear M. De la Rue. (which was done.)

Pray, Sir, give the Court, and the Jury, an Account what you know of the intended Aſſaſſination, and what Share the Priſoner had in it.

M. De la Rue. It is too long a Story to tell you all that I know of this Matter; but, if you pleaſe, I will tell you what concerns the Priſoner at the Bar. I am heartily ſorry that I have Occaſion to appear againſt him, as I wou'd be truly againſt any Body: But ſince I am here upon my Oath, I muſt declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth; and I hope I ſhall not declare any Thing but what is Truth. Upon Saturday, the 15th of February, the Day that the Deſign was to have been put in Execution againſt his Majeſty, and all that were in the Coach with him, and againſt his Guards, I went to Mr Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-ſtreet, to inform my ſelf whether they reſolved on that Day to go out upon the Deſign; and I found by Mr Charnock that they did reſolve it, and I ſtay'd there a while, till ſuch Time as Mr Chambers came in; I did not know whence he came then, but, as I was informed afterwards, he came from Kenſington to Mr Charnock, and his Boots were dirty; and Mr Charnock told me he had ſent a Meſſenger to Mr Porter, And, ſays he, if you will ſtay a little Time, I ſhall have an Anſwer. The Meſſenger came back, and told him, That Capt. Porter din'd at the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden. I did not go to dine with him, but went Home, where I ſaw Mr King at my Lodging, who told me, that the King did not go out that Day. I told him, I heard he did not: I found by Mr Chambers's coming back, and that we had no Notice from Mr Charnock, that it was concluded the King did not go out as it was ſuppoſed he ſhou'd have gone. When I had din'd at my Lodging, I went to the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, to Mr Porter, and there were four, or five, or ſix People with him; there was one Mr Sherborn, and Mr Kendrick, and two People that I never ſaw before, and another Perſon, but I can't tell now who he was. When we had been there a little while, comes in this unfortunate Man at the Bar, Mr Cranburne; I don't know where he had been; but by his coming in ſo late, I ſuppoſe he had not din'd, and he ordered the Drawer to get him ſome Coſtelets. This is all that I can ſay as to that Day: I had ſeen Captain Porter twice or thrice between that, and the 22d, and he deſired me to be at Home on Friday Night, between Eight and Nine, and he wou'd ſend to me: He did ſend, and I was from Home. But when I came, I was informed his Servant had been to ſpeak with me; and in the Morning, about Eight or Nine a Clock, Saturday the 22d, he ſent his Servant to me to tell me his Maſter would ſpeak with me at his Lodgings. I went to his Lodgings, and he then lay in Maiden-Lane, at one Brown's a Surgeon's: When I came in, he was in Bed; and he told me in French, Touts Parties ſont Preſts, All Parties are ready. I underſtood all along that there were three Parties to be engag'd; one to attack the King's Coach, and the two others the Guards; Sir George Barclay was to head the firſt, and Porter, and Rookwood, the reſt. Mr Porter aroſe and dreſs'd himſelf, and in came Mr Cranburne; and Mr Porter went out to him into the Dining-Room, and what he ſaid I can't tell: But ſoon after came in Pendergraſs, Mr Keys, and Mr King, and then he takes Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Sir B. Shower. Who took that?

M. De la Rue. Capt. Porter took Pen, ink, and Paper, and writes down a Liſt of his Party, and puts me down firſt. Mr. Pendergraſs ask'd me if I was the Captain, and I made him ſome Anſwer, but what in particular I cannot tell; I think I told him, I knew of the Thing before the moſt did: But I can remember particularly that Liſt was given to Mr Cranburne, to carry to Mr. Charnock; upon what Account it was, I cannot tell; but I concluded, that Mr. Charnock was to be acquainted with thoſe Perſons that Mr. Porter was ſure of: And Mr. Porter at that time told me that he was diſappointed of ſome People, and deſired me to get him ſome other Men in their Rooms; and he ſent particularly to one that Mr. King propoſed; and I did go, and brought him to the Blue-Poſts, where Cap. Porter told me he was to dine; and the Gentleman I went to, told me he wou'd meet me at the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden. When I came back to Mr Porter's Lodgings, Mr Porter, and Mr Pendergraſs, and Mr Oldfield, and I, went in a Coach to the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden; and when we had been there a little while, Mr. Cranburne came back to give an Account of the Errand Mr. Porter had ſent him upon, and he brings this Liſt.

Mr At. Gen. Who brought it?

M. De la Rue. Mr. Cranburne?

Cranburne. Whither did I bring it?

M. De la Rue. To the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden.

L. C. J. You muſt not ask any Queſtions till they have done with him. But, Mr De la Rue, let me ask you what Day was this?

Mr. De la Rue. This was Saturday, the 22d of February; and he told Mr Porter there was a Liſt of Mr Charnock's Men at the Bottom of that Liſt, and I took the Liſt in my Hand, and there was Mr Charnock's Liſt of Six or Seven, or thereabouts, of his Party, and at the Bottom of it was R. C. I think, for Robert Charnock. Mr Porter takes Mr Cranburne from the Company into another Room, and I went after them, and he told Captain Porter, in my hearing, that the King did not go out that Day. There is one Thing I forgot, which now I recollect, and I am upon my Oath to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth: When I was at Mr Porter's Lodging, he told me the King was to go out; and that Mr Chambers, the orderly Man, had ſent Word, That the King reſolv'd to go out between Ten and Eleven.

L. C. J. Who ſaid ſo?

M. De la Rue. Mr Cranburne told me ſo at Mr Porter's Lodgings, I ſay I had forgot it, but it occurs to my Memory now, that he told me there before we went to the Blue-Poſts, that the King did go out that Day between 10 and 11; for Mr Chambers, the orderly Man, had been with Mr Charnock or Sir William Parkyns, to let them know ſo much. And afterwards when he came back with the Liſt of Captain Porter's Men, to Captain Porter at the Blue-Poſts in the Spring-Garden; there was at the Foot of that Liſt, a Liſt of Mr Charnock's Men in another Hand, I ſuppoſe writ by himſelf, but that I cannot ſwear whoſe Hand it was, and Mr Porter took him into another Room, and then Mr Cranburn told him the King did not go out, and I believe it was then between 11 and 12 a Clock, and he alſo told Mr Porter, that Mr Charnock was apprehenſive the Thing was diſcovered, and therefore deſired him to have a Care of himſelf, for he himſelf was reſolved not to lie at home that Night; I think, my Lord, Mr Porter did ſend back Mr Cranburne to Mr Charnock, I cannot be poſitive whether he did or not, but I believe he did; becauſe I am ſure Mr Cranburne did tell Mr Porter, Sir George Barclay would ſpeak with him, and Mr Porter made Anſwer, why ſhould he deſire me to go to him, when he knows I am under ſome ill Circumſtances, and he can better come to me? and I believe Mr Porter did ſend Mr Cranburne once again to Mr Charnock.

L. C. J. Well, pray do not ſay any Thing of any Matter but what you can be poſitive in.

M. De la Rue. But Mr Porter did not go to Mr Charnock, nor did Mr Charnock come to him, therefore they ſtay'd there and dined; and after Dinner, or a little before Dinner, Keys the Trumpeter, came up, and told us, that my Lord of Oxford's Regiment of the Guards was returned from Richmond, foaming: Keys went down Stairs again to learn Intelligence as I thought, and came up and told us he ſaw the King's Coaches newly return'd to the Mews, and Mr Cranburne was by all the Time; I think this was before Dinner, and then we went to Dinner.

L. C. J. I tell you again, don't ſpeak any Thing that is material but what you can be poſitive in.

M. De la Rue.

M. De la Rue. I am positive as to the Thing, and that it was the 22d of February, but I cannot be positive as to all the Circumstances: After Dinner there was the usual Healths, the Jacobite Healths to King James, and the Prince of Wales, and the Restoration, and the like; and after that I think it was Mr Porter took an Orange in his Hand and squeez'd it, I am sure one in the Company did, and drank something to the Rotten Orange, I cannot very well remember just now what it was; but I would be cautious of saying any Thing but what is Truth, but if your Lordship will give me leave to recollect my self, I will tell you what it was—— Oh! it was to the squeezing of the Rotten Orange, and the Health went round, and Mr Cranburne was in the Company, and drank the Health, but being disappointed and frustrated of the Design by the King's not going abroad that Day, and Mr Porter being cautioned by Mr Charnock to take care of himself, and being told that Mr Charnock would not lie at home that Night, and the Guards returning in that Manner, they were all apprehensive that the Thing had taken Air, and the Design of Assassinating the King was discovered, and therefore Mr Porter concluded of going out of Town; several Healths were drunk round, and I think about Two a Clock he went out of Town, and then the Company broke up. This is what I can say as to the Prisoner, and I hope I have said nothing but what is Truth.

Mr Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we desire to know whether they will ask him any Questions?

Mr Phipps. At the Time you say this List was given by Captain Porter, to Mr Cranburne, did Mr Porter declare to what purpose the List was sent?

M. De la Rue. No, Sir, not a Word of any such Thing. Mr King was by, and Mr Pendergrass was by, and I think Mr Keys was by, and he writ a List of his Party, putting me down First, and Mr Pendergrass said to me, you are Captain, and he gave it to Mr Cranburne to carry it to Mr Charnock; what the particular Message was, I cannot be positive: Indeed I don't very well remember the Message, but the List was carried to Mr Charnock, and to the best of my Memory it was to give Mr Charnock an Account what Men he was sure of; for Mr Porter told me of several Disappointments he had had, of Persons that had promis'd him and fail'd.

Mr Phipps. Can you remember what Mr Cranburne said upon that?

M. De la Rue. No, I do not.

Cranburne. What Message was that you say, I brought from Sir George Barclay?

M. De la Rue. I do not say that you brought any Message from Sir George Barclay.

Cranburne. You said that I brought a Message that Sir George Barclay would see him.

M. De la Rue. I do not say so; but I say that you told Mr Porter that Mr Charnock sent you with a Message to let him know that Sir George Barclay was desirous to see Mr Porter, to confer about taking care of themselves.

Cranburne. Did you hear me name Sir George Barclay's Name?

M. De la Rue. Yes, I say you told Mr Porter that Mr Charnock bid you caution him to take care of himself, and that he would go that way, for Sir George Barclay, and he, desired to see him; and Mr Porter said it was an unreasonable Thing for Mr Charnock to desire it, because they knew he was under Circumstances that it was not proper for him to go, and he wondered rather they would not come to him.

L. C. J. What time a Day was this?

M. De la Rue. It was about Twelve a Clock, I think.

L. C. J. Was it after such time as the News was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day?

M. De la Rue. Yes, my Lord, it was after that time.

Mr Phipps. Were you with Sir George Barclay when he was here in England? Did you see him here?

M. De la Rue. I did not see him on this Side of the Water. I knew him abroad, and a great many other unfortunate Persons, that were concern'd in this Affair; I knew some of them here, and that they were concern'd in the Design, but I did not converse with many, indeed with but a very few about it; for to shew that I was not a Man that designed to trappan or insnare any Man, I did never exchange Two Words about this Matter with any Persons that I knew were concern'd in it, but Sir William Parkyns, (and that but in a small Measure) and Mr Charnock, and Mr Porter and Mr King, and Col. Parker, except what past upon the 22d, between Mr Porter, and Mr Charnock, when Mr Porter sent Mr Cranburne to Mr Charnock. Mr Cranburne was one who Mr Porter called his Quarter-Master: I know this Gentleman was commonly depending upon Mr Porter, but I think I never was much in his Company, I did not know what Design he had upon him, but I was told by Mr Porter, that he intended to make him his Quarter-Master, and I understood Mr Porter was to have a Troop of Horse in Col. Parker's Regiment.

Mr Phipps. You say you knew a great many of them that were concern'd, but you discoursed and conversed but with a few?

M. De la Rue. I do so, Sir.

Mr Phipps. How do you know that they were concerned, when you did not discourse with them?

M. De la Rue. By Information from Mr Charnock, and Mr. Porter.

Mr Phipps. Do you know any thing more of Mr Cranburne, than the List, and what have you said already?

M. De la Rue. I give you an Account of all that I do know.

L. C. J. Answer that particular Question. Do you know nothing more than what you have said?

M. De la Rue. No, my Lord, I do not remember nor know any more as to Mr Cranburne than what I have declared, and I am sorry I had Occasion to declare so much.

Mr Att. Gen. Then call Mr Pendergrass. (who was sworn.)

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Intended Assassination, and how far Mr Cranburne, the Prisoner at the Bar, was concerned in it.

Capt. Pendergrass. My Lord, the 13th of February last, I came out of Hampshire, Mr Porter sent for me to come to Town, and I met him that Day at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, and there he told me of the Assassination that was to be done on Saturday following: The next Day we dined at the Rose-Tavern, where the Prisoner dined with us, and we talk'd of the Business, Buſineſs, that was Friday the 14*th*, and we were to be in readineſs the next Day to aſſaſſinate the King, as he was coming from Richmond; but ſome Company coming in afterwards, we left off the Diſcourſe, and talk'd no more that Night. The next Day that we were to do the Buſineſs, we met at the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, and finding the King did not go abroad that Saturday, we dined there at the Blue-Poſts, and talk'd over again of Aſſaſſinating the King, and the Priſoner was by at the ſame time, they were all mightily concerned the King did not go that Saturday; but when we had dined there, we had no further Diſcourſe about the Aſſaſſination that Day, but every Body was to prepare againſt the next Saturday.

L. C. J. Was that agreed upon then?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes it was, by all the Company; ſo we parted that Day. Some time the next Week I met Mr. Porter, and Mr. Porter ask'd me if I had a Horſeman's Sword; I told him no: Says he to Mr Cranburne, let Captain Pendergraſs have one of the Horeſemens Swords that you have got. Says Mr Cranburne to me, if you will come to my Houſe you ſhall make choice of one your ſelf, for I have ſeveral at home. Said I, Mr Cranburne, I cannot go that Way, but I'll take one of your chooſing, if ſo be you'll leave it at my Lodgings: He ſaid he would do it, and did; he left it at my Lodgings in Suffolk-ſtreet, which Sword I have ſtill. The Day following I met him, and he ask'd me if I had receiv'd the Sword; I ſaid I had it; and he ſaid, it was very well. After this I did not ſee Mr Cranburne till Saturday the 22d, at which Time I came to Mr Porter's Lodgings between Nine and Ten a Clock in the Morning, and the Priſoner at the Bar was there, and I heard Mr Porter give him a Meſſage to go to Sir William Parkyns for ſome Horſes, I know not how many. The Priſoner went, and in ſome Time after, came back again, and brought an Account that the King went out that Saturday the 22d to Richmond; ſo every Body was to get ready: And Mr Cranburne ſaid, that Mr Charnock deſired that Mr Porter would ſend a Liſt of his Men; upon which Mr Porter wrote a Liſt of his Men, and gave it to the Priſoner to carry it to Mr Charnock, and bid him meet him at the Blue-Poſts; and Mr Porter and M. De la Rue and I took Coach, and went down to Spring-Garden, and when we came to the Blue-Poſts, there were ſome Perſons that I think M. De la Rue had appointed to come there; the Priſoner comes thither, and brought the Liſt back, with a Liſt of Mr Charnock's Men underneath. I know not who the Men were, for I ſaw it only on the one Side of the Table, in Mr Porter's Hand; at the ſame Time the Priſoner brought an Account, that the King did not go Abroad that Day, and preſently after we had the ſame Account from other Hands; and Captain Porter and I went out of Town, and we heard no more of it.

L. C. J. Are you ſure that he did agree to this Matter before the 15th?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, I am ſure of it, he agreed to it Friday the 14th, at the Roſe Tavern in Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. On the 15th, it ſeems they were diſappointed; are you ſure there was an Agreement to purſue it the 22d?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, I am ſure there was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Priſoner there?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, my Lord, I am ſure that the Priſoner at the Bar was there.

Cranburne. Pray, Mr Pendergraſs, was there any Diſcourſe about this Thing when I was there?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, Mr Cranburne, you cannot but remember there was.

Cranburne. What Hour did I come there, pray Sir?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Truly, I cannot be poſitive to an Hour; but you was there while the Diſcourſe was.

Cranburne. Whether did I ſtay there all the while, and who was in the Company?

Capt. Pendergraſs. All the Company broke up about ſix a Clock, there was Mr King, Captain Porter, Mr Kendrick, Mr Cranburne, Mr Keyes, and my ſelf.

Cranburne. Was Kendrick there when I was there?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, I am ſure of it; I will do you all the Juſtice in the World that I can.

Sir B. Shower. You ſay, Sir, he did agree upon the 14th to this Deſign; pray what Words did he uſe?

Capt. Pendergraſs. He did agree, that we ſhould attack the King the next Day.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, if you can, recollect your ſelf; what did the Priſoner ſay, or whether you took him to agree by being ſilent?

Capt. Pendergraſs. He ſaid, he hop'd we ſhould execute our Buſineſs the next Day.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Capt. Pendergraſs. That was the 14th of February, and the ſame Night I gave Account of the Matter to my Lord Portland.

Mr Phipps. Did he agree to be one in the Execution of the Deſign.

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, he did; he diſcourſed the Matter to me himſelf.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence.

L. C. J. Well, then what ſay you to it for the Priſoner?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, what we have to ſay on Behalf of the Priſoner in this Reſpect is this, Here are but three Witneſſes produced, and as to one of them, De la Rue, there is no Evidence that he gives your Lordſhip and the Jury, that affects this Matter, but only that there was a Liſt given by Captain Porter, and carried by the Priſoner to Mr Charnock, and ſo brought back again. But he does not recollect, nor ſwear to any Meſſage that was ſent from Porter by the Priſoner to Mr Charnock: Now, my Lord, the bare carrying of a Note of Names will be no Evidence of Treaſon. M. De la Rue does not ſwear to any Privity of the Priſoner, what the Liſt was for, nor to the Delivery of the Liſt, which is the Overt-Act in the Indictment, nor upon what Account this Liſt was written, or ſent, or brought back again, or any Word that proceeded from Captain Porter to him upon giving the Liſt, or any Word when it was brought back again. So that as to De la Rue's Teſtimony, we muſt ſubmit it to the Memories and Recollection of your Lordſhip and the Jury, we think he only proves a Plot in general, of which there is no peradventure, every Body is ſatisfied, that there was ſuch a horrible Conſpiracy: Thoſe that have been condemned and executed for it, have own'd it, and ſo it can never be doubted, but he does not ſay any Thing to affect the Priſoner at the the Bar; for as to the Drinking of Healths, and being preſent when thoſe Healths were drunk, tho' it be an Evidence of Diſaffection to the Government, or too much good Manners and Complaiſance to the Company a Man is in, yet that Diſaffection, or civil Temper, or Complaiſance, we hope are no Evidences of Treaſon. It is plain the Priſoner did depend very much upon Captain Porter; he was in Truth his Servant to go of his Errands, and expected an Office from him, God knows when; but it does not appear by any particular Action, that he did any Thing that can be Treaſon, upon M. De la Rue's Evidence. Then as to what Mr Pendergraſs ſays, I muſt confeſs his Evidence comes Home: For he ſays there was a Deſign of the Aſſaſſination, and ſome Agreement of the Priſoner to it; but I muſt beg your Lordſhip's Favour to obſerve, upon Mr Pendergraſs's Evidence, if that ſtand alone, it will be but one Witneſs, and then we are ſafe by the Purview of this Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. Ay, and by the Law, before the making of that Act.

Sir B. Shower. Then, as to Captain Porter, I muſt beg Leave to ſay, If our Witneſſes are come that were abſent at the other Tryal, and they prove what is in my Inſtructions, it will be very much queſtionable, whether there be any Credibility due to his Teſtimony; Then if you take off his Teſtimony, there is only the Evidence of Mr Pendergraſs; and if he be to be believed, to which I have nothing to ſay at preſent, in the Caſe of a Man's Life, upon an Indictment of Treaſon, where the Law requires two credible Witneſſes, his ſingle Teſtimony is not ſufficient to convict the Priſoner. We beg Leave to call our Witneſſes, and then we ſhall leave it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury.

Mr Phipps. As to the particular Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, the carrying about the Liſt, only M. De la Rue ſpeaks to it, and Sir Bartholomew Shower has given it an Anſwer, and I ſhall not repeat it.

L. C. J. Look ye, for that, if any one Overt-Act is prov'd by two Witneſſes, it's well enough.

Mr Sol. Gen. Beſides, they miſtake, my Lord, extreamly; for Captain Porter, and Mr Pendergraſs, ſpeak both of them to that Particular, as to the Liſt.

Sir B. Shower. We do not deny it; the Queſtion is, Whether you have two credible Witneſſes?

Cranburne. Pray, Mr Pendergraſs, do you remember what Captain Porter ſaid to you, and I, when we came down to the Blue-Poſts, leaning upon the Rail?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Indeed, Sir, I do not.

Cranburne. I would have you recollect your ſelf; as we ſtood againſt the Rails in Spring-Garden, when we came down from the Blue-Poſts, after the Deſign miſcarry'd, Mr Porter ſaid, Mr Charnock, and they, might thank themſelves if it were diſcovered; For, ſays he, I never communicated a Word of this Thing to any of my Party.

Capt. Pendergraſs. Indeed I don't remember a Word of it, Sir.

Mr Phipps. My Lord, we have one Piece of Evidence to offer againſt the Teſtimony of Captain Porter: He ſays, That he ſent Cranburne with Gunn from the Cock-Pit to ſee for Hackney-Horſes, and that Cranburne came to him to the Sun Tavern, and there they had ſome Diſcourſe about executing the Deſign the next Day; and being ask'd who was by, when he communicated the Deſign to Cranburne, and particularly, Whether Mr Gunn was by? He ſays he came in afterwards, but was not there at the Time of the Commnnication about the Deſign. Now we ſhall prove that Gunn came in with the Priſoner, and was with him all the Time, and there was no ſuch Diſcourſe happen'd.

Sir B. Shower. Call Geoffry Gunn, and Mary Gerrard. [They appeared.] Your Lordſhip will obſerve, what Captain Portter ſwore, That he went in to the Room to Cranburne, and Gunn was not there: Now, if we falſifie him in that Particular, we ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhip how far he is to be believed in the reſt.

Mr At. Gen. Pray, Sir Bartholomew, ask your Witneſſes what you will, but make no Deſcants upon their Evidence till you have heard them.

Then the two Witneſſes were ſworn.

L. C. J. Well look ye, you are both upon your Oaths, Conſider what you ſay, ſpeak the Truth, and tell all that you know, and nothing but the Truth. Which do you begin with?

Mr Phipps. Jeffery Gunn: Pray, Mr Gun, did you go to the Sun Tavern at any Time with Mr Cranburne?

Gunn. Yes, I did.

Mr Phipps. What Day of the Month was it?

Gunn. I cannot poſitively tell the Day, it was of a Friday.

Sir B. Shower. Was it of a Friday, in February, or January?

Gunn. It was in February.

Mr Phipps. Was it before the Plot broke out?

Gunn. Yes, It was.

Mr Phipps. How long was it before the Plot broke out?

Gunn. I cannot tell that, truly.

Mr Phipps. Whence did you go?

Gunn. I was at the Cock-Pit, and I went from thence to the Sun Tavern.

Sir B. Shower. Who did you meet there?

Gunn. I ſaw Captain Porter there.

Sir B. Shower. What Room were you in?

Gunn. We went into a Room next the Street.

Sir B. Shower. Who was there with you?

Gunn. There was Mr Cranburne, and I, and Mr Keyes.

Sir B. Shower. How long was it before Mr Porter came in to you?

Gunn. He came in about Half a Quarter of an Hour after I was there.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there from the Beginning till Mr Cranburne went away.

Gunn. Mr Cranburne, and I, went from the Cock-Pit together.

Sir B. Shower. How long did you ſtay there?

Gunn. I was there about an Hour and a half.

Sir B. Shower. Were you out of the Room at all in that Time?

Gunn. Yes, I was out of the Room once.

Sir B. Shower. How long were you out of the Room?

Gunn. I went Home to my Lodging.

Sir B. Shower. Were you ever with Mr Cranburne at the Sun Tavern at any Time beſides this?

Gunn. Never in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Who did you leave with him when you went out?

Gunn.

Gunn. Capt. Porter, and Mr Keyes, as I remember.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there before Captain Porter came to him?

Gunn. I was with Mr Cranburne, and Captain Porter came in about a Quarter of an Hour after, we came from the Cock-Pit together.

Sir B. Shower. Pray recollect your ſelf, and tell us upon your Oath, were you there when Capt. Porter came in?

Gunn. Yes, I think I was there when Capt. Porter came in.

Sir B. Shower. Did you go and leave him there?

Gunn. We went all out together. I was there about an Hour and half.

L. C. J. Nay, but you ſaid you were abſent ſome Time.

Gunn. I went Home, and came back again.

Sir B. Shower. When you went Home, did you leave Mr Cranburne behind you?

Gunn. Yes, I think ſo.

Mr Phipps. Did you leave Captain Porter with him?

Gunn. I think Cap. Porter was with him then.

Mr Phipps. But upon your Oath, was you in Company with Mr Cranburne at the Sun Tavern, when Capt. Porter came firſt in?

Gunn. Captain Porter went in and out ſeveral Times.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee Capt. Porter before you went to your own Houſe?

Gunn. Yes ſure.

Mr Phipps. Then it cannot be true what Mr Porter ſays, that Gunn did not come in till afterwards.

Mr At. Gen. Now Mr Gunn I would ask you a Queſtion or two firſt, Were you there all the while that Mr Cranburne was there, or did you go Home?

Gunn. I went Home.

Mr At. Gen. Did you come back again?

Gunn. Yes, I came Home and eat ſome Victuals.

Mr Att. Gen. How long were you abſent?

Gunn. I came back in half a quarter of an Hour.

Mr Att. Gen. How far is it to your Houſe?

Gunn. 'Tis not above 100 Yards.

Sir B. Shower. Did Mr Porter come in to you before you went Home, when you firſt came in with Cranburne?

Gunn. He came in after we were in the Room.

Mr Phipps. Capt. Porter ſaid, when he came into the Room Gunn was not there.

L. C. J. He did not ſay poſitively, but as he remember'd; now I would ask you a Queſtion or two.

Sir B. Shower. Pray my Lord, our Inference from this Evidence is thus; Capt. Porter ſays, that upon Friday the 21ſt of February he was with Cranburne at the Sun Tavern, and out of one Room into another he came to Mr Cranburne, and talk'd with him of this Deſign, and after that Gunn came in to the Room, after the Communication was over: Now this Man ſwears he went from the Cock-Pit with Mr Cranburne, he was with him in the Room at firſt when Capt. Porter came in; ſome Time afterwards he went to his own Houſe, and left Captain Porter with Mr Cranburne, and came back again, and they came away together: Now we ſay, theſe two are inconſiſtent; for Capt. Porter ſwears that Gunn was not there till after the Communication was over.

L. C. J. As he remembers.

Mr Phipps. Nay, I think he was poſitive he came in afterwards.

L. C. J. As I remember he was not poſitive, but call Capt. Porter again.

Mr Phipps. When you came back from your Houſe, who were in the Room?

Gunn. The ſame Company as I left, as far as I remember.

Mr Mountague. Was Capt. Porter in the Room when you came back?

Gun. Indeed I can't directly tell, I believe he was.

L. C. J. Pray obſerve what your Witneſs ſays: He ſays, Capt. Porter came in and out, and was there ſeveral Times before he went away.

Gunn. Yes, my Lord, he was ſo.

L. C. J. And you were abſent ſome Time, but were you there ſome Time before Porter came in?

Gunn. Yes, I believe I was.

Then Capt. Porter came in.

Mr Att. Gen. Look ye, Capt. Porter, you ſee that Man there?

Capt. Porter. Yes.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of what you know of that Man's coming in to you at the Sun Tavern.

Capt. Porter. I came ſeveral Times out of Sir George Barclay's Room into theirs, and to the beſt of my Remembrance, Mr Cranburne was there before Gunn came in.

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember whether the firſt Time that you went out of Sir George Barclay's Room to ſpeak with Mr Cranburne, Mr Gunn was there?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Remembrance he was not; to the beſt of my Remembrance, Mr Gunn, I ſaw Mr Cranburne in the Room before you was there.

Sir B. Shower. Did not you order Gunn to come with him to the Sun Tavern?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, I did.

Sir B. Shower. Can't you tell whether they came together?

Capt. Porter. I was not in the Room when they came in firſt, but to the beſt of my Remembrance he was not there when I came in the firſt Time.

L. C. J. Now, Gunn, you hear what Capt. Porter ſays, before you went away to your own Houſe did Mr Porter come into the Room to you?

Gun. Indeed my Lord I am not poſitive, I think he did.

Mr Att. Gen. Neither of them is poſitive, and it is a Circumſtance not very material; for it ſeems he was abſent, and then the Diſcourſe might be.

L. C. J. No, it is not material, but you ſee upon a ſtrict Examination what it comes to?

Sir B. Shower. They are agreed upon it I perceive, to be poſitive on neither Side.

Mr Phipps. Mr Cranburne, pray ask Mrs Gerrard what you have a mind.

Cranburn. Pray what do you know of Capt. Porter's going out in Diſguiſe, and wearing falſe Hair and Vizards, and going upon the Highway, and ſuch things?

Gerrard. I know not what Mr. Cranburn means:

(at which the People laugh'd.)

Sir B. Shower. It is no laughing Matter, when a Man is upon his Life.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. No, no, let him have fair Play; Anſwer the Queſtion.

Cranburne. Do you know any thing of your Maſter's going abroad in Diſguiſes?

Gerrard. I do not know any thing of my Maſter's going upon the High-way.

L. C. J. Did he go out with Vizards, or any ſuch Things?

Gerrard. I never ſaw him wear a Vizard or falſe Beard in my Life, but he had once a Patch on when he was forced to keep out of the way, upon the Account of the Dog Tavern Buſineſs in Drury-lane.

Mr. Phipps. See if Mr. Edward Bouchier is here. (He was call'd, but did not appear.)

Sir B. Shower. Call Mrs Burton, (which was done; but ſhe did not appear.)

Mr. Phipps. Is William Hardyman here? (He was call'd, but did not appear.)

Sir B. Shower. Then call Simon Dawſon, and we have done. (which was done.)

Cryer. They are all call'd, but they do not appear.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Directions upon the Evidence that has been given, as to the Credibility of theſe Witneſſes, and whether what Capt. Porter ſays, and what Gunn ſays be conſiſtent; ſo that you can be ſatisfied there are Two Lawful Credible Witneſſes to prove any Overt Act.

L. C. J. Yes ſure, but I would have you debate it if you believe there be any thing in it.

Sir B. Shower. I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Directions.

L. C. J. The Queſtion is, Whether I ſhould give any Directions at all or no, or whether there be any Occaſion for it?

Cranburne. I declare this openly before this Honourable Court, and ſo many Noblemen as are here, that Mr. Porter never made me acquainted with this Deſign, till what he ſwore here.

L. C. J. I can't tell, 'tis ſworn by Two Witneſſes.

Cranburne. I do declare, tho' Capt. Pendergraſs ſays he does not remember it, that Capt. Porter did declare in Spring Garden the 22d, when he came out of the Blue Poſts by the Rails, if this Deſign miſcarry, ſays he, Mr. Charnock may thank himſelf, for I never communicated this Secret to any of my Friends.

L. C. J. But hark ye, do you conſider what you ſay, if this Deſign miſcarry: Pray what Deſign was that?

Cranburne. He never named any thing but the Deſign, he did not ſay what it was.

L. C. J. But why were you imploy'd to carry a Liſt from Capt. Porter to Mr. Charnock, and to bring a Liſt back again from him to Capt. Porter?

Cranburne. I did carry the Note, but there was nothing mention'd what the Liſt was for.

L. C. J. Then you were there on Friday the 14th, and there the Deſign was propoſed to Aſſaſſinate the King the next Day, and you engag'd in it.

Cranburne. Not a Word of it true, my Lord.

L. C. J. Aye but Mr. Pendergraſs ſwears it, and that you were hearty in the Matter, and hop'd you ſhould do your Buſineſs the next Day.

Cranburne. I can't help it if he does ſwear it.

L. C. J. Then you were at the Meeting at the Sun Tavern the 21ſt.

Cranburne. My Lord you hear what Gunn ſays.

L. C. J. As to that they are neither of them poſitive, but you did there promiſe and undertake the Matter, that Capt. Porter is poſitive in, that it was agreed by you all to do it the 22d; and Mr. Pendergraſs ſays, when you were diſappointed the 15th, you all agreed to purſue the ſame Deſign the Saturday following.

Cranburne. My Lord, I did not dine at the Blue Poſts that Day.

L. C. J. But you were there; I think indeed Mr. Pendergraſs ſays you came in after Dinner, and had ſome Steakes.

Cranburne. I never heard directly nor indirectly of this Deſign, till what I heard them ſwear here.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, you do underſtand for what Crime this Priſoner at the Bar is Indicted: It is for High-Treaſon, in deſigning and compaſſing the Death of the King, which was to be effected by an Aſſaſſination, in the moſt barbarous and wicked Manner, that any Attempt of that Nature can poſſibly be made, being to ſurpriſe the King, and murder him in his Coach.

The Queſtion Gentlemen is, whether this Priſoner be Guilty of this Crime or no; there have been three Witneſſes produced that have given Evidence againſt him, Capt. Porter, Mr. De la Rue, and Mr. Pendergraſs; and they do all tell you, that there was ſuch a Deſign on foot to Aſſaſſinate the King, as he came from Hunting at Richmond, after he came on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green. There were diverſe Perſons ingaged in this Deſign, which Sir George Barclay was come from France to promote and manage: Capt. Porter, as it does appear upon his Evidence, was a Perſon that was principally ingag'd, and at that Time was hearty in the Proſecution of it.

As to Mr. Cranburne, Capt. Porter tells you he was a Man that he had had a long Acquaintance with, and had imployed him and deſigned to imploy him as an Officer under him, in caſe a Revolution happened, which it ſeems about that Time, and ſome time before it, was expected. Captain Porter was to have been a Captain, and I think he deſigned to promote Cranburne to be his Quartermaſter; and he ſent him to buy Arms; and Preparations were made for that Buſineſs; but that is not the Thing that we are now upon, the Matter that now properly falls under our Conſideration, is this; The coming over of Sir George Barclay, the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February laſt, upon which, as it ſeems, Mr. Porter was Engaged; and having an Intereſt in this Cranburne, and there being Horſes to be furniſh'd to attack the King and his Guards about Turnham-Green, this Man, Cranburne, was a Perſon that was ingaged to be one of the Horſe-men that were to make the Attack, and he tells you that he did imploy him to provide Horſes and Swords, and to prepare the Piſtols, and that he did Ingage in it, and particularly that the Deſign was to be executed on Saturday the 15th of February, and that he was then ready to go with Capt. Porter; but on that Saturday the King did not go abroad, whereby the Deſign was diſappointed for that Time: Afterwards there was a Meeting at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, where he met with Sir George Barclay and others of them, and there comes to that Tavern Mr. Cranburne and others, and they were in another Room, and Capt. Porter ſays he came to them, and did diſcourſe about purſuing the Deſign the very next Day, which was agreed, and Cranburne was ready to go the next Day.

Then he tells you farther, that the next Day being Saturday the 22d, the ſecond Time that this Aſſaſſination was to have been Executed, upon the Deſire of Mr. Charnock, who was a Perſon alſo that was ingag'd in this Deſign, Capt. Porter writes a Liſt of the Men he could bring, and ſent it by Cranburne to Charnock; Cranburne carries the Liſt to Mr. Charnock, and brings it back again with an Addition of the Names of Mr. Charnock's Men underneath.

Mr. De la Rue is called, and he ſwears to that very Circumſtance, that Mr. Cranburne was ſent by Capt. Porter with a Liſt to Mr. Charnock, and brought it back again from Mr. Charnock, with an Addition of other Names.

Then Mr. Pendergraſs tells you, that he was with this Mr. Cranburne, the Priſoner at the Bar, the fourteenth of February, and there was a Diſcourſe of going in purſuance of this Deſign the next Day, and the Priſoner agreed to it, which he is poſitive in: He tells you, that when they were diſappointed the 15th, being at the Blue-Poſts, they then agreed to purſue it the next Saturday; Cranburne was one of them that agreed.

Capt. Porter and De la Rue informs you that Healths were drank to the late King, and the late Queen, and the Prince of Wales, as they called him, and then at length, as the concluding Health, Capt. Porter, or ſome of them in the Company, having an Orange in his Hand, ſqueez'd it, and drank a Health to the ſqueezing of the Rotten Orange, which was pledged by all, and particularly by Mr. Cranburne, as is prov'd by both Capt. Porter and De la Rue.

So that now Gentlemen I muſt leave it to you, whether this is not Evidence ſufficient to prove this Man Guilty of the Treaſon whereof he is Indicted, that is, of deſigning and intending the Aſſaſſination of the King, and being engaged as a Party to execute this Deſign, whenever there was an Opportunity.

The Council inſiſt upon it, on the Behalf of the Priſoner, that what Capt. Porter ſays is not Evidence: In the firſt Place they urge that he is not a Man of Credit, for they have mentioned that he uſed to be diſguiſed, and wear a Vizard Mask, and go abroad under odd Circumſtances, and therefore his Reputation they hope is not good enough to make him a credible Witneſs againſt the Priſoner: Now the Priſoner's Witneſs being produced, ſays he never knew him go in Diſguiſe, or wear a Vizard Mask, but once he wore a Patch, becauſe he was under ſome ill Circumſtances about a Riot in Drury lane; every Body underſtands what the Meaning of that was, his drinking of Healths at a riotous Aſſembly, upon the 11th of June, and he being under ſome Proſecution for that, occaſioned him to wear that Diſguiſe, but it was not done to injure any Perſon, or do any Miſchief.

But then ſay they he is miſtaken in his Evidence, of the Meeting at the Sun Tavern the 21ſt of February, the Day before the laſt, that this Deſign was to have been executed, for whereas he ſays, that Gunn was not there when he came to them, yet Gunn was in the Company at that Time, and whereas he ſwears poſitively that they diſcourſed of going upon the ſame Deſign to Aſſaſſinate the King the next Day, as was agreed the Saturday before; Gunn heard no ſuch Diſcourſe. Gunn is called, and he tells you he did come to the Sun Tavern at that Time, with Cranburne and Capt. Porter, he came into the Room, and he heard no ſuch Diſcourſe. They did open it indeed that Gunn had been there all the while, and if ſo, then if there had been ſuch a Diſcourſe he muſt have heard it. Gunn has been Examined, and does tell you he was not there all the while, but went out and was abſent for ſome Time, about half a quarter of an Hour.

They have made a Queſtion whether Capt. Porter came in when Gunn was there, he ſays truly he thinks that Capt. Porter did come into the Room while he was there, before he went out, but he cannot tell certainly, he was there ſome Time, while he was there. Then Capt. Porter was called again, and Capt. Porter does ſay he knows Gunn was there, but whether he was there at that Time he came in, he cannot ſay poſitively; but Gunn ſays Capt. Porter was going in and out ſeveral times, as Porter ſays himſelf; and Gunn was abſent for ſome part of the Time. So that I cannot ſee any ſort of Contradiction between the Evidence that Porter gives, and the Evidence that Gunn gives; the one is uncertain, and ſo is the other as to that Circumſtance.

But Gentlemen, they would infer, that if there was any ſuch Diſcourſe while Gunn was there, it muſt be of neceſſity that Gunn muſt have heard it; but it is not neceſſary the Diſcourſe ſhould be when Gunn was there: Capt. Porter ſwears poſitively that there was ſuch a Diſcourſe of going the next Day to purſue the Deſign, and he ſays he thinks Gunn was not preſent at that Time when the Diſcourſe was, and Gunn ſays he was abſent ſome part of the Time.

And ſo I muſt leave it to you; upon the whole Matter, if Mr. Cranburne the Priſoner at the Bar did conſent and agree to act in this bloody and wicked Deſign, then you are to find him Guilty; if you are not ſatisfied of that upon the Evidence you have heard, or you think there is any Inconſiſtency, or Incoherence in the Teſtimony on the one ſide, and the other; and that there is good Reaſon to disbelieve the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, then you are to acquit him. You have heard your Evidence, and you had beſt conſider of it.

Cl. of the Crown. Who keeps the Jury?

Cryer. There is an Officer Sworn.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and about a Quarter of an Hour after Returned.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names, John Kaine.

Mr. Kaine. Here. (And ſo of the reſt.)

Cl. of Ar. are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman.

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Charles Cranburne is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Kaine. My Lord, the Jury humbly deſires they may be diſcharged from their Attendance to morrow.

L. C. J. We cannot do it, unleſs the Jury be full without them; if you come early, we ſhall diſpatch you preſently.

Then the Priſoner was taken from the Bar, and the Court adjourned till Seven a Clock the next Morning.

Die Mercurii Viceſimo Secundo Die Aprilis, Anno Domini 1696. Annoq; Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii Octavo.

THIS Day the Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer holden for the County of Middleſex, adjourned over to Seven this Morning, met, and the Court was reſum'd by Proclamation in uſual Form.

Clerk of the Arraignments. Keeper of Newgate, ſet Robert Lowick to the Bar, (which was done.) You the Priſoner at the Bar, Robert Lowick, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them, as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Mr Mompeſſon. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to favour me with one Word for the Priſoner at the Bar, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with any Thing that was urged by the Gentlemen that were of Council Yeſterday, but I ſhall rely upon ſomething that has not yet been ſpoken to. My Lord, they have not laid any Time or Place where the Conſent or Agreement was, for the forty Men that were to ſet upon the King and his Guards: There is a Time laid before where they met and diſcourſed of the Ways and Means how to aſſaſſinate and kill the King; but when it comes to the Aſſenſerunt, Conſenſerunt & Aggreaverunt, with ſubmiſſion, this being another Act, there ought to be another Time and Place laid, and for That I ſhall cite your Lordſhip two or three Caſes; for Men may meet and propoſe, and diſcourſe, and conſult of ſuch Things, though they be very ill Things, and yet that may not be Treaſon. It's the Agreement that is the Treaſon, and ſo 'twas held in Captain Blague's Caſe about taking the Tower. They may meet at one Time and Place, and at another Time and Place they may agree, in Dyer, 68 B. and 69 Pl. 28. A Man was indicted for Murder, That he at ſuch a Place in and upon the Perſon that was murdered inſultum fecit, & ipſum, the Perſon that was murdered, cum quodam cultello, of ſuch a Price, percuſſit; and he does not ſhew the Place where he ſtruck him, nor had the Indictment the Words, ad tunc & ibidem, and therefore the Court held it void: So it is likewiſe ruled in Goodrick's Caſe, Hell. 35 & 119. and therefore in Indictments for Murder, ſince they generally ſet forth not only the Time and Place of the Aſſault, but likewiſe of the Blow; ſo likewiſe in Things of a more inferior Nature, as Reſcues returned by the Sheriff, that the Capias was ſerved, but does not ſhew where the Reſcue was; or though he ſhews where the Arreſt was, and an & coupled the Reſcue to it, yet it was adjudged an ill Return, Dyer 69. Pl. 29. 10 Edw. 4. 15 Fitz. Ret. Vic. 32 Bro. Ret. Det. Bre. 97. and Error 194. Palm. 563. and in Noy 114. there are theſe Words, Note, It was moved in diſcharge of a Reſcue, the Return was, that they, viz. A. B. aforeſaid, the Bailiffs, ad tunc & ibidem vulneraverunt, &c. And the aforeſaid George, &c. Reſcuſerunt without ad tunc & ibidem, referred only to the Vulneraverunt, and not to the Reſcuſerunt, and therefore the Return was adjudged inſufficient; for my Lord, although in Conveyances, a Clauſe or Word in the Beginning or End may refer to the Whole, yet, in Indictments, every Sentence muſt be certain, plain, and expreſs, and have its own Time and Place: Therefore, in Noy's Rep. 122. Raymond was indicted for ſtopping a Croſs-Way leading from a certain Ville called Stoake, into a Ville called Melton, in the County of Dorſet, and the Indictment was quaſh'd, becauſe in the County of Dorſet ſhall refer only to Melton, and not to both: So an Indictment of forceable Entry into a Meſſuage exiſtens Liberum Tenementum of J. S. is not good for Want of the Words ad tunc, though the Participle exiſtens does ſtrongly imply that it was his Houſe at that Time, 3 Cro. 754. Het. 73 Noy 131. Palm. 426. Bridg. 68. 2 Cro. 214, & 610. Sid. 102. Lat. 109, &c. And my Lord Coke tells us in Calvin's Caſe 5. B. that Indictments of Treaſon, of all others, are the moſt curiouſly and certainly indited and penn'd; and all thoſe that I have ſeen and obſerved, have contained more Certainty than the Indictment now before your Lordſhip: In Reginald Tucker's Caſe, the Indictment was, That he and Thomas Place apud Bridgwater, in Com. Somerſett. prædict. Compaſſaverunt, to kill and depoſe the King, &c. and to bring their treaſonable Purpoſes to effect, they the ſaid Reginald Tucker and Thomas Place the ſame Day and Year, at Bridgwater aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, againſt the King, with a great Multitude of People, array'd in a warlike Manner, viz. with Swords, &c. ſe ipſos illicite & proditorie inſimul ad tunc & ibidem congregaverunt & aſſemblaverunt & guerram publicam contra dictum Dominum Regem apud Bridgewater prædict. in Com. prædict. dicto viceſimo Die Junii Anno primo ſupradicto proditorie paraverunt ordinaverunt & levaverunt. So in the Indictment of Gate, as it is ſet forth at large in a Plea in Bar of Dower, brought by his Wife, he with Force and Arms, apud Villam de Ware, Ware, &c. assembled with a great many Persons, & Bellum crudele contra dictam Dominam Reginam apud Ware, prædict. ad tunc falso & proditorie publicavit & levavit, ac insuper ad tunc & ibidem falso & proditorie, proclaimed the Duke of Northumberland, to be Lieutenant-General of their Forces; & etiam falso & proditorie apud Ware prædict. ad tunc, proclaim'd the Lady Jane Dudley Queen. This is in Bendlowe's Reports, publish'd by Serjeant Rowe, fol. 55. placito 91. So in the Earl of Leicester's Case, Plowd. Com. 385. the Indictment is laid much after the same Manner, and many other Indictments, which at present I am unwilling to trouble your Lordship with; and this being one of a new Form and of the first Impression, I hope your Lordship will hold it insufficient. And, my Lord, when they go farther, and say, Et quilibet eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum, there is no Place or Time alledged where that was done, which of Necessity should be mentioned: For it is a constant Rule in our Books, that what is issuable, ought to have a Place where it may be tryed. Now, this is issuable; and the most material Thing in the Indictment is, for compassing the King's Death. The Overt-Acts are, That Christopher Knightley the Prisoner, and two others, did consult to kill the King; and afterwards did agree how to do it, viz. by forty Horsemen Quorum, these shou'd be four, and every one of them did agree to be one; then comes the other Overt-Act of providing Arms for them. Now suppose they should not prove the last, viz. the providing Arms; then, my Lord, they must resort to one of the other Overt-Acts, that these four did consult and agree to kill the King; or that these four did agree, the Manner how to do it, as is laid in the Indictment; and it is plain they must fail of Proof of either of these; for by the not prosecuting any one of the Name of Christopher Knightley, but preferring a new Indictment against one Alexander Knightley, it appears that Christopher Knightley was not there; and the Proving these three others making a Consult and Agreement, is not a Proof of the same Overt-Act, that is laid in the Indictment, as it ought to be by the late Act; unless they can prove that a Consult of Three is a Consult of Four: And if it be answered, that it is alledged, that Quilibet eorum super se suscepit, then will that come to be issuable, and the most material Part of the Indictment; and consequently a Place ought to have been laid where it should be tryed; this, my Lord, is a distinct Sentence of it self, it is in a Parenthesis, and though you take it away, the Sense of what remains is perfect and intire; and consequently this Sentence is or should be intire of it self, and therefore ought certainly to be express'd. Besides, if your Lordship pleases, it is not positively laid, what these Persons severally undertook to be, there is indeed mention made before of forty Horsemen, agreed upon to set upon the King, then comes the Parenthesis, Quorum iidem Christophorus Knightley, Robertus Lowick, Ambrosius Rookwood & Carolus Cranburne forent Quatuor, & quilibet eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum: It is perhaps express'd fully enough by the Word Quorum, that it was agreed these shou'd be four of the forty Horsemen; but there wants the Repetition of the Word Quorum, to express what they severally engaged to be; and the Word & cannot join and connect the Sentences: For forent and suscepit differ not only in Number but also in Mood and Tense, and the Sense is not necessarily coherent; for it might be true, that the Majority of the Company might agree, these shou'd be four, and yet they themselves might not severally ingage therein, and one or some of them might undertake it, and yet the Company not agree to it; and it cannot be mended by Intendment. There was Vaux's Case, in the 4 Rep. 44. he was indicted for Murder, for persuading a Man to take Cantharides; it was laid, That he persuadebat eundem Nicholaum recipere & bibere quendam potum mixtum cum quodam veneno vocat. Cantharides; and the Indictment says, Quod prædictus Nicholaus nesciens prædictum potum cum Veneno prædicto fore intoxicatum, sed fidem adhibens Dictæ persuasioni Willielmi Recepit & Bibit; but does not say, venenum prædictum, but yet it adds, Per quod prædictus Nicholaus immediate post receptionem veneni prædicti, languish'd and dy'd; here, one would think, was a sufficient Implication, that he took and drank the Poison; but it was rul'd, that none of these Words were sufficient to maintain the Indictment; for the Matter of the Indictment ought to be plain, express, and certain, and shall not be maintained by Argument or Implication, and therefore for Want of those Words the Indictment was held insufficient, and the Man again indicted for that Offence, and there seems much more Incertainty in this Indictment, and therefore I humbly pray your Lordship that it may be quash'd.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think the Objection is fully put, and therefore we desire to have their Answer to it.

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr Att. Gen. We think, my Lord, this Objection will receive a very plain Answer. The Indictment sets forth, That at such a Place the Prisoner at the Bar did imagine and compass the Death of the King: There is a particular Place where the Imagining was, and that they, to accomplish that Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, did, among others postea eisdem die & anno apud parochiam prædictam, meet and consult, &c. so there's the same Place set forth again, wherein they did meet and consult of the Ways and Means, and Time and Place, when, where, and how to assassinate the King: And immediately it follows, & consenserunt & agreaverunt, &c. that forty Men, whereof they were to be four, and every one of them undertook to be one, should do so and so. Now, my Lord, say they, It is not said that the Agreement that there should be forty Men to do it, was at the same Time and Place where they did meet and consult about the Ways and Means: But, my Lord, with submission, it is very plain, that the Agreement for forty Men, and the particular Agreement for them to be of the Number, is but the Effect of the Consultation that is mention'd just before: For it is said, they consulted how they shou'd do it, and they agreed to do it in this Manner; the particular Manner is set forth immediately after that, it is said they did consult of the Manner; so that, my Lord, it is part of the former Sentence; a Particularizing of what they did agree upon at that Consultation; but it is no distinct Overt-Act: If it had been a distinct Overt-Act, then the Cases that have been cited by the Council, do shew, that there should be a particular Time and Place mentioned for every Overt-Act; but this is only a Part of that Overt-Act that was mentioned generally before: This tells you particularly what the Means were they did agree upon, and the Sentence is not compleat till you have gone over this; so that, my Lord, with subſubmiſſion, it had been very improper when they agreed at ſuch a Time and Place, of the Means and Ways how it ſhou'd be effected, then to ſet forth that it was at the ſame Time and Place where they did conſult of the Ways and Means, that cannot be proper; for it is not laid at firſt, that there was any particular Way propoſed, but only in general, they conſulted of the Ways and Means; therefore, my Lord, all this that Mr. Mompeſſon has ſaid, will not be pertinent to this Caſe, it is impoſſible to have been otherwiſe; it is but a Part of the Sentence; and it is not compleat till you have gone over the ſeveral Particulars: As to the Caſe of a Reſcus, that is, the Offence upon which the Matter is to be grounded; the Verberavit and Vulneravit are not the Reſcueing; but where there is not one Sentence compleat, till you come to the End of theſe Words, there it muſt be all taken together; ſo it is here, they conſulted of the Way, and agreed this to be the Way, which they ſet forth in particular: It is join'd to the former Part of the Sentence, and the Whole is not compleat without it.

Mr Sol. Gen. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, it cannot be otherwiſe, nor can they make it Senſe otherwiſe.

Sir John Holt. L. C. J. They ſay you might, and ſhould have put in, ad tunc & ibidem.

Mr Sol. Gen. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, I ſay it cannot be repeated again: Indeed if you wou'd make it like the Caſe, as Mr. Mompeſſon wou'd have it, that forty Men did agree to it, and forty Men did it, it were neceſſary to name Time and Place, as it is in the Caſe of Murder: That he did agree to murder him, and afterwards knock'd him on the Head, there you ſhould lay Time and Place where he agreed, and where he did the Act, for there is an Act done; but in this Caſe there is no Act done, but only an Agreement that forty ſhou'd do it, whereof theſe four were to be Part of the Number. Now, they cry, you do not ſay what theſe four were to be for. Yes, we do: The Forty were to do ſuch an Act, and theſe were to be four of that forty, and every one of them undertook to be one, ſo that it cannot be expreſs'd otherwiſe then it is; for what they ſay of the Indictment's being not in the ſame Form that other Indictments are, that will be no Argument at all; for it does not follow, that there muſt be one expreſs'd Form of Indictment; of Right there are divers Forms of Indictments, and all of them good, becauſe Indictments are to be framed according to the particular Caſe, and they cannot put me an Inſtance of ſuch a particular Caſe as this. As to that of the Miſtake of the Name of Knightley, that unqueſtionably can be no Objection at all: For how does it appear to the Court, that this is againſt the ſame Perſon that was before indicted by the Name of Chriſtopher? there may be another Chriſtopher for ought they know: But I will ſuppoſe, that the Conſult was proved not, as it is laid, that they were to be four; but only that they were to be three of them, it would be well enough againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, if he be proved to be one.

Mr Conyers. Firſt, we have here laid a Time and Place for the Treaſon alledged in the Indictment, and alſo for the two Overt-Acts, how, when, and where it was to be done, and the Providing of Arms for it; and for this Particular of the forty Men, that they would have us put the ad tunc & ibidem to that, is but Part of the Overt-Act, which was before alledged; for the firſt Overt-Act mentioned, is the Meeting and Conſulting, and there we lay both Time and Place; that on ſuch a Day, and at ſuth a Place, they did meet and conſult of the Way and Manner how to do ſuch an Act: And then we continue on the Sentence, by particularizing how it was to be effected; that they did agree there ſhou'd be forty Horſemen to do it, whereof they were to be four: This is but a Part of the Overt-Act, which is the Conſulting and Agreeing upon the Ways and Means; this particular Means agreed upon, being but the Reſult and Effect of the Conſultation before: So that we conceive there is no Want of Time or Place, upon which to take Iſſue in this Caſe.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I think, with ſubmiſſion, there is nothing in their Objection, and I take it to have received a full Anſwer already: Yet I would ask one Thing of the Gentlemen of the other Side, had the Sentence run without the Words de iis modis & mediis, &c. which follow after the Word conſultavit, and before the Words & aggreavit; in this Manner, That they did then and there traiterouſly treat, propoſe, conſult, and agree, that forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, with Guns, and ſo forth. If then there had been any Colour to think it neceſſary, that it ſhould be laid in this Manner, That they did then and there traiterouſly treat, and then and there traiterouſly propoſe, and then and there traiterouſly conſult, and did then and there traiterouſly agree: And if not, then I wou'd deſire them to tell me why then and there is more neceſſary to one Verb did agree, than it is to all the Reſt, in Senſe and common Speaking. The only Uſe of a Conjunction copulative, is to derive the Force of ſome Words, in a Sentence foregoing, down to a Sentence following, to avoid Repetition: And here, though after the Conſultation be put many Words that relate to that Matter, by Way of Parentheſis; yet the ad tunc & ibidem ſtill does refer to all the Verbs following, being joined by the Conjunction copulative; it does not vary the Caſe at all, the Putting in that Parentheſis; it is notwithſtanding but as one Sentence: And the Suppoſing that the Parentheſis ſtood out, makes it very plain, there can be no Colour to ſay there wanted a Repetition of the ad tunc & ibidem to every Verb.

Sir B. Shower. With ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip's Judgment, there is no Anſwer made to this Objection. I do agree, if there had been ſeveral Verbs, and no other Words had intervened, that an & wou'd have coupled all together, and you need not have repeated ad tunc & ibidem to every one: But here is a Fact after the Verbs, that makes one compleat intire Sentence; and if this of the forty Men were left out, it had been a good Sentence, that they did propoſe and treat how, where, and when; that's a Sentence of it ſelf, the Conſulting and the Treating of the Ways and Means: But then they ſay, and they did agree and aſſent that forty ſhould do it: Now there is no Neceſſity for the Interpreting of theſe Words, That they ſhou'd conſult and agree at the ſame Place and Time; there is no Neceſſity to conjoin this Agreement for the forty Men with the Conſultation; they might propoſe and conſult at one Time and Place, and not agree, and afterwards agree at another Time and Place: It is not a Specification, or, as they call it, a ſpecifick Account of the Conſultation, nor a neceſſary Effect of it, ſo as to make it neceſſary to join them together; they might meet and conſult at one Time and Place,

Place, and at another Time and Place they might agree that forty ſhould do it; and therefore when you ſay at one Time and Place they did conſult and propoſe, and afterwards they did agree; it is not neceſſarily imply'd, that it muſt be at the ſame Time and Place; and when it is not neceſſarily imply'd, we think it neceſſary in Indictments, for Certainty-ſake, to have ad tunc & ibidem inſerted again.

Mr Mompeſſon. My Lord, Mr Sollicitor ſays, That as to other Precedents, that does not make it neceſſary that this ſhou'd be like them; and that it is no Argument that it ought to be ſo here. My Lord Coke, in Calvin's Caſe, tells us, That by Precedents the Law is known, and that Indictments of Treaſon are of all Things the moſt curiouſly penn'd; and it is common to infer the Law is ſo, becauſe uſually it is ſo in the Precedents of Indictments. Mr. Sollicitor ſays likewiſe, That there may be a Chriſtopher Knightley beſides an Alexander; but I cannot take that for an Anſwer to the Exception I urge, which is the Want of ad tunc & ibidem at the Quorum, and the Quilibet; for the Quilibet may come to be in Queſtion as the moſt material Part of the Indictment, becauſe the Agreement of the Four upon the Meeting of the Four is alledg'd as an Overt-Act. Now, with ſubmiſſion, they muſt prove the Aſſembly of the whole Four, or they do not prove the Overt-Act expreſsly laid: Then as to the Quilibet ſuſcepit, which is the moſt material Part, it has no Time nor Place.

Mr. Att. Gen. No ſure: We do not need to prove all four, for it is a diſtinct Offence in each; and if any one undertook, it is well enough againſt him: and for the Time and Place, we tell you, it is Part of the former Sentence, and makes but an intire One.

Mr Mompeſſon. As for the Reſidue of the Verbs, if they had been omitted, it had been good Senſe; but this is a perfect intire Sentence of itſelf, when it tells you what they conſulted and treated of, as in the Caſe of the Reſcue that I put; if it had ſtop'd there, it had been a good Sentence without the Vulneraverunt.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Reſcous is the Offence in that Caſe, the othere is diſtinct: But here, in this Caſe, nothing can be plainer than that all is one Act, as we have laid it, That at ſuch a Time and Place they did conſult and treat of the Ways and Means; but then there is no Agreement mentioned till after we have ſaid they did conſult of the Ways and Means, and did agree that this ſhou'd be the Way: This is certainly one entire Sentence that ſhews what the Agreement was upon the Conſultation as the Reſult of it.

Mr. Cowper. As to what Sir Bartholomew Shower ſays, That we ought to repeat the ad tunc & ibidem, unleſs the Senſe of the Words implies a Neceſſity that the Conſultation and the Agreement ſhould be at one Time and Place. My Lord, there can be nothing in that, for it does not ariſe from the Neceſſity of the Thing one Way or t'other; but we take it as an intire Sentence, and that the whole Matter is ſufficiently connected and laid to one Time and Place, though it might be divided, it muſt be taken, as alledged, to be one intire Fact, or elſe it recurs to the ſame Objection, that ad tunc & ibidem muſt as well be put to every Verb; for 'tis poſſible they might propoſe at one Time and Place, and conſult at another, and debate at another, as well as agree at another: So that nothing is to be argued from the Neceſſity of the Thing more in one Caſe than the other; for one Man might propoſe it in one Place, and the Reſt might then ſhake their Heads at it, and then they might again meet and conſult at another Place, and afterwards agree at a Third: But when it is ſaid then and there they did meet, conſult, and agree, it cannot be underſtood but that the Agreement was at the ſame Time and Place with the Meeting and Conſult.

Sir B. Shower. But this can be no Anſwer that Mr. Cowper gives now, for propoſing, and conſulting, and treating, and debating, are all of the ſame Signification, for one Man's propoſing to another; and the other's propoſing to him, is conſulting, treating, and debating; but now conſulting and agreeing are different Things.

Mr Cowper. So is propoſing and conſulting: One may propoſe, but there muſt be at leaſt Two to conſult: There is that nice Difference between them.

Sir B. Shower. Every One muſt agree for himſelf, and that muſt be certainly laid with Time and Place, let the Propoſal and Conſultation be what it will.

L. C. J. Mr Mompeſſon puts that Caſe in Dyer upon an Indictment of Murder, That on ſuch a Day, and at ſuch a Place, the Party made an Aſſault upon the Perſons ſlain, & percuſſit; but does not ſay, Et ad tunc & ibidem percuſſit, and for not alledging that the Indictment was held nought.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, That is a different Caſe from this, becauſe inſultum fecit, and the percuſſit, are different Crimes; there is a great Difference between an Aſſault and a Stroke: But here it is, That they did propoſe and conſult of the Ways and Means, and agreed upon this particular Way; that is the ſame Thing; it is not an intire Sentence till you come to the End of it, then it is compleat when you ſhew what was the Effect of the Conſultation; what they were agreed upon, and not till then.

Mr Mompeſſon. A Man's holding up his Hand is an Aſſault, but he muſt actually Strike, to be guilty of Murder: So a Man may debate, and yet not agree: It is the Agreement that is the Treaſon.

L. C. J. Read the Indictment.

Mr Mompeſſon. The Conſult is like the Aſſault, and the Agreement is like the Stroke.

L. C. J. Treby. It is a nice Caſe as you wou'd have it, but I think it is very natural as the King's Council put it at firſt; they lay the Conſultation of the Ways and Means how it ſhou'd be done, and then they conclude that thus it ſhall be done: All which makes but one intire Thing.

L. C. J. They ſay they met that Day at St. Paul Covent-Garden, that's in the Beginning, and did conſult how to kill the King; and they conſented and agreed among themſelves, that it ſhou'd be done in this manner: Does not this refer to both Time and Place in the Beginning? It is a continuing on of the ſame Sentence, and makes all but one and the ſame Act; it is the Reſult of the Conſultation at that Time and Place.

Sir B. Shower. But, my Lord, it might be at another Place: They might conſult at one Place, and conclude at another.

Mr Conyers. But it is laid to be at the ſame Place, for no other Place does appear, and it is one continued Sentence.

L. C. J. Treby. You wou'd make the Repetition ſo frequent and reiterated, that it wou'd become abſurd.

Mr Att. Gen. Indeed I do not know what theſe Gentlemen wou'd have.

Sir B. Shower. We wou'd have this Indictment as all others are, the Precedents are as we ſay, and we hope this ſhall purſue 'em, or elſe be quaſht.

L. C. J. Look ye here, Sir Bartholomew Shower; Suppoſe this Part ſhou'd not be right, that will not vitiate the whole Indictment.

Mr Mompeſſon. But your Lordſhip won't ſuffer them to give Evidence of that Part that is vitious.

L. C. J. Yes, yes; it comes within the firſt Words of the Time and Place laid; they may give Evidence of it, becauſe this is but a ſetting forth the Manner agreed upon for the Execution of the Deſign that was before conſulted and treated of; it is comprehended in the former Words; and if they had omitted this out of the Indictment, the Indictment had been never the worſe; there had been a ſufficient Overt-Act alledged to prove the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; for if People at ſuch a Place and Time meet, and propoſe the Way and Means how to effect it, do you think the Indictment wou'd not be good enough without laying the particular Means agreed upon? Certainly it had been well enough if this had been omitted. Do you think they cannot give in Evidence this as a Proof of the Overt-Act? Certainly they may.

Sir B. Shower. The Queſtion will be, my Lord, then upon the whole, Whether the Concluſion of the Indictment, contra legiantiæ ſuæ Debitum, ſhall be taken diſtributively to every Fact, and if ſo, then there ought to be Time and Place alledg'd to every Fact.

L. C. J. Suppoſe you lay ſeveral Overt-Acts, and prove but one, yet he is to be found guilty of the High-Treaſon, which is the Imagination, and Compaſſing the Death of the King, which is the Crime laid in the Indictment; then ſuppoſe this was left out of the Indictment, they might give it in Evidence as a Proof of the Overt-Act, that is well laid for Time and Place; and therefore though it be expreſs'd, and not ſo fully and particularly laid, we cannot quaſh the Indictment for it, becauſe the Indictment would have been good, though that had been omitted.

L. C. J. Treby. That is certainly true, it is no Cauſe for quaſhing the Indictment.

Mr Soll. Gen. The Indictments againſt the Regicides were for Compaſſing the Death of the King, and they gave in Evidence that he was put to Death, though they charg'd in the Indictment only the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King.

L. C. J. Ay ſure, That is an Overt-Act with a Witneſs, the Indictment was not laid for Murdering the King, but for Compaſſing his Death, which is the Treaſon according to the Act of Parliament of 25th, Ed. the 3*d*, and as an Overt-Act they gave the Cutting off his Head in Evidence.

Mr Att. Gen. The Indictment ſays, they compaſs'd and imagined the King's Death, and they agreed to do it in this manner; if this be not all one intire Sentence I know not what is.

L. C. J. As to your Caſe, Mr Mompeſſon, which you quote out of Dyer, it is poſſible a Man may make an Aſſault at one Time, and at another Time make an Aſſault and give a Stroke, but this is all one Act, it does but ſpecify what was generally conſulted of and propoſed.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray, do you think a Man may demur upon a common Action of Battery, where 'tis ſaid firſt, at ſuch a Time and Place, Inſultum fecit & verberavit, vulneravit, becauſe there is not a Place ſet to every Word.

Mr Mompeſſon. Indictments ought to be very curiouſly penn'd, and what is good in an Action will not be good in an Indictment, with Submiſſion.

L. C. J. Treby. But ſuppoſe you ſhow'd it for Cauſe upon ſpecial Demurr.

Mr Mompeſſon. My Lord, I cannot tell what it wou'd amount unto.

L. C. J. You cannot quaſh the Indictment at this Time, that is not poſſible, becauſe the Indictment is good as to the reſt, ſuppoſing this was not ſo well as it might be.

Mr Mompeſſon. Then, my Lord, I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether they ſhall be admitted to give in Evidence this particular Thing.

L. C. J. They may certainly give in Evidence, the Agreement to have Forty Men to kill the King, as a Proof of the Conſultation, Agreement and and Conſent to kill the King; and the Conſenting to have Forty Horſemen is an Evidence of their treating, propoſing and conſulting to kill the King. Then for your Objection of Quilibet ſuſcepit to be one, that is well enough, it is all ſtill but one Sentence.

Sir B. Shower. One of which is it? for they have not laid in the Indictment what it is, whether it be one of the Four, or one of the Forty.

L. C. J. Whether it be one of the Four, or the Forty, is not material, for cannot one be found guilty and the reſt acquitted? the one is not charg'd with the Act of the other, but they are ſeveral Offences, and each muſt anſwer for himſelf. In all Indictments, Offences are ſeveral. Suppoſe an Indictment of Conſpiracy, and it is laid in the Indictment that Four did conſpire, can't you prove that two conſpired? no Queſtion you may. It is not certainly neceſſary that every one ſhou'd be proved to have conſpired. Suppoſe it were alledged that Four did beat a Man, and does not ſay Quilibet eorum beat him, you may give in Evidence that one did beat him.

Sir B. Shower. No Queſtion of that in Caſe of a Battery, but in the Caſe of a Conſpiracy there muſt be more than one.

L. C. J. Nay, I will ask you even in an Action of Conſpiracy, where the very Giſt of the Action is Conſpiring together, cannot two be found guilty and the reſt acquitted? In Riots there muſt be Three or more. It may be you'll lay Ten, but it is ſufficient, I hope, if you prove it upon any Three of them.

Mr Att. Gen. The Difference is betwixt Contracts and Crimes, for Contracts they are joynt, but Crimes they are in their own Nature ſeveral.

Mr Soll. Gen. Beſides, my Lord, though they be out of Time, yet this is not to the Abatement of the Indictment; but to the Evidence; how do they know, but we will give it in Evidence that Coriſtopher Knightley was one.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr Mompeſſon moves it as a Caveat againſt your giving it in Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. If in an Outlawry againſt diverſe, they leave out theſe Words, Nec eorum aliquis comperuit, that is every Day held to be nought, and for that Reaſon we ſay, the Quilibet eorum ſuſcepit is neceſſary too, and without being laid cannot be given in Evidence, and if it be laid, it ought to have Time and Place.

L. C. J. Treby. The Default of Appearance muſt be a ſeveral Thing, and when he lays it joyntly non comperuerunt, it may be true that all did not appear, if any one made Default; but when you charge Men with a Fact done, though in the plural Number, yet it is a diſtinct ſeparate Charge upon every one.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, thoſe Men that thou ſhalt hear call'd, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them; your Time is to ſpeak to them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn. George Ford.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand; which he did. You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Robert Lowick, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman; for that he, together with Chriſtopher Knightley, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman; Ambroſe Rookwood, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman; and Charles Cranburne, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman; not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Mild and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord, WILLIAM the III. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme, True and Rightful, Lawful and Undoubted Lord; the Cordial Love and True, and Due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King, that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right, ought to bear, withdrawing and utterly to extinguiſh, Intending and Contriving, and with all their Strength Purpoſing, Deſigning and Conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, our right, duly, happily, and very well eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change, and alter; as alſo the ſame our Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put, and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intollerable and moſt miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King, to ſubjugate and inthral, the 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and diverſe other Days and Times, as well before, as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul's Covent Garden aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, and contrive, purpoſe, deſign, intend, our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to kill, ſlay, and murder; and miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make, and cauſe, and the ſame their moſt wicked, impious, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and very many other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown; afterwards, to wit the ſame Tenth Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and diverſe other Days and Times, as well before, as after; there, and elſewhere, in the ſame County, falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and triterouſly; and with Force and Arms did meet together, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, by lying in Wait and Wild, to aſſaſſinate, kill, and murder, and that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing, the ſooner to execute and perpetrate; afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid; traiterouſly did treat, propoſe, and conſult, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place, where, when, how, and in what manner, our ſaid Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait, the more eaſily they might kill; and did conſent, agree, and aſſent, that Forty Horſemen, or thereabouts; of whom the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, would be four; and every one of them traiterouſly took upon himſelf to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, loaden with Gun-powder, and Leaden Bullets; and, with Swords, Rapiers, and other Arms, armed, ſhould lye in Wait, and be in Ambuſh, the ſame our Lord the King in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad to ſet upon, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed ſhould ſet upon the Guards of him our ſaid Lord the King then attending on him, and being with him, and ſhould fight with them, and overcome them, whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo arm'd, him, our ſaid Lord the King, to aſſaſſinate, kill, ſlay, and murder: and they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, their Treaſons, and all their Traiterous Intentions, Deſigns, and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, and bring to effect afterwards, to wit, the aforeſaid 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Rapiers, and Swords, and other Weapons; Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and military Inſtruments, falſly, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and did cauſe to be bought, obtain'd, gather'd together, and procured with that Intent, them, in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King, that now is, as aforeſaid, to uſe, imploy, and beſtow; and the ſame Premiſſes the more ſafely, and certainly to execute, do, and perpetrate, he the aforeſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, with one Edward King, lately of High-Treaſon, in Contriving and Conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Conſent and Aſſent of divers of the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the ſaid tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, traiterouſly did go and come to the Place propoſed, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder, of our ſaid Lord the King, by lying in Wait, ſhould be done, perpetrated and committed, to view, ſee, and obſerve, the Conveniency and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, Aſſaſſination and killing, there to be done, perpetrated and committed; and that Place being ſo viewed and obſerved afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, his Obſervations thereof to ſeveral of the ſaid Traitors and Conſpirators, did relate and impart, to wit, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and the aforeſaid Charles Cranburne, the ſame Day and Year there in order, the ſame execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination, and killing of our ſaid Lord the King, by the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perpetrate, and commit, adviſedly, knowingly, and traiterouſly, did bear and carry among divers of thoſe Traitors and Conſpirators forwards and backwards, from ſome to others of them, a Liſt of the Names of diverſe Men of thoſe who were deſign'd and appointed, our ſaid Lord the King, ſo as aforeſaid, by lying in Wait to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of the Allegiance of them the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne; and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided: Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge. If you find him not guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it, if you find he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, and that he did not fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt Robert Lowick, Priſoner at the Bar, and the Indictment does charge him with compaſſing and imagaining the Death of the King, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, and inſlave this Kingdom of England, and bring it under French Tyranny and Slavery, and the Indictment ſets forth that Robert Lowick, the Priſoner at the Bar, the Tenth of February, met ſeveral falſe Traitors, and there conſulted and treated how to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty; and agreed, that forty Horſemen to get together, ſome to attack the Guards, while others were to aſſaſſinate the King in his Coach; and the Indictment charges him likewiſe with getting together Horſes and Arms for this Purpoſe, to this he hath pleaded not guilty. We will call our Evidence, and prove the Fact againſt him, and we do not doubt but you will do your Duty.

Mr Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon, in conſpiring and compaſſing the Death and Deſtruction of the King, the Nature of our Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar is this.

You will hear, Gentlemen, by the Witneſſes, that about Chriſtmas laſt a Conſpiracy and Deſign was ſet on foot to aſſaſſinate the King, and accordingly to accompliſh it, there were ſeveral Perſons ſent over from France by the late King James, who were Part of his Guards, and particularly Sir George Barclay was to be the Head of them; he was a Lieutenant of the Guards there, and he was ſent over in January laſt, and there were a great many Troopers ſent over, who were to be under his Direction, particularly Mr. Harris, who will give you an Account, that he was ſent over by Order of King James, and he was told particularly King James had a Service for him to do in England, and he hop'd it might be an Opportunity to advance him. He was to obſerve the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and by what Token he ſhould know him; he was to meet him in Covent-Garden, and he was told he might find him there twice a-Week in the Square, about ſix a-Clock, after it was dark; and that he might know him, he told him, he would have his white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket; accordingly Mr. Harris came over, and Mr. Hare came with him, and they came and did meet with Sir George Barclay, and they, together with Sir George Barclay, and ſeveral others here in England, Mr. Porter, Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Parkyns, did enter into conſultation how to effect it: There were ſeveral Meetings about it, and you will find the Priſoner at the Bar was at ſeveral Meetings to that Purpoſe, and they did undertake, among them, to provide ſo many Men as might make about the Number of Forty, which they thought ſufficient for the Execution of this Deſign.

Gentlemen, you will hear that the Priſoner at the Bar did treat with ſeveral Perſons to be ingaged in it; particularly, about the 5th of February, he ſent to one Bertram, and ask'd him if he would be ingaged in a Deſign for King James's Service that was quickly to be executed, without asking of Queſtions, and afterwards, I think, he undertook he would: So about the 14th of February he met him again, and that was the Day before the firſt Time they intended to attack the King, and then being ſo near the Time when it was to be executed, he thought it proper to acquaint him with the Thing he had ingag'd him in; and he did acquaint him, That the next Morning they were to be ready to attack the King and his Guards, and bid him be ſure to get his Boots and other Things ready for that purpoſe, and he gave him a Guinea in order to it. Bertram, it ſeems, on the 15th of February did not come, and the King it ſeems did not go abroad that Day, ſo they were diſappointed at that Time; but the Sunday after Bertram met him, and Mr. Lowick complained that he had not come upon the Saturday according as he had undertaken; and he told him it would have been the ſame Thing, he would have diſappointed them if the King had been in the Field.

Gentlemen, you ſhall find, That as he thus engaged Mr. Bertram, ſo he was to provide ſeveral others; and did declare, That at his own Charge he had got two or three, he complain'd of it as a Hardſhip put upon him, That whereas Mr Harris had 6 s. a-Day Subſiſtence, and was only to take care of himſelf, he, Mr. Lowick, had at his own Charges ingaged and provided ſeveral.

You will find, Gentlemen, that Mr. Rookwood, who was tried Yeſterday, had ſeveral Meetings about it, with Mr. Lowick and Mr. Harris; they did think it to be a barbarous Thing: But however, they were reſolved to obey Orders, and the Priſoner in particular ſaid he wou'd obey Orders, tho' he thought it a very wicked Thing.

Gentle-

Gentlemen, you will find by the Evidence how the Matter was carried on; the Priſoner was to be engaged in it, and did not only imbarque himſelf in Perſon, but engaged others, and did treat with them about it. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, who will give you a full Account of it, and then we ſhall leave it with you, who we queſtion not will do Juſtice. Firſt call George Harris; who appeared and was ſworn.

Mr Sol. Gen. Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of the intended Aſſaſſination, and what Part the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Mr Conyers. Begin from the Firſt, and tell your whole Knowledge as you did Yeſterday.

Mr. Harris. On the 14th of January, New Stile, I was ordered to wait on King James at Dinner; after Dinner was over, I was called in, where was Coll. Parker and Mr. Hare at the ſame Time, and King James told me he was very ſenſible of the good Service I had done him; and now he had an Opportunity of doing ſomething for me: I was to go into England, and there to be ſubſiſted, and I was to follow the Orders of Sir George Barclay; the King told me I ſhou'd find Sir George Barclay in Covent-Garden, with a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, on Mondays and Thurſdays between the Hours of ſix and ſeven in the Evening, and that was the Sign I was to know him by, and he ordered me to go to Mr. Caroll, that is Secretary to the late Queen, and Coll. Parker went along with me, and he ordered me ten Lewidores, and Mr. Hare as much, which Mr. Caroll gave us; and if that were not ſufficient, or if we were Wind-bound at Calis, we had Orders to apply to the Preſident of Calis to be furniſh'd with what we wanted: Accordingly we went, and the Wind not ſerving when we come to Calis, we were forced to ſtay there, and our Charges were paid to our Landlady by the Preſident of Calis, according to the Order we received at St. Germains; when the Wind ſerved fair we went on Board, and came to Rumney-marſh, to one Mr. Hunt's Houſe, and from thence he furniſh'd us with a Couple of Horſes, and we came the Sandy-way to one Mr. Tucker's, and from thence to Mr. Croſs's, and from thence to Graves-end, and from thence to London: We came up in the Night-tide, and being late when we came to Town, Sunday-night, we lay at an Inn at the lower-end of Gracious-ſtreet; the next Day we went to look for Sir George Barclay, but not finding him in Covent-Garden, according to what King James told us, I admired at it; but one Mr. Birkenhead meeting my Comrade the next Day, ſaid, Sir George Barclay deſired to ſee us, and appointed us to meet him, which we did that Night, where Sir George Barclay ask'd us how the King and Queen, Prince and Princeſs did; he told us at that Time he had no Money for us, but in a fews Days we ſhou'd have Money; and accordingly he ſent us Money. We had five Guineas, but it was at twice; two Guineas at one Time and three at another, and this was for a Month's ſubſiſtence at five Shillings a Day, Guineas going then at thirty Shillings. And afterwards when Major Holmes delivered the Horſe, upon Saturday the 15th, we had another Guinea, that made up what we had to be ſix Shillings a Day when we had Horſes, and five Shillings a Day when we had none: And as for Mr. Lowick, the firſt Saturday which was deſigned for the Aſſaſſination, I happened to be at Mr. Counter's Lodgings in Holborn, a Confectioner's; and there I ſee Mr. Lowick come in.

Mr. Conyers. Who lodg'd there, pray Sir?

Harris. Sir George Barclay and Mr. Counter had Lodgings there; and Mr. Lowick came in there, but I cannot ſay he ſtay'd there any Time, I think he went out preſently afterwards. The next Week I met Mr. Lowick in Red-lyon Fields and diſcourſed with him there about this Matter, and I told him what a barbarous and inhumane Thing it was that we ſhould be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange, and that it would render us odious to the World, and that we ſhould be a continual Reproach to our ſelves; he did agree it was ſo: But in concluſion Mr. Lowick ſaid he would obey Orders, and he ſaid Sir George Barclay he was ſure wou'd not do it without Orders. That Day when we were walking out, we met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes riding in the High-way up towards Iſlington, and we ſpoke to him, for Mr. Lowick told me the Thing was diſcovered, and his Name was given up, and other Gentlemens, and I think another; and ſo he told me that one Harriſon told him of it, and forewarn'd him that Night from lying in his Lodging; and he told him that he believed it wou'd not be ſafe for the Reſt to lie in their Lodgings, or to that effect.

Mr Att. Gen. When he ſaid he wou'd obey Orders, What was the Diſcourſe about.

Harris. We were talking of murdering the Prince of Orange: And not only that, but I do believe that Mr. Lowick is ſo ſenſible that what I ſay is true, and he is a Man of ſo much Conſcience and Honour, that he will not contradict any Thing that I affirm or have ſaid here. On Saturday the Two and Twentieth we dined at the Caſtle, a Tavern or a Cook's Shop, at the End of Red-lyon Street. I was much in a Sweat, and he ask'd me what made me ſo? I told him I had been getting Captain Rookwood's Party ready; and I told him (laughing) that Captain Rookwood ſaid I ſhould be his Aid du Camp, and ſo I was getting the Men together: Says he to me, you may very well do it, for you have ſix Shillings a Day, and I have nothing. Mr. Lowick, you know what I ſay to be true; I know not why you lift up your Hands; but you did tell me I might very well do it, having ſix Shillings a Day, and you had nothing, and yet brought a Couple of Men at your own Charge, and that their Horſes could not be diſcharged unleſs you went. Theſe were his Words, my Lord, or to this effect.

Mr Att. Gen. What do you mean by being diſcharged?

Harris. I mean this, that I believe he paid for them; and they were waiting at a Houſe till he came.

Mr Conyers. Why were they to be diſcharged that Day?

Harris. The Reaſon why they were to be diſcharged that Day, was, becauſe Captain Rookwood had told him before, that the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day; and therefore we went together to walk towards Iſlington.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Harris. The ſecond Saturday that it was to have been executed. I was not a Spy upon any Man's Actions: I cannot tell what they did any more than I tell you: I do not wrong you any Way in the World, Sir, I am ſure on it.

L. C. J. When was it that you ſpoke with Mr Lowick about murdering the King?

Harris. It was Monday, Tueſday, Wedneſday, or Thurſday, I cannot be exact to the Day, but it was one of these Days, after the first Saturday; I cannot be positive what the Day was.

L. C. J. Well, it was between the two Days?

Harris. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. How did you know of that Design of murdering the King?

Harris. I was inform'd of it by Captain Rookwood the first Saturday, and I met Mr. Lowick and had this Discourse about it; and afterwards they informed me that Mr. la Rue did not lie at his Lodgings, and the Thing was discovered, and they believed that Rue had discovered it: And I desire you'll call Mr. la Rue as to this Matter; for I believe he will own it.

Mr Soll. Gen. How came you to trust him with such a Discourse?

Harris. Because we met there at Counter's Lodgings, and we had several times Discourses of it; there was Major Bernard and Captain Rookwood besides, and I always declared against it as a barbarous and inhumane Thing, not to be answer'd before God or Man, and that we should be odious to all the World if the Thing were effected, as I believ'd it would not be. I wou'd never shew my Head after such a Thing.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you remember who began the Discourse of this Matter?

Harris. I cannot tell that. I can't come to every Particular.

Sir B. Shower. You said just now, you apprehended Mr. Lowick to be a Man of Conscience and Honour; Pray what were his Sentiments about it?

Harris. His Sentiment was, That he would obey Sir George Barclay's Orders; and he was sure Sir George Barclay would not do it without Orders.

Sir B. Shower. Did not he declare it to be a barbarous Design?

Harris. I can't remember every particular Thing that he said; for I am not a Spy upon any Man's Actions.

Lowick. When you were talking of that Design that you speak of, pray did I consent to any such Thing?

Harris. I tell you how far you consented; you said you wou'd obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, and you was sure he wou'd not do it without Orders.

Mr Mompesson. Did you see any of Sir George Barclay's Orders?

Harris. No, I did not, I was to follow his Orders; but what Orders he had I cannot tell.

Mr Sol. Gen. What did Sir George Barclay tell you you were to do?

Harris. Sir George Barclay declared, on the first Saturday, that we were his Janizaries, and talk'd of attacking and bringing away the Garter: I cannot say this Gentleman was by then; and afterwards Sir George Barclay went out and returned, and came in again into the Room, and declared that we were Men of Honour, and that we were to attack the Prince of Orange.

Mr Mompesson. Did Sir George Barclay give the Prisoner at the Bar any Orders?

Harris. I don't tell you he did.

Mr Mompesson. You say you met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes upon the Road going to Islington: How do you know the Prisoner was there?

Harris. Why, was not I with him? I am very sorry to come upon this Account; but you know it is Truth all that I say; and I am sure you are sensible I do you no Wrong: He met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes, and he went down and said something to Sir George Barclay in the Highway; what it was I don't know; but I stood, and Captain Rookwood and Mr. Bernard said something to him, which you very well know.

Mr Att. Gen. What was it?

Harris. I can't tell, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. We do not desire you to tell what you can't tell: Is this all you know?

Harris. It is all at present that I recollect.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then pray swear Mr Bertram (which was done.)

Mr Conyers. Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury what you know of this intended Assassination, and how far the Prisoner was concerned in it.

Bertram. My Lord, about the Beginning of February last, Major Lowick came to me, and ask'd me if I wou'd espouse a Thing with him that might be for my Advantage; I told him that I thought I might espouse any Thing that he thought fit to engage in.

Mr Mompesson. Whom did you tell so?

Bertram. Major Lowick: And he told me it was well, and desired me to ask no more Questions: I did not; but it went on till the 14th of February, when he desired me to be at his Lodgings at twelve a-Clock. I was so about that Time, but he was not within, and I stay'd till he came in, and he took me up into his Chamber, and told me he believed they should ride out in some little Time; and he told me he believed the King was to be seiz'd in his Coach, and he gave me a Guinea to buy me Necessaries.

L. C. J. What Necessaries?

Bertram. I can't say he nam'd any.

Mr Att. Gen. But for what Purpose were those Necessaries?

Bertram. I don't know that he named any Thing, indeed.

Mr Att. Gen. Well; did he tell you when you were to be ready?

Bertram. If you please to give me leave, I'll tell you: He desired me not to be out of the Way; and the next Morning I was to meet him at the Purl-House in Hart-street. I did not meet him; and the next Time I saw him, I am not positive whether it was the next Day after the Fifteenth when I was to meet him at Hart-street, but did not so; but the next Time I saw him, he ask'd me why I did not meet him according to his Appointment? I told him, I had some Reason for it; and he answer'd me again, That he believed, if the King had been in the Field, I would have done the same; but I have not seen him since, till I saw him at the Bar.

Mr Att. Gen. Had you no Discourse of Horses that you were to provide?

Bertram. I do not remember any particular Thing more than I have told you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he not tell you what the Design was you were to go about?

Bertram. He did not tell me of any other Design than as I tell you, for he believed I knew of it; I thought so at least: The first time I knew of it was from Mr Charnock.

L. C. J. What did he tell you was the Design that you should ingage in for your Advantage upon Friday the 14th, when he gave you the Guinea?

Bertram. He told me, he believed they should ride out very suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Did he tell you when the King was to be ſeized?

Bertram. No, he did not tell me when, but this was the 14th, the next Morning I was to meet him at Hart-ſtreet, but did not.

Mr Sol. Gen. Who did he tell you the King was to be ſeiz'd by?

Bertram. He did not nominate any one elſe, for he obliged me not to ask him Queſtions, nor I did not.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he name himſelf to be concerned?

Bertram. He named himſelf ſo far, as that he believed he ſhould ride out very ſuddenly.

Mr Soll. Gen. Was it the next Morning, or the next Day?

Bertram. I cannot ſay that he named any particular Time.

Mr Att. Gen. Will they ask him any Queſtions?

Sir B. Shower. No, I think we ſhall not.

Mr Mountague. Pray, Mr Bertram, will you anſwer me one Queſtion, What did he ſay to you when he check'd you for not coming according to his Appointment?

Bertram. I took it as a Kind of a Check: He told me, that if the King had been in the Field, he believed I would have done the ſame.

Sir B. Shower. There is one Thing we muſt a little examine this Gentleman to: Were not you under a Neceſſity before that Time that he gave you the Guinea? Pray what Condition were you in?

Bertram. Under Neceſſity, Sir! I was never very plentiful of Money of late.

Sir B. Shower. Did he never give you a Guinea or two before in Charity, and out of Compaſſion to your Neceſſities?

Bertram. He has given me Money ſeveral Times before; and I believe if I would have ask'd him for any Money, he would have given it me.

Mr Att. Gen. Was this Money given you for Charity, or for any other, and what Purpoſe?

Bertram. I did not ask him for any Thing, but he gave it me, and ſaid, There's a Guinea to buy you Neceſſaries.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Diſcourſe before that?

Bertram. I told you, he ſaid, he believed they were to ride out very ſuddenly, and he believed the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and he deſired me not to be out of the Way.

Mr Cowper. And when he gave you the Guinea to buy you Neceſſaries, was it immediately after this Diſcourſe?

Bertram. Sir, it was at the ſame Time.

Lowick. Did not I give your Wife a Guinea two Months before this?

Bertram. Yes, Sir; I acknowledge I was informed you did, I was not in Town then.

Lowick. Pray let the Court know that.

L. C. J. Did he tell you the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, before he told you they were to ride out very ſuddenly?

Bertram. No, afterwards; and then he gave me the Guinea.

Sir B. Shower. His Words are not coupled together, they have no Relation to one another.

L. C. J. No; but he told him they were to ride out very ſuddenly, and the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries at the ſame Time.

L. C. J. Treby. There's no doubt he was ingaged in the Deſign with thoſe other Perſons.

Mr Conyers. And afterwards he rebuked him becauſe he had not met him; and he ſaid, it would have been the ſame Thing, if the King had been in the Field.

Mr Mountague. What Day in the Week was it that you failed him?

Bertram. It was on a Saturday.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, we deſire to know, who he did underſtand by the King that was to be ſeized.

L. C. J. What did he call the King?

Bertram. He ſaid nothing but the King.

L. C. J. Who did you underſtand by that?

Bertram. I leave it to the Court, I am not to interpret Things.

L. C. J. Treby. Did he name the Prince of Orange, or King James? Did you think King James was to be ſeized?

Bertram. My Lord, I tell you what he ſaid, I am not to interpret his Words.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you believe he meant King James, or this King, that was to be ſeized?

Bertram. I believed it might be the King here.

L. C. J. Take the Words as they are; he ask'd him before, Whether he would ingage in a Deſign that might be for his Advantage? On Friday the 14th of February he meets him at his Lodging, and tells him, he was to ride out ſuddenly, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and appointed him to meet him the next Morning, and gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries.

Mr Mompeſſon. Pray, has not Mr. Lowick given you Clothes, Linnen and other Things at any other Time?

Bertram. Sir, you have been always ready to ſerve me, I muſt acknowledge, and you have been very kind to me.

Lowick. If you pleaſe to give an Account of my Character, whether ever I was guilty of any bloody Thing.

Bertram. No, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. How long have you known Mr Lowick?

Bertram. I believe I have known him this 20 Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Behaviour has he been of?

Bertram. He has always had very good Behaviour, and the beſt; he has had the beſt Character of all Mankind.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever know him inclined to do a raſh Action?

Bertram. Never in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever know him do a malicious Action?

Bertram. No, but he had always the Character of a good Man, and was always ready to ſerve any Man in his Neceſſities, and to do Good; he has that general Character abroad.

L. C. J. Where does he live?

Bertram. He lived laſt at Brownlow ſtreet, but he has no Wife nor Family, and ſo has no fix'd Being.

L. C. J. What was his Way of Living?

Bertram. He was bred a Soldier, and has been abroad.

L. C. J. Where?

Bertram. In Ireland.

L. C. J. In whoſe Service?

Bertram. In the Service of King James.

Lowick. He knows particularly, that once I was upon a Party and ſaved five Officers from being killed in cold Blood.

L. C. J. What Countryman is he?

Bertram. Yorkſhire.

Mr Mom-

Mr Mompeſſon. Was he accounted of a cruel or a bloody Nature?

Bertram. No, of a quite contrary.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know for what Cauſe he gave him or his Wife a Guinea.

Bertram. I know not what that Guinea was for that he gave me the fourteenth of February, any otherwiſe than as I have told you.

Mr Mompeſſon. What was the Guinea given to your Wife for?

Bertram. For that Guinea given to my Wife, it was out of his own Kindneſs and Goodneſs to my Family and me.

Mr Att. Gen. What was the other Guinea for? You are upon your Oath.

Bertram. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell; he gave it me to buy me Neceſſaries.

Mr Att. Gen. Was there nothing elſe mentioned what Neceſſaries thoſe were to be?

Bertram. No, Sir; upon my Oath there was not any Particular mentioned.

Mr Att. Gen. What made him ſo kind to you, pray?

Bertram. We were both born in a Town, and I believe we are near related.

Sir B. Shower. You ſay you are Towns-People, and have been long acquainted, and you knew him in Ireland, pray did you ever know that he ſaved any People's Lives?

Bertram. I was not in that Action my ſelf, but all that were in it gave that Relation, that he was very favourable, and did ſave Peoples Lives, particularly one Captain Harlow, and brought him and others Priſoners, and I remember the Thing; it was about a Fortnight before the Buſineſs of the Boyne, upon a Sunday Morning, that they took thoſe Priſoners, and he did perſwade ſeveral Parties that he commanded, to decline killing, as much as they could: I was not in this Action, but this I heard of all that were in it, and from the Priſoner.

Mr Soll. Gen. When he gave you that Guinea, did not he ſpeak any Thing of a Horſe that was to be provided for you?

Bertram. Not a Word: I never did ſee a Horſe upon that Account, nor was I Maſter of a Horſe, nor was I told I ſhould have a Horſe in any reſpect whatſoever.

Juryman. How could you ride out, as you ſay they were to do, without a Horſe, or without knowing any Thing of a Horſe to be provided for you?

Bertram. I did not know of a Horſe.

L. C. J. But he ſaid you were to ride out ſpeedily.

Bertram. No; he ſaid in general, we ſhould ride out ſuddenly.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was there beſides your ſelf?

Bertram. No Body.

Mr Att. Gen. Then that we muſt mean you and him. And how were you to ride out without a Horſe? Pray mind what you ſwear?

Bertram. I was to meet him the next Morning, but did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what cou'd you underſtand by that, that you were to ride out ſuddenly, and had no Horſe?

Bertram. That was underſtood, that if I did ride out, I muſt have a Horſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Who ſhould you have it from? had you a Horſe of your own?

Bertram. No, I had not.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you intend to hire a Horſe?

Bertram. No, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Did not you ask where you were to have a Horſe?

Bertram. No, I did not ask nor inquire, nor was it promis'd me I ſhould have a Horſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he tell you where you were to ride?

Bertram. The next Morning I was to meet him.

Mr Att. Gen. For what? to ride out was it?

Bertram. I can't really tell whether it was upon that Account or not.

Mr Att. Gen. Whether did he tell you where he was to ride?

Bertram. Indeed he did not.

Juryman. It is very ſtrange that you did not ask him where he was to go, nor ask him for a Horſe.

Bertram. I was ſo ſenſeleſs, that I neither did ask him about a Horſe, nor ever knew of any that was to be provided for me.

Juryman. Did you underſtand what was meant by the Riding out ſuddenly?

Bertram. I did take it to be about the Buſineſs, the Seizing of the King.

Juryman. Did he compare it to attacking him in the Field?

Bertram. No, he did not; but he ſaid he believed the King would be ſeized in his Coach; he made no Compariſons.

Mr Mountague. Pray Mr. Bertram, why did you not meet him? what Reaſons had you for not doing it?

Bertram. I thought it not requiſite to meet him.

Mr Mountague. What, had you no Mind to the Thing?

Bertram. No, I had not; becauſe I thought the Thing very unlawful.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what was that Thing you ſpeak of, that you thought was unlawful?

Bertram. I thought it was about ſeizing and killing the King.

L. C. J. Pray mind; there is no Body deſires you ſhould ſpeak more than the Truth; but on the other ſide, being upon your Oath, you are to ſpeak the whole Truth; for if you conceal any Part of the Truth, though you have a Kindneſs for your Countryman Mr. Lowick, who has been kind to you, you will forſwear your ſelf, for you make a different Repreſentation of the Matter, and make it appear quite otherwiſe than it is; pray do not ſtrain one Tittle, but let us have all the Truth.

Bertram. I don't believe I ſtrain one Bit.

Mr Mountague. Then tell my Lord why you did not meet him.

Bertram. I did believe it was about ſeizing and killing the King, and I did think it to be illegal.

Mr Mountague. Why did you think it was about that?

Bertram. Becauſe Mr. Charnock had told me of it before.

Mr Att. Gen. How did you know that was what Lowick ſpoke to you about?

Bertram. I did ſuppoſe it to be the ſame, becauſe he deſired me at firſt to ask no Queſtions, no more did I; but I took it always to be the ſame Thing.

Mr Att. Gen. What did he ſay to you?

Bertram. He told me he had a Buſineſs to propoſe to me, if I would ingage in, that would be for for my Advantage, but I muſt ask no Queſtions; talkt of Riding out ſuddenly, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and having heard of it from Charnock, I thought it was the ſame Buſineſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Then my Lord, we have one Witneſs more, call Captain Fiſher, (He did not appear.) If he does not appear, we ſhall let them go on, and when he comes in, we can examine him afterwards.

L. C. J. Is he a material Witneſs?

Mr Sol. Gen. We do apprehend he is a very material Witneſs.

L. C. J. If you think him a material Witneſs, it will not be proper for them to enter upon their Defence, till they have heard the whole Accuſation.

The Court ſtaid for Mr. Fiſher's coming for near an Hour, and at laſt he came in and was ſworn.

L. C. J. Who is this?

Mr. Att. Gen. This is one Captain Fiſher.

Mr Soll Gen. Pray Captain Fiſher, do you know Mr Lowick, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Capt. Fiſher. I have not talkt with Mr Lowick ſince the 8th of February, and then he talk'd that he wou'd be ready to ſerve his Maſter to the uttermoſt of his Power.

L. C. J. What Maſter?

Capt. Fiſher. King James.

Mr Att. Gen. What particular Service?

Capt. Fiſher. He named no particular Service, but only that he would be ready to ſerve his Maſter to the uttermoſt of his Power.

Mr Att. Gen. Where was this?

Capt. Fiſher. At the Cock in Bow-ſtreet.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was in Company?

Capt. Fiſher. There was Mr Harriſon.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of what you know of this barbarous bloody Deſign.

Capt. Fiſher. I believe there was a Deſign to ſeize the Prince of Orange.

Mr Att. Gen. What do you know of it? you ſay you believe it.

Capt. Fiſher. I believe it by my Knowledge, becauſe I was concerned in it.

Mr Att. Gen. By whom was that Deſign carried on?

Capt. Fiſher. By Sir George Barclay and Mr Harriſon.

L. C. J. What was the Deſign?

Capt. Fiſher. We were to fall upon the Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. You called him ſo, the Prince of Orange?

Capt. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, tell us what happened.

Capt. Fiſher. It was to have been done the 15th of February, and we met accordingly the 14th, but the King not going Abroad, it was put off.

L. C. J. Who met on the 14th?

Capt. Fiſher. I met only Mr Harriſon and Sir George Barclay, then it was put off till the 22d; upon the 21ſt, we met at the Three Tuns in Holborne, and from thence we came to the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and there was no Body but Mr Harriſon and I together, and Sir George Barclay came to us; I believe there were about 14 or 16 in the Houſe; there Sir George Barclay told me, Mr Lowick was to meet me and two more at an Inn by St. Giles's Pound, and that we were to go together to ſeize the Prince of Orange the 22d.

L. C. J. Did you meet him?

Capt. Fiſher. I did not meet him, it being put off by the King's not going abroad.

L. C. J. This does not affect Mr Lowick at all.

Mr Att. Gen. It does not, we acknowledge, but at that time which you ſpeak of, the 8th of February, had you any Knowledge of the Aſſaſſination.

Capt. Fiſher. There was no Aſſaſſination at that Time, at leaſt it was not then declared.

Mr Att. Gen. What was your Diſcourſe about then?

Capt. Fiſher. There was Notice of the King's preparing to come for England.

Mr At. Gen. You ſay Mr Harriſon was there.

Capt. Fiſher. Yes, and talkt very little about the Matter, but only that there were Preparations for the King's coming.

Mr At. Gen. What did Lowick ſay to you?

Capt. Fiſher. I have told you all that Mr Lowick ſaid to me.

Mr At. Gen. Repeat it again.

Capt. Fiſher. He ſaid he would be ready to ſerve his Maſter, to the uttermoſt of his Power.

Mr Cowper. Had you no Diſcourſe about an Act of Parliament.

Capt. Fiſher. Mr Lowick ſaid it was not convenient to talk with more than one at any time, for there was an Act of Parliament on Foot, that under two Witneſſes nothing ſhould affect a Man's Life in Treaſon.

Mr Att. Gen. The Act of Parliament was then a making.

L. C. J. When Mr Lowick ſaid he wou'd ſerve his Maſter, what Diſcourſe had you about it?

Capt. Fiſher. Mr Lowick ſaid not a Word within, but at the Door he ſaid he wou'd ſerve his Maſter to his Power.

Mr At. Gen. What was that, that they wou'd not talk with above one at a time?

Capt. Fiſher. Nothing that was thought treaſonable Practices ſhould be diſcourſed of before above one at a time, ſo I underſtood it.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then my Lord we have done.

Sir B. Shower. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Council in this Caſe for the Priſoner at the Bar, and we do hope here is not Evidence ſufficient to convict him of High-Treaſon, the Queſtion is not whether there was a Plot or a Conſpiracy to Aſſaſſinate the King, or to prepare for an Invaſion, but all that you are to conſider, Gentlemen, is, whether the Evidence againſt Mr Lowick, be ſufficient to convince you, that he did deſign to Seize and Aſſaſſinate the King; there are three Witneſſes produced, but we think this laſt Witneſs, Fiſher, his Teſtimony does not hurt him in the leaſt. We know your Lordſhip will declare and direct the Jury, that the Evidence in a Caſe of Treaſon ought to be plain, not only with reſpect to the Fact, that it was done; but alſo of ſuch Facts as are the Evidences of a Man's Intentions, and thoſe are not to be conſtrued by Strains and Intendments, or Implications; unleſs they be ſuch as Evidently, Naturally, and to common Underſtanding expreſs the Intention, it cannot be good Evidence in Treaſon: Now we ſay that

Cap-

Captain Fisher has said nothing at all that will affect the Prisoner, for all that he says is, that the Eighth of February he said he was ready to serve his Master to the utmost of his Power, and any Words as well as these may be construed to make a Man guilty of Treasonable Intentions; for it might be a Recollection of Favours Received, or it might be a grateful Intent to serve him upon particular Occasions, but that is no Evidence upon this Indictment. Suppose it was to serve him upon the supposed intended Invasion, yet with Submission, that is not Evidence of the Overt-Act laid here; here is no Overt-Act mentioned of preparing Arms, or Encouraging Men, or Seducing the King's Subjects in order to the better restoring of the late King James, or the expected Landing of the French, or the like. All that's laid to the Prisoner's Charge, is the Compassing the King's Death, and a Design to Assassinate him in his Coach, and in order to the Assassination, he was to buy Arms and Horses; now all that he says is quite of another Nature, of a quite different Strain, and has no Tendency to this Matter, and nothing he says that Lowick shou'd say, but is applicable the other Way, and tends more naturally to the Invasion, than to the Assassination. Your Lordship observes there was some notice taken of what Mr Lowick shou'd say, concerning the Act of Parliament, that he would not talk with above one at a time; how far when Life is concerned such loose Discourse ought to be inforced before a Jury I must leave to your Lordship; though a Man may be innocent, yet he may be cautious, and the more Innocent, perhaps the more cautious; but that is applicable to the Invasion too, and has no Relation to the Treason in this Indictment more than any other. It shows he was more wary than others were, but it is not applicable to the Fact that he now stands charged with. Then the whole of the Evidence depends upon the Testimony of Mr Harris and Mr Bertram, and we think they are not two Witnesses to one Thing, and what they say must be strained, and intended, and presumed, to make Evidence of Treason; for what Mr Harris says about the Discourses between him and the late King James, about receiving Orders from Sir George Barclay, and his Passage over from France, and the several Stages he and Mr Hare travell'd, and the Discourses between Sir George Barclay and him; Your Lordship will acquaint the Jury that is no Evidence to affect Mr Lowick, nor what Berkenhead and Hare agreed upon does any way affect Mr Lowick, for those Things may be all true and yet Mr Lowick innocent of what he stands charged with in this Indictment; he says, that upon the first Saturday he saw Mr Lowick at the Confectioner's, but he cannot say he staid there at all, there was not a Word spoken by Mr Lowick that he remembers then, but what he says that seems to touch, and the only Thing that touches Mr Lowick, in all this Evidence is, that upon Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday, it is a pretty large time, between the Fifteenth and the Twenty Second, he was talking with Mr Lowick about the Barbarity of this Business, and that Lowick after all, said he would obey Orders; now with Submission, my Lord, to make that to have Relation to the Assassination must be by a forc'd strain'd Intendment, he does not declare what the Orders were, nay, he does not affirm there were any Orders for the Assassination, but only that he would obey Orders; here's no Order by Writing, no Order by Parole that Mr Lowick declared he would obey; as to what Lowick declared about his Intention of Riding out and Seizing the King in his Coach; that cannot be intended the Order that he was to obey to Assassinate the King, that Order does not appear, there are no Footsteps of it in all the Evidence, so that there is nothing in that Testimony that will hurt Mr Lowick: Then upon the Two and Twentieth when they dined together, Mr Harris says, that there was a Discourse of two Men, but it does not appear, nor does the Witness give any account what those two Men were to be for; 'tis true two Men he was to get discharged, but that is not Evidence that these Men were to make a Part of those Forty, neither the Words before nor the Words after can have that Construction; nay it does not appear it was for any Purpose at all, now in the Case of Life, where a Man stands at the Bar, we hope such an Evidence shall not be Construed to make a Proof of a Treasonable Intention, that these were to Assassinate the King, or to make Part of the Forty that were to do it, when it does not appear they were there, nor who they were, nor any sort of Notice taken or given upon what Account they were Provided. And then as to Mr Bertram's Evidence, it is palpable that his Evidence and whatsoever he says cannot amount to make one Witness to prove an Overt-Act within this Statute, and that there must be two Witnesses the Law requires; what does Mr Bertram say to prove any Man guilty of Treason, but only by Intendment, Thought or Suspicion? It is true, Mr Bertram's Evidence would be good enough to commit a Man upon Suspicion of Treason, but to Convict him it cannot be; he says that in the Beginning of February he spoke to him, and told him he would employ him in a Business that would be for his Advantage, but he must ask no Questions; this is very dark, for the Meaning of it does not appear what was intended by it; it might be one Thing as well as another, it might be to imploy him in his Family, or it might be to send him of a Journey, or it might be the taking of a Farm, but to apply that as an Evidence of a Charge of High-Treason, that we think is very hard, and we hope your Lordship will think so too; but then he comes and tells you further of a Discourse upon the Fourteenth, of his riding out suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach, but he does not say that he was to seize him, nor that he would be concerned in it, nor that he knew of it, nor did declare at what time it was to be done, nor any thing certain whether it was a Prophecy, or a Dream, or a Story that he related again, or what it was; there is no Connection between the Riding out suddenly and the other Words of seizing the King in his Coach; then he says he gave him a Guinea to buy him Necessaries, the Man acknowledges Mr Lowick several times had given him in Charity-Money, Cloaths and other Things, and gave his Wife a Guinea, as you observe, in Charity, but he gave him this Guinea on purpose to buy him Necessaries, and it is hard that a Man's Charity to a Countryman, to a Townsman, to an antient Acquaintaince of Twenty Years standing, to a Person that he had been familiar miliar with formerly, and known to have lived well, ſhould be miſ-interpreted and ſtrain'd, to make it a giving him Money as Subſiſtence, and a Reward for the doing ſuch a Miſchievous Bloody Act; We ſay his Charity to this Man formerly is inconſiſtent with the Suppoſition that he cou'd be privy to ſuch a barbarous Deſign now, and we hope the Jury will conſider the Character that that very Man has given to my Client, for the ſame Witneſs gives you an Account of his Behaviour all along, that he was not given to Raſh and Barbarous Actions, nor guilty of any malicious Thing, nay, that he prevented Miſchief, and the killing of People in cold Blood. We muſt leave it to the Jury's Conſideration, and your Lordſhip's Direction. All theſe things that they ſay may be true, and Lowick be not guilty, and the acquitting of Mr Lowick will be no Reflection upon the Witneſſes, nor any Diſcredit to the Teſtimony that has been given of this Conſpiracy; but we hope 'tis doing Juſtice to this Man, the Witneſſes not coming up to the Proof of what is laid in the Indictment. We muſt beg your Lordſhip's Patience a little longer, and call ſome Witneſſes to give you an Account how long they have known Mr Lowick, and what his real Character is; they will tell you he is a peaceable good Man, and ſhew you that his Temper and Inclination was rather to a ſober quiet Life than to lead him to ſuch Action, and that they cannot think him likely to be tempted to be concerned in ſuch a Deſign; and then we muſt leave it to the Jury. Call Mrs Yorke.

Lowick. I believe there is no Body here that knows me but will give me that Character.

Mrs. Yorke came in and was ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. Pray Mrs Yorke how long have you known Mr Lowick.

Yorke. About a Dozen or Fourteen Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Sort of Diſpoſition is he of?

Yorke. He is a Civil Honeſt Man as ever I ſaw in my Life, or ever knew of; and I never heard otherwiſe from any one that knew him.

Sir B. Shower. What was he in his Actions, was he Malicious, or good Natur'd?

Yorke. As good a natured Man as ever I ſaw.

Mr Mompeſſon. Has he the Reputation of a Cruel Bloody Minded Man?

Yorke. Quite the contrary. He lodged in my Houſe half a Year, it is not quite a Year ago ſince he lay at my Houſe. He was the moſt obliging Man that ever lay in my Houſe: He was ſo civil to all the Lodgers, that they admired him for his Goodneſs, and made them in love with him.

L. C. J. How came he to lodge at your Houſe?

Yorke. He came from his other Landlady, they could not agree, his other Landlady was a Sort of a Shrew, and therefore he did not care for ſtaying there; and I deſired his Company becauſe I knew him to be ſo obliging and civil a Man.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe?

Yorke. In Bloomsbury.

L. C. J. What is his Way of Living, is he a Man of an Eſtate?

Yorke. I cannot tell, I did not inquire into that.

L. C. J. Had he no Employment to get his Living by.

Yorke. I do not know any thing of that, I never inquired into it; he paid me very honeſtly for my Lodging, and he is a very good Man for any thing I know.

Sir B. Shower. Then call Mrs Moſely.

She came in and was ſworn.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Gentlewoman.

Sir B. Shower. Pray Mrs Moſely will you tell my Lord and the Jury: Do you know Mr Lowick?

Moſely. Yes, Sir, I do.

Sir B. Shower. How long have you known him?

Moſely. Near twenty Years.

Sir B. Shower. Pray give an Account upon your Knowledge what Diſpoſition and Temper he is of, whether he is Raſh, Malicious, Bloody, and Ill-natured.

Moſely. He is a peaceable, vertuous, honeſt Man, and a Man that I never heard or ſaw that Creature that could ſpeak any ill Thing of him in my Life; nor I never heard him ſpeak any Thing maliciouſly of any Creature in my Life to do them a Prejudice: So far from that, that he is a Man has a Character, perhaps, above any Man that I could ſpeak or hear of in my Life. I ſpeak it even above my own Relations, they may have ſome Paſſions; but I never ſee that Gentleman in a Paſſion in my Life. He has lain in my Houſe ſeveral times, and he has had Company come to him, but never any that was Scandalous one Way or other. I never ſaw him fuddled; nor ever heard him Swear, nor any one accuſe him of any of thoſe Things.

Mr Mompeſſon. Call Dr William Mew. He did not appear.

Sir B. Shower. The Priſoner has ſomething to ſay for himſelf my Lord, but we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, and the Juries, whether there be any Evidence but what is dark and ſavours of Suſpicion only; ſuſpicious it is, but whether there be any Evidence that is plain and direct as the Law requires in Caſes of High-Treaſon, we muſt leave it to your Conſideration, for we apprehend there is none.

Lowick. My Lord, as to this Buſineſs, the Thing that I ſtand accuſed of, the Aſſaſſination, I know nothing in the World of it, nor never did directly or indirectly; and if I am convicted, and could to ſave my life be the Death of the pooreſt Child in the World, I would not ſave my Life to do it.

L. C. J. Look you, I would put you to make Anſwer to ſome Things; you were at Sir George Barclays, at the Confectioner's in Holborn; and it is ſworn he came over upon ſuch a Deſign. Then you were with Mr Harris at Red Lion Fields, and there he was ſpeaking to you of the Horridneſs of the Deſign that was to be executed upon the King's Perſon the Saturday before, and he told you he did miſlike it; and thereupon you anſwered that you would obey Orders, and that Sir George Barclay had Orders for it, otherwiſe he would not do it.

Lowick. Sir George Barclay never ſpoke one Word of it to me.

L. C. J. Every Body knows now upon what Design he came over from France, and when Mr Harris ſhowed Diſſatisfaction with the Thing, you made that Anſwer to his Diſcourſe.

Lowick. He never ſaid one Syllable to me of it. I truſt to your Lordſhip's Judgment, and the Jury's Mercy.

L. C. J. And then I would have you anſwer to another Thing, when you dined together on the Saturday the two and twentieth, what were thoſe two Men that could not be diſcharged without you?

Lowick. My Lord, I know nothing in the World of two Men.

L. C. J. You went to diſcharge them, for the King did not go abroad that Day.

Lowick. I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. He ſwears this, and that's as to him; but then as to Bertram, what Deſign was that, that you were to engage Bertram in for his Advantage, and he was to ask no Queſtions?

Lowick. My Lord, he is a poor Man, and my Countryman, and I have at all Times, from time to time, for this ſeven Years, helped to ſubſiſt him and his Family, that he will not deny, and I have ſeveral Times given him both Cloaths and Money.

L. C. J. Then I would ask you again, When he came to your Lodging on Friday the 14th of February, and you told him the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and ſaid that we were to ride out very ſuddenly, and you appointed him to meet the next Morning; and becauſe he did not meet you blamed him, and ſaid, It would have been the ſame Thing, if the King had been in the Field. Look you, I would have you give Anſwer to this if you can.

Lowick. I remember nothing in the World of it, not a Word I aſſure you, and to the beſt of my Remembrance, I did not ſee him in two Days after.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I muſt beg leave to anſwer to the Objection that the Council for the Priſoner have made, that there are not two Witneſſes to prove the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and ſo the Law is not ſatisfied. In Anſwer to that, I deſire your Lordſhip's Favour to obſerve how the Evidence is, and then we ſhall ſee whether there are not plainly two poſitive Witneſſes of the Overt-Act, by agreeing to aſſaſſinate the King. The firſt Witneſs is Mr Harris, your Lordſhip obſerves that Mr Harris gives an Account that Mr Lowick was at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings the firſt Day that it was to have been executed; and that afterwards between the fifteenth and the two and twentieth, thoſe being the firſt and ſecond Days that this was to be done, when he and Rookwood, and the Priſoner Lowick, were walking together in Red Lion Fields; and there had ſome Diſcourſe about the intended Aſſaſſination, and the Barbarity and Bloodineſs of it, and Mr Harris and Mr Rookwood were averſe to it. Mr Lowick ſaid he would obey Orders, and he was ſure Sir George Barclay would not do it unleſs he had direct Orders for it, that was twice repeated by him, as Harris ſwears: And afterwards Mr Harris tells you that the two and twentieth he dined with Mr Lowick, and Mr Lowick obſerved that Mr Harris came in in a great Sweat, and asked him how it happened, he ſaid he had been about to get ready Rookwood's Party that were to ſeize the King, for he was to have one Party. Says Mr Lowick to him, you need not grudge to do it, you have ſix Shillings a Day, I have nothing; and yet I, at my own Charge, am to provide two. This is as poſitive Evidence as well can be of his being privy to the Deſign; and his ingaging People at his own Charge, ſhows a great deal of Forwardneſs and Zeal in the Priſoner to the Buſineſs. My Lord, I think this is poſitive and plain Evidence, and not only made out by Inferences and Conſtructions, as Sir B. Shower ſays, but plain poſitive Proof. The firſt Day he was with ſeveral of them, and when they diſcourſed of the Thing afterwards, he declared he would obey Orders; and what could thoſe Orders be but for what they were Diſcourſing of, and nothing was diſcourſed of but this Deſign they were ingaged in, and this was to juſtifie the Thing, and take off the Apprehenſion of the Barbarity of it: This is Harris's Teſtimony. The next Witneſs is Bertram, and he tells you that the fifth of February the Priſoner ſent for him, and when he came to him, he asked if he would ingage in a Buſineſs that might be for his Advantage, and ask no Queſtions; ſo at that Time he did not acquaint him what the Thing was, but that ſhows it was a Thing that was to be kept ſecret at that Time, in regard he did not think fit to acquaint him at the firſt Inſtance. But the fourteenth of February, when he met him again, the Day before the firſt Time that it was to be put in Execution; Bertram ſwears he told him that they were to ride out the next Morning, that muſt be Lowick and Bertram, for there was no Body elſe there; and that the Prince of Orange was to be ſeized in his Coach. Was it poſſible the Priſoner could be ignorant of it? When he ingaged him to go upon a Deſign without asking Queſtions; ſent for him the Day before, acquainted him they were to ride out the next Morning, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and bid him be ready againſt next Morning, and gave him a Guinea at that Time; the Witneſs ſays it was for Neceſſaries, but he does not pretend that it was for Charity, as formerly. And that muſt be for Neceſſaries for that Purpoſe that they were then diſcourſing of, when he deſired him to be ready the next Day, and gives him Money to buy him Neceſſaries: What can that be, but Neceſſaries for what he was to be ready for? And then he did not come the next Day, and he tells you why, becauſe he thought it a very wicked and unlawful Thing, and ſo he diſappointed him; and the next Time Lowick chid him, and told him he would have ſerved him ſo if the King had been in the Field. This is plain, though I believe Bertram does ſpeak as tenderly as he can, being his Friend and old Acquaintance, and is willing to ſay as little as he can of him; ſo that I believe no Body thinks but what Bertram ſays againſt the Priſoner is true, and what he ſwears is plain and poſitive. To ſhow that Lowick did engage in the Deſign, he acquainted him with it the fourteenth, by telling him the King was to be ſeized, and they were to ride out, and he was to be ready the next Day.

L. C. J. He does not ſay they were to ride out the next Day.

Sir B. Shower. No, the Words were, We are to ride out ſuddenly.

Mr Att. Gen. I think he did ſay they were to ride out the next Morning.

L. C. J. No, Call him in again.

Mr Cowper. The Words were, We ſhall ride out ſuddenly, and bid him meet him next Morning; and afterwards chid him for not meeting accordingly, ingly, and told him it had been the ſame Thing if the King had been in the Field.

L. C. J. If you cannot agree upon the Evidence, you muſt call in the Witneſs.

Mr Mountague. My Lord, we are agreed upon the Evidence, it was ſuddenly.

L. C. J. Well then, there is no Occaſion, have you done on both Sides.

Council. Yes, my Lord, we ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner at the Bar, Robert Lowick, is Indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King by an Aſſaſſination; you have heard what Evidence has been given upon this Indictment. And in the firſt Place, It is proved to you that there was a Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King; which was to be carried on under the Conduct and Management of Sir George Barclay. The Queſtion that you are now to conſider of, is whether the Priſoner at the Bar was concerned or ingaged in the Proſecution of that Deſign. There have been two Witneſſes produced, who have given their Evidence, and have been very ſtrictly examined, and Obſervations have been made upon the Teſtimony they have given.

The firſt Witneſs is Mr Harris, and he gives you ſome Account of the Original of this Deſign. He tells you how he was at St. Germains, and introduced to the late King James, who did expreſs a great Kindneſs for him, and told him that he had an Opportunity of doing ſomething for him that would be for his Advantage: And that he and one Hare, who was preſent at that Time, ſhould go into England, (for it ſeems they were both together introduced by Collonel Parker) and ſhould be ſubſiſted in England, and thereupon Directions were given them what Courſe they were to take; which was to go to Calice, and to each of them ten Lewidores were given for their Charges, and they were acquainted that if it happened that they ſhould lie there ſo long for Want of a Wind to bring them over hither that their Money was ſpent, Proviſion ſhould be made for their Supply there. They had farther Directions, that when they came into England they ſhould apply themſelves to Sir George Barclay, and follow his Orders, with Inſtructions how to find him; being told that Sir George Barclay would be walking in Covent-Garden every Monday, and every Thurſday Night, about the Hours of ſix or ſeven a Clock, and that they ſhould know him by a white Handkerchief that was to hang out of his Pocket.

Mr Harris further tells you, That they did come to Calice in Order to embark for England, and there they happened to ſtay a conſiderable Time, even ſo long that their Money would not defray their Expences there, and they found it true as it was promiſed them; for the Preſident of Calice paid the Reckoning for them at the Place where they lodged; and afterwards they came into England, and landed in Kent, and came to Rocheſter, and from thence to London. About the latter End of January, Old Stile (for it ſhould ſeem it was the 14th New Stile, which is the 4th, Old Stile, they were at St. Germains) he tells you that he did go the firſt Monday, after their Arrival, into Covent-Garden, to look after Sir George Barclay, but then miſt him. But afterwards his Companion, Mr Hare, met with one Berkenhead, and complaining that they had not met with Sir George Barclay according to the Directions they had abroad: Whereupon, by the Means of Berkenhead, they were brought to the Speech of Sir George Barclay, who gave them Reception, and owned that he had Authority to ſubſiſt them; but ſaid he had not then Money, but ſhortly ſhould, and when he had, they ſhould be ſure to receive their Subſiſtence. He tells you, that after this, Sir George Barclay gave them Subſiſtence Money, Paying them at the Rate of five Shillings a Day when they had no Horſes, and when they had, ſix Shillings a Day: So they put themſelves altogether under his Command and Conduct. He has given you an Account what Diſcourſe he had with Mr Rookwood, from whom he diſcover'd what the Deſign was in which he was to be ingaged. And the Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King was firſt intended to be put in Execution on Saturday the 15th of February, at which Day Mr Harris, and others, being at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings; Sir George ſaid they were his Janiſaries, and afterwards careſt them, and ſaid they were Men of Honour, and told them that they were to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards; but it ſeems the King not going abroad that Day, they loſt that Opportunity.

Truly, Then Mr Harris began to be a little troubled, and concerned, when he underſtood the Meaning of his being under Sir George Barclay's Conduct. And he ſays that after that firſt Saturday the 15th, and before the next Saturday the 22d, he met with Lowick, Rookwood, and Bernarde, and he was complaining of his being ingaged in ſuch a Deſign as this was. He called it then the Murder of the Prince of Orange, and ſaid it was a barbarous Thing, and he did not like it, nor Rookwood neither; but as for Mr Lowick, whether he diſliked it, or no, I know not, but he made Anſwer to him, I will obey Orders: Says he, Sir George Barclay has Orders for it, or otherwiſe he would not do it.

Then you are told further, that after this, on Saturday the 22d, Mr Harris dined with Lowick at a Cook's at the End of Red Lion Street, and being there together, Harris being in a Sweat, and was asked the Reaſon by Lowick, he ſaid he had been giving of Orders for the getting ſome Men together that were to go under Rookwood, and Lowick told him he might very well do it, for he had Pay 6 s. a Day; but ſays he, I am to ſubſiſt two Men, and have nothing at all. Mr Harris wiſhed him to go to Sir George Barclay, and complain of it to him, but he ſaid he would not; but it ſeems, it being then underſtood by them that the King did not go abroad that Day, Lowick ſaid he muſt go and diſcharge the two Men, and went about it. This is the Sum and Subſtance of Mr Harris's Evidence againſt Mr Lowick.

The next Witneſs is Bertram, and he tells you that ſometime before the fifteenth of February, which was, as I told you, the very firſt Day that they did deſign to aſſaſſinate the King, Mr Lowick ſent for him, and told him, that he would put him upon a Buſineſs that ſhould be for his Advantage, if he would undertake it without asking any Queſtions; this was ſometime before, but the certain Day Bertram does not remember; but he tells you farther, that on Friday the fourteenth of February, he was with Lowick at his Lodgings, and he ſaid unto him, that the King, he did believe, was to be ſeized in his Coach, and we are to ride out ſuddenly; and then he gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries, and withal, bid him meet him at the Purle-Houſe in Hart-ſtreet next next Morning; and Bertram tells you, he had underſtood what this Deſign was, for he had it before from Charnock, and did forbear to go the next Morning, becauſe he did diſlike it. After this Mr Lowick met him and chid him for diſappointing of him, in not meeting him as he directed, for ſays he, it would have been the ſame Thing if the King had been in the Field. This is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that Bertram has given againſt him.

Now Bertram, being croſs-examined on the behalf of the Priſoner, ſays he hath known him a great while, and that he is a Man of a peaceable and fair Diſpoſition, very charitable, and that he has given him Money before, and particularly a Guinea to his Wife in his Abſence.

Indeed I might have mentioned the Evidence of Fiſher to you, but that is but circumſtantial, and does not come Home to the Caſe, but being given it may be mention'd, and that is, about the Eighth of February, Fiſher had ſome Diſcourſe with Lowick, and it ſeems there was Notice taken of the intended Invaſion, and Lowick ſaid he would ſerve his Maſter faithfully; and that the Witneſs thought was meant of the late King; and he ſaid at another Time, that he would not diſcourſe with above one at a Time, becauſe of the late Act of Parliament that was then a paſſing, relating to High Treaſon, that required two Witneſſes. Now, I ſay, this is not any Proof againſt the Priſoner, but it is a Circumſtance that may ſhew his Inclination to the late King.

The Council for the Priſoner have inſiſted upon the Inſufficiency of the Evidence that has been given on behalf of the King, and have ſaid, that the late Act of Parliament requires two Witneſſes, which is true, but not two Witneſſes to any one Overt Act; but if there be two Witneſſes, one to one and another to another Overt Act, that is ſufficient; but they ſay that it is not ſo in this Caſe.

In the firſt Place, they object againſt the Evidence that is given by Harris, they ſay it is ſhort, that muſt be left to your Conſideration; whether the Evidence that is given by Harris, concerning Mr Lowick, does prove to your Satisfaction, that he conſented and agreed to the Aſſaſſination of the King, you are to weigh the Evidence, when it is ſworn that when Harris, Rookwood, and the Priſoner were walking in Red Lion Fields, and talking of this horrid Deſign, and Harris complained that it was a barbarous Thing to murther the Prince of Orange, as they call'd him, you muſt conſider what Anſwer Lowick did make about obeying of Orders; then his ſubſiſting of Men at his own Charge without Pay, and complaining of his having no Pay, and his diſcharging them the laſt Day that the Aſſaſſination was intended, that I muſt leave to you, whether or no this is not an Evidence, if you believe the Witneſs, to ſatisfie you that he was engaged in this Deſign.

Then Gentlemen, he has alſo been deſir'd to give an Anſwer to this Queſtion, and to tell upon what Deſign he was to employ Bertram that ſhould be for his Advantage; but he was to ask no Queſtions, and afterwards whether he did tell him the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and they were to ride out ſuddenly and bid him meet him the next Morning, and when he did not meet him, he ſaid, It would have been the ſame Thing if the King had been in the Field. If this be an Evidence of Mr Lowick's engaging in and agreeing and conſenting to the Deſign, then here will be another Witneſs againſt the Priſoner beſides Harris.

Gentlemen, you are to judge of this Matter and of the Evidence. It is true, we are not to put, in the Caſe of a Man's Life, any forced and violent Conſtructions upon any Words or Diſcourſes; but if the Evidence be plain and clear, tho' he did not ſay in expreſs Words, that he did deſign to aſſaſſinate or kill the King; yet, if upon the whole Diſcourſe that paſt between them it appears plainly, clearly, and ſatisfactorily to you that he did conſent and agree to this Deſign, or was engaged in it, here's another Witneſs, I ſay, to prove him guilty, beſides Harris; you are to conſider the whole Evidence, the ſubject Matter of Diſcourſe, and if you are ſatisfied, I ſay, that he was engaged in ſuch a Deſign by the Proof of Bertram, as well as of Harris, then there are two Witneſſes, which is as much as the Law requires.

But, indeed, the Council have called ſeveral Witneſſes to prove that the Priſoner has lived very peaceably and quietly; one Woman ſays, She has known him twelve Years, and that he lodged at her Houſe, and that he was a Man of great Temper and Candour, and not diſorderly, but had a general good Eſteem and Character: And then there is another, Mrs Moſely, that proves the like, and ſays, She has known him theſe twenty Years, and ſhe ſays no Man has a better Character: And Mr Bertram hath ſaid, that he was not of a raſh or bloody Temper.

Now, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you, upon the Evidence that you have heard, there are theſe Witneſſes that have been produced, and there are theſe Circumſtances that appear in the Caſe; if you are ſatisfied upon this Evidence that has been given, that the Priſoner Mr Lowick, did conſent to and engage himſelf in that Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, then you are to find him guilty; if you are not ſatisfied, you are to find him not guilty; you have heard your Evidence, and had beſt conſider of it.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew, and ſtaid out about half an Hour, and then returned.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen of the Jury, anſwer to your Names, George Ford.

Mr. Ford. Here. (And ſo of the reſt.)

Cl. of Ar. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, Is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge, we do not find any.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that Robert Lowick is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury.

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Diſcharge the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Court diſcharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

L. C. J. Mr Attorney, Will you have the Priſoners ſet to the Bar?

Mr Att. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

Then the Keeper of Newgate brought Rookwood and Cranburne, and all three were ſet to the Bar.

Mr Att. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to give Judgment againſt the Priſoners that are convicted.

L. C. J. Ask them what they have to ſay for themſelves in Arreſt of Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand; you ſtand convicted of High Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, what can you ſay for your ſelf why the Court ſhould not give Judgment againſt you, to die according to Law.

[Then the Keeper bid him kneel.]

L. C J. No, no, he need not kneel; if you have any Thing to ſay, Mr Lowick, we will hear you.

Lowick. I throw my ſelf upon the King's Mercy.

Cl. of Arr. Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) you ſtand convicted of the ſame High Treaſon, for Conſpiring the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, what can you ſay for your ſelf why the Court ſhould not give you Judgment to die according to Law.

Rookwood. All that can be ſaid has been ſaid already, and ſo I ſhall ſay no more.

Cl. of Arr. Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand, thou ſtandeſt convicted of High Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give the Judgment to die according to Law?

Cranburne. I have nothing to ſay but what I have ſaid already.

Cl. of Arr. Then Cryer make Proclamation.

Cryer. O, yes, all Manner of Perſons are commanded to keep Silence while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, you have been indicted, and upon full and clear Evidence have been convicted of High Treaſon; a Treaſon that was advanc'd to the higheſt Degree both of Malice and Miſchief againſt the King and Kingdom; you deſign'd to aſſaſſinate the King with an Intent to ſubvert the State, and by the introducing of a foreign Power to deſtroy the antient Liberty and Conſtitution of England.

Our French and Popiſh Enemies, by whom you were imployed in this bloody Enterpriſe, did very well know, that the Wiſdom and Courage of his preſent Majeſty has reſcued this Kingdom from that Slavery and Oppreſſion which they often threatened to bring upon us; they knew that under his Government we have been protected in the Enjoyment of our Religion, Laws and Liberty for ſeveral Years, and that his Majeſty is the Head of the Proteſtant Intereſt, and the Protector and Preſerver of the Liberty of Europe, and that upon the Preſervation of his Life and the Safety of his Perſon, the Good and Happineſs of Multitudes of People do depend, which the French King's Pride and Ambition has been ready to take hold of any Opportunity to enſlave and oppreſs.

Your being engaged in ſuch a horrid Deſign againſt ſo precious a Life, and to be the bloody Inſtruments to give that diſmal Stroke, which would have brought Miſery and Deſolation upon ſo many Men, renders you worthy to undergo a greater and more ſevere Puniſhment than by the Law of England can be inflicted; but that there is no greater provided for ſuch Criminals, is to be imputed to the antient Honeſty and Integrity of Engliſh Men, who, when they fram'd this Conſtitution of Government, never imagin'd England ſhould produce ſuch degenerate Wretches, as would endeavour by Plots and Contrivances to betray their Country to a foreign Yoak, and ſubject themſelves and their Fellow Subjects to the ſlaviſh Dominion of Strangers.

Your Crime being ſo great, it is now high Time for you ſeriouſly to reflect upon it; and tho' you deſerve to ſuffer the greateſt of Puniſhments, yet I have that Compaſſion for your Perſons, that I wiſh heartily you would make Uſe of that Opportunity which is now put into your Hands, to repent. And ſince you are adjudg'd by the Law unworthy to live here, that you will make Preparation to appear at another Tribunal, where you muſt have another Tryal, and, without an hearty and ſincere Repentance, receive a more ſevere Sentence. I hope this Calamity, and the Judgment that is to fall upon you, will be an Admonition to you to take better Advice in the laſt Part of your Time which is left you, than you have done in the whole Courſe of your Lives, and that you will be wiſer than to follow the Direction of thoſe Guides whoſe Principles and Doctrines have ſo far perverted and corrupted you, as to ingage you in ſuch a bloody Deſign. I ſhall leave you to make that Preparation for another World, which is proper for Men in your Condition, and pronounce the Judgment of the Court, which the Law hath appointed and the Court does award;

That all of you be conveyed from hence to the Priſon from whence you came, and from thence every one of you is to be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hanged by your Necks, and to be cut down while you are alive, your Privy Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels to be cut out of your Bodies and burnt in your View, your Heads are to be cut off, and your Bodies to be divided into four Parts, and your Heads and Quarters are to be diſpoſed where his Majeſty ſhall appoint. And I pray God to have Mercy on all your Souls.

Cranburne. I humbly deſire the Liberty of my Wife and Relations to come to me, and ſuch Divines as I ſhall deſire may have free Recourſe to me.

L. C. J. You ſhall have that Liberty that is allowed to all Perſons in your Condition.

Rookwood.

Rookwood. I muſt beg the ſame Favour, to have ſome few Friends and Relations come to ſee me without a Keeper.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have a Warrant for your Friends to come to you.

Rookwood. I beg your Lordſhip that you would pleaſe to ſpecifie it in the Warrant, becauſe they would not grant hitherto without a Keeper being by.

L. C. J. You mean, you would have your Brother permitted to come to you.

Rookwood. Yes, and ſome few Relations.

L. C. J. What is uſually done in ſuch Caſes, let it be done.

Lowick. My Lord, I deſire the ſame Thing, that my Siſter may come to me, and that the little Time I have I may be in private with my Friends.

Mr Att. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, they may give the Names of thoſe they would have admitted to them, and then the Keeper will attend your Lordſhip for your Direction.

L. C. J. That the Keeper muſt take care of, leaſt they allow ſuch a Liberty as may endanger an Eſcape; for their being alone may prove a dangerous Thing.

Mr Att. Gen. It is reaſonable they ſhould tell who they are, before they be admitted.

L. C. J. You allow them, I ſuppoſe, to have private Diſcourſe in the ſame Room, if a Keeper be by.

Cranburne. No, my Lord, we never had.

Mr Att. Gen. Such as your Lordſhip thinks proper to be admitted to them may have Diſcourſe with them in private, if the Keeper be in the Room, but no others but ſuch as your Lordſhip ſhall allow; for we know what has been the Effect of a Liberty of Acceſs to ſome Priſoners.

L. C. J. Let us have a Note of thoſe Names that you would have come to you, and we will give Directions that ſhall be proper in it.

Cl. of Arr. Sheriff of Middleſex, you muſt take them into your Cuſtody till Execution is done.

Then the Keeper took away the Priſoners.

The TRYAL of PETER COOK, Gent.

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

Die Sabbati Nono Maii Anno Domini, 1696. Annoque Regni Gulielmi Tertii, Octavo.

At the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, London.

Dominus Rex Verſus Petrum Cook.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of Mr Peter Cook, upon an Indictment of High-Treaſon found againſt him by the Grand Jury for the City of London, upon the Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the ſaid City, upon which Indictment he had been Arraigned, and upon pleading not guilty, Iſſue had been joined, and the Court having been adjourned unto this Day for the Trial by publick Proclamation in uſual manner, the Court was reſumed, and the Names of the Men returned to ſerve on the Jury, having been called over according to the Pannel, and the Defaulters recorded; the Court proceeded as follows.

Cl. of Ar. Set Peter Cook, the Priſoner, to the Bar: (Which was done.) You the Priſoner at the Bar, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will Challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak to them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Cook. Sir, I deſire you would not name them too faſt, for my Eyes are very bad.

Cl. of Arr. John Ewer.

Cook. Who muſt I apply my ſelf to, Sir? I deſire to know whether he is a Freeholder in London?

Cl. of Arr. I know nothing to the contrary, Sir, he is returned as ſuch by the Sheriff; you had beſt ask him himſelf, he can beſt tell.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Ewer. Yes, Sir, I am a Freeholder.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Sherbrook.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr Sherbrook. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I challenge you. —— No, Sir, I beg your Pardon, I do not challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Then hold Mr Sherbrook the Book: (Which was done.) Look upon the Priſoner: You ſhall well and truly try and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, according to your Evidence, So help you God.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Billers.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London?

Mr Billers. Yes, I am.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. John Brand.

Cook.

Cook. Pray, Sir, don't go too faſt; Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Brand. I am no Freeholder in London.

L. C. J. Treby. What ſay you, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not have any Body that is not a Freeholder ſerve; ſo he was ſet by.

Cl. of Arr. William Hull.

Mr Hull. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.

L. C. J. Treby. Why, what Eſtate have you?

Mr Hull. What I have, is in Leaſes.

L. C. J. Treby. What, Leaſes for Years, or Leaſes for Lives?

Mr Hull. Leaſes for Years, Sir.

L. C. J. Treby. Then he cannot ſerve upon the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Leeds.

Cook. Hold, Sir, let me ſee; are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Leeds. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you then.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Clark.

Cook. Hold, Sir, I pray let me look upon my Paper. I challenge him.

A Stander-by. He does not appear.

Cl. of Arr. Nathan Green.

Cook. Where is he, Sir? Are you a Freeholder?

Mr Green. Yes, I am, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Emes.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Emes. Yes, I am.

Cook. Were you one of Sir John Friend's Jury?

Mr Emes. Yes, I was.

Cook. Then I challenge you for Cauſe, and I give you my Reaſon.

Mr Serj. Darnall. I pray, let us hear your Reaſon; give your Reaſon for your Challenge.

Cook. It is for being of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Then you challenge him for Cauſe.

Cook. Yes, that he was of Sir John Friend's Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, Brother Darnall, how is that a Cauſe of Challenge? You are the Priſoner's Council, let us hear what you ſay to it.

Mr Serj. Darnall. My Lord, what we have to ſay to it, is this; Here are ſome Perſons returned upon this Pannel, that were formerly Jurors in a Cauſe that was try'd for the ſame Species of Treaſon that this Gentleman, the Priſoner, is charged with in this Indictment; and I think the Witneſſes at that Trial did mention in their Evidence my Client, as being preſent at thoſe very Conſults, about which they gave their Evidence; theſe Gentlemen gave Credit to thoſe Witneſſes, and found the Verdict againſt the Perſon then accuſed. We humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Court, whether we may not for this Cauſe challenge this Perſon as not indifferent, it being for the ſame Cauſe and Conſult, that the other was try'd for.

Mr Att. Gen. Sure Mr Serjeant is not in earneſt in this Objection.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. My Client thinks it a very good Objection, that he is not indifferent, and I deſire he ſhould be ſatisfied in it.

Mr Att. Gen. If he thinks ſo, he may except againſt him, but if he inſiſts upon it as a Cauſe of Challenge, we deſire you would put the Caſe, and my Lords the Judges determine it.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. I have told you what the Caſe is.

L. C. J. Treby. But you hear the King's Council inſiſt upon it, to have you make it out in Point of Law.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. My Lord, I have ſtated the Caſe as my Client deſired, and we ſubmit it to you.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, there is nothing in it.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Then my Client, if he will not have him ſerve, muſt challenge him peremptorily; which he did.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Byer.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder?

Mr Byer. Yes, I am.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. James Denew.

Mr Denew. I am no Freeholder.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Hunter.

Cook. Hold, hold, my Lord, I challenge him as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Baker. Nay that was not allowed in Mr Emes's Caſe; but you challenged him peremptorily, and ſo you muſt now, if you have a Mind to it.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. John Hall.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Hall. Yes, I am, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Cullum.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr Cullum. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Cox.

Mr Cox. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.

Cl. of Arr. John Hedges.

Cook. Hold, I pray, Sir, let me look upon my Paper; Sir, Are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr Hedges. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas James.

Mr James. My Lord, my Name is not Thomas.

Mr Sh. Buckingham. He is returned, it ſeems, by a wrong Name; we did not know it.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Then you cannot ſwear him.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Poole.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Poole. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him, as being of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Att. Gen. That has been over-ruled already.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Parker.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr Parker. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Baker. Nay, you can't offer it again.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. George Grove.

Cook. Where is he? Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Grove. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Nathanael Wyerſdell.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr Wyerſdell. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Blewit.

Cook. Hold, pray, Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Blewit.

Mr Blewit. Yes, I am.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. John Wolfe.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Wolfe. He did not appear, and was ſaid to be no Freeholder.

Cl. of Arr. William Smith.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Smith. Yes, I am.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Fenwick.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Fenwick. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Then ſwear Mr Fenwick. (Which was done.)

Benjamin Hooper.

Cook. Stay, Sir, pray ſtay a little, where is he?

Cl. of Arr. There he is, Sir.

Cook. Which is the Gentleman? Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Hooper. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Mr Hooper. I thank you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Nathaniel Long.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Long. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him, as being of Sir John Frind's Jury.

Cl. of Arr. The Court has adjudged that no Cauſe of Challenge, therefore I take no notice of it, but as a peremptory Challenge.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Chiſwell.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Chiſwell. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Child.

Cook. Hold, pray, a Moment; I have not croſt theſe laſt in my Paper, but I challenge this Man, being of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Baker. You have had that anſwered over and over again, as no Objection; it is nothing but a peremptory Challenge.

Cl. of Arr. William Walker.

Mr Walker. I was one of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Cook. I challenge him for the ſame Reaſon.

Mr Att. Gen. But that is no Reaſon at all.

Cook. Then I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. John Wells.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?

Mr Wells. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. Sir I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Hibbert.

Cook. Which is he, Sir?

Cl. of Arr. He ſtands upon your left Hand; the Man in the Black Peruke.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Hibbert. Yes, I am, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Daniel Wray.

Cook. Stay, Sir, are you Mr Wray?

Mr Wray, Yes, Sir, my Name is Wray.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Wray. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Mr Wray. I thank you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit.

Cook. Which is he?

Mr Pettit. I am the Man, Sir.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr Pettit. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Sherbrook.

Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Baker. But you have heard that denied to be an Exception over and over.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Stephen Blackwell.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Blackwell. Yes, I am.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. William Hatch.

Cook. Pray give me time to mark them; pray, who is this Man you now call?

Cl. of Arr. William Hatch.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder?

Mr Hatch. Yes, I am.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Beadle.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Beadle. Yes, I am.

Cook. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Stredwick.

Mr Stredwick. My Lord, as I apprehend, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. Why do you apprehend ſo?

Mr Stredwick. It is my Wife's Eſtate, not mine.

Cl. of Arr. Then your Wife has a Freehold, it ſeems.

Mr Stredwick. Yes, ſhe has.

L. C. J. Treby. That is Freehold enough; for you have an Eſtate for your Wife's Life.

Mr Baker. And after that too, for it is not given over to any Body elſe, and ſhe wont give it from him.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London or no?

Mr Stredwick. I apprehend, Sir, I am not.

Mr Baker. He ſays he has an Eſtate for his Wife's Life.

Cl. of Ar. Then he is a Freeholder, what do you ſay to him?

Cook. Are you poſitive you are a Freeholder in London upon your Word?

Mr Stredwick. I think not.

Mr Baker. Why your Wife's Eſtate is your's for your Life.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, here is a Man that ſays poſitively he thinks he is no Freeholder, I deſire your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether he be a Freeholder or not?

L. C. J. Treby. Why, let him put his Caſe, if he make a Doubt of it.

Mr Stredwick. I am not poſſeſt of any Eſtate my ſelf.

L. C. J. Treby. But is not your Wife an Inheritrix?

Mr Stredwick. Yes, my Lord, ſhe is.

L. C. J. Treby. Then you are ſeized of a Freehold in her Right; and Mr Cook, your own Council will tell you and ſatisfy you, that that is a Freehold ſufficient for this Service.

Mr Baker. His Wife's Father ſettled it upon her and her Heirs.

L. C. J. Treby. No queſtion, it is a ſufficient Freehold if the Wife be living.

Mr Baker. Yes, ſhe is.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. William Prince.

Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr Prince.

Mr Prince. I thank you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. John Simmons.

Mr At. Gen. We challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Arr. Robert White.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir.

Mr White. Yes, I think ſo.

Cook. Pray tell me whether you are, or not.

Mr White. Indeed I think ſo, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Brewſter.

Cook. Where is Mr Brewſter? Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London?

Mr Brewſter. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him. Pray Sir, I deſire to know how many I have challenged.

Mr Baker. You have challenged Thirty Three.

Cook. How many beſides thoſe that are of Sir John Freind's Jury.

Mr Baker. You have but two more to challenge, Sir.

Mr Serj. Darnall. I thought you had heard the Opinion of the Court, Mr Cook, that it will not hold as a Cauſe of Challenge that he was of Sir John Freind's Jury, therefore thoſe are all reckoned among the peremptory Challenges, and you can challenge but Two more in all.

L. C. J. Treby. Not without Cauſe, but as many more as you can have good Cauſe againſt.

Cl. of Arr. John Reynolds.

Cook. I except not againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Brookbank.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay to him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Adam Bellamy.

Mr Bellamy. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. Why, what Eſtate have you?

Mr Baker. He has Eſtate enough, I know, for Value.

Mr Bellamy. I have only a Leaſe.

L. C. J. Treby. A Leaſe for Years?

Mr Bellamy. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. David Grill.

Mr Grill. I am no Freeholder, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. William Rawlins.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Roycroft.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr Roycroft. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Parker.

Cook. How many have I to challenge, do you ſay?

Cl. of Ar. But one, Sir; what ſay you to Mr Parker?

Cook. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. James Robinſon.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay to him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Morewood.

Cook. I challenge him.

Mr Baker. You have challenged all your Number now.

Cl. of Arr. My Lord, we have gone through the Pannel, we muſt now call the Defaulters again. Thomas Clark.

Mr Clark. Here.

Sir B. Shower. Was he here when he was call'd over?

Mr At. Gen. That's nothing, he is here now.

Sir B. Shower. But if there be a Default of the Jury, and the King's Council have challenged any one, they ought to ſhew their Cauſe; therefore we deſire that they may ſhew their Cauſe why they challeng'd Mr Simmons.

L. C. J. Treby. The King has Power to challenge without ſhewing Cauſe till the Pannel be gone through; but if there be a Default of Jurors when the King challenges, the King's Council muſt ſhew Cauſe.

Sir B. Shower. Here is a Default of Jurors, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. No Body is Recorded abſolutely a Defaulter, if he comes in time enough to be ſworn.

Cl. of Arr. Swear Mr Clark. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Treby. When there is an apparent Default of Jurors, then they muſt ſhew their Cauſe; but here his Appearance, it ſeems, was recorded, and ſo he was no Defaulter; and you might have challenged him for Cauſe ſtill.

Cl. of Arr. James Dry.

Mr Dry. My Name is not James.

Serj. Darnall. Then you cannot ſwear him: Here are Three miſtaken in their Names.

L. C. J. Treby. That is in the Copy in your Brief, Brother, it may be.

Mr Serj. Darnall. No, my Lord, the Officers admit it.

Mr At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire thoſe Gentlemen, that ſay they are no Freeholders, may be ſworn to that Matter. (Which was accordingly done.) And ſeveral of them that had ſtaid, did deny the having of any Freehold upon Oath, and ſome were gone away.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray take care to eſtreat the Iſſues, and return greater Iſſues the next time.

Mr F. Rokeby. Truly the Court muſt put ſome great Penalty upon them for trifling with the Court in reſpect of their Duty that they owe to the King and Country, in regard of their Eſtates.

Cl. of Arr. Pray, let the Officers be called who ſummoned this Jury, Mr Sheriff.

(Which was done.) And they examined concerning their ſummoning thoſe who made Default, and the Iſſues of thoſe who were recorded as Defaulters were ordered to be eſtreated.

Then the Court not being able to proceed for want of a Jury, they ordered another Pannel to be ready againſt Wedneſday next, to which time, at Seven in the Morning, the Court was by Proclamation adjourned.

Die Mercurii Decimo Tertio Maii, Anno Dom. 1696.

The Court being met according to the Adjournment, the Pannel was called over, and the Defaulters Recorded, and ſeveral excuſed for Abſence upon Sickneſs, and being out of Town before the Summons. Then Mr. Serjeant Darnall deſired before the Jury was called, to move ſomething againſt the Pannel: And made his Motion thus;

Mr Serj. Darnall. IF your Lordſhip pleaſes, I have ſomewhat to offer to you before you go upon this new Pannel; and I confeſs, I think it is my Duty to the Court, as well as to the Priſoner, to ſtate the Caſe as it is, and ſubmit it upon the Reaſon of Law, and the Authorities that I ſhall offer, whether the Proceedings upon this new Pannel will not be erroneons? My Lord, the Queſtion is, Whether as this Caſe is, the Priſoner has had a Copy of the Pannel of his Jury by which he is to be tried, according as the late Law requires? he had a Copy of the former Pannel, and upon that Pannel Nine were ſworn, and their Names all entered upon Record, and made Parcel of the Record. Therefore now the Queſtion is, whether he can be tried upon a new Pannel? We are in a Caſe that rarely happens; and in a Caſe of Life and Death, I know your Lordſhip will be careful not to vary from the ancient Practice, or to make a new Precedent, becauſe of the Conſequences. It muſt be agreed in this Caſe, that the old Pannel upon which the Priſoner took his Challenges, and of which Nine were ſworn, is Parcel of the Record. Now, my Lord, to add a new Pannel, upon which Twelve more ſhall be ſworn, and all this appear upon Record, and the Priſoner tried upon the laſt Pannel, will not this be Error? I offer this before the Jury be called and ſworn, becauſe we deſire to be fairly tried; and we deſign to reſt upon the Fact in this Caſe. If it ſhould appear, That he is tried upon a Pannel that is unduly made and returned, that will be of Evil Conſequence one way or other. And can this be duly made, if another appear upon Record before it? And can any Body ſay it is quaſht or abated? Or can it be ſo? My Lord, in Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, p. 155. it is ſaid, If any of the Pannel die after the Return, and before their Appearance, ſo that there are not enough left to make the Jury, yet the Pannel ſhall not be quaſht, nor is it abated, but it is Cauſe to grant a Tales. And certainly, my Lord, it is a ſtronger Caſe, when by reaſon of Challenges, which the Law gives the Priſoner liberty to make, there are not enough left, that there ſhall not be a new Pannel, but that a Tales ſhall be granted; for if a new Pannel might be made, it cannot appear who were challenged, or who were admitted. And if your Lordſhip Pleaſes to conſider the Intention of the Law in giving the Priſoner Power to challenge, is, that he may have an indifferent Jury; but that would be prevented by ſuch a Practice as this; for when it has been diſcovered upon the old Pannel whom the Priſoner choſe, and whom he challenged upon the new Pannel, the Perſons challenged may be ſet firſt, and thoſe that were choſen may be omitted, or ſo poſtponed, that none of them whom he thought equal to try him, can ſerve upon the Jury. And truly, my Lord, if I am rightly informed, that is the Caſe upon this new Pannel, ſome of thoſe that were admitted and ſworn are left out, and moſt of them, I think, are put laſt in the Pannel whom he thought equal Men to try him, and all thoſe whom he challenged peremptorily, are the firſt Men in the Pannel. This, my Lord, is the Caſe before you, and if this be admitted, the Uſe and End of Challenges, which are in benefit and favour of Life wou'd be defeated. And for Authorities in this Caſe, beſides the Reaſon and Ground of the Law, many cannot be expected, becauſe it is a Fact that rarely happens. I find none of the ancient Practicers ever knew it, but I find that a Tales ought to be granted, ſo it is ſaid in ſeveral Books, as in Stamford, 155, 156. when ever upon the Principal Pannel, all the Jury does not appear, or ſo many of them do not, that there are not enough left to make a Jury, which is our very Caſe; then in ſuch Caſe the Pannel ſhall not be quaſht or abated; but a Tales granted, ſo is 14 H. 7. 7. there the Queſtion was, Whether there ſhould be a greater Number returned upon the Tales than were in the Principal Pannel, and there the Difference was inſiſted upon, aud agreed, That where it is between Party and Party, where Life is not concerned, it ſhall not, but where Life is concerned, and the Priſoner has Power to challenge peremptorily, there the Judge may award as many upon the Tales as he pleaſes, that there may be enough to remain after the Challanges; ſo that if this old Pannel be not abated, and cou'd not be quaſht, and a Tales might be granted to conſiſt of any Number, I conceive the Priſoner cannot be tried upon this new Pannel, but it will be Erroneous; and I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips, whether you will proceed upon it.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſpare me a Word of the ſame Side, with Submiſſion, We think there ought to have been an Habeas Corpora, with a Tales, ſuch as had been before Sworn, being to be Part of the Jury now, and that is the proper Way to bring the Priſoner to his Trial in this Caſe; the King's Council cannot expect we ſhould produce many Precedents, for I believe this is the Second of the Kind that ever happened, at leaſt, within Memory, That a Trial in Treaſon was put off pro defectu Juratorum, though I have a Precedent that I think is expreſs in the Caſe; but we inſiſt in the firſt Place, That a Tales does lie at Common-Law, in the Caſe of Life; and ſo the Book that Mr Serjeant cited in Stamford, is expreſs; and then we ſay, that the Anſwer which we expect, that we are now before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, is not ſufficient, becauſe the Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, though they do not uſually award Proceſs by way of Writ, but before their coming, they command the Sheriff to have his County ready there, and ſo in Fact, it is a Parol Precept; yet when it is returned, then it is entred upon Record, either Præceptum eſt Vice Comiti quod venire faceret; or, Ideo veniat Jurata; and the Jury are entred upon Record: So that take it to be before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, yet the Sheriff having returned a Pannel, and that being upon the File, as appears before your Eyes, in Obedience to your Command, and that Copy of the Pannel being delivered to us two Days before Saturday laſt, we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether by Force of the Common-Law, and of the late Act of Parliament, we ought not to be tried by that Pannel; we inſiſt upon it, that the Act intends, and expreſsly deſigned, that not only the Priſoner ſhou'd have a Copy of the Pannel that the Sheriff returned at any time after, but that he ſhould be tried by the Pannel that we had a Copy of at firſt; for it is not ſaid a Copy, toties quoties the Court ſhall think fit to award a Precept for a new Pannel, but the Words of the Act are a Copy of the Jury duly teturned by the Sheriff; now this we had, and your Lordſhip knows it is not a returned Pannel till it be in Court, and then it becomes part of the Record: My Lord, I do agree the Juſtices in ſome Caſes have quaſht and ſet aſide Pannels and Juries, and ordered new ones, and I confeſs there was an extraordinary Caſe in the Time of King Charles the Second, which was upon the Indictment againſt Whitebread, where after the Jury Charged, and Evidence given, the Jury was diſcharged, and a new Pannel made the next Seſſions, upon which Mr Whitebread was Tryed and

Con-

Convicted; how juſt or regular that was, I will not inſiſt upon now, but I am ſure there were great Complaints of that Practice, and few Precedents can be ſhewn of the like: But beſides, the Parties themſelves waved it there, no Objection being taken againſt it; but we inſiſt upon it in this Caſe, that this being upon Record, is Part of the Record, and ſo appears to the Court: If the Record indeed were to be made up upon a Writ of Error, perhaps it wou'd be no Error, becauſe it may be they wou'd leave it out; but here it appears there was a Pannel of Record before you, and this muſt either be quaſh'd, or altered, or continued on by Proceſs; you have Power to quaſh it, if it be unduly returned by the Sheriff. If there be any evil Practices for procuring the Pannel, either by the Proſecutor, or the Priſoner; if there be no Freeholders return'd, or the ſame happen in any other reſpect not to be legally done according to the Command or Precept of the Court; but becauſe there is a Default of Appearance of Jurors, no Pannel was ever quaſh'd upon that Account. Then ſay we, if it be not quaſh'd, this Pannel muſt continue; for, What ſhall become of it? Why ſhould it not continue? It is not within the Act of Parliament that gives the Juſtices Power to make a new Pannel, as in the Caſe of a Grand Jury when they are guilty of Concealments, or refuſe to find Bills upon great Evidence, but we have no ſuch Caſe before you, nor do I know any ſuch Rule as can reach this; ſo that we take it, there is no Difference between this Caſe, as before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, and other Juſtices; that Proceſs does lie againſt the Jury that does not appear even in Treaſon and Felony, there is no Diſpute, and it is very properly ſo, if it be before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer; firſt a Venire facias, and then upon Default, a Habeas Corpora, that is the proper Way; then take it before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, there it is entered upon Record, Præceptum eſt Vice Comiti, &c. and here is a Pannel returned by virtue of this Precept, and ſome of the Jury do not appear, and ſo there are not enough to Try the Priſoner after a great many Sworn and Challenged, and this entered upon Record. What ſhall become of that Pannel, it cannot be quaſh'd nor abated? My Lord, there is a Caſe that does warrant that Opinion of a Tales in a Caſe of Felony; and if there may be a Tales, then there may be an Habeas Corpora, and there are Directions how the Jurors ſhall be Sworn again, upon their appearance on the Habeas Corpora, and that is Wharton's Caſe in Yelverton 23.

Mr J. Powell, jun. Do not diſpute that, it is plain, that a Tales does lie in Felony, upon a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer; but can you ſhew me, Sir Bartholomew, any where, that upon a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery a Tales does lie?

Sir B. Shower. Sir, I can only ſhew the Reaſon of the Law, and I cannot find that does contradict what we now contend for.

Mr J. Powell. I tell you, Sir Bartholomew, there is no Tales but with a Habeas Corpora to bring in the firſt Jurors, and that cannot be upon a parol Precept on a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, there goes a Venire facias, which is a Writ upon which the Habeas Corpora may be grounded, but there is no Venire facias upon a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery.

Sir B. Shower. Why ſhould there not be a Precept in nature of an Habeas Corpora for a Jury return'd, upon a Precept as well as on a Writ?

Mr J. Powell. No, it never was done; the Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery is a general Commiſſion that does Authorize the Sheriff to impannel, and have a Jury ready at the Day appointed, for the Delivery of the Goal, to Try the Priſoners; it doth import in it ſelf a general Precept for that Purpoſe, before Iſſue joyned, which the Sheriff cannot do in the Caſe of a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, but muſt have a Writ of Venire facias, after Iſſue joyned.

Mr Sol. Gen. In all the Caſes that they cite, there is a Writ of Venire facias, upon which the After-proceſs, by Writ, may be grounded; but here is no Foundation for any future Proceſs by Writ, becauſe it is only by Parol-Precept.

Mr Att. Gen. Sure theſe Gentlemen don't think what they ſay; the Pannel is not Part of the Record, and there is no Record of it; nothing but the Clerk's Entry in a Paper, or Note, for his own Memorandum.

Mr J. Rokeby. Brother Darnal, have you any Book that ſays, Juſtices of Goal-Delivery muſt award a Tales upon Default of the Jurors.

Mr Serj. Darnal. No, my Lord, I cannot ſay ſo.

L. C. J. Treby. Suppoſe all the Jury had been challenged, or dy'd.

Mr J. Powell. There could be no quaſhing of it, but it would fall of it ſelf, for Want of a Jury.

Mr J. Rokeby. If, according to your Doctrine, we muſt keep to the firſt Pannel, the Conſequence wou'd be, there would be no Tryal at all.

Sir B. Shower. Stamford makes no Difference that I can ſee.

Mr Att. Gen. But theſe Gentlemen have been told the Difference upon which this Matter is grounded; a Tales cannot be without a Habeas Corpora, and a Habeas Corpora cannot be without a Venire facias; but a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery cannot award a Venire facias, becauſe that is not to be awarded till Iſſue joyned.

Mr B. Powis. The Return of this Pannel before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, is an Act of the Sheriff, by virtue of the Commiſſion, and nothing appears of Record till the Jury are Sworn.

Mr J. Rokeby. They object that it is upon Record.

L. C. J. Treby. By the Record, they mean the Clerk's Note.

Mr Att. Gen. If you pleaſe to look upon the Indictment, there is no Entry at all, and that is all the Record before you.

Mr J. Powell. Does it appear upon Record, that Nine were Sworn?

Mr Baker. No; there is nothing upon the Record.

Cler. of Arr. It does not appear till the Record is made up, and nothing is entered till Twelve are Sworn.

Mr Serj. Darnal. There will be a great Inconvenience, if a Pannel may be changed at any Time.

Mr J. Powell. This is a Caſe that never happened before, and may be never may again.

Sir B. Shower. The Law will hold the ſame, in caſe it does appear upon Record, as well as where it does not: But we ſay, a Pannel return'd in Court is a Record.

Mr J. Powell. No, it will not; becauſe, when a Jury does appear, and the Twelve are Sworn, then it becomes Parcel of the Record; and therefore Whitebread's Caſe was quite another Caſe, and was indeed held to be an extraordinary Caſe, but that comes not up to this, for there a full Jury was Sworn, and Evidence given.

Mr Serj. Darnal. It may be the ſame Jury will not be returned.

Mr J. Powell. But if you have a Copy of the Jury, you are at no Miſchief.

Mr Serj. Darnal. Some that were in the former Pannel are quite left out.

Mr Sher. Buck. There are none left out, but what were not Freeholders, that I know of.

Mr B. Powis. He ſays the Fact is not true, as you have alledged it.

Mr Sher. Buck. And Mr. Serjeant Darnal has been pleaſed to reflect upon us, as if we had pack'd this Jury, by altering the Places of the Names, which, my Lord, we do utterly deny, and we only left out thoſe that were not Free-holders.

Mr B. Powis. The Sheriff ſays, he has not poſtponed any of them, and only left out thoſe that were not Free-holders.

Mr Serj. Darnal. If the Law were as plain with us as the Fact in that Caſe, we ſhould have a very good Caſe of it.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. Mr. Serjeant, I have both the Pannels here; they may be compared.

Mr Serj. Darnal. I ſaid no harm, Mr. Sheriff, nor meant any Reflection upon you.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. Mr. Serjeant was pleaſed to ſay, the excepted Men were put in the Front, and thoſe that were Sworn were put laſt.

L. C. J. Treby. There is nothing at all in the Objection.

Mr J. Powell. Really, becauſe it was opened as a Reflection, it will be proper for the Sheriff to clear it.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. My Lord, the Anſwer I give to it, is, That particularly one that was Sworn laſt Time, is now at the very Beginning of the Pannel; and in general, they are mix'd promiſcuouſly, without any Deſign or Study in the leaſt. He ſays we have left out thoſe that ſerved before: I ſolemnly proteſt, I know not one Man returned upon the laſt Pannel that is left out, unleſs it appeared that he is no Freeholder; and we had no Reaſon to put in them, that we knew could not ſerve.

Mr Serj. Darnal. That can't appear to us, that they are not Free-holders.

Mr J. Rokeby. But it appears to him, and therefore he did well to leave them out.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. What I ſay, I am ready to give upon my Oath.

Mr Serj. Darnal. I ſay there is one Henry Beadle left out, and he was one that was Sworn.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. I will not ſay for a particular Man; I proteſt that I did not know he was left out. If it be ſo, it was by Miſtake; for I know Mr. Beadle very well, and I take him to be an honeſt Man, and very well affected to the Government as any Man.

Mr Serj. Darnal. We deſire to be tryed by Men that are honeſt and well-affected to the Government.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. There you have of them, Sir.

Mr Serj. Darnal. Thoſe that were Sworn are put laſt of all, and there is not above one of them that is within poſſibility of coming on again.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. It will appear by Mr. Cook's Challenges, and the other Pannel, that they ſtood late before; and Thomas Clark, who was Sworn the laſt Time, ſtands tenth Man upon the Pannel.

Mr Serj. Darnal. He was Sworn after we had gone through the Pannel, and took all our Challenges, not appearing at firſt.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. I tell you they ſtand for the moſt Part as they did, for ought I know.

Mr Serj. Darnal. There is but one in Threeſcore and Ten, that can be Sworn now, of them that were Sworn before; and there were Nine of them then Sworn.

Mr Att. Gen. That is a Miſtake. Indeed there are a great many added to the Pannel, becauſe there was a Defect the laſt Time, and therefore now they may perhaps ſtand later.

Mr Serj. Darnal. I do not ſpeak to reflect upon the Sheriffs: I go according to my Inſtructions.

Mr J. Powel. If it had been ſo, it had been well enough, for you muſt be contented, the Court muſt take it as the Sheriff returns it, and you have a Copy of it.

Mr Att. Gen. Here are four of them that were Sworn before, that ſtood above ſixty off in the old Pannel.

Mr Sher. Buckingham. The firſt Man that was Sworn, Mr. Sherbrook, ſtands within the firſt Twelve now, as well as before.

Mr J. Powell. If they had been all new, there had been nothing in that.

Mr J. Rokeby. Truly, I can't ſee but that the Sheriff hath done like an equal, juſt, fair, and honeſt Officer.

Mr Att. Gen. They may challenge as they will.

L. C. J. Treby. You are to conſider, that this happens becauſe you run out as far as your utmoſt Number, that Time you challenged Thirty-five peremptorily, and divers others for Cauſe, ſo as not to leave enough for a Jury; and from that alone aroſe a Neceſſity of increaſing the Number of the Pannel.

Mr Serj. Darnal. It was our Client that challenged them, we do not adviſe him whom to challenge.

Mr J. Rokeby. But you muſt take the Conſequence of it, which cauſes this Addition to the Pannel.

L. C. J. Treby. What do you complain of? they that are returned, are put in the ſame Order as they were before; they that were Sworn, were (for the moſt Part) late in the Pannel then, and ſo they are now. I do not find any Thing done to the Prejudice of the Priſoner.

Mr Serj. Darnal. If the Chriſtian Names had not been miſtaken, there had been perhaps enough to have been Sworn.

L. C. J. Treby. That's a good Argument for a new Pannel, becauſe the Chriſtian Names were miſtaken before.

Mr J. Powell. It was by Defect of Jurors, and therefore there was an abſolute Neceſſity of a new Pannel.

L. C. J. Treby. I am of the ſame Opinion.

Wharton's Caſe is well known: It was much cited as to another Point in Buſhel's Caſe. It was a Tryal at the King's Bench Bar at Weſtminſter by a Jury of Kent, upon an Indictment of Murther.

And I think you ſay the Caſe of H. 7. was between Party and Party in Appeal. And I believe Stamford's Diſcourſe, in the Place cited, relates chiefly to Appeals.

I ſhall not deny that a Tales may poſſibly be upon an Indictment before Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer; though 'tis not uſual, nor do you ſhew, or our experienced Clerks know any ſuch Precedent. I agree, that in the mentioned Caſes a Tales was pro-

proper; for in both Cases (viz. of Appeal and Indictment removed into the King's Bench) the Process for the Jury was as it ought to be, by Writs of Venire facias, &c. upon which a full Jury not appearing, there must be a Tales. But in proceeding to Tryal before Justices of Oyer and Terminer on such Indictment as is here, though I will not say but they may proceed by Writ of Venire facias, yet I do say, that the more known Course is by Precept, in nature of a Venire facias: And the Usage is, that after (and never before) the Prisoner hath pleaded not Guilty, there goes a Precept to the Sheriff, under the Seals of the said Justices of Oyer and Terminer, returnable at such Day as they shall adjourn to, for returning a Jury to Try it, (as was done lately, upon Advice, in the Case of Rookwood, &c.) and upon the Return of That, if, after Challenges, there are not enough left to make a Jury, whether those Justices shall issue a Precept in nature of a Habeas Corpora, or Distringas with a Tales, or another Precept in the same Form as before, and without taking notice of the former, is a Question not in Judgment before us. For, we are about proceeding to a Tryal on an Indictment in this Court of Goal-Delivery, (which is the Court wherein generally all capital Crimes are tryed, as well at this Place as at the Assizes) and, I think, here cannot be a Tales; I am sure it is not necessary. For, First, Here is never any Writ of Venire facias, &c. Secondly, Nor ever a Precept for returning a Jury to Try a particular Issue: But this Court takes the Pannels of Juries returned by the Sheriff, without any particular Precept to him.

The Course of proceeding by virtue of a Commission of Goal-Delivery, which is the Law in this Case, is this, viz. There is, antecedent to the Coming of the Justices, a general Commandment or Precept made, in Writing, to the Sheriff by the said Justices, to return Juries against their Coming, for the Trying of all and singular Prisoners in their Goal, whether they have pleaded before, or shall after. And for that Purpose it requires the Sheriff to summon, out of all Parts of his Country whence the Prisoners come, a great number of Freeholders, not a-kin to the Prisoners, to be at the Time and Place appointed for holding the Court. The Sheriff, by virtue of this general previous Precept, summoneth many for Jurors, and prepares diverse several Pannels of their Names, either at first, or afterwards, as appears necessary, and returneth and delivereth in one or more of these Pannels from Time to Time, as the Court does need, and call for any: This, we know, in Fact, is frequently done where the Sessions of Goal-Delivery lasts several Days, and there is occasion. Though, in Supposition of Law, all these Pannels are returned, and the Tryals thereupon had the first Day of the Sessions; and, in Law, it is intended to be but that one Day only. The Return of this Precept is thus, viz. Executio istius Præcepti patet in quibusdam Pannellis huic præcepto annexis, and the Pannels are annexed, and there are often filed here divers Pannels upon the same general Precept, though sometimes but One. These Pannels are thus delivered into Court, and a Jury taken out of them, as there is occasion, only upon a Parol Award, that is, barely the Court's calling for the same, without Writ or Precept in Writing, or giving any Day for the Doing it. For, this Proceeding is immediate, for the speedy Delivery of Prisoners; and the Entry, after setting forth that the Prisoner being arraigned pleads not Guilty, is, Ideo immediatè veniat inde Jurata, or fiat inde Jurata: And this Court's being instituted for the speedy Delivery of Prisoners, and Warnings being given long before, of their Coming, are the Causes why it has been always held without doubt, that Justices of Goal-Delivery might inquire and try the same Day.

If it fall out, that by reason of Defaults, Deaths, or Challenges, there cannot be a full Jury had out of a Pannel, (as here there wanted three) which is an Accident that the Court cannot know, till they have gone through the Pannel; I think in this Case, that Pannel goes for nothing, is utterly lost and void, and to be cast away or cancelled: For it does not answer the Award of the Court, which was to have a Jury to Try the Prisoner presently. It is meant an effectual Pannel that should afford a full Jury of Twelve unexceptionable Men; and every Pannel that comes short in this, is to be laid aside as a void Thing; and then the Court takes and makes use of another immediately, which may not be deficient, whereby the Award is observed, and the present Service dispatched.

Objection. It is objected, That the old Pannel is Parcel of the Record in Court, and, upon that, Nine were Sworn, and their Names are all enter'd upon Record; and now to add a new Pannel, upon which Twelve shall be Sworn and Try the Prisoner; all this appearing upon Record, it will be Error.

Answer. This Objection stands upon two Mistakes, both arising from not observing the Difference between Precepts and Pannels, in a Court of Goal Delivery and Venire facias's, or Precepts and Pannels in other Courts.

1. It supposes that here will be two Pannels, which will appear to relate to the Tryal of this Prisoner, Mr. Cook.

2. It supposes that both these will become Records, or Parcel of the Record in Court.

If either of these Suppositions prove to be a Mistake, it will destroy the Objection. I think both are Mistakes.

1. Here is not, nor will be, nay, there ought not to be any Pannel purporting to be returned for the Trying of Mr. Cook, or any particular Prisoner or Prisoners. For, the Precept in this Case is (not like a Venire facias, which always respects a particular Issue between Parties therein named, but) general, requiring the Sheriff to return Jurors enough to Try all the Prisoners, not naming any. And the Return, which is the Answer to it by a Pannel or Pannels, is as General; the Title of every Pannel being Nomina Jurator' ad Triandum pro Domino Rege, and no more; or Nomina Juratorum ad Triandum inter Dom. Regem & Prisonar. ad Barram, without naming any of the Prisoners, and it were absurd if it should be otherwise: For the Precept goes to the Sheriff before the Sessions, and his Return is supposed to be made at the Beginning of the Sessions, when it is not known who of the Prisoners will be indicted; or, if indicted, who will plead not Guilty, or Guilty, or a Pardon, or other Plea.

When, for the Tryal of a particular Prisoner (or divers Prisoners that are thought fit to be put upon Tryal by the same Jury) a Jury is about to be taken out of any Pannel, the Clerk, as he goes along, may take a Note in Paper of the Name of every one that is sworn; or he may (and usually doth) doth) write Jur. on the ſaid Pannel, againſt the Name of every one Sworn: But this Note or Mark is no Part of the Record; it is not ex Inſtitutione Legis, it is but a voluntary Memorandum, for the Help of his Memory. If he could ſafely truſt to the Strength of his Memory, he need not write at all on this Occaſion; I mean, not till a full Jury is Sworn, who try the Priſoner. But then, indeed, the Clerk muſt (from his Notes or Memory) write the Names of all the Twelve, entring them on the Record of the Indictment, in this manner, viz. juſt after the Ideo immediatè veniat inde Jurata coram præfatis Juſtic. &c. adding, & Juratores Juratæ illius, &c. Scil. A. B. &c. Dicunt, &c. And it is by this only, that the Names of thoſe that are Sworn, come to be of Record; and it is this Entry upon the Body of the Indictment alone, that is the Record, that ſhews who were Jurors Sworn, to Try this, or that, or other Priſoner, or Priſoners.

So that if the old Pannel were filed, and were a Record, as the Priſoner's Council would ſuppoſe, yet it would not thereby be made appear, that the ſaid Pannel was returned, or uſed for, or in order to the Tryal of this Priſoner.

2. The old Pannel is not filed among the Records of the Court, nor ought to be. When ſuch a Pannel does not produce a Jury, the Clerks may and uſe to throw it by, as a uſeleſs Thing. But, however they uſe it, we cannot allow it to be a Record. It was received de bene eſſe; it is abortive and comes to nothing. And it is not every Thing that paſſeth in Court in order to a Record, that comes to be ſo. A frivolous Plea that is rejected, is not recorded. A Preſentment or Bill of Indictment, before it is found, is not a Record: And if an Ignoramus be returned upon a Bill of Indictment, it never can be a Record; and thereupon, the Clerks do ſometimes throw it away, though ſometimes they keep it and put it on the File, only taking care to croſs it; but if they do forget to croſs it, yet it is not a Record.

By all this it is apparent how great the Difference is between a Precept and Pannels in this Court, and a Venire facias and a Pannel returned thereupon, which is ever iſſued after Iſſue joyned, and doth always mention the particular Parties and Matter it relates to, and is a Record, and a Ground for an Habeas Corpora with a Tales, to be returnable at a certain future Day.

But, in this Caſe, in this Court, it is quite otherwiſe.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, ſince there is a new Pannel, we hope we ſtand in the ſame Condition upon the Act of Parliament, to take Exceptions to the Indictment before this Jury Sworn, as we did before the other Jury Sworn, ſince all that is quite ſet aſide.

L. C. J. Treby. Yes truly, I think that may be.

Mr Att. Gen. But theſe Gentlemen would have done well to have given notice of their Exceptions.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I ſhall not ſtand upon an Exception which I think I might take to the Word Turmas in the Indictment, which whether it be Troops of Men, or Horſes, or what it is does not appear; but, I think, we have an Exception to the chief Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and that we preſume, if my Brief be right, will be ſufficient to ſet aſide this Indictment: That Mr. Cook did agree with other Traytors to ſend Mr. Charnock into France to the ſaid late King James, and King James is never mentioned before in all the Indictment, that is one Exception that we have, that there is no late King James mentioned in the Indictment before this, if my Copy be right, if it be otherwiſe, I ſuppoſe they will find it: It is laid, That Mr. Cook did agree to ſend Charnock as a Meſſenger into France, eidem nuper Regi Jacobo, and no Rex Jacobus is mentioned before. Then there is another Exception, and that's this: They come and ſay, That whereas there was a War with France, which is only in the Indictment by Way of Recital or Rehearſal of an Hiſtory, Quod cum per magnum Tempus fuit & modo ſit, &c. Mr. Cook the Premiſſes knowing, did compaſs and imagine the King's Death, and did adhere to the ſaid King's Enemies ſuch a Day. Now, my Lord, I do think that this can never be maintain'd, for that Cum quoddam Bellum, &c. being an hiſtorical Narrative, is not poſitive enough: For adhering to the King's Enemies, being one of the Treaſons laid in the Charge, there ought to be a War at the Time of the Adheſion, and of Neceſſity then that ought to be preſented by the Jury; for though your Lordſhips can judicially take notice of War or Peace, yet you cannot take notice of it at ſuch a particular Time, and the Reaſon is from the Notion that is in my Lord Coke in his third Inſtitutes, cap. Treaſon, That Adheſions to Rebels is not Adheſion to the King's Enemies, for a Rebel is not ſaid to be an Enemy; but it muſt be adhering to ſuch an Enemy, as between whom and the King there was War at that Time, and conſequently it ought to be more poſitively averred in the Indictment, than it here is; but as to the Overt-Act of Mr. Cook's conſulting and agreeing to ſend Charnock over to the ſaid late King James to give him notice of what was agreed upon between them, when King James is not named before, that can never be got over, with Submiſſion.

Mr Baker. It is a Miſtake of your Copy, Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr Att. Gen. I have looked into the Record, and it is Jacobo Secundo nuper Regi, not Dicto.

Sir B. Shower. Then, with Submiſſion, my Lord, they cannot try us now, for we ought to have a true Copy of the Indictment.

Mr Baker. Upon demand. But you never demanded it.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, it was demanded.

Mr Baker. Who demanded it?

Sir B. Shower. Our Sollicitor Burleigh.

Mr Baker. No, he did not; I gave it him officiouſly.

Mr Att. Gen. With Submiſſion, my Lord, it is no Objection at all, that their Copy is wrong. That ſhould have been before the Priſoner had pleaded; for the Words of the Act are, That he ſhall have it ſo many Days before, to enable him to plead, and he cannot be put to plead unleſs he have a Copy of the Indictment ſo long before: And at Rookwood's Tryal it was ſaid by the Court it could not be alledged after Plea pleaded.

Mr Burleigh. The Copy was given to me publickly in Court.

Mr Soll. Gen. Why did not your Sollicitor compare it with the Indictment?

Mr Att. Gen. They might have compared it by the Clerk's reading it to them; but they will not admit the Priſoner's Sollicitor to ſee the Original, becauſe the Act expreſly ſays they ſhall not have a Copy of the Witneſſes Names.

Sir B. Shower. The Officer is to deliver a true Copy of the Indictment.

Mr Att.

Mr Att. Gen. No; the Party is to demand it by himſelf or his Agent, and then he is to have it; and if he be denied, he ought to apply himſelf to the Court, who will order the Delivery of it; but we ſtand upon it that they cannot take this Exception now after they have pleaded, for the Intent of the Copy is to enable him to plead.

L. C. J. Treby. The Copy, by the Act of Parliament, is to be delivered to the Priſoner, his Attorney, Agent, or Sollicitor, if they require the ſame, and here it ſeems there was no requiring of it, but it was voluntarily given; and now you have lapſed your Time of making the Exception of wanting a Copy, by having pleaded to the Indictment, whereby you have in effect admitted and declared, either that you had a true Copy of it, or that you did not think fit to require one; for the Uſe of the Copy is to better enable the Priſoner to plead. But when you did plead, you took upon your ſelf to be well able to plead without the Help of a Copy, which you might have had upon the asking for.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, there is another Thing in the Indictment, That in this Overt-Act there is a new Time, and a new Place, and a new Verb, and a new Fact alledged, and no nominative Caſe: It is alledged, That Peter Cook, at firſt, with others, did ſo and ſo: and then the firſt of July to bring the Treaſons aforeſaid to effect, there & alibi, &c. (which is very looſe, for I know not whence the Venue muſt come) did traiterouſly with Charnock, Freind, &c. conſult to procure Diverſas Turmas & Legiones, &c. to join with them in England, and then it comes & ulterius ſuch a Day, Year, and Place, did traiterouſly agree ſo and ſo, and not ſay who: Now this is neither by expreſs Words, nor Rule of Grammar to be referred to the Priſoner at the Bar, it does not ſay ipſe idem Petrus Cook; now, my Lord, that the King's Council thought it neceſſary in every Overt-Act is plain, becauſe thoſe Words are put in every other Clauſe of the Indictment, in thoſe Clauſes that go before, and thoſe Clauſes that come after; then if they will take it, that this Clauſe muſt refer to the next Antecedent, that will not do, for the next precedent nominative Caſe is either Freind or Charnock: So that this is without a nominative Caſe, and the Precedents in my Lord Coke's Entries 361, and all the other Books have the nominative Caſe repeated, where there is a new Time, and a new Place, and a new Fact alledged: Now it might be true, that the Priſoner at the Bar might be preſent, and this ſame Treaſon might be diſcourſed of and agitated, and there might be a Conſult about this Buſineſs, and yet it is not neceſſarily implied that he muſt conſent and agree to ſend Charnock into France, upon which the great Streſs of the Indictment lies: Therefore we ſay, theſe Words having no nominative Caſe, the Indictment cannot hold.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, as to this Objection it will receive a very plain Anſwer. Our Indictment begins and ſets forth, that Peter Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, did imagine and compaſs the King's Death, and did adhere to the King's Enemies, and theſe are the Treaſons: And then it ſets forth the Overt-Act, that in Execution of the traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Adheſions aforeſaid, Ipſe idem Petrus Cook, together with Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Charnock, Sir John Freind and others, did propoſe and conſult to procure from the French King, Forces to invade this Land; & ulterius, he and they did agree to ſend Charnock to the late King James.

Mr J. Rookeby. There's the firſt naming of James the Second, late King of England, and there is no eidem Jacobo I promiſe you.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, that Miſtake is over. Pray go on Mr. Attorney General.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, as to this Objection of Sir Bartholomew Shower, he would have ipſe idem Petrus repeated over again; and he ſays that we lay a diſtinct Overt-Act with a different Time and Place: Now that is a Miſtake too; it is not a different Time and Place, but the ſame Time and Place: And it mentions that cum R. Charnock, J. Freind, &c. & cum aliis Proditoribus conveniebat, conſultabat, &c. which he ſays may refer to Sir J. Friend or Charnock: But if you look into the Frame of the Sentence, that can never be.

Mr J. Rookeby. Petrus Cook is the nominative Caſe that governs all the Verbs.

Mr Att. Gen. And there is no other nominative Caſe in all the Indictment, but Petrus Cook, except it be in a Parentheſis, and that ſaves the Rule of Grammar, if there were any Thing in it, that it muſt refer to the laſt Antecedent.

Sir B. Shower. When it comes to the Clauſe that he did procure Horſe and Arms, there the nominative Caſe is repeated.

L. C. J. Treby. It would not have made it worſe, if they had made it ſo here; but the Queſtion is, Whether it be neceſſary?

Sir B. Shower. Indictments ought to be preciſely certain; but this we ſay is not ſo.

Mr Att. Gen. But here is as much Certainty as to the Perſon, as can be, that he did conſult with ſuch and ſuch about ſuch Things; and further, the ſame Day did agree with the ſame Traytors to do ſo and ſo.

Mr J. Powell. Indictments, it is true, ought to be plain and clear; but I do not ſee but here is as much Certainty as can be, that he did ſuch a Day conſult, and further the ſame Day did agree with the ſame Perſons.

Sir B. Shower. Who did agree, my Lord?

Mr J. Powell. He that did conſult with them before, and that is Peter Cook.

Mr Att. Gen. You'd have had us to have put it to every Verb, I believe.

Sir B. Shower. In Indictments no Preſumption ought to be uſed, but the Facts ought to be directly and poſitively alledged.

Mr J. Powell. It's true, there ſhould be no Preſumption, and there is none here, for certainly this is a plain Aſſertion of Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. Here are two Things that are ſet forth: Firſt, That Peter Cook did meet with Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, and others, and then and there did conſult with them, and conſent to procure an Invaſion, and joyn an Inſurrection thereto. And, Secondly, Further with the ſaid Traitors did agree to ſend Charnock into France. Now, what is the nominative Caſe to this Agreement? Is it Sir John Friend, and Sir William Parkyns? That's impoſſible: For they could not be ſaid properly to meet and conſult with themſelves, every one of them with his own ſelf and the reſt. And then the Number, if it had referr'd to them, ſhould have been plural, but here it is ſingular, [agreavit] and the Senſe is no more than this; That then and there Mr. Cook did meet with ſuch Perſons, and did conſult with them about ſuch and ſuch Matters, and further, did agree with them to do thus.

Sir B.

Sir B. Shower. The Meaning is not to be forced and ſtrained by Inference or Preſumption, but it ought to be expreſs and plain.

L. C. J. Treby. Nay, you cannot expreſs it better; you may make a Tautology of it if you will.

Sir B. Shower. The Paragraph is long, my Lord, and therefore requires the more Care to have thoſe Repetitions that are neceſſary.

L. C. J. Treby. Your Objection to this Paragraph is, that it is too long; but repeating the ſame Nominative Caſe to every Verb, would make it much longer.

Sir B. Shower. It cannot be underſtood to mean Peter Cook without Preſumption, which ought not to be in an Indictment.

Mr Att. Gen. And as to Sir Bartholomew Shower's firſt Objection, his Copy is right too, and he miſtook the Place.

Sir B. Shower. You ſhou'd have given me that for an Anſwer.

Mr Att. Gen. Nay, you ſhould have taken more Care, and not have made the Objection.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think it is hardly poſſible to have made this better if it had been otherwiſe than it is.

Mr Serj. Darnall. My Lord, we think we have a good Fact of it, which we rely upon, and therefore do not ſo much inſiſt upon theſe Exceptions, tho', in Duty to our Client, we mention that which we think is neceſſary, and we ſubmit to your Lordſhip.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook to the Bar. [Which was done.] You, the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe good Men which you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you wou'd challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Cryer. Call Sir John Sweetapple.

Sir John Sweetapple. Here.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I am adviſed ———

L. C. J. Treby. Pray Sir ſpeak out that we may hear what you ſay: And let the Cryer make Proclamation for Silence. [Which was done.]

Cook. My Lord, before the Jury is called, I am adviſed, that if any of the Jury have ſaid already that I am guilty, or they will find me guilty, or I ſhall ſuffer, or be hanged, or the like, they are not fit or proper Men to be of the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. You ſay right, Sir, it is a good Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr J. Rokeby. That will be a ſufficient Cauſe, if when they come to the Book, you object that, and be ready to prove it.

Cook. Which is Sir John Sweetapple? [He was ſhewn to him.]

Cl. of Arr. There he is.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. William Walker.

Cook. Sir, have you ſaid any ſuch Thing that you believe me guilty?

Mr Walker. No, Sir.

Mr Baker. My Lord, he is asking of the Juryman the Queſtion.

Mr J. Rokeby. That's a Fact the Priſoner ſhould prove upon him.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, he muſt not ask the Jury that Queſtion, Whether they have declared before, that they will find him guilty; that is to make them guilty of a Miſdemeanor.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Is it any Miſdemeanor for me to ſay, I think or believe ſuch a Man is guilty.

Mr Att. Gen. If he be ſummon'd to be of a Jury, and declare his Opinion before hand, it is a Miſdemeanor.

Mr Serj. Darnall. But ſuppoſe it be before he was ſummon'd?

Mr Att. Gen. If you make any ſuch Objection, you muſt prove it, and not out of the Juryman's own Mouth.

Mr Serj. Darnall. I think any Man, my Lord, that comes to ſerve upon the Jury, may be ask'd any Queſtion that does not make him guilty of any Offence or Crime, or liable to any Puniſhment: Now if any of theſe Gentlemen that are return'd upon this Pannel, before the Summons have declared their Opinion, that the Priſoner is guilty, or ought to ſuffer, with Submiſſion, the Priſoner may ask ſuch a Queſtion, Whether he have ſaid ſo, yea or no?

Mr J. Powell. He cannot upon a Voyer Dire be ask'd any ſuch Queſtion.

Mr J. Rokeby. It is not denyed to be a material Objection, but it muſt be made out by Proof.

L. C. J. Treby. You put it too large, Brother Darnall, you may ask upon a Voyer Dire, whether he have any Intereſt in the Cauſe; nor ſhall we deny you Liberty to ask whether he be fitly qualified, according to Law, by having a Freehold of ſufficient Value; but that you can ask a Juror or a Witneſs every Queſtion that will not make him criminous, that's too large: Men have been ask'd, Whether they have been convicted and pardon'd for Felony, or whether they have been whipt for Petty Larceny; but they have not been obliged to anſwer; for, tho' their Anſwer in the affirmative will not make them criminal, or ſubject them to Puniſhment, yet they are Matters of Infamy; and if it be an infamous Thing, that's enough to preſerve a Man from being bound to anſwer. A pardon'd Man is not guilty, his Crime is purged; but merely for the Reproach of it, it ſhall not be put upon him to anſwer a Queſtion whereon he will be forced to forſwear or diſgrace himſelf. So Perſons have been excuſed from anſwering whether they have been committed to Bridewell as Pilferers or Vagrants, or to Newgate for Clipping or Coining, &c. Yet to be ſuſpected or committed is only a Misfortune and Shame, no Crime. The like has been obſerved in other Caſes of odious and infamous Matters which were not Crimes indictable. But to keep to our Caſe; 'tis true, a Juror may be challenged being an Alien, or being a Villain; but where the Matter apparently carries Crime or Shame, it ſhould be proved; the Outlawry ſhould be proved, and ſo ſhould the being a Villain. Yet that is no Crime, tho' it be an Ignominy.

Mr Serj. Darnall. But, my Lord, I take this to be no manner of Infamy at all, there is nothing of Crime, nor nothing of Reproach, but only a declaring of a Man's Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think otherwiſe; I take it to be at leaſt a ſcandalous Misbehaviour, and deſervedly ill-ſpoken of, for any Man to prejudge, eſpecially in ſuch a heinous Matter. I think it is a very ſhameful Diſcovery of a Man's Weakneſs and Raſhneſs, if not Malice, to judge before he hears the Cauſe, and before the Party that is accuſed could be tryed. But, it ſeems, by what the

Priſoner

Priſoner ſays, that he would ask all the Jurors, whether they have not ſaid, that he was guilty, or that they would find him guilty, or that he ſhould be hanged, or the like: Which (preſuming him innocent) is to ask whether they have not defamed and ſlandered him in the higheſt Degree; and to force them to diſcover that they have a mortal Hatred to him, and come with a malicious Reſolution to convict him: Which, admitting they are not puniſhable by our Law, yet are Things ſo deteſtably wicked and ſo ſcandalous, as are not fit to be required to be diſcloſed by and againſt themſelves.

Mr Serj. Darnall Pray, my Lord, what is more common than for a Man to ſay, before he is ſummoned to be upon a Jury, when he hears a Fact reported concerning ſuch a one, to ſay I believe he is guilty, or I am of Opinion he is, and I am ſure he will be hanged, and yet there is no Crime in this.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, Brother Darnall, I know not how you may approve of ſuch a Man, but I'll aſſure you I do not. I take the Queſtion not to be concerning a Man's diſcourſing ſuppoſitively; as, if upon hearing News, or a Report of clear Evidence, a Man ſhould ſay, Suppoſing this to be true, ſuch a Man is guilty, and I ſhould find him ſo if I were of his Jury. This might not be ſufficient to ſet aſide a Juror: For this has been a general Diſcourſe among the Subjects upon Occaſion of this Conſpiracy; and it imports that if Evidence ſhould not be true and clear, he would acquit him. And ſo he is, as he ſhould be, indifferent. But if a Man, qualified for a Juror, affirm poſitively that ſuch a Priſoner is guilty, and that he will find him ſo whatever Evidence or Proof be given or made to the contrary, I think that may be a Miſdemeanour puniſhable as an owning and encouraging of Falſhood, Perjury, and Injuſtice, and a Contempt and Scandal to the Juſtice of the Kingdom. Tho' I hope and believe that no Man hath ſo demeaned himſelf.

Mr J. Powell. In a Civil Caſe it would be a good Cauſe of Challenge. If a Man have given his Opinion about the Right one way or other, may you not upon a Voire dire ask him whether he hath given his Opinion one way or other? I believe it may be askt in a Civil Cauſe, becauſe he may have been a Refferree; but if you make it criminal it cannot be askt, becauſe a Man is not bound to accuſe himſelf; now the Difference lies in the Nature of the Cauſe, it is not Criminal in a Civil Caſe for a Man to ſay he was an Arbitrator in ſuch a Caſe, and, upon what appeared before him, he was of ſuch an Opinion.

Mr Att. Gen. But, my Lord, it is a different Caſe to give an Opinion about the Right between Party and Party, where a Man has been an Arbitrator and ſo in the Nature of a Judge, and where a Man is to go upon a Jury in the Caſe of Life and Death, and before the Evidence given, he declares his Opinion without hearing the Cauſe.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we know ſeveral of the Tryals have been printed, and the Names of ſeveral Perſons mentioned, and upon reading of the Tryals or converſing about them, Men are apt to give their Opinions one way or other.

Mr Serj. Darnall. It is only an Objection in Caſe he has done it.

Mr J. Rookeby. But, Brother, how can you ask him the Queſtion?

Mr Serj. Darnall. If the Court are of Opinion that it is ſuch a Crime that it cannot be askt, as tending to make a Man accuſe himſelf of an infamous Crime, then we ſubmit it to you, and I confeſs we muſt not ask it; but we cannot apprehend that there is either Crime or Infamy in it, tho' we think it is an Objection and a good Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr B. Powys. I think, tho' it be not ſuch a Crime as infamous upon which a Man is not to be credited, for that is Infamy in the Eye of the Law, whereby a Man is prejudiced in his Credit; yet however it is a ſhameful Thing for a Man to give his Judgment before he hath heard the Evidence, and therefore I think you ought not to ask him it, to make him accuſe himſelf, if it be an opprobrious Matter upon him.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Truly, my Lord, I always took it to be the Rule, if the Thing asked to the Perſon returned be not criminal nor infamous, the Party that is askt ought to anſwer to it.

L. C. J. Treby. I would fain know, if you ſhould ask any of the Jury-men this Queſtion, whether he be guilty of all the Crimes that are pardoned by the laſt Act of Grace, he be bound to anſwer it?

Mr Serj. Darnall. Undoubtedly we cannot ask any ſuch Queſtion; no, not to any one of the Things therein mentioned.

L. C. J. Treby. But yet you will force him to diſcover a Crime (if it be one) that is unpardoned.

Mr J. Powell. Certainly you go too far, Brother, for no Man is obliged to charge himſelf with what is Criminal, but whether this be Criminal to ſay, I believe ſuch a one will be hanged, is of another Conſideration.

Mr J. Rookeby. But I think it muſt be proved upon him if any Objection be made.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, it will be no eaſy Thing to bring Witneſſes to prove this Matter, and therefore we would have it from his own Mouth.

Mr J. Rookeby. And it is a very hard Matter for a Man to be put upon proving every Diſcourſe that he has had about the publick Affairs of the Time.

Mr Recorder. The Reaſon of your Exception is, that he has declared his Opinion before-hand, that the Party would be hanged or would ſuffer, that's a Reproach and a Reflection upon a Wiſe Man ſo to do; and if they can prove it upon him, let them do it: But whether you ſhould ask him ſuch a Queſtion, Whether he be a Fool or a Knave for the giving an Opinion one way or other, that's the Queſtion before us.

Mr Serj. Darnall. My Lord, we do not offer it to the Court as an Objection that he is not a wiſe Man.

Mr Att. Gen. But what a Man does utter imprudently, may occaſion a Prejudice againſt him, and therefore ought to be proved, and not he to prove it himſelf.

L. C. J. Treby. Eſpecially being a Freeholder of London, and taking Notice of what is done in London; and if he does take Notice of the Fact, and does previouſly give his Opinion of a Matter which he may be called upon a Jury to try, this is an Indiſcretion and a Reproach to him, and I think a Miſdemeanour.

Mr Serj. Darnall. My Lord, I acknowledge it is ill done of him, that is, indiſcreetly and not wiſely, wiſely, and we would have diſcreet and wiſe Men upon our Jury.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, Mr Serj. Darnall will make it ſo little a Thing at laſt, that it will amount to no Cauſe of Challenge, if it were even prov'd againſt him, which we inſiſt it ought to be, it being their Objection, and the Party not being bound to prove it againſt himſelf; but truly we think there is more in it than ſo, becauſe it is an unjuſt prejudging of a Man before he is try-ed and heard, and if ſo, it is a Thing that he ought not to accuſe himſelf of, and therefore we oppoſe the asking any ſuch Queſtion.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Our Objection is not becauſe it is an Offence to declare a Man's Opinion upon a Fact reported, but becauſe it ſhews he has a ſettled Opinion againſt the Perſon of his Guilt, and ſo he is not ſo equal a Man to try him.

L. C. J. Treby. And is that like an honeſt Man and a Freeholder of London, (who ought to be indifferent) to come with a ſettled Opinion againſt a Man, when he is to be one of his Jury?

Mr Serj. Darnall. Well, my Lord, we have been heard, and ſubmit it to the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think it reflects both Diſhoneſty and Diſhonour upon him, and therefore theſe Queſtions ought not to be askt. The Queſtion is not whether a Man (if ever ſuch a Man there were) that hath ſo reſolved and declared ſhall be ſworn? No; he is not fit to ſerve upon a Jury. But the Queſtion is, How this ſhall be diſcovered, by his own Oath or by other Proof? I think it ought to be made appear by other Proof, if true. A Man attainted of Felony, Forgery, falſe Verdict, or Perjury, ought not to ſerve on a Jury, yet he ſhall not be examined concerning the ſame on a Voire dire. And if there be in Court a Copy of ſuch Judgment carefully examined and kept by himſelf, he ſhall not be forced to anſwer whether it be a true Copy; tho' his Anſwer could not ſubject him to any further Penalty.

Mr Serj. Darnall. My Lord, I hope no Gentleman of the Jury has done it.

L. C. J. Treby. I hope no Freeholder of London is ſo indiſcreet or ſo unjuſt. But if any Man in this Pannel have any particular Diſpleaſure to the Priſoner, or be unindifferent, or have declared himſelf ſo, I do admoniſh and deſire him to diſcover ſo much in general; for, it is not fit, nor for the Honour of the King's Juſtice, that ſuch a Man ſhould ſerve on the Jury.

Mr Serj. Darnall. We hope ſo too. We hope that all that are returned upon the Jury are diſcreet and impartial Men.

Cl. of Arr. Well, Sir, what ſay you to this Gentleman Mr Walker?

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Nathanael Long.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think he may ask if they have a Freehold or no; becauſe the Law requires that Qualification, and the Priſoner not being able to prove the Negative, it puts the Proof of the Affirmative upon the Perſon himſelf.

Mr Att. Gen. What does Sir Bartholomew mean? would he have the Jury-men bring their Evidences with them to prove their Freehold?

L. C. J. Treby. No ſure, Mr Attorney; but to ask the Queſtion was allowed him the laſt Time, and we will not deny him the ſame juſt Favour now.

Cook. Are you a Free-holder, Sir, in London, of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Long. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury when the Bill was found againſt me?

Mr Long. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. William Carbonell.

Mr Carbonell. My Lord, I am no Free-holder.

L. C. J. Treby. What, does he ſay he has no Free hold?

Cl. of Arr. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then he muſt be ſet aſide.

Cl. of Arr. Joſhua Foſt.

Mr Foſter. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London neither.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we deſire they may be ſworn whether they have a Freehold or not.

Cl. of Arr. Hold Mr Carbonell and Mr Foſter the Book. (Which was done ſeverally.) You ſhall true Anſwer make to all ſuch Queſtions as ſhall be askt you by the Court. So help you God.

Mr Att. Gen. Ask him if he hath not a Freehold in London?

Mr Carbonell. No, I have not.

Cl. of Arr. Have you or any Body in Truſt for you a Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Carbonell. No, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Joſhua Foſter, have you or any in Truſt for you any Eſtate of Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Foſter. No, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Billers.

Cook. I deſire they may be called in the Order as they are in the Pannel; you have not called John Ewen, who is next.

Cl. of Arr. I do call them in Order: As for Mr Ewen, one has made Oath that he is ſick, and is not able to come hither. What ſay you to Mr Billers? There he ſtands.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder of 10 l. a Year, within the City of London?

Mr Billers. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Was you of the Grand-Jury, Sir, when the Bill was found againſt me?

Mr Billers. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Child.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London?

Mr Child. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Child. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury, when the Bill was found againſt me?

Mr Child. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Leeds.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London, of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Leeds. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Leeds. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

L. C. J. Treby. What Queſtion was that he ask'd him?

Cl. of Arr. Whether he were one of the Grand Jury that found the Bill.

L. C. J. Treby. A very proper Queſtion: For an Indicter ought not to be a Tryer.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Clark.

Cook.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Clark. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me.

Mr Clark. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Nathan Green.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, within the City of London, of the Value of 10 l. a Year.

Mr Green. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Green. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Sherbroke.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay againſt him.

Cl. of Arr. Then hold Mr Sherbroke the Book. (Which was done.) Look upon the Priſoner. You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, (whom you ſhall have in Charge) according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Then Mr Sherbroke was put into the Place appointed for the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Dry.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in the City of London, of the Value of 10 l. a Year.

Mr Dry. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Dry. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Morewood.

Cook. Sir, have you a Freehold in London, of the Value of 10 l. a Year.

Mr Morewood. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Morewood. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Greenway.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder of 10 l. a Year in London?

Mr Greenway. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Greenway. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Sherbrook

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in the City of London, of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Sherbrook. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Sherbrook. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Emmes.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Emmes. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Emmes. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Jackſon.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Jackſon. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me.

Mr Jackſon. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Hunter.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Hunter. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Hunter. No, Sir,

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Deacle.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London, of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Deacle. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Deacle. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Cullum.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Shaw.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. George Juyce.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Juyce. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Juyce. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Young.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Hedges.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London, of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Hedges. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Hedges. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John James.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr James. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr James. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Poole.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Poole. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Poole. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Parker.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr Parker. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Parker. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. William Wilkinſon.

Mr Wilkinſon. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.

(To which he was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Henry Mitchell.

Cook. Hold, Sir, here Thomas Man in my Pannel is next.

Cl. of Arr. There is Oath made that he is ſick in Bed. What ſay you to Mr Mitchell?

Cook. Sir, have you a Freehold of 10 l. a Year in the City of London?

Mr Mitchell. No, Sir. (To which he was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Richard Ryder.

Cook. Sir, Have you a Freehold of Ten Pounds a Year in the City of London?

Mr Ryder. Yes, I have, Sir; but I live in a Pariſh that never ſerve upon any Juries, nor ever did in the Memory of any Man.

Cl. of Arr. But have you a Freehold of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Ryder. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Ryder. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Temple.

Mr Temple. My Lord, I am no Freeholder. (To which he was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Peter Walker.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Walker. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Walker. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Piſtol.

Mr Piſtol. I am no Freeholder. (To which he was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Hunt.

Mr Hunt. My Lord, my Name is miſtaken; my Name is William Hunt.

L. C. J. Treby. Then you muſt go on to another.

Cl. of Arr. John Hardret.

Mr Hardret. I am no Freeholder of Ten Pound a Year. (To which he was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Hammond.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, of Ten Pound a Year, in London?

Mr Hammond. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Hammond. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Cooper.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Joſſelin Roberts.

Cook. Sir are you a Freeholder within the City of London of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Roberts. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Roberts. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Jonathan Micklethwait.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Richard Chiſwell.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Chiſwell. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Chiſwell. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Thompſon.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Thompſon. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Thompſon. I was returned upon the Grand Jury, but did not ſerve.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Brewſter.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Brewſter. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Brewſter. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. George Gooday.

Mr Gooday. My Lord, I am no Freeholder. (To which he was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Abraham Hickman.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Hickman. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me.

Mr Hickman. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. George Grove.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Grove. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Grove. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Nathanael Wyerſden.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pounds a Year?

Mr Wyerſden. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Wyerſden. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you. My Lord, I deſire to know how many I have excepted againſt.

Cl. of. Arr. One and Thirty.

Mr Burleigh. Write, write.

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Blewitt.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Blewitt. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Blewitt. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Wolfe.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. William Smith.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Smith. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Smith. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Bickley.

Mr Bickley. My Lord, I don't look upon my ſelf as a Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. Why ſo, Sir?

Mr Bickley. I have a Leaſe for One and Fifty Years, my Lord, of my Houſe, and there is a very little Piece of Ground adjoining to it that was very convenient for me to lay to my Leaſe; there is no Way to it but through my Houſe; it is a Thing that never was let for any Thing, and it is not worth the Building.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Treby. What Eſtate have you in it? Do you pay a Ground-Rent for it?

Mr Bickley. My Lord, I bought that little Piece of Ground for the Conveniency of my Leaſe.

L. C. J. Treby. But did you purchaſe it for Term of Years, or to you and to your Heirs?

Mr Bickley. Nay, I bought it for ever, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then you have a Freehold in it. What's the Value of it?

Mr Bickley. Truly very little, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. I don't know any Body can judge of the Value of it but your ſelf. Is it worth Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Bickley. My Lord, I can't value it at Ten Pound a Year, it never coſt me Forty Pound.

L. C. J. Treby. Then for Eſtate you are well enough, but for Value you are a little under.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Collins.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Watſon.

Cook. I do not challenge him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. Benjamin Hooper.

Cook. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Wells.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Wells. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Wells. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Hibbart.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London, of Ten Pound a Year?

Mr Hibbart. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr Hibbart. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Mr Cook you have challenged your full Number. Call Daniel Wray. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit. (He was ſworn.) Cryer Countez.

Henry Sherbrook.

Cryer, One, &c.

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn are as follow:

Henry Sherbrook	John Wolfe,
John Cullum,	Thomas Collins,
Thomas Shaw,	John Watſon,
Richard Young,	Benjamin Hooper,
John Cooper,	Daniel Wray, and
Jonath. Micklethwait,	John Pettit.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yez, If any one can inform my Lord, the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken of the High-Treaſon whereof Peter Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner now ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or they forfeit their Recognizance.

L. C. J. Treby. You muſt make Room for thoſe Twelve Gentlemen that are ſworn, that they may be at eaſe; and for thoſe that are not ſworn, their Attendance may be ſpared.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Cook. Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Gentlemen you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted in London, by the Name of Peter Cook, late of London, Gentleman; For that whereas an open and notoriouſly publick and moſt ſharp and cruel War, for a great while hath been, and yet is by Land and by Sea, carried on, and proſecuted, by Lewis the French King, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. All which time, the ſaid Lewis the French King, and his Subjects, were and yet are Foes and Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, William the Third, and his Subjects, he the ſaid Peter Cook, a Subject of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, of this his Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premiſſes, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor againſt the ſaid moſt Serene, moſt Mild and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, his Supreme, True, Rightful, Lawful, and undoubted Lord, the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould bear, and of Right is bound to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh, Intending and Contriving, and with all his Strength purpoſing and deſigning the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is of Right duly, happily, and very well eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change and alter, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intollerable and miſerable Servitude to the aforeſaid French King to ſubdue and enthral; the Firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and divers Days and Times, as well before as after, at London, in the Pariſh of St. Peter Cornhil, in the Ward of Limeſtreet, Falſely, Maliciouſly, Deviliſhly, and Traiterouſly did Compaſs, Imagine and Contrive, Purpoſe and Intend, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then his Supreme, True, Rightful and Lawful Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Empire, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depoſe, caſt down, and utterly deprive, and the ſame our Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, by Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and his Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, conquer and ſubdue, to move, incite, procure and aſſiſt, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord King William, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to Make and Cauſe. And further, That the ſaid Peter Cook, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the aforeſaid firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, and divers other Days and Times before and after, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, to the ſaid Foes and Enemies of the ſame our Lord the King, did adhere, and was aſſiſting: And his aforeſaid moſt wicked and deviliſh Treaſons, and Traiterous Compaſſings,

Con-

Contrivances, Intentions, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, and in Proſecution, Performance, and Execution of that traiterous adhering, he the ſaid Peter Cook, as ſuch a falſe Traitor, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in London aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, and by Force and Arms, with one Robert Charnock, Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, Knights, (which ſaid Robert Charnock, Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, were lately ſeverally duly Convicted and Attainted of High-Treaſon, in Contriving and Conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is) and with divers other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree to procure from the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces and Soldiers, then and yet Foes and Enemies of our ſaid Sovereign Lord William, now King of England, &c. great Numbers of Soldiers and Armed Men, this Kingdom of England to Invade and Fight with, and to Levy, Procure, and Prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, and Troops, and Legions againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to riſe up and be formed, and with thoſe Foes and Enemies, at and upon ſuch their Invaſion and Entry within this Kingdom of England, to join and unite, Rebellion and War againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and carry on; the ſame our Lord the King ſo, as aforeſaid, to Depoſe, and him to Kill and Murther: And further, with the ſaid falſe Traitors, the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, traiterouſly did conſult, conſent, and agree to ſend the aforeſaid Robert Charnock as a Meſſenger from him the ſaid Peter Cook, and the ſame other Traitors, as far as, and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, unto James the Second, late King of England, to propoſe to him, and to requeſt him to obtain from the aforeſaid French King the aforeſaid Soldiers and Armed Men for the Invaſion aforeſaid to be made, and Intelligence and Notice of ſuch their traiterous Intentions and Adherings, to the ſaid late King James the Second, and the ſaid other Foes and Enemies, and their Adherents, to give and ſhew, and them to inform of other Things, Particulars, and Circumſtances thereunto referring, for the Aſſiſtance, Animating, Comforting, and Aid of the ſaid Foes and Enemies of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, in the War aforeſaid: And to ſtir up and procure thoſe Foes and Enemies the readilier, and more boldly, this Kingdom of England to invade; the Treaſons, and traiterous Contrivances, Compaſſings, Imaginings, and Purpoſes of the ſaid Peter Cook aforeſaid, to perfect and fulfil; alſo the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, He the ſaid Peter Cook, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Muskets, Piſtols, Rapiers, and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Matters, and Military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and to be bought, gathered together, obtained and procured, did cauſe, and in his Cuſtody had, and detained to that Intent, to uſe the ſame in the ſaid Invaſion, War, and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, him our ſaid Lord the King, of and from the Regal State, Crown and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depoſe, caſt down, and deprive, and him to kill and murther; and the Deſigns, Intentions, and all the Purpoſes of him the ſaid Peter Cook aforeſoid, to fulfil, perfect, and fully to bring to effect, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided.

Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto has pleaded not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are, your Charge is to inquire whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince; if you find him not guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr Mompeſſon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, this is an Indictment for High-Treaſon againſt Peter Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Indictment ſets forth, That whereas there has been an open and cruel War for a long time, and ſtill is between his Majeſty King William, and the French King, the Priſoner at the Bar not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, the firſt of July in the Seventh Year of the King's Reign, did compaſs and intend to depoſe and deprive the King of the Title, Honour, and Dignity of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and likewiſe to put the King to Death, and did adhere to the King's Enemies; and to fulfil theſe Treaſons, he did conſult with Charnock, and ſeveral other Traytors who were mentioned there, and ſome of whom have been found guilty of Treaſon, and executed for it, to ſend over to the late King James, to perſwade the French King to ſend over Soldiers and Arms to invade this Kingdom, and to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion in it, and to deprive and put the King to Death, and to compleat theſe Treaſons, it further ſets forth, That the Priſoner at the Bar did provide ſeveral Arms and Horſes, and this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided; to this he has pleaded not guilty, and for Trial put himſelf upon the Country, and, Gentlemen, if we prove theſe Facts laid in the Indictment, its your Duty to find him guilty.

Mr Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, before the Witneſſes are examined againſt me, I intreat you that they may not be both in Court together, that one may not hear what the other ſwears, tho' I ſuppoſe it is the ſame thing; for they have been together both now and the laſt Day.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr Cook. I must tell you it is not necessary to be granted for asking; for we are not to discourage, or cast any Suspicion upon the Witnesses, when there is nothing made out against them; but it is a Favour that the Court may grant, and does grant sometimes, and now does it to you; though it be not of necessity: They shall be examined apart, but at present this is not the Time of Examination; for the King's Council are now to open the Evidence before they examine the Witnesses; but when the Time comes for the Witnesses to be called and examined, the Court will, in favour to you, take care that your Request be complied with.

Mr Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, the Prisoner stands indicted for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of his Majesty, and likewise in adhering to his Majesty's Enemies, these are the Treasons specified in the Indictment: The Overt-Acts that are laid to prove these Treasons are, That he with several other Traitors, named in the Indictment, did meet and consult, and agree to send over Charnock into France, to invite the French King to make an Invasion upon the Kingdom, and did provide Arms for that Purpose.

Gentlemen, the Nature of the Evidence that you will have produced to prove the Prisoner guilty of these Treasons lies thus: It will appear to you that there has been for some time a Conspiracy carried on by several Traitors, and wicked Persons, to subvert the established Government of this Kingdom, and destroy the Constitution of England, by a foreign Invasion of the French. You will hear that this Conspiracy was laid wide, and consisted of several Parts, one Part was that of Assassinating his Majesty's Royal Person, and that was to be done first, as a Preparation and Encouragement to the French to invade the Kingdom: the other Part was the inviting the French King to invade us, and the Prisoner at the Bar is accused of being concerned in that Part that relates to the Invasion of this Kingdom, by a French Power; and though it may be the other Part, that of Assassinating the King, be the blackest Part of the Conspiracy, yet if the Prisoner at the Bar has been ingaged in the inviting a Foreign Power to invade the Kingdom, my Lords, the Judges, will tell you, in Point of Law, that is as much an Overt-Act of the compassing the Destruction of the King and the People of England, and the Subversion of our ancient good Constitution, as if he had been concerned immediately in the other Part, the Assassination.

But now, Gentlemen, that the Prisoner was ingaged in inviting the French to invade us, you will hear proved by several Witnesses, that there having been a Design last Year, just before his Majesty went to Flanders, to expose his own Person for our Protection, and the Protection of the Liberties of Europe, there was a Conspiracy to Murder him before he went to Flanders, which, it seems, they were not ripe for then; but immediately after he was gone to Flanders, you will hear there were formal Meetings of several Gentlemen and Persons of Quality, among whom the Prisoner at the Bar was one: There was a Meeting in May, last Year, after the King was gone to Flanders; and this was at the Old King's-Head in Leaden-Hall-Street; and there were present, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr Charnock, (all which Three last have suffered the Punishment of the Law for their Treason already;) and there were also Mr Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr Porter and Mr Goodman; these Men did meet together, to consider of the best Ways and Means of encouraging and inviting the French King with an Armed Force to invade this Kingdom; they considered that that was a proper Opportunity, and did treat of several Arguments that might perswade to it: First, that the King was gone to Flanders, and so was not in Person here to defend us; and that the Troops, to make good such Defence, were in a great measure drawn thither, to assist the Allies against the French Power; they did think likewise, that at that Time there was a great Discontent and Dissatisfaction in the Nation, though I think in that they were greatly mistaken; and I believe and hope they will always find themselves so, to think that the People of England are so little sensible of that which is the Means of their Preservation, as to hearken to any Discontents to incourage a French Power to come into England to destroy our Religion and Liberties; that indeed they did apprehend, though they were mistaken, and I believe they always will, when they go upon that Ground.

Gentlemen, These Persons thinking this a proper Opportunity, did agree to send a Messenger into France upon this Message, To go to the late King James, and perswade him to desire and prevail with the French King to assist him with Ten Thousand Men, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; and to incourage him, they promised their Assistance here, as soon as he came over; and undertook, that between them, they could furnish, and would raise 2000 Horse to meet him at his Landing, and join upon such an Invasion.

Gentlemen, At this Meeting this was agreed upon by all that were there, whereof the Prisoner was one; and they did agree to send Mr Charnock, (who has since been executed, and a principal Incourager of the Design, and Actor in it;) he was the Messenger that was appointed to go upon this Errand, and Mr Charnock was resolved to go, but desired another Meeting of these Gentlemen, to know if they continued in their former Resolution, that he might have all the Assurance that was reasonable to give the French King Incouragement to make the Invasion: Accordingly another Meeting was had of most of the same Persons that were at the Meeting before; particularly the Prisoner at the Bar was at that Second Meeting, which was in Covent-Garden at one Mrs Mountjoy's, who keeps a Tavern next Door to Sir John Fenwick's Lodgings; there they met upon the same Design, and upon Consultation had, and the Question ask'd, they did agree to continue in the former Resolution, and upon that immediately Mr Charnock went into France to sollicit Forces from thence to invade us; but it happened, as it seems, that the French King's Forces were otherwise imployed, so that he cou'd not spare so many at that time; and this Return was brought by Charnock to the Gentlemen that imployed him; that he had spoke with the late King, who gave him that Answer, That the French King cou'd not spare so many Men at that Time, but he thank'd them for their Kindness.

Gen-

Gentlemen, This will be the Nature of our Evidence, to ſhow, that the Priſoner at the Bar was concerned in that Part of the Conſpiracy which relates to the French Invaſion; and if he be guilty of that, in point of Law, he is as much guilty of the Conſpiracy, to depoſe and murder the King, as if he had been concerned in the other Part of Aſſaſſinating his Royal Perſon; and I believe no Body can think that thoſe that were to act in the Aſſaſſination, wou'd have attempted to ingage in ſuch a deſperate Deſign, if it had not been for the encouragement of the French Invaſion that was to ſecond them afterwards if they ſucceeded; ſo that no Body can extenuate the Crime of the Invaſion, becauſe as to the Horridneſs of the Attempt, it is leſs Black than the other; they are both Crimes of a very high Nature, and equally High-Treaſon; and if we prove the Priſoner guilty of this Part, we hope you will find him guily.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes and prove the Matter, as it has been opened. Call Captain Porter and Mr Goodman.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Now, My Lord, we muſt deſire that that may be done which our Client deſired before, and which your Lordſhip was favourably pleaſed to promiſe, that the Witneſſes may be examined a-part.

L. C. J. Treby. Let it be ſo: Who do you begin with?

Mr Soll. Gen. We begin with Captain Porter, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then let Mr Goodman withdraw.

Mr Baker. Let Mr Goodman go up Stairs, and we will call him preſently.

Mr Soll. Gen. Swear Captain Porter: (which was done.) Captain Porter, Do you know Mr Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you remember a Meeting of ſome Gentlemen at the King's-Head-Tavern in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet.

Capt. Porter. Yes, I do, Sir.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then pray give an Account of the Company that were there, the Time when, and what paſs'd.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, the laſt Year we had two Meetings; the Firſt was in May, the other was the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June; the Firſt was at the King's-Head in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet; there were my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, Mr Charnock, Mr Cook and my ſelf; Mr Goodman came in after Dinner; at this Meeting it was conſulted which was the beſt Way and the quickeſt to reſtore King James, and haſten his Return into England; ſeveral Diſcourſes and Propoſals there were; at laſt it was agreed to ſend Mr Charnock to the late King to borrow of the French King Ten Thouſand Men, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons, to be ſent over into England to aſſiſt the King's Reſtoration. Says Mr Charnock thereupon, this the King can do without your ſending, and I would not go upon a fooliſh Errand. What will you do to aſſiſt in this Matter? The Company deſired him to promiſe King James, that if he would ſend Word when he Landed, and where, they wou'd be ſure to meet him at his Landing with a Body of 2000 Horſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar in the Company, and preſent at this Reſultion?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was.

Mr Att. Gen. Did all the Company agree to it?

Capt. Porter. Yes, they did.

Mr Att. Gen. What Signs were there of their Agreement? did they ſtand up ſeverally and declare their Agreement, or how?

Capt. Porter. My Lord of Aylesbury and Sir John Fenwick did riſe up, and deſired Captain Charnock, that he would go upon this Errand: And when the Queſtion was ask'd ſeverally of all there preſent by Mr Charnock, whether he might aſſure the King of what they had told him? Every one ſaid yes, you may; and Mr Cook kneel'd indeed upon a Chair, and ſaid, Yes, you may.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he give his Conſent to it?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he anſwered in thoſe very Words.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you remember any Meeting of any Company at Mrs Mountjoy's?

Capt. Porter. Yes, that was a ſecond Meeting.

Mr Soll. Gen. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury, how you came to meet there then, what Company were there, and what paſs'd.

Capt. Porter. Mr Charnock deſired another Meeting, to ſee if the Gentlemen kept to their former Reſolution; and we met at Mrs Mountjoy's eight or ten Days after, and there were moſt of the Company that was at the firſt Meeting, and there all that were preſent did aſſure Mr Charnock that they kept to their firſt Reſolution, and wou'd abide to what was agreed upon at the former Meeting.

Mr Att. Gen. Who were preſent at the ſecond Meeting?

Capt. Porter. The Priſoner at the Bar was there at that ſecond Meeting.

Mr Att. Gen. What was that ſecond Meeting for, do you ſay?

Capt. Porter. It was to give Mr Charnock Aſſurance, that we were agreed to ſtand by the Reſolution taken at the firſt Meeting.

Mr Att. Gen. What did Mr Charnock do afterwards?

Capt. Porter. I went away from them; there was Sir William Parkyins, Sir John Freind and Captain Charnock went to the Queens-Head Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet, and Captain Charnock told me he wou'd go in two or three Days, and I believe did ſo.

Mr Att. Gen. When did you ſee him afterwards?

Capt. Porter. When I was a Priſoner upon the Account of the Riot in Drury-Lane; about two or three Days after I came to Newgate he came to ſee me, and ſaid he had been in France; and that King James thank'd us for our kind Offer, but the French King cou'd not ſpare ſo many Men that Year; and he told me he had been with my Lord of Aylesbury, and the reſt of the Gentlemen that had employ'd him to go over, and had delivered them the ſeveral Meſſages that he was ordered to do from the King.

L. C. J. Treby. Captain Porter, who were preſent at that ſecond Meeting, do you ſay?

Capt. Porter. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, Captain Charnock, Mr Cook and my ſelf; I cannot tell whether my Lord

Mont-

Montgomery or Mr Goodman were at that ſecond Meeting or no.

Mr Att. Gen. Capt. Porter, I would ask you another Queſtion: You were concerned in the Aſſaſſination with thoſe other Perſons that ingaged in it; Pray what Safety did you propoſe to your ſelves after the Aſſaſſination was over?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I ask'd Sir George Barclay what we ſhou'd do after the Fact was committed: Says he, you need fear nothing, I will go away that Night, I have a Ship ready, and the King will be Landed in five or ſix Days afterwards; if you'll but keep your ſelves cloſe for ſo many Days, all will do well.

Mr Soll. Gen. If the Priſoner or the Council will ask him any Queſtions, my Lord, they may do it.

Sir B. Shower. Pray Sir, can you recollect what time of Day this was that this Debate and Reſolution were had at the Old Kings-Head in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet.

Capt. Porter. Truly Sir Bartholomew, I can't tell.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, by what means do you recollect that this was in the Month of May?

Capt. Porter. Becauſe Capt. Charnock was abſent at the Dog-Tavern Riot, which was the Tenth of June.

Sir B. Shower. Was it not in April.

Capt. Porter. No, Sir; to the beſt of my Remembrance it was in May.

Sir B. Shower. What makes you think it was in May rather than April?

Capt. Porter. I have told you, Sir, becauſe both Meetings were before the Dog-Tavern Riot, the Tenth of June, and Mr Charnock was not there at that time; but he told me afterwards he had been in France, and there were eight or ten Days Difference between the two Meetings.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, if they have done with him, I wou'd ask him one Queſtion, to ſettle this Matter in point of Time. Capt. Porter, Was the King gone to Flanders when you had theſe Meetings?

Capt. Porter. The King was gone, Sir, before the firſt Meeting.

Mr Att. Gen. The King did not go till ſeveral Days in May; was Mr Goodman there?

Capt. Porter. He was at the firſt Meeting, but I can't tell whether he was at the Second or no.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Pray what time was Mr Goodman there at the firſt Meeting?

Capt. Porter. He came up after Dinner at the firſt Meeting.

Mr Baker. Then call down Mr Goodman, who came in, and was ſworn.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Goodman. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of an intended Invaſion upon this Kingdom; what were the Circumſtances of it, and who were concerned in it.

Mr Goodman. My Lord about the Middle of May laſt, or thereabouts, Captain Porter ſent to me, and told me there was a Meeting of ſome Gentlemen of our Acquaintance at the King's-Head in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet; and he deſired me that I wou'd be there, becauſe it was about Buſineſs: I told him I did not know whether I cou'd be there at Dinner; but however, I wou'd not fail of coming thither after Dinner; and accordingly I came. When I came into the Houſe, I ſent up my Name to Capt. Porter, and he came down and brought me up Stairs, and there I ſaw my Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr Charnock, and that Gentleman at the Bar, Mr Cook: When we were there, the Diſcourſe was, that we did think King James's coming was retarded, and we wou'd do any thing to facilitate his Reſtoration.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice.

L. C. J. Treby. What ſay you, Mr Cook,

Cook. My Lord, If your Lorſhip pleaſes, I deſire the Jury may not be talk'd to by any Body; and I underſtand there are ſome talking with the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. Fie upon it, we will lay any Body by the Heels that do ſo, they muſt neither be diſturbed, nor inſtructed by any Body.

Cook. My Lord, I am informed there was ſomebody talking to them, and telling them this was the ſame Caſe with Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Treby. Do you but ſhow us the Man, and we will find another Place for him; we will ſend him to the Goal, I'll aſſure you.

Mr Burleigh. This Gentleman, my Lord, did hear ſuch a Diſcourſe to the Jury (pointing to a Gentleman there) who ſtood up.

My Lord, I cannot poſitively ſwear to the Man, but I did hear ſome Diſcourſe that it was the ſame Evidence as in the former Trial.

L. C. J. Treby. If you can ſhow us who it was, we will take Care to puniſh him: I ſuppoſe he ſtands Corrected; and if we knew who he was, he ſhou'd ſtand Committed.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Mr Goodman, begin again, and tell what paſs'd at that Meeting, becauſe the Jury were interrupted from hearing by People's buzzing about them.

Mr Goodman. My Lord, When Captain Porter brought me up into the Room, I told you what Gentlemen I found there; after we were ſet down, there was a Conſultation, that conſidering the French King's Wars retarded the Affair of ſending back King James, and the Means of reſtoring him to the Crown, it was fit we ſhou'd find out ſome Way or Method to facilitate his Reſtoration, and it was thought convenient to have a Meſſenger to ſend over to King James with Propoſals for that Purpoſe; to this effect, as near as I remember, That if King James cou'd prevail with the French King to furniſh Ten Thouſand Men, whereof 8000 to be Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons, we wou'd endeavour to meet him at the Head of as many Horſe as we cou'd raiſe, to ſuſtain thoſe Forces at their Landing: This was debated in order to come to a Reſolution; and much Difficulty there was how many the Number ſhould be; the Man pitched upon to be ſent, was Mr Charnock; and after ſome Debate, how many Thouſand Horſe could be raiſed: Says Mr Charnock, don't let me go over upon a fooliſh Errand, but let me know what I have to ſay exactly: Thereupon it was concluded by all, that Two Thouſand Horſe ſhould be the Number we cou'd promiſe, and the King might depend upon them; and if we brought more, ſo much the better; and Sir John Freind ſaid, I believe he has ſo many Friends here, that if he came himſelf, he might be welcome; but that we did not think fit to truſt to; and no Body wou'd adviſe any ſuch thing; when the Reſolution of the Thing and the Number was thus fixed, Mr Charnock ask'd whether it were with all our Conſents? and that he might aſſure the King, that this was our Reſolution thereupon? We all roſe up, and ſaid to him, Yes, you may, yes, you may, every one particularly; and I remember one Thing particularly concerning the Priſoner Mr Cook, That he kneel'd upon the Chair when he ſaid, Yes, you may; and his Elbows were upon the Table: This is all that I know of that Meeting. There was to be another Meeting, as Captain Porter told me; but I had Buſineſs in the City; but whatſoever he promiſed on my Behalf, as to the Quota of Men, I wou'd be ſure to make it good; and I was not at the ſecond Meeting.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee Mr Charnock afterwards?

Mr Goodman. Yes, I did, when he came back; and he told me the Thing was not accepted, for the French King cou'd not ſpare Men, and that he had been with the ſeveral Gentlemen to carry them the Complements that he had in Charge from King James, who returned them Thanks for their good Affection; and among the reſt, he did me the Honour to return me Thanks too.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mr Goodman, let me ask you a Queſtion: When it was that you ſaw Mr Charnock after this?

Mr Goodman. It was in Arundel-ſtreet, at his Lodgings.

Sir B. Shower. But I ask you, Sir, when it was? Was it before or after the Tenth of June?

Mr Goodman. It was after the Tenth of June, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. How long after, pray?

Mr Goodman. I believe it was a Month after the Tenth of June.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee him here in England before Mr Porter was diſcharged from the Riot, and came out of Newgate?

Mr Goodman. I believe I did ſee him before Captain Porter was diſcharged, long.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Who were the Perſons that were preſent at that Meeting?

Mr Goodman. My Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, Mr Charnock, Captain Porter, and the Priſoner at the Barr, Mr Cook.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Were you at Dinner with them, Sir?

Mr Goodman. No, I came in after Dinner.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Pray what Houſe was it, do you ſay, this Meeting was at?

Mr Goodman. It was at the Kings-Head in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet.

Sir B. Shower. Can you tell what Day of the Week it was?

Mr Goodman. No, nor the Day of the Month.

Sir B. Shower. Was you ever in the Company of theſe Gentlemen at any other time?

Mr Goodman. No, this was the only time that I heard of this Couſultation; I was not at the ſecond Meeting.

Cook. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, may I ask Mr Goodman any Queſtions?

L. C. J. Treby. Yes, by all Means ask him what you will.

Cook. Mr Goodman, You are upon your Oath: but did you ever hear me ſpeak ten Words in your Life? was you ever in my Company in any Houſe, before or ſince?

Mr Goodman. Yes, Sir; I was in your Company at the Cock in Bow-ſtreet, where you came in accidentally.

Cook. Did you ever hear me talk of the Government, or any Thing of that Nature?

Mr Goodman. What the Diſcourſe was of, I cannot particularly ſay, but I am certain you was there: And as to the Conſultation that I now ſpeak of, I remember very well you gave your Conſent in that Manner as I have told the Court.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done at the preſent.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, Brother Darnall, what ſay you for the Priſoner?

Mr Serj. Darnall. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: I am of Counſel, in this Caſe, for the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr Cook, who ſtands Indicted of a very great Offence, no leſs, Gentlemen, than High-Treaſon; and if he be Guilty, his Puniſhment will be as great: But becauſe the Puniſhment and the Offence are both very great, the Law requires exact poſitive Proof, and that by two credible Witneſſes. There have been two indeed that have been produced to you; and if you believe both of them, after what we ſhall offer to you againſt them; and if what they ſwear be true, the Priſoner is guilty: But if we ſatisfie you that either of them is not to be credited, ſo that you do not believe both of them, he muſt be acquitted.

There is no doubt, Gentlemen, but there has been a Villainous Horrid Plot; there is no queſtion of it; and it was, as it has been opened, baſely to Aſſaſſinate one of the braveſt Men living; and to make the happieſt People in the World, if they know when they are ſo, the moſt miſerable People upon Earth, by bringing them under French Tyranny and Slavery. Many of the Traitors have been brought to juſt Puniſhment for this Treaſon; nay, they have own'd the Fact at their Deaths, ſo that there is no queſtion of the Truth of it; and therefore, Gentlemen, every honeſt Man will endeavour to bring ſuch as are plainly guilty, of ſuch an abominable Conſpiracy, to juſt Puniſhment; but yet they will be as careful not to let an innocent Man ſuffer; that, Gentlemen, every honeſt Man will take care of, and eſpecially ſuch as are upon their Oaths: It concerns a Jury highly to be ſatisfied, that he is not innocent, whom they bring in guilty; for it is better that Twenty guilty Men ſhou'd eſcape, than one innocent Man ſuffer.

But, Gentlemen, if my Brief be true, we ſhall give you ſuch an Accouut of one of theſe Witneſſes; firſt, as to the Man himſelf; that he is not a Man to be credited as a Witneſs; and then beſides that, as to the Evidence he gives in this Caſe; (I ſay, if my Brief be true) it is falſe, and we ſhall prove it ſo; and when you have heard our Evidence, if you are ſatisfied that one of theſe Witneſſes is not to be credited, or that what he ſwears is not true, you are to acquit the Priſoner.

Gentlemen, Here has been one Mr Goodman produced as a Witneſs, one that never was produced before at the Trial of any of thoſe that have ſuffered, ſo that the Truth of their Guilt does not at all depend upon his Evidence, nor does it give any Credit to it. This is this Gentleman's firſt Entry upon this Stage; and yet (if my Brief be true) this is not the firſt bloody or

or cruel Part that he has acted; for we have a Record of Conviction againſt him, whereby it will appear to you, that he was indicted (for Endeavouring to poiſon two Great Dukes) for giving forty Guinea's to an Italian Empirick, one Amydei, and promiſing two Hundred Pounds more when it was effected, to poiſon the late Duke of Grafton, and the preſent Duke of Northumberland; and we ſhall ſhew you, that he was convicted of it, and fined a Thouſand Pound for the Offence; which, conſidering the Meanneſs of his Circumſtances at that Time, was as much as Twenty thouſand Pounds; for he could as well have paid Twenty as One then; and it appears too, that Mr Goodman (nay, it will not be denied by him himſelf) was in this horrid Plot; and he that wou'd be concern'd to poiſon two Dukes in a Family, to which he had ſo many Obligations——

Mr Goodman. My Lord, I deſire Leave to ſpeak to this Matter that the Serjeant mentions.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Pray, Sir, let me go on; you may talk anon; I have ſeen the Copy of the Record of Conviction, and have it ready to produce.

Mr Att. Gen. Mr Goodman, be quiet, and ſtay till by and by; you will be defended, no Doubt on it; but in the mean Time let them go on, and don't interrupt them.

Mr Serj. Darnall. I ſay, my Lord, he that wou'd be concern'd in ſo vile an Act, as a Contrivance to take away the Lives of two great Dukes, (who were, in effect, his young Maſters) that he ſhou'd go to poiſon them in a Family to which he had been ſo much obliged; and then, he that wou'd be concerned in ſo horrid a Plot as this was, to deſtroy his Country, and take away the Life of the King; ſure it will be no difficult Thing to think that this Man will not ſtick at the little Priſoner's Life at the Bar, eſpecially when he has ſo great a Temptation to it, as to ſave his own Life by it.

But perhaps ſome of you may doubt whether it is to ſave his own Life or no: But I believe there are none of you would give any Credit to him, if you thought ſo: Therefore, to ſatisfy you of that Fact, we ſhall produce you Evidence of his own Opinion of that Matter, beſide the General known Circumſtances he lay under; As, That he was long in Priſon before he charged the Priſoner with any Thing, and the Priſoner was at Liberty, went every Day abroad for a Week after Mr Charnock's Tryal, and never abſconded one Minute, but lived publickly, openly and viſibly to all his Friends, and all Strangers: But beſides, Gentlemen, that Mr Goodman knew he muſt dye, and juſtly and deſervedly for this horrid Plot and Treaſon himſelf; and had no other Way left to ſave his Life, but to come in thus as an Evidence and Accuſer, which we think will ſhake his Credit with you.

I ſay, beſides all this, (if my Brief be true) we ſhall prove that he has ſaid himſelf, That either he muſt hang Peter Cook, or he muſt be hang'd himſelf. Thus, Gentlemen, he ſwears to ſave his own Life, by taking away another's.

This, Gentlemen, is as to the Man himſelf, that he is not to be credited. But now further, as to the Evidence that he has given; He tells you that he came into the Tavern in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet, and that there he found ſuch Company; he owns he came in after Dinner; and that the other Gentleman, Mr Porter, owns too; he ſays there were preſent at this Meeting, my Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Mr Cook, and ſeveral other Gentlemen; but (if my Brief be true) we ſhall prove by three Witneſſes, that he was not there till they were gone; and that will make an End of all the Pretence of his Evidence.

Mr Att. Gen. Nay, then we ſhall never have done.

Mr Serj. Darnall. I'll aſſure you, Sir, I have the Names of three Witneſſes in my Brief, to prove that my Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr Cook, were gone before he came in, tho' if any, or either of them were gone, it deſtroys his Teſtimony; and if we prove this to you, I would be loth to be one of the Jury that ſhould take away the Priſoner's Life upon this Evidence; no, if he were the vileſt Man alive, and much leſs the Life of the Priſoner at the Bar; for we ſhall prove (if my Brief be true) he is a Man of Morals, a Man of Virtue, one that has a great Love for his Country; and this we ſhall prove by Evidence undeniable, Perſons of Quality in their Country, ſuch as ſerve their Country in Parliament, as their Repreſentatives; we ſhall ſhew it by ſuch Evidence, that there will be no Room to doubt of it: He is a Man without any Stain or Blot upon him, 'till this Accuſation; he is the eldeſt Son of his Father, and Heir to a great Eſtate; his Father is a great Officer, and a great Getter under this Government, and can it be imagin'd, or believ'd, that ſuch a Man would be guilty of the worſt of Treaſons, to deſtroy the Religion he profeſſes, to overturn the State, to ruin his own Eſtate, himſelf and his Poſterity, which muſt be the Conſequence of it? Nay, if two good Witneſſes cou'd be produc'd to teſtifie it, and if we had not had ſo much to take off the Credit of Goodman, I cou'd hardly believe it of any Man that was in his right Senſes; he muſt have been a Mad-man if he had done it, one that ſtood ſo well with the preſent Government, and of a Family never tainted with Diſloyalty.

Certainly, Gentlemen, when we make out this to you againſt Mr Goodman, the Priſoner can be in no Danger of his Life, from Mr Goodman's Evidence, tho' he is an unfortunate Man to come under ſuch an Accuſation; but I cannot believe that any Jury, upon ſuch a Man's Evidence, will brand an honeſt Family with the foulеſt, vileſt, blackeſt Treaſon that ever was hatch'd; no, Gentlemen, you are Men of Ability and Underſtanding, and that is it we relie upon; we doubt not but that you will conſider the Evidence, and conſider your Oaths, and not let the Priſoner's Blood lie at your Doors; therefore we ſhall go on and call our Witneſſes to make out what I have open'd.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we deſire to call our Witneſſes, and I ſhall reſerve my ſelf to make ſome Obſervations after we have given our Evidence: Mr Serj. has open'd as much as we can prove, and we will now produce our Evidence; Firſt we will ſhew the Conviction of Goodman: Mr Burleigh, where is the Conviction?

Mr Burleigh. Here it is, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Where had you it, Sir?

Mr Burleigh. Out of the Treaſury at Weſtminſter.

Sir B. Shower. Is it a true Copy, did you examine it there?

Mr Burleigh. Yes, it is a true Copy, I did examine it with the Record.

Sir B. Shower. Then read it, Mr Tanner.

Cl. of Arr. Reads— Michaelmas Term: Triceſimo ſecundo Caroli Secundi.

L. C. J. Treby. Read the Record in Engliſh to the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. (Reads.) Be it remember'd, that Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our Lord the King that now is, who for the ſame our Lord the King in this part ſueth, came here in the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the King himſelf at Weſtminſter, on Thurſday next after three Weeks of St. Michael, the ſame Term; and for the ſame our Lord the King, brought here into the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the ſaid King, then and there, a certain Information againſt Cardell Goodman, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman, which Information follows in theſe Words, Scilicet, Middleſex ſcilicet, Be it remember'd that Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, who for the ſame our Lord the King, in this Behalf ſueth, in his own proper Perſon came here into the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the King himſelf at Weſtminſter, on Thurſday next after three Weeks of St. Michael that ſame Term, and for the ſame our Lord the King, gives the Court here to underſtand and be inform'd, That Cardell Goodman, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman, being a Perſon of a wicked Mind, and of an ungodly and deviliſh Diſpoſition, and Converſation, and contriving, practiſing, and falſely, maliciouſly and deviliſhly intending Death, and Poiſoning and final Deſtruction unto the Right Noble Henry, Duke of Graſton, and George, Duke of Northumberland, and that the aforeſaid Cardell Goodman, his moſt wicked, moſt impious, and deviliſh Intentions, Contrivances and Practices aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, the Thirtieth Day of September, in the ſix and Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. and diverſe other Days, and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, with Force and Arms, &c. falſely, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, and deviliſhly, by unlawful Ways and Means, did ſolicite, perſwade, and endeavour to procure one Alexander Amydei, to prepare and procure two Flasks of Florence Wine, to be mix'd with deadly Poiſon, for the Poiſoning of the aforeſaid Right Noble Henry, Duke of Graſton, and George, Duke of Northumberland, and his moſt wicked, moſt impious, and deviliſh Contrivances, Practices and Intentions aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and the more to bring to Effect, the aforeſaid Cardell Goodman, the Day and Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, unlawfully, unjuſtly, maliciouſly and deviliſhly, did promiſe and agree, to give unto the aforeſaid Alexander Amydei, forty Pieces of Guinea-Gold, of the Value of forty Pound, of lawful Money of England, if he the ſaid Alexander Amydei wou'd prepare, procure and provide, two Flasks of Florence Wine, to be mix'd with deadly Poiſon, for the Poiſoning of the aforeſaid Right Noble Henry, Duke of Graſton, and George, Duke of Northumberland; and if the aforeſaid Poiſon with the Wine aforeſaid to be mix'd, ſhou'd effect the Death of the aforeſaid Henry, Duke of Graſton, and George, Duke of Northumberland; that then he the ſaid Cardell Goodman, wou'd give unto the ſaid Alexander Amydei, the Sum of one Hundred Pounds, and that beyond Sea he wou'd maintain the ſaid Alexander all the Days of him the ſaid Alexander, to the evil and moſt pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, &c.——— Then here is Proceſs pray'd by the Attorney General againſt Mr Goodman, who comes, and by his Attorney pleads not Guilty, and here is Iſſue joyn'd.

Sir B. Shower. Well, ſee for the Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. There was a Tryal at Niſi Prius, and the Jury find that the ſaid Cardell Goodman is guilty of the Premiſſes in the Information ſpecify'd as by the Information is ſuppoſed againſt him.

Sir B. Shower. Now read the Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Thereupon it is conſider'd, that the ſaid Cardell Goodman do pay to the King, the Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, for his Fine, impos'd upon him for the Occaſion aforeſaid, and that the aforeſaid Cardell Goodman be committed to the Marſhalſea of this Court, in Execution for his Fine aforeſaid, that he be ſafely kept there, till he pay his Fine aforeſaid; and before that the ſaid Cardell Goodman is deliver'd out of the Priſon aforeſaid, he ſhall give Security to behave himſelf well, during his Life, and alſo ſhall give Security for the Peace to be kept towards the ſaid Lord the King, and all his People, and particularly towards the Right Noble Henry, Duke of Graſton, and George, Duke of Northumberland.

Mr Serj. Darnall. So, you hear the Record of the Information, Conviction and Judgment, for a very horrid, abominable Crime.

Mr Att. Gen. But I deſire they may now go on, and read the whole of the Record.

Cl. of Arr. Reads. And afterwards, to wit, on Friday next after eight Days of St. Hilary, in the thirty ſixth, and thirty ſeventh Years of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, before our ſaid Lord the King at Weſtminſter came the aforeſaid Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and acknowledged that the ſaid Cardell Goodman has ſatisfy'd to our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of the Judgment aforeſaid againſt him, in Form aforeſaid given, therefore the ſaid Cardell Goodman is thereof acquitted; And ſo forth.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Call Mr Charles Edwards, William Cock, Chriſtopher Crawford, Mary Crawford, and Mr Huntley.

Edwards appear'd upon a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of Newgate, where he was a Priſoner.

Mr Baker. Where is the Warrant of his Commitment? What is he committed for?

Tokeſeild. He is committed for Suſpicion of Treaſon, and treaſonable Practices.

Mr Baker. Is he not committed for High-Treaſon?

Tokeſeild. No, Sir, he is not.

Mr Serj. Darnall. What Diſcourſe had you with Mr Goodman, concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, what did you hear him ſay?

Mr Baker. He is not ſworn yet, it ſeems this Gentleman was Dundee's Chaplain in Scotland.

Mr Att. Gen. If he be not ſworn, he can give no Evidence.

Mr Serj. Darnall. My Lord, we deſire he may be ſworn.

L. C. J. Treby. Swear him. (Which was done.)

Mr Serj. Darnall.

Mr Serj. Darnall. Pray Sir, will you tell the Court, and the Jury, what you know of any Diſcourſe of Mr Goodman's, concerning the Priſoner at the Bar.

Edwards. My Lord, I deſire to know, being ignorant of the Law, whether I am brought here by the common Courſe of Juſtice or not?

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Sir, we have Subpœna'd you for the Priſoner at the Bar, to give Evidence of the Truth of your Knowledge here upon Oath.

L. C. J. Treby. Would you have us tell you how you came here? We ſuppoſe you came by due Proceſs of Law, as a Witneſs.

Edwards. Then, my Lord, I deſire to ſpeak but one Word; that 'tis a ſtrange Thing to me to conſider, how Words ſhould be carried away that were privately ſpoken; as if it were to expoſe me to the Reproaches of all my Friends; it is a Thing that I did never expect to hear of again: However, ſeeing I am called here, and obliged upon my Oath to declare what I know, I, by God's Grace will, to the uttermoſt of my Power, tell what has paſs'd in this Matter.

L. C. J. Treby. Don't make any Apology for telling the Truth: You are obliged by your Oath to do it, and the Court expects it from you.

Edwards. Among other Diſcourſes that paſs'd betwixt Mr Goodman and me, I ask'd him when Mr Cook was to be arraigned, and when he was to be tryed: Says he, he is to be arraigned upon Monday, and he is to be tryed upon Thurſday. I ask'd him whether it was for the Aſſaſſination-Plot, and he told me no. For what then? Said I: As being concerned in ſending Mr Charnock into France? Who are the Evidences againſt him, ſaid I? Said he, Captain Porter and my Self. Said I, I believe two Witneſſes will be found Good, or by Way of Demonſtration in Law; and I pity the poor Gentleman's Caſe. Says he, he ſwore againſt me. How comes it then, ſaid I, that he is not come off, and has not a Pardon, and would divulge no Body elſe?

L. C. J. Treby. Who had not a Pardon do you mean?

Edwards. Mr Cook. I ask'd how he had not a Pardon? Says he, he would give an Account of no Body elſe but me, and that was the Reaſon he had no Pardon. Said I to him, Who are the Evidences againſt him? Says he, Captain Porter and my Self. And after this, ſays he, he or I muſt periſh; or, he or I muſt ſuffer; I believe the Word was ſuffer: But, ſays he, 'tis a fooliſh Thing to be hang'd. All that's ſaid of a Man that is hang'd, is, That he hang'd handſomely, or he dy'd bravely. That's all the Diſcourſe that I can remember.

Mr Serjeant Darnal. He ſaid it was a fooliſh Thing to be hang'd; and Mr Goodman, it ſeems, had no Mind to be hang'd; and I believe ſo too: But he muſt not hang my Client, to ſave his own Life.

Edwards. Now, by the ſame Oath that I have Sworn, I knew nothing of being brought hither, till my Words were carry'd away privately from me, and has been conſulted of, and returned to me back again; and I was far from ſuborning or carrying away a Diſcourſe privately to make any Advantage of it.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Now we will call Crawford, and Huntley, and Cock.

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire that Gentleman that was laſt examin'd, may not go away.

[Crawford, Huntley, and Cock were Sworn.]

Sir B. Shower. Set up Mr Crawford (which was done). Pray, Sir, will you recollect your ſelf: Do you remember when my Lord of Aylesbury and Captain Porter din'd at the King's Head.

Crawford. Yes: It was about a Twelve-month ago.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. What Company was there?

Crawford. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, and Two or Three more, I did not know their Names.

Sir B. Shower. How many were there that din'd there?

Crawford. I think about Eight in all.

Sir B. Shower. Was the Room ſhut while they were there, or did the Servants and Drawers go up and down commonly?

Crawford. Yes they did go up and down commonly.

Sir B. Shower. After Dinner, did any Body come to them while they were there?

Crawford. No, not during my Lord of Aylesbury's Stay, and my Lord Montgomery went away with him?

Sir B. Shower. About what Time did my Lord of Aylesbury go away?

Crawford. I think it was about Four a-Clock.

Sir B. Shower. How can you tell it?

Crawford. I did attend upon them the moſt Part of the Time.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee him go away?

Crawford. Yes, I did.

Sir B. Shower. Was that Gentleman, Mr Goodman, there, when they went away?

Crawford. I did not ſee him there, to my Remembrance: No Body came in there before they went away, ſaving their own Servants.

Mr Serj. Darnal. Do you know Mr Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar? Was he one of the Gentlemen that were at your Houſe?

Crawford. Yes: I did not well remember or recollect, till I ſaw him on Saturday laſt.

Mr Att. Gen. Was he one that went away?

Crawford. I do not remember truly, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, how long was it after Dinner that they went away?

Crawford. I think it was not an Hour.

Mr Att. Gen. Was you there all the Time, from the Time of the Dinner?

Crawford. No, not all the while I was not in the Room, but going to and fro.

Mr Serj. Darnal. You ſay Mr Goodman did not come up till after they were gone?

Crawford. No, I did not ſee him.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee him at all?

Crawford. No, I did not ſee him at all.

Mr Att. Gen. Juſt now it was ſaid he did not come till they were gone, and now it ſeems he did not ſee him at all.

Crawford. I do not know that he was there at all.

L. C. J. Treby. But, Brother Darnal, you open'd it, that Mr Goodman came after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone, and now you will prove it that he came not at all.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we do not pretend to falſify his Evidence for any Thing more than is material for the Priſoner: We ſay Mr Goodman was not in the Room where they din'd till thoſe Perſons Perſons went away; if in any Particular we diſprove him, it is ſufficient for us: If we can ſhew that he was not there till three of thoſe that he has nam'd were gone away, that anſwers our End. We are not concerned if he came at four, five, or ſix a-Clock, and diſcours'd with Charnock till twelve a-Clock at Night.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray reſerve your Remarks, but only obſerve now what he ſays, that Mr Goodman came not at all thither, and that is more than you pretended to open.

Mr Conyers. How many were there that were there at Dinner?

Crawford. About Eight.

Mr Conyers. How many do you name that you know?

Crawford. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Friend, Sir John Fenwick. Sir William Parkyns, and Captain Porter, there were ſeveral others; two or three more, but I did not know their Names.

Mr Conyers. Did you ſee Mr Goodman come in at any Part of the Day afterwards?

Crawford. I do not know that Mr Goodman.

Mr Cowper. Mr Crawford, you ſay, that for an Hour after Dinner you were ſometimes in the Room and ſometimes out; when you were out of the Room, were you always in the Paſſage up to the Room?

Crawford. No, I was not.

Mr Cowper. Cou'd any Man come in or out without your ſeeing?

Crawford. I ſhould have known him above Stairs when I came in again.

Mr Cowper. Why, you ſay, there were two or three above that you did not know.

Crawford. I knew them by Sight, if not their Names.

Mr Cowper. Were you always in Sight then?

Crawford. No, Sir, I tell you I was up and down.

Sir B. Shower. Was there any Body came in before my Lord of Aylesbury went out, that is, any Body beſides thoſe that din'd there?

Crawford. No.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we are not contending now about a Man's coming up without his Knowledge; but whether any ſuch Man as Mr Goodman came up and ſtay'd there, during the Conſultation, and we inſiſt upon it; there was no Body there till my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr Cook were gone, but thoſe that din'd there: Now I would ask a Queſtion again of him, Was there any Body but who din'd there, till my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Crawford. No, there was not.

Mr Att. Gen. Why do you ſay ſo? How do you know that?

Crawford. I did not ſee any Body.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you attend upon other Rooms, as well as that, at the ſame Time?

Crawford. Yes, I did.

Mr Soll. Gen. Then how is it poſſible that he can ſwear that Mr Goodman was not there?

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember when my Lord of Aylesbury and they went away?

Crawford. It was about Four a Clock.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there in the Room when they went away?

Crawford. I went out with my Lord to the Coach.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee him come down Stairs; or did you go up Stairs then?

Crawford. I went up Stairs when the Coach was called.

Sir B. Shower. Was then any Body there but ſuch as din'd there?

Crawford. I did not ſee any Body there but thoſe that din'd there.

Mr Cowper. But, my Lord, he does not know all that din'd there neither.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr Crawford, you ſay my Lord of Aylesbury and others went away about Four a Clock: Pray how long did the Reſt of the Company ſtay there?

Crawford. I cannot remember. They ſtay'd there pretty late: It is a pretty While ago.

L. C. J. Treby. About what Hour did they part?

Crawford. I cannot remember what Time the Reſt went away: Our Houſe is fuller at Night than at Noon; and I waited upon other Companies. It was pretty late before they went away, that I am ſure.

L. C. J. Treby. But he cannot remember whether it were Five, or Six, or Twelve, that they went away, only he can remember the Hour of Four, that my Lord of Aylesbury and they went away.

Mr J. Rokeby. Was it Light, or was it Dark when they went away?

Crawford. It was Dark.

L. C. J. Treby. Did you attend the Company after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone?

Crawford. I went up and down into that Company as I did into others.

L. C. J. Treby. Was you there ſeveral Times after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone?

Crawford. Yes, I was there once or twice after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone, I am ſure.

L. C. J. Treby. And did you never ſee Mr Goodman there?

Crawford. No, I never ſaw Mr Goodman in my Life, before I ſaw him on Saturday laſt.

Sir B. Shower. Which is Mr Huntley?

Huntley. Here I am, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Pray recollect your ſelf, and tell my Lord and the Jury what you remember of any Company that were with Mr Porter, at the King's Head, and who din'd there.

Huntley. My Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr Porter and Mr Charnock.

Sir B. Shower. That was the Company, you ſay, that din'd there: Did Mr Goodman dine there?

Huntley. No, Mr Goodman did not dine there.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, recollect your ſelf: When did any of this Company part, or go away?

Huntley. My Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away about Four a Clock.

Sir B. Shower. Sir, how do you know that?

Huntley. I went down Stairs after them; I was above Stairs when they parted from the Reſt of the Company.

Mr Serj. Darnal. Pray mind, Sir: Was Mr Goodman there at that Time before they went away?

Huntley. No, he was not.

Sir B. Shower. Are you ſure of that, upon the Oath you have taken?

Huntley. Yes, I take it upon my Oath, he was not there.

Sir B. Shower. Did you attend them at Dinner?

Huntley. Yes, I did attend them at Dinner.

Sir B. Shower. Did you attend them all the While they were there?

Huntley. I was call'd frequently, and was in and out of the Room very much after Dinner.

Sir B

Sir B. Shower. Do you think if a freſh Man had come in after Dinner, you ſhould not have known him?

Huntley. Yes, I ſhould have known him.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, let me ask you one Queſtion. Was Mr Goodman there at all that Day?

Huntley. That I don't know; I did not ſee him at all.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you attend upon any other Rooms that Day?

Huntley. No, I attended only upon that Company.

Mr Soll. Gen. Were you in the Room all the Time?

Huntley. No, I went up and down.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Time did the laſt of the Company go away?

Huntley. It was about Darkiſh; it was pretty late to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, did any Body come to thoſe Gentlemen after Dinner?

Huntley. No, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ever ſee Goodman before now?

Huntley. Never in my Life, to my Knowledge.

Mr J. Rokeby. Did all the Company, but my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, ſtay till it was Duskiſh?

Huntley. That I don't know.

Mr J. Rokeby. Did you know all the Company that was that Day at Dinner?

Huntley. I knew all but One.

Mr J. Rokeby. And who was that?

Huntley. That was Mr Charnock.

Mr J. Rokeby. And yet you can't tell whether there was any Body elſe that you did not know, how then can you tell that Goodman was not there?

Sir B. Shower. He did not know him at that Time, but he might remember him afterwards.

Mr Conyers. Did not the ſame Company uſe to meet at other Times, at your Houſe?

Huntley. Not to my Remembrance.

Mr Conyers. How then came you, if they never had us'd to meet there, to know all theſe People's Names?

Huntley. I have ſeen Sir John Freind there, and Sir William Parkyns.

Mr Conyers. Was Sir John Freind there, or no?

Huntley. Yes, he was.

Mr Conyers. My Lord, he was the only Man that was not nam'd before: You did not name Sir John Freind before, as I heard: But pray, did you ever ſee Mr Charnock there, but at that Time?

Huntley. No, I did not.

Mr Conyers. How came you to know it was Mr Charnock?

Huntley. I knew very few of them before that Time; and I ask'd their Servants the Names of all thoſe Perſons that were there?

Mr Conyers. Did you know Mr Porter, pray?

Huntley. Not before that Time: I did ſee Mr Porter, and I knew him again when I ſaw him, his Black told me his Name that Day.

Sir B. Shower. You, Huntley, I would ask you one Queſtion more; Was the Door ſhut, or no?

Huntley. No, it was not.

Sir B. Shower. Did the Servants go up and down as they us'd to do?

Huntley. Yes, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. Sir Bartholomew would make it that there was no Conſultation at all.

Sir B. Shower. They were very mad Folks if they would conſult at that Rate with the Door open. Pray call Mr William Cock, (who was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Sir John Freind has own'd it, that's dead.

Sir B. Shower. Sir John Freind's Confeſſion is nothing to the Priſoner.

Mr Att. Gen. Mr Serjeant Darnall did open, that the Confeſſion of thoſe that dy'd, was an undeniable Proof of the Conſpiracy: But go on with your Evidence.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Pray, Mr Cock, will you recollect your ſelf, about the Time when Captain Porter, and ſome other Gentlemen, din'd at your Houſe.

W. Cock. Yes, very well.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Pray, Sir, can you tell who din'd there at that Time?

W. Cock. There were my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Mr Charnock, Captain Porter, and Mr Cook.

Mr J. Rokeby. Was that all the Company?

W. Cock. Yes, it was.

Mr J. Rokeby. One of them ſaid there were Eight.

L. C. J. Treby. And he has nam'd Eight, Brother.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Can you remember when any of the Company went away, and who went away firſt?

Cock. My Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away in a Hackney-Coach; and their Servants were frequently in the Room, and waited afterwards in another Room, after that they had waited at Table at Dinner; and tho' the Door was ſhut, as it uſed to be when any Company is there, yet no Body was forbid to come there at all.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you remember when Mr Goodman came there?

Cock. I never ſaw Mr Goodman in my Life before to Day.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Did any Body come to this Company before my Lord of Aylesbury went away that did not Dine there?

Cock. I did not ſee any Body there at all: And my Lord of Aylesbury was about buying a Hogſhead of White-wine, but we could not agree about the Price: And when my Lord of Aylesbury went away, I went down with my Lord, and waited upon him to the Coach; and I told my Lord, I hoped he would buy the Wine ſtill. But he anſwered, he could not tell whether he ſhould or no.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Who elſe went with my Lord of Aylesbury?

Cock. My Lord Montgomery. I don't remember any Body elſe.

Mr J. Rokeby. Did all the Reſt of the Company go away at once?

Cock. Truly, my Lord, I can't ſay they did.

Mr J. Rokeby. By what Time did the Reſt go away?

Cock. I believe it might be Eight or Nine a Clock.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. You ſaw my Lord of Aylesbury when he parted: Was Mr Goodman there then?

Cock. I did not ſee him.

Mr B. Powis. Did Mr Cook ſtay till the laſt?

Cock.

Cock. That I can't tell truly.

Mr B. Powis. I find they all Swear to Four a Clock of my Lord Aylesbury's going, and go no further.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Queſtion or two: Did you ever ſee Mr Goodman before now?

Cock. No, I do not remember I did.

Mr Att. Gen. When you went into the Room after Dinner, did you look about the Room to ſee whether there were any new Company?

Cock. I did look about the Room ſeveral times, and ſo did my Servants, to ſee if there were any Thing wanting.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that he was not there whilſt my Lord of Aylesbury ſtay'd?

Cock. I do: And can take it upon my Oath, he was not.

Mr Att. Gen. Then if you can, pray diſtinguiſh the Time when he came in.

Cock. I do not remember that ever I ſaw him in my Life before to Day.

Mr Att. Gen. Why are you not as poſitive that he was not there at all, as that he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Cock. He might come in, and I not ſee him.

Mr Att. Gen. Might he not as well come in before they went away, as after, to come in and you not ſee him?

Cock. No, I do not think he cou'd.

Mr Att. Gen. Why do you think ſo?

Cock. Becauſe the Servants were all about, and they did not go to Dinner till Two a Clock: And I believe thoſe Gentlemen that I named, came in a Quarter of an Hour's Time to Dinner.

Mr Att. Gen. We do not ſay he came there before Dinner: But could he not come in after Dinner, before my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away, without your ſeeing him?

Cock. Yes, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Then heark ye, Sir, I wou'd ask you one Queſtion: Did you ſee him, upon your Oath, or not?

Cock. No, I did not.

Sir B. Shower. Might not Mr Goodman come in to them without your ſeeing him?

Cock. It is poſſible; but I don't think it was ſo.

Mr J. Rokeby. How then can you be poſitive that he was not there till my Lord of Aylesbury went?

Mr Soll. Gen. You ſay you may be poſitive he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went: Can you be as poſitive now, that he was not there before Mr Cook went?

Cock. I do not know when Mr Cook went.

Mr Soll. Gen. How can you be then poſitive he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went?

Cock. There were no more than what dined there when my Lord of Aylesbury went away.

Mr Conyers. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Queſtion: Were you in the Room at any Time after Dinner?

Cock. Yes, I was Sir.

Mr Conyers. Pray, Sir, How many Times after Dinner, were you there?

Cock. I believe half a dozen Times.

Mr Soll. Gen. And yet you do confeſs that Mr Goodman might come in after Dinner before my Lord of Aylesbury went, and you not ſee him?

Sir B. Shower. Ay, but he could not ſtay there without his ſeeing him, if he was ſo often in the Room: You don't take Mr Cock's Evidence right.

Mr Att. Gen. You named eight Perſons that dined at your Houſe: Did you know them all perſonally before that Day?

Cock. Yes, my Lord, the moſt of them at leaſt.

Mr Att. Gen. Did they uſe to meet at your Houſe?

Cock. Commonly Sir John Freind did once a Week. Mr Charnock I knew when I was a Drawer, and ſo I did Sir William Parkyns: The Reſt I knew by hearing their Names.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you know them before that Day, Sir, I ask you?

Cock. I had ſeen Captain Porter ſeveral Times before that Day; but I cannot ſay at my own Houſe.

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember the Treaty about the Hogſhead of White-wine?

Cock. Yes, Sir, very well.

Sir B. Shower. Were you by when my Lord of Aylesbury went away, and ſpoke with him about it?

Cock. Yes, I was; and told him, I hoped he would buy the Wine ſtill.

Sir B. Shower. Can you be poſitive that any Body was there before my Lord of Alesbury went away, that could ſtay there any Time, and did not Dine there?

Cock. I believe not, Sir; for I came in half a dozen Times after Dinner, and I believe if I had heard Mr Goodman's Name, or ſeen him there, I ſhould have remembred it; but I did not ſee any Body but thoſe that dined there.

Mr Cowper. Where was you when my Lord of Aylesbury went away? Where did you meet him going away?

Cock. Upon the Stairs: Seeing my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery coming down, I met them.

Mr Cowper. Where did you meet them? At the Middle, or the Top of the Stairs?

Cock. My Lord of Aylesbury was at the Top of the Stairs.

Mr Cowper. Did you meet him juſt coming out of the Room?

Cock. Yes, Sir, I ſaw the Coach that was called for my Lord; and ſo I went up Stairs, and met my Lord at the Top of the Stairs coming down.

Mr Soll. Gen. Now how can you be poſitive who was in the Room when he came out of the Room?

Cock. I went up into the Room after my Lord of Aylesbury went away.

Mr Soll. Gen. How long after my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Cock. It was preſently after.

Mr Soll. Gen. How long before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, had you been in the Room?

Cock. I had been there juſt before.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Call Thomas Peachy, (who appear'd and was Sworn.)

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we ſhall prove that after the Plot broke out, and after Mr Porter had made his Diſcovery, there was no Diſturbance of Mr Cook till a good While after Charnock's Tryal; and Mr Cook was ſo far from being ſenſible, or conſcious of any Guilt, that he never abſconded, but continued for three Weeks in his Father's Houſe, where he was taken by a Meſſenger. Pray Mr Peachy will you tell my Lord, and the the Jury, where Mr Cook was taken, and when, and by whom?

Peachy. He was taken at his Father's Houſe by a Meſſenger, about Seven a Clock in the Morning.

Sir B. Shower. What Day of the Week was it he was taken?

Peachy. Upon a Sunday Morning, in his own Room, in his Father's Houſe, at Seven a Clock in the Morning.

Sir B. Shower. Did People come to him as they uſed to do?

Peachy. Yes; and he went frequently abroad as he uſed to do, and did never abſcond from his Father's Houſe.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Pray Swear Mr Treganna. (which was done)

Sir B. Shower. Mr Treganna, pray do you remember how long after the Plot broke out did you ſee Mr Cook?

Treganna. After Mr Charnock's Tryal, a Week, he was at my Chamber; after the Plot broke out, he was concerned in a Tryal at Wincheſter Aſſizes, upon an Iſſue out of Chancery, Mr Nicholls was the Clerk in Court, and went down to manage it at the Aſſizes; and Mr Cook came to me a Day or two after Wincheſter Aſſizes was over, and ask'd me if I had any News from the Aſſizes? This was long after the Plot broke out: And I remember particularly, that I ſaw him twice after the Plot was diſcovered, at my Chamber.

Sir B. Shower. Swear Mr Nicholls, (which was done.) Sir, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of Mr Cook's appearing abroad after the Plot was diſcovered?

Mr Nicholls. I was ſent down to the Tryal: I was preſent, and did attend at two Tryals indeed, and I ſuppoſe Mr Baron Powis may remember that I attended at two Tryals at Wincheſter Aſſizes.

Mr B. Powis. Poſſibly you might, Sir: I can't tell all the Attendance at the Aſſizes.

Mr Nicholls. And after my return from Wincheſter Aſſizes, Mr Cook was with me ſeveral Days, both at my Office and Chamber, and at his Fathers Office: And I remember particularly, that he threatned me that I was in Trouble when I was at Wincheſter, and therefore I remember it very well.

Sir B. Shower. Mr Nicholls, you know Mr Cook very well; pray what are his Morals?

Mr Nicholls. Upon Occaſion of the Cauſe in Chancery that went to Tryal, I have had the Knowledge of Mr Cook five or ſix Years; I always believed him to be as temperate a Man as ever I met with: I think in five Years Time I was not above once with him in a Tavern.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever hear him Swear?

Mr Nicholls. No, never; nor vent a Curſe: I believe he drank as little as any Man, and was as godly a Man. I never heard him ſpeak a foul Word.

Sir B. Shower. How do you know that, Sir, that he was ſo godly a Man?

Mr Nicholls. Upon Occaſion of this Cauſe, I was ſeveral Times at Sir Miles Cook's, and at Mr Cook's Lodgings there, and we were to go about Buſineſs, and after he was dreſs'd, he has made me ſtay while he went into his Cloſet and ſaid his Prayers. And he told me further, that he never went out of his Father's Doors without ſaying his Prayers; and I was forc'd to ſtay at the Door while he perform'd his Devotions, as he told me, and I believe he did.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Now, my Lord, we will call ſome other Witneſſes to prove his good Affection to his Country, how he continually deſired Succeſs to the Fleet, and to the Army.

Sir B. Shower. So that really he had an Averſion to it.

Swear Mr Hamond, (which was done.)

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account what you know of the Priſoner, concerning his Judgment, and concerning his Morals?

Hamond. I have been for ſome Time acquainted with Mr Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, and to the Beſt of my Obſervation, I always took him to be a conſcientious Man, and I have heard him declare great Deteſtation of a French Force: And three or four Days before he was taken into Cuſtody, I ask'd him what he heard of Intelligence? He ſaid he heard what was in the publick Prints, and heard no more, and knew no more; and he had a great Abhorrence of the Conſpiracy, and thought it a very monſtrous Thing. I never heard him ſpeak a diſreſpectful Word of the King's Perſon or Government in my Life. And I ſay again, I have heard him ſeveral Times declare, in common Converſation, that he had an Averſion to French Power, and he had a dread of it.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. What have you heard him ſay about our Fleet, or Army?

Hamond. My Lord, I have heard him very much wiſh Proſperity and Succeſs to our Fleet.

Mr J. Rokeby. What Fleet, pray Sir?

Hamond. To our Fleet, King William's Fleet againſt the French. Things to this Purpoſe he has frequently ſaid.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Then Swear Mrs Hunt, (which was done) but ſhe was not examined.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we leave it here. But I muſt beg the Favour, that if they give any new Evidence, and there be Occaſion, we may have liberty to anſwer it. And I have an Obſervation or two to make when the Evidence is over.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, if they have done with their Evidence, I beg leave to obſerve, that there is ſomething ariſes upon that Evidence, that will give us occaſion to call a Witneſs or two more. My Lord, the firſt Witneſs which they call'd was Edwards, and he is in Cuſtody upon Suſpicion of High Treaſon in Newgate, and he gives an Account of ſome Diſcourſe that he had with Mr Goodman; and for that, it will be neceſſary for us to call Mr Porter again and Mr de la Rue, to ſhew that this Edwards, the Witneſs, as he is committed for Suſpicion of High Treaſon, ſo he was in the Conſpiracy for the Aſſaſſination; he was one in the Liſt that was brought back by Cranburne from Mr Charnock to Captain Porter, as one of Charnock's Men, and he is in Cuſtody for it. Then as to the other Matter, they have called three Witneſſes to prove, That Mr Goodman was not in this Place at this Time. The Council indeed opened it, that he was not at the Tavern till after my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery were gone away; but their Evidence goes further, That he was not there at all: And the Maſter of the Houſe ſays, he was not there to his Knowledge at any Time. So that if their Evidence prove any Thing, they prove that he was not there at all; they do not remember that they ſaw him there: So that the Queſtion will be, whether Mr Goodman was there at that Time, and it will be neceſſary to call Mr Goodman again, and Mr Porter, to confront theſe Witneſſes, who will tell you when he came in: And particularly as to my Lord of Aylesbury, that he went with him to the Stairs-head, and my Lord would not let him go further, but he went back again when my Lord of Aylesbury went down Stairs. We will begin with the Witneſſes, as to this Edwards.

Swear Mr de la Rue, (which was done.)

Mr Conyers. Mr de la Rue, Pray do you know Mr Edwards that was here?

Mr de la Rue. He goes by ſeveral Names; I know him by the Name of Douglas: And laſt Monday I came into the Preſs-Yard, and ſaluted him by the Name of Douglas, and he ſaid he had taken his own Name again, by which he was known at St. Germains, and that was Edwards or Richards, as I remember, or ſome ſuch Name.

Mr Conyers. When was he at St Germains?

Mr de la Rue. About three or four Years ago.

Mr Conyers. Pray look upon him, ſee if you know him.

Mr de la Rue. I know him very well, there he ſtands, that is the Perſon in the black Wig; he was reputed at St. Germains to be my late Lord Dundee's Chaplain.

Mr Att. Gen. What Name did he go by at St. Germains?

Mr de la Rue. I can't very well tell: But he ſaid he had taken his own Name again; and I think he ſaid it was Edwards or Richards.

Mr Conyers. Did he go formerly by the Name of Douglas?

Mr de la Rue. Yes, here in England: Mr Porter knew him to go by that Name.

Mr Att. Gen. What elſe do you know of him?

Mr de la Rue. The Liſt that Mr Cranburne carried from Mr Porter to Mr Charnock, and which he brought back again from Mr Charnock to Mr Porter, had in it, among the other Names, the Name of Douglas, which I underſtood to be that Gentleman.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he go by that Name at that Time?

Mr de la Rue. Yes he did.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray repeat that again, Sir, that we may underſtand it, and ſee whether it be Evidence.

Mr de la Rue. Why, Sir, the Liſt that Mr Cranburne brought from Mr Charnock to Mr Porter, at the Foot of the Liſt which Mr Porter had ſent to him, there were other Names written, as I believe, in Mr Charnock's Hand; and among thoſe Names there was the Name of Douglas, which I underſtood to be this Mr Edwards, as he calls himſelf. And moreover, when Mr Porter went out of Town, going to Doctors Commons, I called at Mr Charnock's, and he had a great deal of Company with him, four or five Troopers, and among the Reſt this Edwards or Douglas was there ſitting by him. Here is a Gentleman that I ſee upon the Bench, I think he is a Scotchman, that knew him at St. Germains as well as I. I think his Name is Mackdonnel.

Mr J. Rokeby. What Country-man did you take this Edwards to be?

Mr de la Rue. A Scotch man, and Chaplain to my Lord Dundee that was killed in Scotland.

Mr Serjeant Darnall. Did you ſee this Gentleman in France, Sir?

Mackdonnel. I never was in France in my Life.

Mr Att. Gen. You can't ask him the Queſtion: You know it tends to make him either accuſe or excuſe himſelf of a Crime. Pray call Mr Porter again. But in the mean Time, till he comes, we'll examine Mr Goodman, becauſe he is here. Mr Goodman, you were by, and heard what theſe Drawers ſaid concerning your being at the Old King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet that Day. Pray give an Account when you came in, whether you ſaw my Lord of Aylesbury, and what paſſed between you at my Lord of Aylesbury's going away?

Mr Goodman. Mr Porter brought me up; and when I came in they were all ſitting; and after Salutation I ſat down: And when they had conſulted ſome Time, they came to a Reſolution, as I have told you already. The Fellows are ſo far in the Right of it, that my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away firſt; for I took my Leave of them at the Head of the Stairs. Says my Lord of Aylesbury to me, Pray avoid Ceremony, we will go away privately as we came, in a Hackney-Coach. And as to the Maſter of the Houſe, who ſays, he does not know me, I have dined ſeveral Times there; four or five Times with Sir John Freind: And one particular Day above all the Reſt, I remember I was not well, and I went down Stairs to the Bar, and ſaid, I pray can you get me a little Brandy. He ſaid, yes; he would help me to ſome of the Beſt in England. And he brought me up ſome which I liked very well; and thinking he had a Quantity of it, I ask'd him what I ſhould give him a Gallon for a Parcel. But he ſaid, he had but a little: And I am ſure he has ſeen me there five or ſix Times.

Mr Att. Gen. Then ſet up that Maſter of the Houſe Cock again, (which was done.)

Come, Sir, You hear what Mr Goodman has Sworn, and mind it; you are upon your Oath. You ſaid juſt now, that you never ſaw Mr Goodman before.

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir: I don't know that ever I ſaw him before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember nothing of his being with Sir John Freind at your Houſe?

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. Nay, you are upon your Oath. Nor do you know nothing of your giving of him Brandy?

Cock. No, upon my Oath, I do not remember any ſuch Thing.

Mr Att. Gen. That is a very ſafe Way of Swearing, I profeſs.

Mr Conyers. He remembers the particular Time when he was Sick, and you offer'd to ſell him ſome Brandy.

Mr Att. Gen. No, he ask'd him what he ſhould give him for it a Gallon. But, Mr Cock, did you ever ſee Goodman in your Houſe ſince my Lord of Aylesbury and they were there?

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir, I did not: And I never had but two Gallons of Brandy in my Life at a Time: And I never had any Cask, or any Thing of that Nature, to ſell any out of.

Mr Att. Gen. Who uſed to be with Sir John Freind at your Houſe?

Cock. There uſed to be Mr Richardſon, and Juſtice Caſh, and Col. Caſh.

Mr Goodman. Mr Richardſon was there that Day: I could almoſt have remembred the particular Day, but I cannot be poſitive; only we were in the ſame Room where the Conſultation was, at the further Part of the Room.

Mr J. Rokeby. You Friend, the Maſter of the Houſe, you hear what Mr Goodman ſays: He ſays he was with Sir John Freind at your Houſe, and being not well, he ask'd for ſome Brandy, and you told him, you'd give him ſome of the beſt in England.

land. And he propounded to you then to ſell him ſome of it; but it ſeems there was no Bargain made. Do you remember any ſuch Thing of one that was with Sir John Freind, that ſpoke of buying of Brandy when he was ſick?

Cock. No, upon my Word I do not.

Mr Att. Gen. Then ſet up Mr Porter (who ſtood up.) Pray Mr Porter, look upon that Man in the Black Peruke; what Name did he uſe to go by?

Mr Porter. He uſed to go by the Name of Edwards.

Mr Att. Gen. Had he any other Name?

Mr Porter. Yes, Douglas.

Mr Att. Gen. He has ſo many Names, that we don't know which is his true Name. Mr Porter, pray what elſe do you know of him touching his being concerned in the Conſpiracy?

Mr Porter. I know not any thing of my own Knowledge; but his Name was put down in the Liſt that Mr Charnock ſent me of his Men, and Mr De la Rue read his Name there.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Porter, you were a Witneſs upon the Trials of Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns; did you give Evidence that Mr Goodman was in the Room at the ſame time when the Conſultation was?

Mr Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, you hear that theſe People have ſworn, that Mr Goodman did not come till my Lord of Aylesbury went away; nay indeed, that he was not there at all.

Mr Porter. My Lord, upon my Oath he was there before my Lord Aylesbury went away, and Mr Goodman bowed, and took leave of my Lord as he went out of Doors.

Mr Att. Gen. What time did my Lord of Aylesbury go away?

Mr Porter. It was about an Hour and a Half, or two Hours after Dinner, and he was in the Room when my Lord went away, for he took his Leave of him at the Door.

Mr Cowper. Do you remember the Manner of Mr Goodman's coming in?

Mr Porter. Mr Goodman ſent up his Name to me, and I told the Company, and promis'd for him, that he was a very honeſt Man, and much in King James's Intereſt; and then with their Conſent I went down and brought him up.

Mr J. Powell. How long time do you think there was between Mr Goodman's coming in, and my Lord of Aylesbury's going away?

Mr Porter. I cannot tell that, I do not remember exactly how long it was,

Mr J. Powell. Was it a quarter of an Hour, or half an Hour?

Mr Porter. A great deal longer, for we had diſcourſed of the whole Buſineſs after Mr Goodman came into the Room.

Mr Conyers. How long were they there after Mr Goodman came in?

Mr Porter. It was very near two Hours after he came in, before they went away; they did not go away till ſix a Clock, and he came in at Four as near as I can remember.

Mr Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done.

Sir B. Shower. Then I beg the Favour of a Word or two, my Lord, May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the Priſoner at the Bar, and I muſt beg your Lordſhip's Patience, and your Favour, Gentlemen, to make a few Obſervations upon the Evidence that has been given; for we humbly inſiſt upon it in point of Law, that here is not ſufficient Evidence before you to convict the Priſoner. You are, Gentlemen, to have reſpect and regard to your Conſciences and the Oaths which you have now taken, to give a Verdict, and make true Deliverance between the King, and the Priſoner; you are not to go according to your own private Opinions, nor according to publick Fame, nor according to common Report, nor according to the Verdicts in other Caſes, nor according to the Confeſſions or Dying Speeches of Criminals who have been Executed, whether made by themſelves, or by others for them, but you are to go by the Teſtimony of Credible Witneſſes, and if you have not the Evidence of two Credible Witneſſes before you, my Lords the Judges will inform you how the Law ſtands. That by the Statute of Edward the Sixth, and the new Statute for Trials of Treaſons, there muſt be two Witneſſes to prove the Priſoner guilty of the Overt-Act of the Treaſon that is laid in the Indictment; and whether there have been two Credible Witneſſes produced before you, is the Queſtion that you are to conſider upon your Oath and Conſcience; that is, whether you are ſatisfied here be two ſuch as the Law requires. The Queſtion is not meerly whether Mr Cook be guilty, but whether in your Conſciences he be legally proved guilty; whether there be Evidence to ſatisfie your Conſciences, according to the Laws of the Land, that he is guilty; and we inſiſt there is not; and therefore I beg leave to recapitulate what has been ſworn againſt him, that we may ſee how far it reaches, and wherein it is defective.

Gentlemen, Mr Porter he ſwears that about the Beginning or middle of May, he cannot tell which, there was this Meeting at the Old Kings-Head Tavern in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet; in which, I wou'd obſerve to you, that he confines himſelf to a certain Month; the Reaſon is very plain, and therefore I ask'd him whether it was not in April; for if he had ſaid it had been then, there had been no danger to the Priſoner, becauſe of the Act of Indempnity, therefore he was careful to fix it in May; and he would not lay it in June, for the Tenth of June is a famous Day; and then, or ſoon after Newgate had him; he was confined there for a Riot on that Day, and ſo they have reſtrained it to a Month, and the only Month that he is capable of ſwearing to, as to any Act done the laſt Year till they came in January to the Aſſaſſination Plot, which the Priſoner is not accuſed to have had any Concern in; but it ſhou'd ſeem he cannot tell what Day of the Week, or of the Month, but about the Beginning or the Middle of May Eight Perſons dined at this Place, and then after Dinner Mr Goodman came in, and they diſcourſed about this Matter.

Firſt, Gentlemen, we inſiſt upon it, that it is very improbable that Engliſh Proteſtants of pious Converſation and good Morals, ſhould agree, as he ſays, to ſend ſuch a Meſſage to the late King, to invite over a French Popiſh Force; we may eaſily ſee the horrid and miſchievous Conſequences that wou'd have followed ſuch a Practice, ſuch as muſt affect every Engliſh-man with a Concern, ſo that it is improbable a Man of Virtue and Piety cou'd engage in ſuch an Enterprize; and if it be improbable, you will never believe it, unleſs the Conviction or Proof be irreſiſtible: And if you have any any other Reaſons to diſtruſt this Man's Truth, then we hope you will go upon the Side of Probability; and not let popular Prejudice, Common Fame, or any thing elſe but legal and Undeniable Evidence have the Aſcendant over you. If you are not ſatisfied that Mr Cook did aſſent (as from the Character of the Man it is not probable he ſhou'd) to ſend Charnock into France, to perſwade King Lewis and King James to ſend Ten Thouſand Men to invade our Country, then he is not guilty.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, he is not guilty we ſay in the Eye of the Law, if they have not two Witneſſes; and for that we ſay you have but one, or but one that is to be believed; and if you have but one that is to be believed, that in Law is but one, and conſequently my Client is not guilty; ſo the King's Council agree, that if there be but one Witneſs, he cannot be convicted, the Law is plain in the Caſe. Now to make it out that here is but one Witneſs at moſt, we have offered you ſeveral Objections, and made them out by Evidence, againſt the Teſtimony of Mr Goodman; that he is not a Perſon fit to be believed; and if he be out of the Caſe, then does Mr Porter's ſtand alone, and all will amount but to one Witneſs, ſuppoſe it ſhou'd be granted that his Teſtimony were true.

Firſt, We have read a Record of Conviction againſt him, of a Crime, one of the Greateſt next unto Treaſon, that is known in our or any other Law. That he hired a Man to poiſon two Dukes, Branches of a Noble Family, to which he had ſuch great Obligations, as all Mankind do know, and he himſelf cannot but acknowledge; and if there were not that Aggravation in it, of his Obligations to that Family, yet to lie in wait to Murder and Poiſon, is ſuch an Offence as any Age can ſeldom ſhow the like. And the Objection is not ſo very eaſily anſwered as they would have it; nor can it be ſo ſoon paſſed over as they think, by ſaying He is a Witneſs of a Confederacy with which the Priſoner is accuſed, a Crime greater than the Thing objected. It is true, none can bear Teſtimony in ſuch a Buſineſs, but he that is a Party: But, we ſay, if theſe Perſons who come and ſet up themſelves for Witneſſes, were not probi Homines, and did not appear to be Perſons of indifferent Credit between Man and Man, and did not ſtand impartial in the Eye of the World in other reſpects before, then they are not to be believed, as to what they charge themſelves and others to be guilty of. Now, if Mr Goodman ſtand convicted of ſuch an Offence as this that is alledged againſt him, tho' he is pardoned by the Act of Parliament, or Satisfaction acknowledged upon the Record, though it be even the very next Term, yet that does not purge him from the Infamy and Diſgrace, or from the Imputation of being concerned in ſo Villainous a Deſign. It is impoſſible that he ſhould be a good Witneſs that wou'd be engaged in ſuch a Matter, eſpecially when we have thoſe various Witneſſes, and ſuch a concurring Teſtimony, that what he has Sworn is abſolutely falſe.

Gentlemen, if there were nothing but his own Teſtimony in the Caſe, there could be no Queſtion at all in it: And as to Captain Porter's Teſtimony about his being there, we have produced three Witneſſes, who, if they be of Credit, then Mr Goodman is not to be believed, but is falſified throughout; for, it is not the Queſtion, whether Mr Cook went away before the Conſultation and the Reſolution; for, if my Lord of Aylesbury, or my Lord Montgomery went away, Mr Goodman is falſified in that, and conſequently you ought not to believe him in the reſt; for he actually ſwears, that my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and thoſe other Gentlemen, were all preſent, and at the Conſult, and did conſent and agree to the Reſolution, by uſing theſe Words; Yes, you may; Yes, you may. Now, we ſay, there are three Witneſſes that ſwear, That my Lord of Aylesbury was gone before he came there. I do not care whether he came there, or not; that is not material: For if there were no Body there when my Lord of Aylesbury was there but thoſe that were at Dinner, then Mr Goodman was not there at any ſuch Conſultation, as they would inſinuate was at that Time, in that Place, and that Company.

My Lord, we have proved to you Mr Cook's Abhorrence and Declaration, which, we think, ought to go a great Way in ſatisfaction of his Innocence, at leaſt to induce you to the favourable Side; for, Gentlemen, you are not brought hither to Convict a Man only, but to Try and Examine him; and is is your Duty to Acquit, as well as Convict, according as the Evidence ſtands: It is your Duty to go according to your Conſciences, and to declare whether he be Guilty, or not Guilty, upon the Evidence you have before you: You are to examine the Truth of the Fact in all its Circumſtances, and upon your own Conſciences to declare, whether he is Guilty or not Guilty; now we propoſe it to you, and ſubmit it to your Conſciences, that here are three Witneſſes, that ſpeak upon their Oaths, againſt whom there is no Objection, that ever they were guilty of lying in wait to Poiſon any Body, nor in any Plot for an Aſſaſſination, nor any Conſpiracy for inviting an Invaſion from France, nor any other Objection againſt them, but they ſtand upright in the Face of the World, and they three ſwear, That he was not there at that time. The Anſwer that we expect, is, That he might be there, and they not ſee him: And becauſe it was poſſible he might be there, and they not ſee him, therefore it is no Evidence: But, my Lord, becauſe it may be ſo, is no Evidence that it is ſo; that's noObjection; for you will take it as the Nature of the Thing will afford, and the Matter itſelf allow. Now there can be no better Evidence than this; that they went in and out continually; the Drawers, and the Maſter of the Houſe five or ſix times himſelf, were in the Room, and they ſay, there was no ſuch Perſon there. Why then it is very improbable, if not impoſſible, that any ſuch Man ſhould be there. The one ſwears, he came down from my Lord of Aylesbury juſt before he went away; and another ſays, he followed him out of the Room; and the Maſter ſays, that he met my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-head. All which falſifies Mr Goodman in that Particular, that he was with my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-head, when he went away. Theſe are incompatible; and if we falſifie him in any one Thing, he is not to be believed in any other.

Then, Gentlemen, we offer to your Conſideration an Anſwer to another Objection: They ſay theſe Witneſſes ſeem to ſwear, that he was not there at all. We are not concerned whether he was there afterwards, or not: If you are ſatisfied, that he was not there, as our Witneſſes ſwear, while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, that's enough.

But

But then they make an Objection, how comes the Maſter of the Houſe to remember my Lord of Aylesbury's going away, more than any Body elſe? Gentlemen, you know the Nature of the Thing ſhows, not only that it was more probable the Maſter of the Houſe ſhould make his Obſervations near the time of Dinner, rather than afterwards at Night, when there is more Hurry: But it is more probable he ſhould take notice of it from the Quality of the Perſon, from the Diſcourſe he had with him about the White-wine, which was a good Medium to refreſh a Vintner's Memory, it being a Matter in his own Trade, and that might make him call it to Mind.

Therefore, Gentlemen, we think theſe three Witneſſes ſtand free and clear in their Credit; and being ſo, are inconſiſtent with Mr Goodman's Teſtimony; and, we hope, in favour of Life, the Credit inclines on their Side, eſpecially when the Queſtion is, whether a Man ſhall be executed for Treaſon who never fled for it, who was never charg'd with any Treaſon or Treaſonable Practices before; nay, not ſo much as with any particular Crime or Immorality: And whether three Witneſſes ſhall be believed, againſt whom there is no Objection, rather than Two, againſt One of which there are ſuch Objections.

My Lord, we are not now debating or attacking the Evidence of the Plot, or arraigning the former Judgments againſt the Conſpirators that have ſuffer'd; but, Gentlemen, we are putting you now upon a ſerious Enquiry, (as God and your own Conſciences ſhall incline you) whether our Client be guilty or not guilty upon this Evidence; that is, whether Mr Goodman ſwears true, or not. We hope that we have given you ſufficient Satisfaction, that upon Mr Goodman's Part the Evidence is inſufficient; and we hope you will accordingly find our Client not guilty.

Mr Att. Gen. If Mr Cook have any thing to ſay himſelf, I deſire he may ſay it now, before we begin.

Sir B. Shower. No, pray go on, Sir.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr Cook, wou'd you ſay any Thing your ſelf, before the King's Council ſum up?

Cook. The little I have to ſay, my Lord, I'll ſpeak now, or by and by, which you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Treby. You muſt do it now, becauſe after they have ſumm'd up, there is nothing more to be ſaid by you.

Cook. My Lord, I thank God, I have lived a Life, I hope, as good as any Man, and have often received the Bleſſed Sacrament; I have done it conſtantly, and ſhall do it ſpeedily, by the Grace of God, as ſoon as I can have a Miniſter come to adminiſter it to me. I did offer it to my own Father, when he came to me, and told me, If I would confeſs this Thing I ſhould not come to Trial: I told my Father, I would not for Ten Thouſand Worlds take away the Blood of an innocent Man to ſave mine. I thank God, I am in a very good Way to die; I have, for at leaſt this laſt Year, frequently received the Bleſſed Sacrament; and how I have liv'd, every Body in the Court that knows me can tell my Life and Converſation has been as regular as any Man's, and I am as ready to die to morrow, if Occaſion was for it (I thank God) as any one; I will receive the Bleſſed Sacrament upon it; and it is not for Life that I would do any thing that is wrong or unjuſt: I do love my Nation, and I love the Quiet of the Nation; I never was for diſturbing the Government that now is; and I ever was againſt Foreign Forces or an Invaſion, for I never thought of one, or heard of it, but with Abhorrence and Deteſtation: And I do aſſure faithfully, I ſhou'd be ſorry to diſparage Mr Porter's Evidence, becauſe I would have every Body that was concerned in that Horrid and Barbarous Crime to ſuffer; in God's Name, let them all ſuffer. I thank God, I never knew any Thing of it, nor of a French Invaſion: And I would ſay more of it, but that I would not hurt Mr Porter's Evidence, whoſe Diſcovery of that bloody Buſineſs has done ſo much Service. As for Mr Goodman, as I hope to receive the Bleſſed Sacrament, and may I periſh when I do it, if I ſpeak an Untruth; I would not for any Thing, no, not for the Good of my Country, have innocent Blood ſpilt; I would lay down my Life to ſerve my Country, but I would not have my Blood be lightly loſt; and how little a Man ſoever I am, my Blood will lie as heavy upon the Nation as any the weightieſt Man's can do. I do not doubt your Lordſhip's Juſtice, nor the Jury's, but I pray, my Lord, obſerve; though it is uſual not to own Things at the Bar, yet I do not make this Denial as of Courſe, but out of Truth; and I aſſure you, in the Preſence of the whole Court, if I ſhould ſuffer for this, I muſt at my laſt Moments either confeſs or deny ſomething: And, I ſay, I do aſſure, in the Preſence of the whole Court, and I will take the Bleſſed Sacrament upon it, that I muſt, at my Death, deny this whole Matter, and that ever I did ſee Mr Goodman at all there; I do not think I ſaw him; I do not remember I ſaw Mr Goodman at all, except once in Germain-ſtreet, when the Coach broke, and that muſt be but in paſſing by neither, and he would have hurt or kill'd the Coachman, and we kept him from it; and I walk'd with him half the Length of Germain-ſtreet, before I knew who Mr Goodman was. If ever a one of thoſe Gentlemen, that are Men of Credit and Honour, can ſay I was any ways ſo inclined, or that they ever ſaw me, or knew me, that I ever bought a Piſtol or a Blunderbuſs, or the like, may God ſink and ſtrike me dead; and the Bleſſed Sacrament, which I intend to receive, be my Curſe and Damnation, if I knew of King James's Coming, till after the whole Town rang of it: I had no Hand in the Invaſion; and, beſides my Abhorrence of introducing foreign Force, I deſire your Lordſhip and the Jury to conſider the Circumſtances of my Caſe, that I had but a very ſmall Allowance from my Father, and therefore it is not probable I ſhou'd take upon me to join with my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, and thoſe other Gentlemen, to ſend Mr Charnock into France, to invite over a Foreign Force: And I call God to witneſs I had no Hand in it. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for all this Trouble; I would not hurt Mr Porter's Evidence, for the Reaſons that I have told you; but this is for my Life, and I don't ſo much value that as I do Truth and Sincerity; and I ſhall receive the Bleſſed Sacrament, if I die, that I never did do ſo. Indeed I never did take the Oaths, nor did I ever refuſe them, becauſe they were never offer'd me; but I wou'd take the Oaths now if they were offer'd me. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for this Trouble.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you done, Sir? Have you ſaid all you would ſay?

Cook. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, you Gentlemen of the King's Council, will you conclude?

Mr Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King, and I could have been very glad that this Gentleman's Defence that he has made had been ſtronger than in Truth it has been: And I ſhould have been very glad too that his Council had been able to have made it better for him; but that he and they may be ſatisfied as much is done as the Caſe will bear; they have had all the Liberty in the World to make his Deſence they could deſire, nay, more than in Strictneſs could be allow'd them.

Gentlemen, our Evidence is very poſitive againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, and for the higheſt Crime that the King's Subjects can be guilty of, by the Confeſſion of the Gentleman himſelf and of his Council. We have, I ſay, two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; they ſay they are not legal ones: I muſt own, if we have not two Witneſſes, we have never an one; for whatſoever falſifies Mr Goodman's Teſtimony, falſifies whatſoever Mr Porter has ſworn. Now, the Evidence that Mr Porter has given againſt him, is this: He ſays, There was to be a Meeting at the King's-head Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and there they conſulted of the Methods to bring back King James hither; and it was thought the beſt Way to ſend to King James to invite the French King to ſend 1000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot, to land here in this Kingdom, where they would meet him with 2000 Horſe. They pitch'd upon a very proper Meſſenger, Mr Charnock, a Perſon that has been attainted, and has ſuffer'd for High Treaſon; he was to be ſent into France upon this Errand; Mr Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, was one of the Perſons that were there at that Time, and he was conſenting to this Meſſage; and Mr Porter gives you a particular Token relating to the Priſoner, for he remembers the Priſoner did kneel upon the Chair, and lean'd his Elbows upon the Table when he conſented.

Mr Porter goes further, and tells you, That Mr Charnock would have another Meeting, to know and ſee whether all the Company were of the ſame Mind they had been; and, That afterwards they met at Mrs Mountjoy's Houſe, and there the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, and conſenting to the ſame Thing: Thereupon Mr Charnock went into France, and came back again, and ſaid, The French King could not ſpare ſo much Force. Mr Goodman gives the ſame Evidence that Mr Porter had given: It's true, he was not at Mrs Mountjoy's Tavern, but he tells you withal, He ſpoke with Mr Charnock when he came back from France, and Charnock return'd him the ſame Anſwer that he did to Mr Porter, That the French King could not ſpare ſo many Forces. This is the Evidence in ſhort, Gentlemen, that is given againſt the Priſoner; and if this Evidence be true, then is he guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Againſt theſe Witneſſes they have produced, firſt, a Record of Conviction againſt Mr Goodman, and that was for Hiring one Amydia to poyſon the Duke of Grafton, and the Duke of Northumberland: They have produc'd the Record, whereby it appears, he was Convicted and Fined 1000 l. and was to find Security for his good Behaviour during Life; and he was to lye in Priſon till the Fine paid, and Security given: But it happens, in that very Record it appears there was Satisfaction acknowledg'd upon that, even the very next Term; and that gives a great deal of Suſpicion to believe, that the Evidence that was given was not much credited; for, tho' the Council for the Priſoner has ſaid, that it was the Payment of the 1000 l. that was the Satisfaction; no, it is not ſo, it is a Satisfaction of the whole Judgment, for finding Security as well as the Fine. They ſay he was not able to pay the Fine; and there is nothing appears of the other Parts of the Judgment being complied with, but the whole Judgment is ſet aſide.

But all this does not make a Man no Legal Witneſs; if they thought this Conviction tended to ſet aſide his Evidence, they would have produc'd it at another Part of the Tryal, than where they did: That is, when Mr Goodman was firſt call'd to be ſworn as a Witneſs, then they ſhould have produc'd this Record, and ſaid he had been no Witneſs: But they knew well enough that that was no Exception againſt the Legality of his Evidence, but tends only to his Credit, and nothing elſe. Now, tho' it be a black Crime to endeavour to poyſon another, yet that does not totally deſtroy any Man's Credit; if it did, then the other Gentleman, Mr Porter, has confeſs'd himſelf guilty of a greater Crime than that for which Mr Goodman is convicted by this Record; for, he owns himſelf one that was in that Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King. And Mr Goodman owns himſelf too guilty of a greater Crime than what's objected to him, which is that of High Treaſon; and I hope, if he may be believ'd, when he owns himſelf guilty of High Treaſon, which is a greater Crime than Poyſoning a private Subject; or guilty of ſuch a Deſign as the Aſſaſſination of the King, which Mr Porter has charg'd himſelf with, and notwithſtanding which, they have not offer'd that as an Exception againſt Mr Porter's Evidence, (for they very well know, his Evidence has been receiv'd and credited:) Mr Goodman may be credited, tho' guilty of the Crime objected to him: And the conſtant Practice in all Tryals of this kind hath been, that it does not take away the Witneſſe's Evidence, however it affects his Credit, which in this Caſe is ſupported by the concurrent Teſtimony of Mr Porter. And ſo then, I ſay, we have two legal Witneſſes (notwithſtanding all the Exceptions) to prove Mr Cook guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Then they go on further, and produce other Witneſſes: Firſt, they produce one Edwards, a Perſon that is committed for High Treaſon himſelf, and under Suſpicion of his being to be one of thoſe that was to have a Hand in the Aſſaſſination; but his Evidence goes no further, than that Mr Goodman told him he was to be a Witneſs againſt Mr Cook, and either he the Witneſs, or Mr Cook muſt ſuffer; and, That it was a fooliſh thing to be hang'd. My Lord, there is nothing at all in this Matter that takes away Mr Goodman's Evidence: It is very plain Mr Goodman had forfeited his Life, and muſt do ſomething to ſave it, and I think he could not do a better Service to entitle himſelf to the King's Mercy, than to diſcover thoſe that were equally guilty with himſelf. 'Twas his Duty to have done it, if he had not been in Danger; and if he hath done no more than what was his Duty, I hope that is no Objection againſt his Teſtimony.

They have produced likewiſe a Drawer of the King's-head Tavern, one Crawford, and he ſays, he attended in this Room while this Company was there.

there. But then he goes a little further than the Council or the Priſoner would have had him; for they called him to prove, that Mr Goodman was not there when my Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr Cook were there. But when the Drawer comes, he knows nothing of Mr Goodman's being there at all: He ſays, Mr Cook was there, but not Mr Goodman; and yet he does acknowledge, that Mr Goodman might be there, and he not ſee him come up. He acknowledges he attended upon other Company as well as this; ſo that it is plain in the Nature of the Thing, and his own Confeſſion, that Goodman might be there. This cannot take off the poſitive Evidence of Mr Goodman and Mr Porter, who both ſwear, That Goodman was there.

But then they produce another Drawer, and that is one Huntley; and he gives the ſame Account, only indeed he ſays, He was there all the while they were at Dinner: But that is nothing, becauſe it is acknowledg'd both by Mr Porter and Mr Goodman, That he was not there at Dinner-Time, but he might be there after Dinner, and yet Huntley could not ſee him at Dinner: He tells you likewiſe, he paſs'd up and down in the Room afterwards, and did not ſee Mr Goodman there; but yet he might be there, and he not ſee him.

Then they produce the Maſter of the Houſe, and he gives much the ſame Evidence in Effect which his Servants do, That he did not ſee Mr Goodman there all the while; but he ſays ſomething that is a little incredible; He can be poſitive that Mr Goodman was not there while my Lord of Ailesbury was there, but he cannot be poſitive that he was not there afterwards. He tells you, he met my Lord of Ailesbury and my Lord Montgomery upon the Middle of the Stairs coming down, and he is ſure Mr Goodman was not in the Room at that Time. Now, is that poſſible that he could be ſure of that, when he owns, (and cannot but own) That Mr Goodman might go into the Room and he not ſee him? So that he has made a Strain in his Evidence that it is very little to be credited, which was not deſigned ſo much for the Advantage of Mr Cook as for the Advantage of ſomebody elſe: And, in itſelf, it is almoſt an impoſſible Thing that it ſhould be true, by what he offers as the Reaſon of his Evidence.

But then, Gentlemen, you are to conſider, that all theſe three Witneſſes, if they ſwear true, do falſifie not only Mr Goodman, who ſwears, That he was there; but they likewiſe falſifie the Evidence of Mr Porter, and for that Reaſon I ask'd Mr Porter the Queſtion, Whether he did not give the ſame Evidence againſt Sir John Freind? And if what he ſwears now be not true, neither was it true when Sir John Freind was try'd, for he was the only Witneſs at that Time againſt Sir John Freind, for this Meeting; and therefore theſe Mens Teſtimony tends to overthrow both Witneſſes as well as one: And I muſt tell you, that if Mr Goodman be not a legal Witneſs, becauſe he has ſworn a Thing that is not true, then Mr Porter is not a good Witneſs, who has ſworn the ſame Thing, viz. That Mr Goodman was there; and then you ought to acquit the Priſoner, becauſe there is no Witneſs againſt him at Law; for, there is the ſame Evidence againſt Mr Porter that there is againſt Mr Goodman as to this Matter.

Then, Gentlemen, as for the Character of Mr Cook, they ſay he is a good Engliſh Proteſtant, I hope he is ſo; but it is plain, that Religion does not vary the Caſe: 'Tis within the reach of every Man's Memory that is here, that the ſame Things have fallen upon other Gentlemen that have had the ſame Character, particularly Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns, who both ſaid the ſame Things, in the ſame Place, That they were True Proteſtants of the Church of England. But that is no Manner of Evidence that will be Weight againſt poſitive Oaths.

Now, Gentlemen, it is fit likewiſe you ſhould reflect upon another Thing: What is it that ſhould engage Mr Porter and Mr Goodman, or invite either of thoſe two Gentlemen to give a falſe Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar? It does not appear that there was any Injury done by him to them, to provoke them to it; ſo that it could be for nothing but for the ſake of Truth.

It has been further ſaid on the behalf of Mr Cook, That he abhorred the French, and any Invaſion upon his Country, and the like: It is a Matter that is eaſily ſaid; and it has been ſaid by others that have been in the ſame Place where he now ſtands; That they hated all Plots, and they might puniſh them if ever they caught them But theſe are only Sayings, and nothing elſe. If there can be any Conſtructions made of the Evidence given by theſe two Witneſſes, that does not directly prove the Indictment, then the Priſoner ought to be acquitted: But if there can be no other Conſtruction made, but only, That there was a plain Deſign to ſend Charnock into France, to King James, to perſwade him to prevail with the French King, to come and invade us with a Foreign Force: And if our Witneſſes are legal Witneſſes, (as, I doubt not, my Lords the Judges will tell you they are; if there be no Exception to the Credit of Goodman, but only that he was in ſuch a Deſign of Poyſoning the two Dukes, which is really no Objection of Diſcredit to his Teſtimony;) then, with Submiſſion, I think there is no Room left for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to doubt, but that the Priſoner is as guilty of this Crime laid to his Charge, as any others that have been try'd and condemn'd for the ſame. And ſo, Gentlemen, I leave it to you.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Conyers, and Mr Cowper, will you ſay any Thing to this Matter.

Mr Conyers, and Mr Cowper. No, my Lord, we ſubmit it entirely to your Lordſhip's Direction; we have done on all Sides, we think.

L. C. J. Treby. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr Cook, ſtands indicted here for High Treaſon; there are laid in the Indictment two Sorts of Treaſon; the one is, Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, the other is, adhering to the King's Enemies. The Evidence to prove theſe Treaſons ſeems to be joynt; for, as to that of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death, as well as to the other, the Overt Acts are meeting and conſulting about the Treaſon, and then agreeing and reſolving to invite and procure an Invaſion from France, and to meet that Invaſion with an Inſurrection here. And the Evidence is apply'd entirely to prove theſe Acts.

Gentlemen, that theſe are proper Overt Acts of Compaſſing the King's Death, I need not inform you, the Law is very well known; and the Priſoner's own Council do acknowledge, that theſe are ſufficient Overt Acts of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death: So that all which they defend defend him by is, the Improbability of the Teſtimony given againſt him.

Now, Gentlemen, you are to conſider and weigh well the Evidence that has been given. By Law, it is true, as they obſerve, there muſt be two Witneſſes. Here is no Defect of Number; that's acknowledg'd too, here are two Witneſſes; but the Queſtion is, whether here be two Witneſſes that deſerve Credit, and upon whoſe Teſtimony you can find that the Priſoner is guilty. The Witneſſes, Gentlemen, are Mr Porter and Mr Goodman.

Firſt, For the Matter of their Teſtimony, it is poſitive from them both; that you'll do well to obſerve. Mr Porter tells you, That in May laſt, (which is now juſt a Twelve-month) there was a Meeting of eight Perſons, that is, my Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr Charnock, Mr Cook the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Witneſs himſelf Mr Porter; and this was at the King's-head Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and there theſe eight dined, and this was in Order to conſult about an Invaſion, together with an Inſurrection intended to be made for the Reſtoring of the late King. After Dinner comes in Mr Goodman, he ſays, and then they purſued this Conſultation, and came to a Reſolution, to ſend Mr Charnock into France, and the Meſſage was agreed upon which he ſhould carry; and he was to go to the late King, and ſollicite him to obtain 10000 Soldiers from the French King, whereof 8000 ſhould be Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons. Theſe were to make up the 10000 Men to invade this Kingdom. And they reſolved alſo, when this Force ſhould land, they ſhould meet and aſſiſt this Invaſion with a joynt Force, that ſhould conſiſt of 2000 Horſe. And to acquaint and aſſure him of this, was the Meſſage. But, he ſays, That Mr Charnock was very cautious in it, and would not preſently go upon this Errand, but he would have further Aſſurance that they were in Earneſt, and would make good what they did ſend him to propoſe, therefore he would have a ſecond Meeting; and a ſecond Meeting was had, and that was at Mrs Mountjoy's Tavern, and there they did renew the ſame Reſolution, and there were preſent my Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Mr Charnock, the Priſoner at the Bar, and himſelf; he does not know or remember whether my Lord Montgomery, or Mr Goodman was there. He ſays, Mr Charnock did accordingly go into France, and he did return and bring back King James's Thanks to them, but their Deſire could not be comply'd with; and he had his Share of the Complements.

Now comes Mr Goodman, and he ſays, That about the ſame Time, viz. Mid-May, Mr Porter acquainted him, there would be a Meeting of ſome of King James's Friends, at this Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet. He ſays, That he did tell Mr Porter, he doubted he ſhould not be there at Dinner, but he would come as ſoon as he could after Dinner; and according to Appointment, he did come after Dinner, and there was this Conſultation and Reſolution that Mr Porter ſpeaks of, and ſays, That Mr Charnock afterwards told him, he had been in France with the late King, and brought back the ſame Anſwer that Mr Porter ſpeaks of; and he had the Honour of Thanks from the late King too.

Gentlemen, I muſt obſerve one Thing to you, which does go very much towards the Confirming what theſe Witneſſes ſay, and that is the Agreement in their Teſtimonies, tho' they were examin'd apart at the Deſire of the Priſoner: You will find they agree in theſe ſeveral Circumſtances, in the Time, that it was this Time twelve-months; in the Place, that it was at this Tavern; in the Number of Perſons that were there, which was Eight before Mr Goodman came in; in the Number of Horſe, Foot, and Dragoons that were to be brought from France, and in thoſe Horſe that were to meet them here; and beſides, in thoſe Words of Diſcourſe upon the Conſultation and the Reſolution. And there is one Circumſtance more in which they do agree, and which is very particular; That when they came to deliver their Conſent to this Meſſage that Mr Charnock was to carry, the reſt ſate, and Mr Cook the Priſoner did kneel upon the Chair, and lean'd upon the Table. And this both of them do agree in. And after all the many Queſtions ask'd in their ſeparate Examination, I do not find they diſagree in any Part of their Evidence. So that, Gentlemen, there can remain no Queſtion now, but Whether theſe two Witneſſes are Men of Credit; or, whether there has been oppoſed to them any ſuch Evidence as will make you believe, that (if not both) at leaſt one of them has forſworn himſelf. They do produce nothing againſt Mr Porter, whatſoever may have been produc'd at former Tryals againſt his Credit: Perhaps what has been before, has ſatisfied the Objectors, and there is nothing appears againſt his Credit; but he is not only a competent but a very clear, good, credible, and undoubted Witneſs.

But againſt Mr Goodman they offer ſeveral Things which they ſay amount to a violent Preſumption, that he is not to be look'd upon as a credible Witneſs: And firſt, they produce a Record of a Conviction upon an Information againſt him, for attempting to poiſon two Noble Dukes: This he was convicted of, and fin'd 1000 l. and ordered to find Sureties for his good Behaviour during his Life. But, to this it is anſwered, that it appears in the ſame Record, that Satisfaction was acknowledged of the 1000 l. and all the reſt of the Judgment the very next Term, and he was forthwith diſcharged, and that without Paying the Money, which ('twas obſerv'd) the Priſoner's Council ſaid Mr Goodman was not able to pay at that Time, no more than he could 20000 l. and thereupon the King's Council ſay, that the Government was convinc'd that he was wrong'd by a cauſeleſs Proſecution, and the Evidence againſt him was found not to be credible. And beſides, Mr Goodman ſtands pardoned by ſeveral Acts of Pardons, as well as other Subjects.

Then they produce one Edwards, who is a Priſoner here, and committed for Suſpicion of High-Treaſon, and for Treaſonable Practices: He is, no doubt of it, a Witneſs for all that: For that is but an Accuſation upon him, and does not take away his Credit. He tells you of a Diſcourſe that he had with Mr Goodman, and that Goodman ask'd him when the Priſoner was to be try'd; and he told him he wou'd be try'd ſuch a Day; and when it was ask'd what it was for, it was anſwer'd, not for the Aſſaſſination, but for ſending Mr Charnock into France. He ask'd then who were the Witneſſes againſt him? Mr Goodman ſaid, Mr Porter and himſelf. And further ſaid, that he underſtood that Mr Cook had ſworn againſt him (though he would give an Account of no Body elſe) and had no Pardon, and either he muſt muſt hang, or himſelf. And then he talk'd lightly of the Buſineſs of Hanging, and ſaid it was a fooliſh Thing to be hang'd, for all that People wou'd ſay, was, that ſuch an one hang'd handſomely or dyed bravely. This indeed is a Sort of Diſcourſe as if Mr Goodman did apprehend himſelf in Danger from Mr Cook's Evidence; and yet I cannot ſee that it does at all falſifie the Evidence of Mr Goodman: He may be a true Witneſs, and yet he might ſay he was to give Evidence againſt Mr Cook, and it was in Mr Cook's Power to give Evidence againſt him, and that truly; and if both were in the Guilt, they were in Danger of one another. But for a further Anſwer, the King's Council have produced Mr De la Rue, who ſays, that he knew Mr Edwards, and that he was a Scotch Man, and reputed Chaplain to the Viſcount of Dundee, that he went formerly by the Name of Dowglas, and by that Name he was ſet down and deſcribed in the Liſt that Mr Charnock ſent to Captain Porter; and to that Name he anſwer'd in the Preſs-Yard lately. Now it is certain, that Mr Charnock's putting of his Name in that Liſt, is no Evidence of his being guilty in Mr Charnock's Treaſon. But his going by two Names doth juſtly lay him under ſome Suſpicion. But the Evidence that the Priſoner ſeems to rely upon moſt, is what Evidence has been produc'd againſt Mr Goodman in that Point of Fact, by the Maſter and the two Drawers; the firſt of the Drawers Name was Crawford, and he does tell you, that about twelve Months ago there was this Company at Dinner there: My Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, Mr Charnock, and the Priſoner, though he did not then know his Name, or the Name of one or two more of them. I obſerve by the Way, that his Teſtimony ſo far does verifie theirs, that there were eight of them there, but he ſays he did not ſee Mr Goodman there, nor any but thoſe that dined there. And my Lord of Aylesbury went away, as he thinks, about Four a Clock. He cannot ſay that the Priſoner was there, or was gone at that Time before Mr Goodman came in; for he did not ſee Mr Goodman there at all, he was not in the Room all the Time, but he was to and fro attending till my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away in a Coach that was called, and when they were gone, the reſt of the Company ſtaid there a good while; being urged to tell how long, at laſt he ſaid it was dark, and that agrees with Mr Porter, who ſays, it was about nine a-Clock when they went away. He ſays he was there once or twice after my Lord of Aylesbury went away, but he never ſaw Mr Goodman that he remembers at all, till laſt Saturday, in all his Life. As to this, the King's Council ſay, that it is only a negative Evidence, and in which a Man cannot be abſolutely poſitive, but can only ſpeak according to his Obſervation and Memory, which might not be perfect, and Mr Goodman might be there in the mean Time of his going in and out: That is poſſible; and ſo it muſt be left to you to conſider of it.

Then there is Huntley the other Drawer, and he ſays my Lord of Aylesbury went away about that Time, and that he did not ſee Mr Goodman there at all, nor ever in his Life till now; neither does he remember that any Body came to them after Dinuer, and if any freſh Man had then come in, he thinks he ſhould (going often in to them) have known him; and ſays, that he attended this Company only: And he had ſeen Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns there before.

Then Mr Cock, the Maſter of the Houſe, was produced, and he names all the eight Perſons that did dine there, and ſo far he confirms the King's Evidence: He thinks that my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away privately (as it ſeems they had come) in a Hackney Coach, and that it was about 4 a-Clock; and he ſays, he did not ſee Mr Goodman there, and he does not know that he ever ſaw him till now: But when he was croſs-examined by the King's Council, he does acknowledge that he might poſſibly come in after Dinner, and before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, and he not ſee him, becauſe he was not there all the Time; he ſays, Sir John Freind uſed to dine at his Houſe, and came to his Houſe once a Week; and he had ſeen ſome of the reſt, but they did not frequent his Houſe as Sir John Freind did: He ſays, the Company din'd about Two a-Clock, and the laſt of them ſtaid till about Eight or Nine, and that the Door was ſhut as is uſual when Company is in a Room, but no Body was forbid to come there.

But to eſtabliſh the Credit of the Evidence on the King's Part, they did produce Mr Goodman and Mr. Porter again: Mr Goodman does acknowledge ſo far to be true, that my Lord of Aylesbury went away firſt; but ſays, that himſelf was not wholly a Stranger to this Houſe, for he had dined there four or five Times with Sir John Freind, and particularly one Time, he being ſick, and asking for ſome Brandy, the Maſter of the Houſe ſaid he would help him to ſome of the beſt in England, and Mr Goodman would have bought ſome of him. But the Maſter ſeems not to own that, and ſays, he does not remember any Thing of it.

But then comes Mr Porter again, and he ſays poſitively, that Mr Goodman was there, and that he did ſpeak with the Company, and complemented my Lord of Aylesbury when he went away, and went Part of the Way towards the Stairs with him; and he does well remember it by this Token, that when Mr Porter was told Mr Goodman was below, he mentioned him in the Company as a truſty Man, that was fit for the Converſation; and then Mr Porter went and fetch'd him up, and Mr Goodman was there near two Hours, and they diſcours'd all this Matter in that Time in the Preſence of the Priſoner and the reſt; and he ſays it was about ſix a-Clock before my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away, and then there was Opportunity enough for this Diſcourſe, and Conſult that they ſpeak of.

The Priſoner has offered another Sort of Evidence: Firſt, the Confidence of his own Innocence, that he was abroad three Weeks after this Conſpiracy was diſcovered; and they have produced Mr Treganna, Mr Peachy, and Mr Nichols, who prove that he never abſconded, but was abroad and appeared openly (for three Weeks after) till ſuch Time as he was taken. This the King's Council ſay is no Proof that he is not Guilty, and their Evidence untrue. They ſay he might have a Confidence, and the rather becauſe he is not charged with the Aſſaſſination; for, at that Time theſe Witneſſes ſpeak of nothing was diſcovered and publick but the Aſſaſſination; for it was before Sir John Freind's Tryal; and then was the great Diſcovery of the Secret of the Invaſion.

Then he ſhews further as to his Converſation, that he is a Man of a very ſober Life, never was known to ſwear, that he drinks but little, and is a Godly Man, and often ſays his Prayers. As to that, the King's Council on the other Side tell you, that has been pretended to by other People too; and the Queſtion is not about Religion, but this Fact that you are now to try. Whether he be ſo Religious or no as he pretends, or whether he be ſincere in his Devotion, that is not ſo much the Matter now, but the Queſtion is, whether he has offended in this Kind as he ſtands accuſed. They produce a Gentleman, one Mr Hammond, and he ſays that he is a very Conſciencious Man, and particularly is a great Lover of his Country; and he has often heard him declare a Deteſtation of an Invaſion by a French Force, and wiſh Succeſs to the Fleet; but that which he remembers chiefly, was about the Time of the Diſcovery of this Plot, The King's Council anſwer to this, that a Man may uſe ſuch kind of Expreſſions, perhaps to cover his Guilt; and in the Reply to Sir Barth. Shower's Obſervations, it was taken Notice of by Mr Sollicitor, (what we all cannot but remember) that the like Evidence was given as to Sir John Freind, that he did deteſt an Invaſion, and was preſent at the Common-Prayer when King William was pray'd for, and declared againſt Plots; and that if they catched him in the Corn they might put him in the Pound. Theſe Things a Man might ſay, and it is the lighteſt Evidence that can be given, being Diſcourſes out of Mens own Mouths, who will never proclaim their own Guilt; and therefore it is the weakeſt Defence that can be offered. But, Gentlemen, you are to conſider the other Evidence that has been produc'd by the Priſoner, given by ſeveral Witneſſes, and who are upon their Oaths now as well as the King's Witneſſes. And his Council ſay their Witneſſes, but particularly the three upon whom they chiefly rely, have no Objection made out againſt them; and no Man's Teſtimony ought to be preſumed to be falſe. And it muſt be taken Notice of, that they can ſpeak only according to their Belief, grounded on their Obſervation and Memory, that they did not, ſo far as they obſerved or remember, ſee Mr Goodman there, as 'twas moſt probable they ſhould if he had been. But 'tis poſſible they might overlook or forget; the rather for that they were not of the Company, but in and out, up and down; and Mr Goodman was not there at Dinner when their Attendance was fixt and conſtant.

It ought to be conſidered alſo, that here are ſeveral Circumſtances, ſome of which ſeem very pregnant. It is agreed on all Hands, that the Priſoner dined there with thoſe other ſeven Perſons, concerning Four of whom we muſt conclude nothing; but concerning three of them we in this Court may take Notice, they are Attainted of High Treaſon, and ſo it is evident that the Priſoner was for a long Time a Companion of three Traytors, and had a Converſation with them. I do not find that he had any Occaſion to be there; nor any of the reſt of the Company. Concerning my Lord of Aylesbury, indeed it is ſaid he propoſed to treat about a Hogſhead of White Wine. But that ſeems to be caſual, and not the End of his Coming and Dining with this Company there. But, be that how it will, that relates to his Lordſhip alone. But, for the others, I do not find they do pretend any Occaſion of Meeting there; and therefore it leaves it the more ſuſpicious: And 'tis the more ſo, becauſe it was managed ſo privately and cautelouſly. They were not attended according to their Qualities. The Lords went away together in a Hackney Coach that was called, as they had come thither in another. The reſt thought fit to ſtay there till it was dark; and as ſoon as it was ſo, went away. There was ſome extraordinary Cauſe for all this. It did import the Priſoner to ſhew, that it was for ſome good Cauſe and Purpoſe.

And further, it is obſervable that this Houſe was a Place which, as the Maſter ſays, none of this Company did uſe to reſort to, except Sir John Freind; which makes it probable (this being a Houſe that Sir John Freind frequented and none of the others) that He beſpoke this Place, and brought the reſt thither: And if it were ſo, that makes it more probable that there was ſuch a Treaſon there to be hatch'd, as is evidenced by the King's Witneſſes; for you may remember, and it appears by the Record in this Court, that Sir John Freind was indicted and attainted (not for the Aſſaſſination, but) for the Treaſon for which the Priſoner is now a Trying, an Invaſion that was to be ſupported with an Inſurrection. Now if Sir John Freind was chiefly acquainted with this Houſe, and brought this Company together, it is very probable it was about this Buſineſs which Sir John Freind was ſo concerned in. And that he is Attainted for it, appears upon the Record before us; which ſhould be read, but that the Priſoner's Council admit it, and are ſo far ſatisfied in it, that they won't Arraign the Verdict; nay, they did acknowledge that there was a Plot; and there was no Doubt of it, there was ſuch a Plot.

Now then, Gentlemen, here it is certainly proved by theſe two Witneſſes, (and not gainſaid by the Priſoner's own Witneſſes) that there was ſuch a Meeting, and that the Priſoner was there; and they both have poſitively ſworn that this Treaſon was committed there. You have heard what has been objected to their Credit; they have delivered their Teſtimony upon their Oaths; and ſo, Gentlemen, are you upon your Oaths: If you are ſatisfied, and can take it upon your Conſciences, that theſe two Witneſſes are, or any one of them is, forſworn (if ſuch Diſtinction can poſſibly be made in this Caſe) then you are to acquit the Priſoner; but if you are ſatisfied, and think they have ſworn true, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr J. Rokeby. Nay, if one be forſworn, both are; for the Evidence is entirely in all Parts the ſame; and if Mr Goodman be perjured, Mr Porter is ſo too.

Sir B. Shower. Forſworn and Perjured are hard Words; we only ſay miſtaken.

Mr J. Rokeby. Well, that Objection goes to one as well as t'other.

L. C. J. Treby. It muſt be ſo, ſince they ſpeak of the ſame joint Matter, viz. their being together in Company. If Mr Porter ſays true, when he ſwears that Mr Goodman was there with him and the reſt, Mr Goodman muſt ſay true when he ſwears that he was there with Mr Porter and the reſt. There was one Thing that I forgot: Sir B. Shower obſerved, that it might be an Invention of Captain Porter, becauſe he fixeth it in Point of Time to the Month of May, that he does not ſay it was in April; for that then it would be within the Pardon, which extends to April 29. laſt Year; nor would he lay it in June, for then he was in Newgate, and others of them were diſpers'd by reaſon of a Riot committed in Drury lane; and this Sir B. Shower alledges, was a Piece of Skill and Contrivance: But, really, this is a Piece of Ingenuity in himſelf: For, beſides that the King's Witneſſes affirm poſitively that it was in May, and remember it by a certain Token, viz. That it was within a very few Days after the King went beyond Sea, one or two of the Priſoner's Witneſſes (Crawford I am ſure) did ſay that this Meeting was this Time Twelve-month, and you know we are now near mid-May.

were

Mr Serjeant Darnall. If you believe our Drawers for Part, you muſt believe them for all.

Mr Att. Gen. No, not ſo: My Lord ſpeaks only where they concur with our Evidence. It were ſtrange to expect we ſhould disbelieve or doubt what the Witneſſes on both Sides affirm to be true: But, I do not think it would be to the Advantage of the Priſoner, if what his Council propoſeth were agreed to, viz. That the Drawers (and their Maſter too) ſhould be believed for all they ſay, provided equally that the King's Witneſſes ſhould, in like manner, be believ'd for what they ſay. For, the main Thing controverted, is, Whether Mr. Goodman were at this Meeting. Theſe Witneſſes for the Priſoner ſay, they did not ſee him there; at leaſt they do not remember it. Mr. Porter, and Mr. Goodman himſelf ſays, he was there. Now, theſe Things agreed, and admitted, would make a very conſiſtent clear Evidence, that Mr. Goodman was there, though the Maſter and Drawers did not obſerve, or do not remember his being there.

Then an Officer was Sworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and about three Quarters of an Hour after, returned into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names. Henry Sherbrook.

Mr Sherbrook. Here. And ſo of the Reſt, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook to the Bar, (which was done.) Peter Cook hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, Is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it: You ſay that Peter Cook is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, the Court diſmiſſes you, and thanks you for your Service.

Then the Court adjourned till five a Clock in the Evening.

Post Meridiem.

About ſix a Clock, the Court being, by Proclamation, reſum'd, the Priſoner, convicted, was brought to the Bar, in order to Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Cook, hold up thy Hand (which he did), thou ſtand'ſt convicted of High-Treaſon, for compaſſing and imagining the Death of his Majeſty King William the Third, and for adhering to the King's Enemies: What can'ſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die according to the Law?

Cook. My Lord Mayor, my Eyes are very bad, therefore I deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to take this Paper, and that it may be read.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any Thing to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment?

Cook. I deſire my Paper may be read.

[It was handed up to the Court, and then delivered down to Mr Attorney General and the King's Council, but not openly read.]

Mr Recorder. Mr Cook, the Court have read your Paper you ſent up, and have communicated it to the King's Council; if you have any Thing to move in Arreſt of Judgment, this is your Time, and we will hear you; but as for any Repreſentation of your Caſe to any others, that muſt be conſidered of afterwards, you are now called to your Judgment.

Cook. I did not know that I might offer any Thing afterwards, but if your Lordſhips think fit to communicate that to my Lords Juſtices, I ſubmit it to you.

Mr Recorder. Mr Cook, there is nothing appears upon this Paper that is Matter of Law, and ſo not ſerviceable to you now, and therefore what you deſire in it, the Court will conſider of afterwards.

Cook. I do not underſtand the Law, my Lord, but I have heard the Court ought to be of Council for the Priſoner, and I deſire I may not ſuffer by my Ignorance.

Mr Recorder. I declare it, for my Part, I know nothing that you can have any Advantage of, in Arreſt of Judgment; if I did, you ſhould not loſe the Benefit of it, and you have had your Council aſſigned, who have pleaded for you without reſtraint; and if there had been any Matter of Law that would have availed you in Arreſt of Judgment, no doubt, they would have laid hold of that Advantage for you.

Cook. I can't tell, my Lord, what is Matter of Law.

Mr Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip obſerves, they took all the Objections that they could to the Indictment, but there was none that they could fix.

Cl. of Arr. Then Cryer make Proclamation, (which was done on both Sides of the Court.)

Cryer. Oyez. All Manner of Perſons are commanded to keep Silence while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Cook. My Lord, may I have my Paper again?

Mr Recorder. If you think it may be of any Service to you to leave it with the Court, you may do ſo; or if you deſire it, you ſhall have it again.

Cook. I deſire your Lordſhip to keep it.

Mr Recorder. I will receive it, and it ſhall not be buried, I aſſure you.

Cook. I don't hear what the Court ſays.

Mr Recorder. You ſay you did not hear what was ſaid to you: If you deſire to have your Paper again, you ſhall have it; but if you deſire to have it communicated Above, the Court will conſider it, and take care of that too.

Cook. I deſire your Lordſhip would do it.

Then the Recorder proceeded to give Judgment.

Mr Cook, I think it uſeful to the Publick, and alſo at this Time to you, to obſerve, That the Reign of the late King James, was, throughout, one intire Deſign and Project form'd, in conjunction with the French King, totally to ſubvert our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, which grew ſo apparent to the Subjects of theſe Nations, in ſo many Inſtances of fatal Conſequence, manag'd in ſuch a Method, and advanc'd ſo far, that the People of theſe Kingdoms, of all Qualities, Ranks, and Degrees, did find it abſolutely neceſſary for the Preſervation of themſelves and the neighbour Nations now in Alliance with us, to pray in Aid of the then Prince of Orange, as a Perſon not only nearly allied to this Crown, but alſo intirely in the Intereſt of theſe Kingdoms, and thoſe neighbouring Princes, and Countries that lay expoſed to the Violence and ambitious Inſults of France. And the Love which that noble Prince did bear, not only to us, but to our Neighbours alſo, diſpoſed him to embrace that Invitation, upon whoſe Arrival here, that Predeceſſor, from Motives that were inviſible, declin'd the Kingdom and the Government, and left the People to themſelves; whereupon his preſent Majeſty was neceſſarily and rightfully placed upon that Throne he ſo well deſerved: And this is now that King, for whoſe Preſervation all good People have aſſociated, and ſpare neither Lives nor Treaſure to ſupport and to continue in the Government; and this is that King whom you have traiterouſly conſpired, not only to dethrone, but alſo to deſtroy; and this is that People that you would have to ſwim in Blood, and loſe their Religion, Liberty, and Property. Theſe Matters need a Hiſtory to relate at large, I only touch them ſhortly, to move good Men to rejoyce in their Deliverance, and to move you ſeriouſly to reflect upon the Heinouſneſs of your Crime.

Mr Cook, you are an Engliſh Man, and muſt needs know, that in this Place we frequently condemn to Death, Clippers, Coiners, Thieves, and Robbers, and other ſuch like Criminals, and that juſtly and neceſſarily too, for the Preſervation of the Innocent, and for the common Good. Of what Condemnation muſt you, and ſuch as you, be worthy then, who have ſo horridly endeavour'd and deſign'd the fatal Ruin and Deſtruction of your own native Country, and to render your Fellow-Subjects a miſerable Prey, and at the Beſt to become Slaves and Vaſſals to a foreign Prince?

Let me alſo mind you, That nothing is more ſure, than that after this, you muſt receive a Judgment in another World; and if that paſs againſt you too, that Sentence will be moſt Terrible, and your Sufferings without End: And therefore I do adviſe you to imploy the few Days you have yet to live, in Preparation for your future Happineſs, which cannot be duly done without a full Confeſſion of this, as well as other Crimes you have been guilty of: I therefore charge it to you, as your Duty, and leave it with you at your utmoſt Peril, that you honeſtly and faithfully diſcover all you know of this inhumane and traiterous Conſpiracy, and all the Perſons that you do know to be guilty of it: This will be the greateſt Service you can do in this World, and will be the beſt preparatory Step that you can take towards a better.

And, Sir,

There now remains no more for me to ſay, but to pronounce that Sentence on you which the Law directs: And that is this,

That you, Peter Cook, be taken hence to the Place from whence you came, and thence be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hang'd by the Neck, and cut down before you be dead; that your Bowels be taken out, and your Privy Members cut from your Body, and both burnt in your Sight; that your Head be cut off, and your Body divided into four Quarters, which Head and Quarters are to be at the King's Diſpoſal; and God Almighty have Mercy upon your Soul.

Cook. I beg, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, that I may have my Relations and Friends come to ſee me, and ſome Divines, the better to prepare me for another World.

Mr Recorder. Mr Cook, if you'll give the Names of thoſe that you would have come to you, to the Officer, Care ſhall be taken in it; and you will not be denied any reaſonable Helps that may be had for your Preparation for Eternity.

Mr Att. Gen. It is not fit he ſhould be deny'd any reaſonable Help; but in the mean Time there is Reaſon for the Government to be cautious, upon the Account of what has notoriouſly paſt in the Caſe of ſome others.

Mr Recorder. If he give in the Names, it will be conſidered of, and Care taken that nothing be done, but what is reaſonable and ſafe.

Then the Priſoner was taken from the Bar, and the Court proceeded to what was remaining of the Buſineſs of the Seſſions.

The TRYAL of ALEXANDER KNIGHTLEY

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

De Termino Paſche Anno Regni Regis Gulielmi Tertii Octavo.

In Banco Regis.

Die Jovis Tricesimo Aprilis, Anno Domini 1696.

THIS Day the Keeper of Newgate brought to the Bar of the Court of Kings Bench, Alexander Knightley, by Virtue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus, Iſſuing out of that Court for that Purpoſe, to be Arraigned upon an Indictment of High Treaſon, found againſt him at the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the County of Middleſex; which Indictment by Writ of Certiorari was removed into the Kings Bench. The Return of the Habeas Corpus was delivered, and then the Priſoner was Arraigned thus.

Cl. of Ar. Alexander Knightley hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt Indicted by the Name of Alexander Knightley, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent Garden in the County of Middleſex, Gent. For that you not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Your ſupreme, true, rightful, lawful, and undoubted Sovereign Lord, the cordial Love and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh, intending and contriving, and with all your Force purpoſing and deſigning the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of right duly, happily, and very well-eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change, and alter, as alſo the ſame our Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to put and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King to ſubdue and inthral, the tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and Traiterouſly you did compaſs, imagine, and contrive, purpoſe, deſign, and intend, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to ſlay, kill, and murther, and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cauſe; and your ſaid moſt wicked, moſt impious, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous compaſſings, contrivances and purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the ſaid Alexander Knightley afterwards, to wit, the ſame tenth Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, with very many other Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and deceit, to aſſaſſinate, kill, and murther, and that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and killing, the ſooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, traiterouſly you did treat, propoſe, and conſult with thoſe Traytors, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what Manner, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait, might be ſlain and killed, and that you did conſent, agree, and aſſent with the ſame Traytors, that forty Men on Horſeback, or thereabouts, of whom you the ſaid Alexander Knightley were to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, charg'd with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Arms, armed, ſhould lie in wait and be in ambuſh, the ſame our Lord the King in his Coach being when he ſhould go abroad to attack, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo arm'd, upon the Guards of our ſaid Lord the King, him then attending, and being with him ſhould ſet upon, and ſhould fight with them and ſubdue them, whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo armed, him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould aſſaſſinate, kill, ſlay, and murther; and you the ſaid Alexander Knightley, your Treaſons and all your traiterous Intentions, Deſigns, and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to effect, afterwards, to wit, the aforeſaid tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, diverſe Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Muskets, Rapiers and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlike Things, and military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly you did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and to be bought, obtain'd, gathered together, and procured, did cauſe with that Intent to uſe, employ, and beſtow them in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murther, of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, as aforeſaid; and the ſame Premiſſes, the more ſafely, and ſurely to execute, do, and perform, you the ſaid Alexander Knightley, with one Edward King late for High-Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Conſent and Aſſent of divers of the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, in the ſaid tenth Day of February in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, traiterouſly did go and come to the Place propos'd, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murther of our ſaid Lord the King, by lying in wait ſhould be done, performed, and committed, to view, ſearch, and obſerve, the Conveniency and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, aſſaſſination, and killing, there to be made, performed and committed, and that Place ſo being ſeen and obſerved, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, your Obſervations thereof to ſome of the ſaid Traitors and Conſpirators, you did relate and impart, to wit, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided. How ſayſt thou, Alexander Knightley, art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Knightley. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How will you be Try'd?

Knightley. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Knightley. With Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, I did not expect, in this weak Condition that I am in, to be brought at this Time to the Bar; That having taken me off extremely from the Application that I ſhould have otherwiſe made of my ſelf to my Defence; but ſeeing there is no Mercy to be had here, I will endeavour to have Patience, and undergo my Fate as well as I can.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr Knightley, you have no Reaſon to find fault; for when I was acquainted you were ill, and deſired a Phyſician, I ordered one to be ſent to you; and Yeſterday in the Afternoon you ſent Word you were ſo ſick, that you could not be brought hither to Day; but your Doctor was with me laſt Night, and upon Diſcourſe with him, I did apprehend you were not ſo ill, but that, eſpecially conſidering the Weather, you might very ſafely be brought to the Bar to Day.

Knightley. The Gentleman that brought me the Copy of the Indictment found me very ill, and I have been ill ever ſince this Day ſevennight.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now let us ſee what Time we ſhall appoint for the Tryal.

Mr Att. Gen. When your Lordſhip pleaſes to appoint.

L. C. J. Holt. I think you cannot Try it till Wedneſday fortnight.

Mr Clark. That Day is free, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. It being upon a Certiorari, the Venire facias muſt be returnable upon a common Day; and there muſt be fifteen Days between the Teſte and the Return.

Mr Att. Gen. May it not be Tueſday then, that the Jury appear?

L. C. J. Holt. You cannot have it before Wedneſday, for that is the Return-day.

Mr Clark. Tueſday fortnight is appointed for the Tryal between Pride and the Earl of Bath.

Mr Att. Gen. Then it muſt be upon Wedneſday, for there muſt be fifteen Days between the Teſte and the Return.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, take back your Priſoner; and bring him here again on Wedneſday fortnight, you ſhall have a Rule for it.

Then the Priſoner was carried back.

Die Mercurii Viceſimo Maij, 1696. In Banco Regis. Dominus Rex verſus Knightley.

THis Day being appointed for the Tryal of the Priſoner, he was brought to Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Jury were call'd over as ſoon as the Court appeared in the Hall, and the Defaulters recorded; and about Eleven of the Clock the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.

Clerk of the Crown. Alexander Knightley, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thoſe good Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Tryal of thy Life and Death: If therefore thou would'ſt challenge them, or any of them, thy Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, before they be Sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, I perceive you have a Deſire to ſpeak ſomething; let us hear what you have to ſay.

Knightley. I humbly beg your Lordſhip's Leave, that I may ſpeak before the Jury be called. What I have to ſay, I beg I may have your Leave to read, becauſe I have a bad Memory.

(Reads.) MY Lord, I hope to ſave the Jury and the Witneſſes againſt me a great deal of Trouble, and deſign to take up very little of your Lordſhip's Time: But in the firſt Place I think my ſelf obliged to thank your Lordſhip for your great Indulgence, in granting me ſo much Time between my Arraignment and Trial; the greateſt Part of which I have employed to appear before the great Tribunal of Heaven.

I ſpeak in the Face of the World here, That I am convinced I cannot hope to be happy hereafter, without a juſt Abhorrence of, and a ſincere Repentance for that Crime for which I here ſtand Indicted.

And ſince Confeſſion is an eſſential Part of Repentance, I do acknowledge I was to have been concern'd in ſome Part of the barbarous Aſſaſſination, and was unhappily ſurprized into a Conſent to act in it, though in my Heart I did abominate the Fact as much as any Man living; but under ſome honourable and fair Pretences I was drawn in at firſt, and then of a ſudden became ſo far engaged, that by a miſtaken Notion of Honour, I thought I could not retreat without the Infamy of Cowardiſe.

My Lord, I humbly crave your Lordſhip's Permiſſion, to acquaint you, how that ſome time ſince I was brought before ſome of the Lords of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, where I do aſſure your Lordſhip I did freely own and fully diſcover my being concerned in that horrid Deſign; and I here openly confeſs the ſame with with that Sorrow and Repentance as becomes a Man of Honour and Conſcience.

My Lord, there is one Circumſtance particular in my Caſe, I moſt humbly beg leave to inſiſt upon, and urge to your Lordſhip in my behalf, which is, that it was upon my Confeſſion (as I conceive) that Mr Harris, now a principal Evidence againſt me, was firſt diſcovered; ſo that my own Confeſſion has been a great Means to take away my Life.

I expect after a few Words now in this ſolemn Court to receive from your Lordſhip the Sentence due upon the Conviction, from my own Mouth, of a Crime for which I cannot in modeſty hope, ſo much above my Deſerts, the King's moſt Gracious Pardon; yet the Greatneſs of my Offence does not rob me of all Thoughts of Mercy, whilſt I throw my ſelf abſolutely and entirely at his Majeſty's Feet for it; and I humbly beg of your Lordſhip as a Privy-Councellor, that you would repreſent my unfortunate Caſe to their Excellencies the Lords Juſtices of England, as an Object of his Majeſty's Favour.

And now, my Lord, I ſhall not detain your Lordſhip and the Court any longer, but my next Words Convict and lay me under the juſt Sentence of Death: So to my Indictment I beg Leave to plead guilty, and throw my ſelf entirely upon the King's Mercy, and do deſire my former Plea to my Indictment may be withdrawn.

Cl. of the Crown. Thou haſt been Indicted and Arraigned of High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King; how ſay'ſt thou Alexander Knightley, art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtand'ſt indicted, or not guilty?

Knightley. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of the Crown. Art thou content to withdraw thy Plea Not guilty?

Knightley. Yes, Sir.

Cl. of the Crown. Do you plead to the Indictment guilty or not guilty?

Knightley. I am guilty.

Mr Att. Gen. Then my Lord we deſire, ſince he relinquiſhes his Plea of Not guilty, that you will record his Confeſſion; and ſince he has confeſt the Indictment, we have nothing more to do but wait the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. We ſhall not give Judgment now.

Mr Att. Gen. If the Priſoner have any thing to ſay for himſelf, your Lordſhips I ſuppoſe will hear him to it.

L. C. J. Holt. But I ſay we cannot by the Courſe of the Court give Judgment now, for after a Perſon is convicted here, whether by Confeſſion or Verdict, he ought to have four Days from the Time of ſuch Confeſſion or Verdict, to move in Arreſt of Judgment, if there be ſo many Days of the Term remaining, if not, then the longeſt Time that can be had in the Term is allow'd: In Stanley's Caſe it was otherwiſe practiſed, Judgment was given the ſame Day, that was in the time of the Popiſh Plot, and is a Caſe not to be imitated, becauſe not juſtified by any Precedent before that time or ſince, but it has been always obſerv'd to have four Juridical Days for moving in Arreſt of Judgment, if ſo many remain of the Term.

Die Lunæ Viceſimo Quinto Die Maii An. Dom. 1696.

Being the laſt Day of the Term, the Priſoner was brought from Newgate to the King's Bench-Bar.

Mr Att. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I deſire the Judgment of the Court to be pronounced upon Mr Knightley upon his Conviction.

Cl. of the Crown. Alexander Knightley hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) thou haſt been Indicted and Arraigned for High-Treaſon in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies; what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt thee to die according to the Law?

Knightley. I have nothing more to ſay, my Lord, than what I have ſaid.

Cl. of the Crown. Cryer, make Proclamation for Silence. Which was done on both Sidis the Court.

Cryer. O Yez: Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtraitly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence while Judgment is in giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr Knightley, You are by your own Confeſſion convicted of High-Treaſon in deſigning the Murder of the King and the Subverſion of the whole State of England, in promoting an Invaſion from the French, its moſt antient and inveterate Enemies.

It hath appeared before your Arraignment, not only by the Evidence that hath been given at former Trials; but even by the Signs of the Times and the Manner of ſome Mens Actings, that there hath been for ſome Years laſt paſt a Train of Plots and Conſpiracies againſt this Government, and when the various Means which the Conſpirators did project among themſelves for its Ruin proved ineffectual, it was at laſt reſolved among ſome of the Conſpirators to aſſaſſinate the King, as the moſt certain Way of accompliſhing their End.

In which Deſign you were deeply engaged and was an active Inſtrument in the carrying it on, being ſent to view the Ground on both Sides the Water, and with others that were ſent with you reported your Opinion, which was the moſt convenient Place to attack the King and his Guards.

And though you did the laſt time you were at the Bar, urge by way of Extenuation of your Crime, that you being engaged in the Intereſt of the late King, and thereby ſupported, you was ſurprized into this barbarous Deſign, which being propoſed to you, you thought your ſelf obliged in Honour to engage in it; which is ſo far from an Extenuation, that it is an high Aggravation: For Men of honourable Principles, tho' moſt zealouſly diſpoſed to the Advancement of any particular Intereſt, yet always deteſt the Uſe of baſe and vile Means. Therefore when the Aſſaſſination of the King was propoſed, you had an Opportunity to have retreated with Honour, and might have refuſed to be further concerned; but you rather purſued this wicked Enterprize with great Zeal.

And tho' you are by your Profeſſion a Roman Catholick, and may for that Reaſon think that your Crime is mitigated, becauſe you acted in the behalf of a Prince of your own Religion, which you hoped thereby to introduce: Notwithſtanding all which, your Offence is highly aggravated in reſpect of the Ingratitude and Folly with which it is attended. For there is no Engliſh Papiſt that is Maſter of any Property, but he is intereſted in the Preſervation of this Government, to which the whole Party of them hath been, and ſtill are continually obliged for its Moderation and Juſtice; for inſtead of being expoſed to the Severity of thoſe Laws to which they are obnoxious, they have had the ſame Indulgence in the Enjoyment of their Religion, and the ſame Protection, and as much Benefit in the Diſtribution of the Common Juſtice of the Realm, as any other of the King's Subjects; therefore none of them could ever expect to mend their Condition under a French Domination. But the contrary is foreſeen by all conſidering Men; for the Engliſh Papiſt, as well as Proteſtant, would have been reduced to a moſt diſmal State if you had obtained your End.

For it is againſt all the Rules of Reaſon, and the Experience of all Ages, to imagine, that the French King would ſpare Engliſh Papiſts more than Proteſtants; for it is not Zeal to Religion, or Affection to the Intereſt of the late King, that hath excited him to invade England, but it's his Pride and Ambition to conquer the three Kingdoms, and to reduce this to be a Province to France: Indeed the Pretence of reſtoring the late King, and introducing the Popiſh Religion may ſerve to delude ſome warm and unwary Zealots to engage in his Aſſiſtance, who do not conſider, that if they ſhould be ſucceſsful they would be as certainly deſtroyed as others, but with more Diſadvantage to themſelves. For after they ſhall have ſurvived the Liberty of their Country, have embrued their own Hands in their Countrymen's Blood, they will be at the Mercy of their Conqueror, who can never think it his Intereſt to truſt them, but will deſpiſe them for being ſuch villainous Traitors to their own Country. Nay, rather, theſe Engliſhmen, who by their Courage and Reſolution ſhall endeavour to defend their Country, though they ſhould be unfortunately vanquiſhed, will meet with a much better Reception, for they will have given Aſſurances that they may be confided in, when the others have by ſuch a wicked Treaſon given a Demonſtration to the contrary.

There being then nothing to be ſaid that can palliate ſuch a Crime as that of which you are convicted; but you having taken a different Courſe the laſt time you were at the Bar from what you took at firſt, you have relinquiſhed your Plea of Not guilty, and have confeſſed the Indictment; I wiſh out of Charity to your Perſon it was as ſincere as (I think it) it was prudent in you; for after ſeveral Convictions of others that were your Accomplices, you could not be a Stranger to the Evidence upon which they were grounded, you muſt therefore in all probability have expected to have undergone the ſame Fate. If your Confeſſion be a real Effect of your Repentance, you will reap the Advantage of it in the next World, but what Conſequence it will have in this I cannot ſay, For the Heart of the King is in the Hand of the Almighty, which as the Rivers of Water, he turneth whitherſoever he will. Live therefore for the time to come in expectation of a ſpeedy Death, and prepare your ſelf to appear before another Judgment-Seat; to the making of which important Preparation I ſhall diſmiſs you, firſt diſcharging the Court of the Duty now incumbent upon it, in giving that Judgment which the Law hath appointed. And the Court doth award,

That you be conveyed from hence to Newgate, the Priſon from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn upon a Hurdle to Tyburn; where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and while you are alive to be cut down, your Privy Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels to be cut out of your Body and burnt in your View; your Head is to be cut off, and your Body is to be divided into four Parts, and your Head and your Quarters are to be diſpoſed where his Majeſty ſhall appoint, And I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul.

Knightley. My Lord, I am truly ſorry for what I have done, and I humbly thank your Lordſhip, and the reſt of the Judges for your Favour to me.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate.

THIS Majeſty's Commiſſioners being then and there met, the Commiſſion was read, and Proclamation made for Attendance: After which, the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury were called and ſworn, and received their Charge from Sir Charles Hedges, Knight, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, who ſet forth unto them the Nature of the Commiſſion, the Extent of the Juriſdiction of the Court, and the ſubject Matter of their Enquiries.

Then the Witneſſes for the King being ſworn, the Grand Jury withdrew, and after a little Time returned, finding Billa vera againſt Henry Every, not yet taken, Joſeph Dawſon, Edw. Foreſeith, William May, William Biſhop, James Lewis, and John Sparkes, Priſoners, for Feloniouſly and Piratically taking, and carrying away, from Perſons unknown, a certain Ship called the Gunſway, with her Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, to the Value of 1000 l. and of Goods to the Value of 110 l. together with 100000 Pieces of Eight, and 100000 Chequins, upon the High Seas, ten Leagues from the Cape St. Johns near Surat in the Eaſt-Indies. Then Dawſon, Foreſeith, May, Biſhop, Lewes, and Sparkes, were brought to the Bar, and their Indictment was read.

Joſeph Dawſon confeſſed that he was Guilty, but the reſt pleaded Not Guilty, and put themſelves upon their Trials; and thereupon the Petty-Jury was called, and the Perſons, whoſe Names follow, were Sworn.

William Walker,	Benjamin Dry,
John Child,	John Sherbrooke,
Edward Leeds,	Samuel Jackſon,
Thomas Clarke,	Thomas Emms,
Nathan Green,	Henry Hunter,
Henry Sherbrooke,	John Hall.

Then the King's Learned Council opened the Indictment, &c. and Dr Newton made a Speech; which is as follows:

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury,

THE Priſoners are Indicted for Piracy, in Robbing and Plundering the Ship Gunſway, belonging to the Great Mogul, and his Subjects, in the Indian Seas, to a very great Value.

And the End was ſuitable to their Beginning, they firſt practiſed theſe Crimes upon their own Country-men, the Engliſh, and then continued them on to Strangers and Foreigners: For the Ship in which this Piracy was committed, was an Engliſh Veſſel, called The Charles the Second, belonging to ſeveral Merchants of this City, deſigned for other Ends, and a far different Voyage, which by theſe Criminals, with the Aſſiſtance of one Every, their Captain, in all theſe Villanies, was ſeized near the Groyn in Spain, in May 1694, from which Place, having firſt, by Force, ſet Captain Gibſon the Commander on Shoar, they carried off the Ship, and with it committed many and great Pyracies, for ſeveral Years (as will appear in the Courſe of the Evidence) in moſt of the Parts of the known World, with- out Diſtinction upon all Nations, and Perſons of all Religions.

Their laſt Piracy was this in the Indies, the greateſt in it ſelf, and like to be the moſt pernicious in its Conſequences, eſpecially as to Trade, conſidering the Power of the Great Mogul, and the natural Inclination of the Indians to revenge: But they are now brought hither on their Tryal, and if the Matters they are charged with, ſhall be proved, to receive that Judgment from you, their Crime deſerves; and that is Piracy, which by ſo much exceeds Theft or Robbery at Land; as the Intereſt and Concerns of Kingdoms and Nations, are above thoſe of private Families, or particular Perſons: For ſuffer Pirates, and the Commerce of the World muſt ceaſe, which this Nation has deſervedly ſo great a Share in, and reaps ſuch mighty Advantage by: And if they ſhall go away unpuniſhed, when it is known whoſe Subjects they are, the Conſequence may be, to involve the Nations concerned, in War and Blood, to the Deſtruction of the innocent Engliſh in thoſe Countries, the total Loſs of the Indian Trade, and thereby, the Impoveriſhment of this Kingdom.

The Witneſſes for the King, viz. John Dan, and Philip Middleton, were then called and ſworn, and in the Opinion of the Court gave a full Evidence againſt the Priſoners, which was very clearly ſumm'd up by the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt; the Tenour whereof is particularly ſet forth in the following Trials: But the Jury, contrary to the Expectation of the Court, brought in all the Priſoners Not Guilty, whereupon the Seſſions was adjourned to Saturday the 31ſt of October following, and the Priſoners were committed upon a new Warrant for ſeveral other Piracies.

Die Sabbati, triceſimo primo Octobris, Annoq; Regni Regis Willielmi Tertii Octavo, Annoq; Domini, 1696.

THE Court being ſat (at which were preſent Sir Charles Hedges Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr Juſtice Rookby, Mr Juſtice Turton, Mr Juſtice Eyres, and Mr Baron Powis, Dr Lane, Dr King, and Dr Cook) the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes. All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do at this Seſſions, draw near and give your Attendance: And you Sheriffs of the City of London, return the ſeveral Precepts directed to you, and returnable here this Day, upon Pain and Peril that ſhall follow thereon.

[Then the Grand Jury were called over, and the Appearances mark'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, &c. The Lords the King's Juſtices charge and command all Perſons to keep Silence, while the Charge is giving.

The Judge of the Admiralty's Charge to the Grand Jury upon this Occaſion.

Sir Charles Hedges. Gentlemen of the Grand Jury,

THE Opinion which this Court had of the good Intentions, Abilities, and Integrity of the laſt Grand Jury, was ſo fully anſwered at our late Meeting in this Place; that I am confident all good Engliſh men, who were Witneſſes of their Proceedings, will concur in giving them publick Thanks, for the good Services which they then performed: I wiſh that all others, who were concerned in the Diſpatch of that Day's Buſineſs, had the like Pretence to have the ſame; the Publick Juſtice of the Nation, would not then have lain under any Manner of Reproach, neither would you have had this farther Trouble. But ſeeing that it hath ſo happen'd, it is become abſolutely neceſſary that a farther, and a ſtrict Enquiry ſhould be made after thoſe Crimes which threaten, and tend to the Deſtruction of our Navigation and Trade, and therefore I am aſſured of your Patience, whilſt I ſhew you briefly,

1. What the Crimes are, which you are to enquire after.

2. How far the Juriſdiction, and your Power in making theſe Enquiries doth extend.

3. What is the Duty incumbent on you in this Behalf.

1. As to the Crimes, I ſhall not repeat what was mentioned touching all the Particulars thereof, at the Opening of this Seſſions; but confine my Diſcourſe to thoſe, which I find by the Calendar will, at this Time, neceſſarily fall under your Examination, and thoſe are Piracies.

Now Piracy is only a Sea-Term for Robbery, Piracy being a Robbery committed within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty; if any Man be aſſaulted within that Juriſdiction, and his Ship or Goods violently taken away without a legal Authority, this is Robbery and Piracy. If the Mariners of any Ship ſhall violently diſpoſſeſs the Maſter, and afterwards carry away the Ship it ſelf, or any of the Goods or Tackle, Apparel, or Furniture, with a felonious Intention, in any Place where the Lord Admiral hath, or pretends to have Juriſdiction; this is alſo Robbery and Piracy; the Intention will, in theſe Caſes, appear, by conſidering the End for which the Fact was committed, and the End will be known, if the Evidence ſhall ſhew you what hath been done.

2. Now the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty is declared, and deſcribed in the Statute, and Commiſſion, by Vertue of which we here meet, and is extended throughout all Seas, and the Ports, Havens, Creeks, and Rivers beneath the firſt Bridges next the Sea, even unto the higher Water-mark.

The King of England hath not only an Empire and Sovereignty over the Britiſh Seas; but alſo an undoubted Juriſdiction, and Power, in Concurrency with other Princes, and States, for the Puniſhment of all Piracies and Robberies at Sea, in the moſt remote Parts of the World, ſo that if any Perſon whatſoever, Native or Foreigner, Chriſtian, or Infidel, Turk or Pagan, with whoſe Country we have no War, with whom we hold Trade and Correſpondence, and are in Amity, ſhall be robbed or ſpoiled, in the narrow Seas, the Mediterranean, Atlantick, Southern, or any other Seas, or the Branches thereof, either on this, or the other Side of the Line, it is Piracy within the Limits of your Enquiry, and the Cognizance of this Court.

3. Concerning the Duty incumbent upon you in making your Enquiries, and Preſentments, you may may conſider that there is a great Truſt and Authority committed to you, and therefore it will be expected that a ſuitable Care ſhould be had, and your Power executed according to a well regulated Diſcretion: As you are, on the one Hand, to take Care that the Court be not troubled, nor any Man put in Hazard of his Life, through any frivolous, or malicious Proſecution; ſo, on the other Side, and more eſpecially in the Caſes of great, and publick Offences, you are to uſe your utmoſt Endeavours, that Juſtice, the Support of Government, be not obſtructed by any partial Proceedings.

You are not obliged in all Caſes to require a clear and full Evidence, but only to examine till you find, and are ſatisfied in your Conſciences, that there is ſufficient and juſt Cauſe to put the Party accuſed upon his Tryal. You cannot convict, but may in Effect acquit the greateſt Criminals, and therefore if you do but find Proofs enough to create a Preſumption againſt the Party accuſed, when the Caſe ſeems odious, and is of great Conſequence and Importance, your ſafeſt Way is to put it in a proper Method for the Petty Jury, who are to receive full Satisfaction from the Evidence that ſhall be given in the Preſence of the Party; and according to that Evidence, have Power to determine whether guilty, or not guilty, condemn, as well as acquit.

And upon this Occaſion, ſeeing many who are upon that Service are preſent, it ſeems fit that they ſhould alſo know that they have no Power to do more or leſs than what is agreeable to the Evidence: They are not to interpoſe in Points of Law, or to be ſwayed by any Conſideration whatſoever, but what ſhall ariſe from the Proofs judicially made; they are indeed Judges of the Fact, but they are not Arbitrary; they are as much reſtrained by the Dictates of Conſcience informed and convinced by reaſonable Proofs, as the Judges on the Bench are by the Rules of Law.

No Man can believe juſt as he liſts, and therefore a Determination, or Judgment at Will and Pleaſure will never be thought to deſerve the Name of a Verdict: For whatever may be pretended, the World will not be perſwaded that a Jury hath purſued the Dictates of Conſcience, unleſs ſome reaſonable Grounds for its Proceedings ſhall appear, and therefore, whenever it ſhall happen that notorious Malefactors eſcape unpuniſhed, notwithſtanding, that in the Opinion of moſt good Men, there was a full and ſufficient Evidence for their Conviction, it is to be wiſhed, and indeed it ſeems to me to be neceſſary, in Caſes that relate to the Laws of Nations, that the Reaſons which induced ſuch a Determination, ſhould be given for the publick Satisfaction, otherwiſe, ſince Foreigners look upon the Decrees of our Courts of Juſtice as the Senſe and Judgment of the whole Nation, our Enemies will be glad to find an Occaſion to ſay, that ſuch Miſcreants as are out of the Protection of all Laws, and Civil Governments, are abetted by thoſe who contend for the Sovereignty of the Seas. The barbarous Nations will reproach us as being a Harbour, Receptacle, and a Neſt of Pirates, and our Friends will wonder to hear that the Enemies of Merchants and of Mankind, ſhould find a Sanctuary in this ancient Place of Trade. Nay, we ourſelves cannot but confeſs, that all Kingdoms and Countries who have ſuffered by Engliſh Pirates, may, for Want of Redreſs in the ordinary Courſe, have the Pretence of Juſtice, and the Colour of the Laws of Nations to juſtifie their making Reprizals upon our Merchants whereſoever they ſhall meet them upon the Seas. If a Jury happens in theſe Caſes to be too ſevere, there is Room for Mercy, and I am confident, that upon a juſt Repreſentation, the Innocent never failed of obtaining it; but for a Fault, Neglect, or Errour on the other Hand, there is no Relief for injured Foreigners, but by their Carrying out, as we may be ſure they will, for themſelves, ſuch a Satisfaction, upon our Merchants as they ſhall think fit, whenever they ſhall have an Opportunity; and ſo our whole Nation muſt unavoidably ſuffer both in Reputation and Intereſt, and all as it were through our own Default.

I hope what hath been ſaid upon this unexpected Occaſion, will not be looked upon as intended to influence any Jury; I am ſure it is far from being ſo deſigned; Religion, Conſcience, Honour, common Honeſty, Humanity, and all Laws forbid ſuch Methods: There is no Doubt but the Judge as well as the Jury-man then beſt diſcharges his Duty, when he proceeds without Favour or Affection, Hatred or Ill-will, or any partial Reſpect whatſoever.

Every Man ought to be extreamly tender of ſuch a Perſon as he has Reaſon to believe is innocent; but it ſhould be conſidered likewiſe on the other Side, that he who brings a notorious Pirate, or common Malefactor to Juſtice, contributes to the Safety, and Preſervation of the Lives of many, both bad and good, of the good by Means of the Aſſurance of Protection, and of the bad too by the Terrour of Juſtice. It was upon this Conſideration that the Roman Emperours in their Edicts made this Piece of Service for the publick Good, as meritorious as any Act of Piety, or Religious Worſhip.

Our own Laws demonſtrate how much our Legiſlators, and particularly how highly that Great Prince King Henry the 5th, and his Parliament thought this Nation concerned in providing for the Security of Traders, and ſcowring the Seas of Rovers and Free-booters. Certainly there never was any Age wherein our Anceſtors were not extraordinary zealous in that Affair, looking upon it, as it is, and ever will be, the chief Support of the Navigation, Trade, Wealth, Strength, Reputation and Glory of this Nation.

Gentlemen, our Concern, as our Trade is, ought in Reaſon to be rather greater than that of our Fore-fathers; we want no Manner of Inducements, no Motives to ſtir us up, whether we conſider our Intereſt or Honour, we have not only the ſacred Word, but alſo the glorious Acts of the beſt of Kings, which ſufficiently manifeſt to us, that the Good and Safety of this Nation, is the greateſt Care of his Life; let every Man therefore who pretends to any Thing of a true Engliſh Spirit, readily, chearfully follow ſo good, ſo great, ſo excellent an Example, by aſſiſting and contributing to the utmoſt of his Power and Capacity at all Times towards the carrying on his noble and generous Deſigns for the common Good, and particularly at this Time, by doing all that he can, to the End that by the Adminiſtration of equal Juſtice, the Diſcipline of the Seas, on which the Good and Safety of this Nation entirely depends, may be ſupported and maintained.

Then the Witneſſes being ſworn in Court, the Grand Jury withdrew to hear their Evidence. And in the mean Time T. Vaughan and J. Murphey, Tim. Brenain, were Arraigned, whom the Keeper of Newgate, by Order, brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. T. Vaughan, Hold up thy Hand; (whice he did.) Thou ſtandeſt Indicted, &c.

Art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not Guilty?

T. Vaughan. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

T. Vaughan. By God and this Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. J. Murphey, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt Indicted, &c.

How ſayeſt thou, Jo. Murphey, Art thou Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not Guilty?

J. Murphey. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

J. Murphey. By God and the King.

Officer. You muſt ſay, by God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. Bring Tim. Brenain to the Bar, (who was brought accordingly.)

Cl. of Arr. Tim. Brenain, have you any Copy of your Indictment?

Tim. Brenain. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. When had you it?

Tim. Brenain. This Day ſe'ennight.

Cl. of Arr. Tim. Brenain, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt Indicted, &c.

How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not Guilty?

Tim. Brenain. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

T. Brenain. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Mr Mompeſſon. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe that he may be tried now?

L. C. J. Treby. Does he deſire to be tried now?

Mr Mompeſſon. Yes, my Lord, there is no Evidence againſt him, and he is ſick.

Mr Soll. Gen. We are not now prepared for the Trial.

L. C. J. Treby. If the King's Council and the Priſoner be agreed, with all my Heart.

L. C. J. Holt. He may be tried with the reſt.

Then T. Vaughan, and J. Murphey, and T. Brenain, had Notice to prepare for their Tryals on Friday next, at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

Then the Grand Jury came into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, are you agreed in your Bills?

Grand Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Billa vera againſt Joſeph Dawſon, Ed. Foreſeth, W. May, W. Biſhop, James Lewis, and J. Sparks, for Piracy and Robbery.

Cl. of Arr. Keeper of Newgate, Set Joſeph Dawſon, Ed. Foreſeth, Will. May, Will. Biſhop, Will. Lewis, and Jo. Sparks, to the Bar. (Which was done accordingly.)

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Dawſon, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Ed. Foreſeth, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

W. May, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

W. Biſhop, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

James Lewis, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Jo. Sparks, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Then the Indictment was read, and ſet forth,

That Henry Every, alias Bridgman, Joſeph Dawſon, Edward Foreſeth, William May, William Biſhop, James Lewis, and John Sparks, late of London, Mariners, on the 30th of May, in the 6th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King William, and the late Queen, did, againſt the Peace of God, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and the late Queen, by Force of Arms, upon the high and open Seas, in a certain Place, about three Leagues from the Groyn, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, Piratically and Feloniouſly ſet upon one Charles Gibſon, a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, and of the late Queen, being then and there Commander of a certain Merchant-ſhip, called, The Charles the Second, carrying Forty Pieces of Ordnance, belonging to certain Subjects of the ſaid King and the late Queen, (to the Jurors as yet unknown.) And then and there put the ſaid Charles Gibſon in bodily Fear of his Life. And then and there, within the Juriſdiction aforeſaid, Feloniouſly and Piratically did ſteal, take and carry away from the ſaid Charles Gibſon, the ſaid Ship, called, The Charles the Second, her Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, of the Value of One Thouſand Pounds, Forty Pieces of Ordnance, of the Value of Five Hundred Pounds; One Hundred Fuſees, of the Value of One Hundred Pounds; Fifteen Tun of Bread, of the Value of One Hundred and Fifty Pounds; and two Hundred Pair of Woollen Stockings, of the Value of Ten Pounds, in the Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Charles Gibſon then being; the Ship, Goods, and Chattels of the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the late Queen, (to the Jurors unknown) againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the late Queen, their Crown, and Dignities, &c.

How ſay'ſt thou, Joſeph Dawſon, art thou Guilty of this Piracy and Robbery, or not Guilty?

Joſ. Dawſon. I am ignorant of the Proceedings.

Officer. He pleads Ignorance.

Cl. of Arr. You muſt plead Guilty, or not Guilty.

Joſ. Dawſon. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How ſay'ſt thou, Ed. Foreſeth, art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Ed. Foreſeth. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be try'd?

E. Foreſeth. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr.

Cl. of Arr. How ſay'ſt thou, Will. May, art thou guilty, or not guilty?

W. May. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How ſay'ſt thou, W. Biſhop, art thou guilty, or not guilty?

W. Biſhop. I deſire to hear the whole Indictment read again.

L. C. J. Holt. You have heard it juſt now, and may hear it again if you deſire it.

W. Biſhop. The former Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. No, there is no Occaſion for that, this is an Indictment for a Fact diſtinct from that.

Cl. of Arr. This is a new Indictment, not the old One. Art thou guilty of this Piracy and Robbery, or not guilty?

W. Biſhop. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How ſay'ſt thou, James Lewis, art thou guilty, or not guilty?

Ja. Lewis. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How ſay'ſt thou, J. Sparks, art thou guilty, or not guilty?

J. Sparks. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be Try'd? (As of the Reſt.)

J. Sparks. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Cryer. O Yes, &c. You good Men of the City of London ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Priſoners at the Bar, anſwer to your Names as you are called, and ſave your Iſſues.

Cl. of Arr. Jo. Degrave, Benjamin Hatly, Jo. Ayres, &c.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any of the former Jury in this Pannel?

Cl. of Arr. Yes, my Lord.

Councellor Coniers. We ſhall except againſt them for the King.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have return'd any of the former Jury, you have not done well; for that Verdict was a Diſhonour to the Juſtice of the Nation.

Cl. of Arr. You, the Priſoners at the Bar, theſe Men you hear called, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you; if therefore you will challenge any of them, you are to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they are Sworn.

Then they were called over, and ſome being challenged for the King, and ſome by the Priſoners, the Perſons Sworn in this Jury were theſe.

J. Degrave,		Alex. Pollinton.
J. Ayres,		J. Glover.
G. Broom,		Nath. Carpenter.
T. Hicks,	><	Jo. Bickley.
R. Meakins,		Nath. Troughton.
J. Shelſwell.		Hum. South.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords, the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or his Majeſty's Advocate in his High Court of Admiralty, before this Inqueſt be taken, of the Piracy and Robbery whereof the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand indicted, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance; and all others may depart.

Then the Grand Jury came into Court again, having found two other Bills againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, one for Piratically taking away a Mooriſh Ship, and another for committing Piracy on two Ships belonging to Denmark.

And then the Grand Jury was adjourned to Friday next, at two a Clock in the Afternoon.

Cl. of Arr. Ed. Foreſeth, hold up thy Hand, (and ſo of the reſt): You that are Sworn look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Cauſe, they ſtand indicted, &c.

Mr Whitaker. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of Jury, The Priſoners at the Bar ſtand indicted for Felony and Piracy, for that they, about the 30th of May, in the 6th Year of the Reign of his preſent Majeſty King William, did make an Aſſault on Captain Gibſon, commander of the Ship Charles the Second, and put him in fear of his Life, and Piratically ſtole away the Ship and all the Furniture; and this is laid to be againſt their Duty and Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, to which Indictment they have pleaded not guilty. We ſhall go on to call our Witneſſes, and prove the Charge againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, and doubt not but you will do your Duty.

Then Dr. Littleton, Advocate-General to his Majeſty, in his High Court of Admiralty, ſpake as follows.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

YOU have heard the Indictment opened, and we ſhall now call our Witneſſes, who will relate to you what enormous and horrid Crimes the Priſoners at the Bar have committed in the Proſecution of the Fact laid in the Indictment: Crimes, that the bare Intention, had they not taken Effect, would have merited the higheſt Puniſhment: But this is not their Caſe, for they were not diſappointed of their wicked Luſts and Deſires, for as their Crimes are great, ſo have they been conſummate as well as voluntary and malicious. I may well ſay, that their Wickedneſs has been as boundleſs and as mercileſs as the Element upon which their Crimes have been committed; nor is there any Part of the World that hath not been ſenſible of their Rage and Barbarity.

Therefore, Gentlemen, as you are Lovers of Chriſtianity, as you are Lovers of Honeſty, nay, as you are Lovers of your ſelves, who bear the Character of honeſt Men, if we prove this Charge againſt the Priſoners, you muſt and ought to find them guilty, remembring that the doing Juſtice upon wicked and profligate Men, is the greateſt Mercy and Protection to the Good and Honeſt. We ſhall therefore proceed to call our Witneſſes, not doubting but that you will act like honeſt Men, for the Honour and Welfare of your Country, without having any reſpect to the diſhonourable Proceedings of the former Jury.

Mr Whitaker. Call Jo. Gravet. (He appeared and was Sworn.) Let him ſtand up.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Gravet, pray will you give my Lords and the Jury an Account what you know of the Priſoners running away with the Ship Charles the Second.

J. Gravet. I was ſecond Mate in the Ship at that Time. There was violent Hands laid on me, and I was ſeized, and a Piſtol clap'd to my Breaſt, and carry'd away.

Mr Soll.

Mr Soll. Gen. Who did it? Begin before.

J. Gravet. I was ſeized by the Carpenter of the Ship, he took me by the Throat, and clap'd a Piſtil to my Breaſt.

L. C J. Treby. Begin where the Ship was lying.

L. C. J. Holt. You was a Mate in this Ship: Now pray give an Account of the whole Matter.

J. Gravet. I was upon my Watch upon the Deck.

Priſoners. Pray ſpeak up.

J. Gravet. And there was a Boat came from the James Galley, with People in her: And as ſoon as the Boat came, the Carpenter ſeized me, and took me by the Throat, and clap'd a Piſtol to me, and ſaid, if I reſiſted I was a dead Man. They took me, one by one Arm, and another by the other, and led me to my Cabin; and one with a Piſtol ſtood at my Cabin-door, till they were got two Leagues without the Groin. Then Every came to ſpeak to Captain Gibſon, who was then ſick, and was guarded on both Sides; and when he had done ſpeaking with him, and was returned from Captain Gibſon, he came to me again, and ſaid, I ſuppoſe you do not intend to go with us: I ſaid, I would not. Then I, and the Reſt that would not go with them, had Liberty to go aſhore; and I would have gone to my Coffer and taken my Cloaths, but they would not let me; and told me I ſhould carry no more than my Cloaths on my Back.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did any of the Priſoners at the Bar ſay ſo?

J. Gravet. That I cannot tell.

Mr Coniers. Then go on.

J. Gravet. Then I went to Every, and I had ſome of my Cloaths, he was ſo kind to give me them; he gave me a Coat and Waſtcoat, and his Commiſſion that he left behind him; and W. May took me by the Hand and wiſhed me well home, and bid me remember him to his Wife.

Mr Coniers. Was there Liberty for any of them that would, to go aſhore?

J. Gravet. Captain Gibſon told me ſo, and there were about ſeventeen went off.

Mr Coniers. No Matter what Captain Gibſon told you, you ſay you went off: Might any one that would, go?

J. Gravet. That I cannot tell.

Mr Coniers. You ſay there was about Seventeen went off; would the Boat hold more?

J. Gravet. Yes, Sir.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee any hindered that would have gone off? Were any of the Priſoners at the Bar there?

J. Gravet. No.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know Ed. Foreſeth, &c.

J. Gravet. I know ſome of them.

Mr Coniers. Name the Men that you ſay you know.

J. Gravet. Joſeph Dawſon, W. May, J. Sparks.

Mr Soll. Gen. They belonged to what Ship?

J. Gravet. To the Charles.

Mr Coniers. Was there not a Boat came from the Ship James, before you went away? Was there any of the Priſoners at the Bar that came in that Boat?

J. Gravet. There were about Twenty ſix that we had Account of.

Mr Coniers. From what Ship did they come?

J. Gravet. From the James.

Mr Coniers. Were any of the Priſoners at the Bar any of them?

J. Gravet. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell.

Cl. of Arr. Call T. Druit, (who appear'd, and was Sworn.)

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Druit, was you aboard the Ship called the Charles the Second, when ſhe was carried away?

T. Druit. No, Sir.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know any Thing of the carrying of that Ship away?

T. Druit. I was not in that Ship: I was Mate of the James. And about Nine came One from aboard the Charles the Second, and ask'd me for the drunken Boatſwain? and I reply'd ſhort; and he went away again, and ſaid the Ship was going to be run away withal. Whereupon I went with ten Men to recover the Ship; and after I had adviſed with the Commander, I ordered the Pinnace to be Mann'd; and when I came, the Laſt that went into the Boat was Pike; and I bid them put back, and they would not, but went away to the Ship Charles.

Mr Coniers. How many were there that went away in that Boat?

T. Druit. About Five and Twenty.

Mr Coniers. Did you know all the Men? Were any of the Priſoners at the Bar there? Look on them.

T. Druit. Yes, my Lord, there was Ed. Foreſeth, W. Biſhop, and Ja. Lewis.

L. C. J. Holt. What Boat did they go away with, the James Boat?

T. Druit. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then they came from the James to the Charles the Second. Name their Names again.

T. Druit. Ed. Foreſeth, Ja. Lewis, and W. Biſhop.

Mr Soll. Gen. You ſaw them go off, did you not?

T. Druit. It was ſo dark that we could not ſee them.

Mr Cowper. Were theſe three Men ſent?

T. Druit. They were ſent.

Mr Cowper. Or did they go of their own Head?

T. Druit. No, I do not ſay ſo. But I went to command them back again, and they refuſed.

Mr Cowper. Did they make any Anſwer?

T. Druit. No, they only went away damning and ſinking.

Mr Coniers. Were there any Guns ſent after them?

T. Druit. Yes.

Mr Coniers. What was it for?

T. Druit. It was to bring them back again.

Mr. Cowper. And they would not come back?

T. Druit. They did not come.

Mr Cowper. Then they would not come?

Cl. of Arr. Call David Creagh (who was Sworn.)

Priſoner. This Man is a Priſoner for Piracy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What if he be?

Priſoner. I do not underſtand Law; I hope your Lordſhip will adviſe us.

L. C. J. Holt. I will do you all Right. If he be ſo, that is no Objection againſt him; he may be a good Witneſs for all that.

Cl. of Arr. He is not a Priſoner for Piracy, but for Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. Tho' he be a Priſoner for Treaſon, he is not Attainted. What is his Name?

Cl. of Arr. David Creagh.

Mr Soll. Gen. What do you know about the Priſoners running away with the Ship Charles?

D. Creagh.

D. Creagh. Upon the 7th of May 1694. I came to the Groin, in company with the Boatſwain and ſeveral others, on board the Charles; and when I was going in to the Captain of the Charles, Captain Gibſon, I found Mr Every, the Carpenter, and ſome others, drinking a Bowl of Punch: And after I was come from the Captain, I came and ſate down with them; and Mr May drank an Health to the Captain, and Proſperity to their Voyage: And we not knowing their Deſign then, thought it was to our lawful Captain, and Proſperity to the Voyage he was deſigned for.

L. C. J. Holt. What was your Voyage?

D. Creagh. It was to the Spaniſh Indies. And afterwards the Company broke up, and retired, and went to their Cabins. And when we were in our Cabins, we heard a great Noiſe above Deck; and Captain Humphreys, that commanded the Gally, called to us, to tell us his Men were run away with the Boat, and were gone to Captain Gibſon. To which Every anſwered, That he knew that well enough: So the Men came aboard: And as I was coming out of my Cabin, to ſee what the Matter was, I was met by Every, the Carpenter, and two Dutchmen; and they obliged me to retire again to my Cabin. And Captain Humphreys fired two Guns at us. But we preſently got out of reach of the Guns, and proceeded on the Deſign. And I came out of my Cabin, and went on the Quarter-deck, where I met Every and the Carpenter together; Every was conning the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. What is the Meaning of that?

D. Creagh. That is, to direct in the Steering of her. So Every took me by the Hand, and ask'd me if I would go with him? And I anſwer'd, I did not know his Deſign. He ſaid, there were but few that knew it. Says I, tell me who do know it, that if you will not tell me your ſelf, I may ask them that can tell me. But he ſaid, we ſhould all know by to morrow Morning eight a Clock. I told him, that would be too late to repent of the Deſign? The Carpenter ſtood by him, and ſaid, Do you not ſee this, Cock? Yes, ſays I, I do. Says he, this Man, and old May, and Knight, I can truſt with any Thing; they are true Cocks of the Game, and old Sports men. Then ſaid I, I ſuppoſe they know your Deſign. Yes, ſays he, they do; and if it were a Thing of ten Times the Conſequence, they ſhould know it. Upon this, the Carpenter came to me, and ſaid, If you do not go down, I will knock you on the Head. And as I was going down, I met with W. May, the Priſoner at the Bar. What do you do here? ſays he. I made him no Anſwer, but went down to my Cabin; and he ſaid, God damn you, you deſerve to be ſhot through the Head, and he then held a Piſtol to my Head. Then I went to my Cabin, and preſently came Orders from Every, that thoſe that would go aſhore, ſhould prepare to be gone. And when the Captain was got out of Bed, who was then very ill of a Fever, Every came and ſaid, I am a Man of Fortune, and muſt ſeek my Fortune. Says Captain Gibſon, I am ſorry this happens at this Time. Says he, if you will go in the Ship, you ſhall ſtill command her. No, ſays Captain Gibſon, I never thought you would have ſerved me ſo, who have been kind to all of you; and to go on a Deſign againſt my Owners Orders, I will not do it. Then, ſays Every, prepare to go aſhore. Upon which, the Captain, and ſeveral others of us, went into the Boat. When we were by the Ship's Side, I heard them order the Doctor to be ſecured; but if there was any more would go into the Boat they might: And we came into the Boat to the Number of Sixteen: And they gave us four Oars in the Pinnace, and ſet us adrift.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did he ſet you?

D. Creagh. He ſet us aboard the James, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. That is, you were turned off from this Expedition.

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord.

Mr Coniers. Was there any Room for more in the Boat?

D. Creagh. Yes there was.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there Liberty for any more to go?

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord.

Mr Soll. Gen. What do you know of the Priſoners at the Bar?

D. Creagh. I know only W. May.

Mr Cowper. What Time paſt from the Coming of the Boat, to the Time of your going off?

D. Creagh. About two Hours, Sir.

Mr Cowper. Was there any Guns fired in that Time?

D. Creagh. Yes, Sir, one or two from the James by Captain Humphreys.

Mr Cowper. Was this done in the Ship with Silence? Or was there any Uproar, or Oppoſition?

D. Creagh. No: There could be no Oppoſition. For the Men came from the whole Squadron, and came upon us and ſurprized us, being aſſiſted by thoſe that belonged to the Charles.

Mr Cowper. But did no Body make Oppoſition to their going? Did not Captain Gibſon?

D. Creagh. No, Captain Gibſon could not, being Sick.

L. C. J. Holt. But he went aſhore?

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was any Body ſtop'd that would go?

D. Creagh. No, my Lord, none but the Doctor.

Mr Soll. Gen. Now call Jo. Dan, (who appeared and was Sworn.)

Mr Coniers. What Ship were you aboard of at the Groin?

J. Dan. The Charles the Second.

Mr Coniers. Now, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of the Taking away of the Ship Charles the Second, and what paſt there.

J. Dan. Yes, Sir: We came to the Groin, and had been there about three or four Months, and we had been about eight Months out of England, and we lay for our Wages, and there was no Wages to be got. But inaſmuch as we wanted Wages, Every, and ſeveral others, contrived to carry this Ship away. So that Night, which was Sunday, they went aſhore; and when they came aboard again, made ſome Men privy to it, whom I know not. And the Monday following, I think, the Packet went out in the Morning, and the Night being fair, was ordered to give Notice: And they came to the Dove, and about Nine or Ten her Boat broke off, and ſhe haled us: For they told Captain Humphreys they were coming to run away with our Ship. So he hales the James. And preſently ſome of the Officers came and ordered their Pinnace to be man'd, and it was ſo. And when they gave this Order, there was Every and Twenty five or Twenty ſix Men. And as they came aboard, our Cables were cut, and ready to go. And coming under the Caſtle, we cut all the Boats but two, and ſtood out to Sea about two or three Leagues. And there Every went to Cap. Gibſon, and as they ſaid, to ask him if he would go with them, or not? He ſaid, no. Then he ſaid, he muſt prepare to go aſhore; and he did ſo, and ſeveral others with him. And the Word was given about, that they that would go aſhore might go; but whether theſe Men heard it or no, I cannot tell; and no Man's Name was mentioned to be ſtopt, but the Doctor. And when they went away, they cry'd, there was Water in the Boat, and they deſired a Bucket of us, to heave it over, and we gave them one; and away they went, I think, about 15 of them, and no more did offer to go as I ſaw, nor did I ſee any hinder any that would go: And afterwards, they that went off, went about their Buſineſs, and we about our Buſineſs. And we came to the Iſle of May, and Victual'd our ſelves there. And there we met with three Engliſh Ships, out of which we took ſome Neceſſaries for our ſelves, and among the reſt ſeveral Men, nine Men we took out of them.

Mr Soll. Gen. Were the Priſoners at the Bar in the Ship, when they went away?

J. Dan. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. Name them.

J. Dan. Ed. Foreſeth, W. May, J. Lewis, Jo. Sparks, W. Biſhop.

Mr Coniers. Which of them was aboard the Charles, that belong'd to her?

Jo. Dan. W. May, and J. Sparks, and Ed. Foreſeth, Ja. Lewis, and W. Biſhop, came from the James.

Mr Cowper. Was it not generally underſtood, that they were going to run away with the Ship, when they came to Cap. Gibſon?

J. Dan. Yes, Sir, they knew to be ſure.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you know that they aſſented to it?

J. Dan. No, Sir, I did not hear them ſay ſo.

Mr J. Eyers. Did they deſire to go aſhore with the reſt?

J. Dan. I ſaw none hindered.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Ed. Foreſeth in the Ship then?

J. Dan. Ed. Foreſeth was in the Ship then.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he at the Iſle of May, taking in Neceſſaries with you?

J. Dan. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do in the Company?

J. Dan. He was in the Ship, and came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. And ſo did Biſhop, and ſo did Lewis.

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, theſe three, and the other two belong'd to the Charles.

Mr Whitaker. Did any of the Ship's Crew go aſhore at the Iſle of May?

J. Dan. Yes, Sir, I think ſo.

Mr Soll. Gen. But I think, yon ſay, that the Word was given about, that any might go that would.

Mr Coniers. Go on with the Proceedings after you were at the Iſle of May.

J. Dan. After we had victual'd we took in ſome Men.

Priſoners. We have been tryed for that already, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Go on.

J. Dan. After we had been there, and took in what we had Occaſion for; our Quarter-Maſter ſaid, he would give them Bills for what he took of them. Then we went to the Coaſt of Guinea, and took ſeveral Negroes, and carried them away with us. And afterward we went to the Iſland of Princes, where lay two Danes, and we fought them, and took them; and after we had taken them, ſome of the Men went aſhore at the Iſland of Princes, and others went along with us; and we brought the Ships to Vandepo, and burnt one, and carried one with us. Then we came to Cape Lopes.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that?

J. Dan. Under the Equinoctial Line. And there we fired a Shot through the little one to ſink her, for the Men could not agree, and ſo we could not carry her with us. We went about the Cape, and touch'd at Madagaſcar.

Dr Littleton. Had not theſe Men their Part and Share of the Plunder?

L. C. J. Holt. You go too faſt, Sir.

Mr Coniers. What was the next Ship you met with, after you had rounded the Cape?

J. Dan. The next was a ſmall Veſſel, about 30 or 40 Tun, and we put her aſhore, and took a ſmall Matter out of her, and let her lie. And there we put this Gentleman, Mr May, aſhore. And we ſeeing three Engliſh Ships a coming, we left him there, and went to the Equinoctial Line: And afterwards, for Want of Bread and Water, we came again, and took another ſmall Veſſel, and ſome Rice and Pody out of her, and ſunk her, and then went to the Cape again, and took in W. May again; and met another Veſſel, and took Rice and Meal out of her, and ſunk her too. And then we went to the Red Sea, to a Town called Meat, and the People would not trade with us, and we burnt it. And thence we went up to the Red Sea, as far as we could. And going up the Cape Adin, we met with two Engliſh Privateers more, and they came and joyned with us.

L. C. J. Holt. You call them Privateers, but were they ſuch Privateers as you were?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord. I ſuppoſe they had Commiſſions at firſt, but I ſuppoſe they did not run ſo far as that.

Mr Coniers. Did you go all on the ſame Deſign?

J. Dan. Yes, they ſailed on with us, and we made the beſt of our Way, and came up into the Red Sea in a little Time, and came to an Anchor at Bobs Key, and had lain there but a Night and a Day, and there came up three Engliſh-men more from America, and they likewiſe conſorted with us; and we lay there about five Weeks; and in that Time we expected the Fleet to come down.

Mr Coniers. What Fleet?

J. Dan. The Mooriſh Fleet, that came from Mocha. They paſt us on Saturday Night unſeen, and we took a Veſſel which gave us an Account that they were gone. And then we followed them, and about three Days after we made Land, we came up with one of them of about 2 or 300 Tuns, and we fired a Broad-ſide at her, and ſmall Shot, and took her, which, after we had taken her, we plundered, and took out ſome Gold and Silver.

Mr Coniers. And what did you do with it?

J. Dan. We brought it aboard our Ship.

Mr Coniers. Did you ſhare it?

J. Dan. Not then, but after we took the other Ship.

Mr Coniers. What was that other Ship?

J. Dan. After we had taken her, we put ſome Men aboard to keep her with us; and about two Days after, we were lying at Anchor at St Johns, and there was a great Ship called the Gunſway; and and we weigh'd Anchor, and fought her about two Hours, and took her, and put ſome Men aboard her, and plunder'd her. And after we had done as much as we thought convenient, we ſent her to Surat with the People in her. And then we ſtood further to the Indian Coaſt, and ſhared our Money about a Week after.

L. C. J. Holt. That was a brave Prize, was it not, the beſt you had all the Voyage?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you all ſhare?

J. Dan. Yes, all that were in the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. You have given a good Account of this Matter. Was Ed. Foreſeth there?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do? Was he active?

J. Dan. I did not ſee him act.

L. C. J. Holt. Had he a Share?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, he had.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. May there?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do there?

J. Dan. He could do but little then; he had his Share.

L. C. J. Holt. And when you took him in again, what did he do? Did he do his Buſineſs as a Seaman?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, till he was ſick.

L. C. J. Holt Was W. Biſhop there?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, he was among the reſt.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do? Did he conſent and agree to what was done?

J. Dan. He had Share of the Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Ja. Lewis ſhare too?

J. Dan. He had a Share, as far as was allowed by the Company.

L. C. J. Holt. Did J. Sparks ſhare with you too?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, as far as the Company thought fit to give him.

Mr Cowper. When you ſay, as the Company thought fit, what do you mean? How did they ſhare it?

J. Dan. Some had 1000 l. ſome 500, others 3000.

Mr Cowper. Had all the Priſoners ſome Share?

J. Dan. Yes, Sir, all had ſome Share.

Mr Whitaker. What did you do with the Charles the Second, after the Voyage?

J. Dan. We left her at Providence.

L. C. J. Holt. If any of you Priſoners at the Bar will ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What Proviſions were aboard the Charles when ſhe was taken away?

J. Dan. I cannot tell.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What Quantity of Bread was there?

J. Dan. A pretty deal, I cannot tell the Quantity.

Mr Juſtice Turton. And were there any Guns aboard her, and ſmall Arms?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, there were.

W. May. My Lord, may I ſpeak for my ſelf?

L. C. J. Holt. If you will ask him any Queſtions you may; You ſhall be heard again to ſpeak for your ſelf by and by.

W. May. I deſire he may be askt where I was taken ſick?

L. C. J Holt. He asks you where he was taken ſick?

J. Dan. I cannot juſtly tell that, I think it was at Allibore, at the Coaſt of Guinea.

W. May. I did not lie down with it?

J. Dan. No, you did not, but your firſt being taken ſick was at Allibore.

W. May. My Lord, I deſire you will ask him, whether he thinks I had any Knowledge of the going away of the Ship?

L. C. J. Holt. You hear what he ſays, What do you ſay?

J. Dan. I know nothing of that.

L. C. J. Holt. You were there, and you had a Share of the Prize; you drank an Health to the Succeſs of your Voyage.

W. May. I hope, my Lord, you will not be angry for asking Queſtions.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no body is angry, you may ask what Queſtions you will.

Then Philip Middleton was called and ſworn.

Mr Coniers. Pray tell what you know of taking away the Ship Charles the Second?

P. Middleton. I cannot ſay any Thing of running away with the Ship; for I was aſleep then: but afterwards, in the Morning, they called up all Hands; and the Captain ſaid, every Man ſhould ſhare alike, only he would have two Shares.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

P. Middleton. Cap. Every. From thence they went to Bonyvis, and took in ſome Salt; and from Bonyvis they went to the Iſle of May, and there they took three Engliſh Ships, and plundered them; and they took the Governour aboard their own Ship till they had done (for then they could demand what Victuals they had a Mind to) and then they ſent him away again: And from the Iſle of May they went to the Coaſt of Guinea, where they put out Engliſh Colours, to make the Natives come aboard to trade, and when they came aboard, they ſurprized them, and took their Gold from them, and tied them with Chains, and put them into the Hold; and when they came to a Place called the Iſland of Princes, they gave ſeven of them away for Slaves: And then they went to Vandepoe, where they clean'd their Ship; and from Vandepoe they went to Cape Lopes, and from Cape Lopes to Annibo, and from Annibo about the Cape; and at Madagaſcar they watered their Ship, and got Proviſions, and Cows to ſalt up; and from thence they went to Joanna, and from Joanna they went to take a Junk, and took Rice out of her, and ſunk her; and from thence they went to the Equinoctial Line, and becauſe they were ſhort of Water and Rice, they went back again to Joanna: And the Wind being contrary, they went to Commeroe; and there they met a ſmall French Veſſel, and they took her, and ſunk her; and then went to Joanna again, and there took in Mr May again: And then went to Meat; and becauſe the Natives would not trade with them, they burnt their Town: And then they went to Bobs Key, by the Mouth of the Red Sea: But before that, they met with an Engliſh Veſſel, that was on the ſame Account that we were, and we rode there a Night or two; and they ſaw there another Sail a coming, which proved to be another Engliſh Veſſel: And in the Morning they ſaw two more, May, Farrel, and Wake, were the Captains: And on Saturday Night all the Mocho Fleet paſſed by: And on Sunday Morning they took another Veſſel, that told them the ſaid Fleet was gone by; and ſo they conſulted whether they ſhould follow them, or ſtay there. And then they went after them and overtook them, and took one that was about three or four Hundred Tun, and took Gold and Silver out of her, and ſent Men aboard her to plunder and keep her. And next Day they ſpied another Sail, and got up their Anchor, and ſtood to her, and took her; ſhe was called the Gunſway; they killed ſeveral Men aboard, and when they had taken and plundered the Ship, they left the Men aboard to go to Surat again. And then they went to Rachipool in the Eaſt-Indies, and got Water and Neceſſaries; and from thence to Degorees, and watered again; and then to Daſcaran, where they ſet about 25 French Men aſhore, and 14 Danes, and ſome Engliſh: For they were afraid, if they came to England, and were caught, they ſhould be hang'd, and they thought themſelves there ſecure. From that Place they went to Aſcenſion, and then to the Iſland Providence in the Weſt-Indies: And then they wrote a Letter to the Governour, to know if he would let them come in, and ſaid they would preſent the Governour with 20 Pieces of Eight, and two Pieces of Gold, if he would let them come in; and the Captain, becauſe he had a double Share, he offered 40 Pieces of Eight, and four of Gold; and with that they ſent ſome Men down, Adams and others, with the Letter: And they came again, with a Letter, from the Iſland, that they ſhould be welcome, and come and go again when they pleaſed.

Mr Coniers. Look on the Priſoners at the Bar, were they all there?

L. C. J. Holt. Do you know Ed. Foreſeth? Was he there? Did he belong to the Charles the Second?

P. Middleton. He came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. May there?

Ph. Middleton. He was aboard the Charles.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. Biſhop there?

Ph. Middleton. W. Biſhop came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. Was J. Lewis there?

Ph. Middleton. Yes, he came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Jo. Sparks there?

P. Middleton. Yes, he was aboard the Charles.

L. C. J. Holt. Had all the Men their Shares?

Ph. Middleton. Yes, ſuch as the Company thought fit to allow them, all of them.

L. C. J. Holt. Had theſe Men their Shares of the ſeveral Prizes they took?

Ph. Middleton. Yes, they had.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they active in the taking of the Prize?

Ph. Middleton. They were, as far as I ſaw.

L. C. J. Holt. Were not divers others ſet aſhore, beſides Cap. Gibſon?

Ph. Middleton. I never heard any repine, or wiſh they had been aſhore, or that they had never come along with the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. But do you know of any others that were ſet aſhore?

Ph. Middleton. Yes, a great many, Mr Gravet and ſeveral others.

Mr Cowper. I think, you ſaid, ſome French and Engliſh were ſet aſhore in the Indies.

Ph. Middleton. Yes, Sir.

Mr Cowper. Were they ſet aſhore willingly?

Ph. Middleton. They deſired to be ſet aſhore.

Jury-man. He ſays, in the Morning Cap. Every called them above Deck, and gave Leave to any to go aſhore, that were not willing to go with them; we deſire to know whether any of the Priſoners were there at that Time?

Ph. Middleton. I know not that, all Hands were called up.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What Number of Perſons were aboard, when the Dividend was made?

Ph. Middleton. About a Hundred and Sixty.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What might the Shares be?

Ph. Middleton. Some a Thouſand Pound, ſome Six Hundred, ſome Five Hundred, and ſome leſs, according as the Company thought they deſerved.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Had not you a Share?

Ph. Middleton. Yes, what the Company thought fit, and they told me that would ſerve to put me out an Apprentice, and that I ſhould never go near my Friends.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How much was that you had?

Ph. Middleton. Above an Hundred Pound.

Mr Conyers. What became of it?

Ph. Middleton. Jo. Sparks robb'd me of it.

L. C. J. Holt. The King's Council have done with the Evidence, and therefore now is your Time for to ſpeak, if you have any Thing to ſay for your ſelves. Ed. Foreſeth, What have you to ſay?

Ed. Foreſeth. My Lord, I deſire you would call Mr Druit, and ask him whether I was one of the Pinnaces Crew.

L. C. J. Holt. You hear what he ſays?

T. Druit. Yes you were, and I commanded you to come back, and you refuſed.

E. Foreſeth. Did not you command me to go?

T. Druit. Yes, and I afterwards commanded you to come back, and you refuſed.

E. Foreſeth. You did not command me back.

T. Druit. Yes I did, and fired at you, and ſhot through the Boat.

E. Foreſeth. I held Water with my Oar, that was all I could do.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you command him to do?

T. Druit. To reſcue the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. Inſtead of reſcuing the Ship, you run away with her. He commanded you back, and you refuſed to come back.

E. Foreſeth. I could not bring her back my ſelf, nor come back, unleſs I ſhould leap over Board.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to ſay?

E. Foreſeth. My Lord, when I was in the Boat, I knew not who was in it, nor how many. When I came aboard the Charles, the Sails were looſe, and I was in a very ſorry Condition; they cut the Boat off, and put her a-drift, I could not get into her, ſhe was gone in a Minute's Time, I did not know which Way or what Men there were in her, nor heard nothing till two a-Clock the next Day. And I hope, my Lord, as we are but poor Sea-faring Men, and do not underſtand the Law, you will take it into Conſideration.

L. C. J. Holt. But all you Sea-men underſtand that Law, that it is not lawful to commit Piracy, and he that doth deſerves to be hang'd.

E. Foreſeth. My Lord, I never did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you think it no Piracy to rob?

E. Foreſeth. I was forc'd to do what I did.

Mr J. Eyres. You all compell'd one another.

E. Foreſeth. My Lord, I was ſent of an Errand. I hope as we are poor Men in this Condition, you will take it into Conſideration.

L. C. J. Holt. We ſhall. Have you any more to ſay?

E. Foreſeth. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. W. May, What do you ſay?

W. May. Here is one of the King's Evidence, that teſtifies that I knew nothing of the Ship's going away, and I believe very few knew it, I believe not above nine or ten.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. None of them say you were at the Consult. But one says that you said, God damn you, you deserve to be shot through the Head; and held a Pistol to him.

W. May. I never was any higher than the under Deck, I was coming up the Hatch-Way, and Captain Every was standing, and Commanding the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. Every was no Officer, he had nothing to do to command; he was under Captain Gibson, and took the Ship from Gibson.

W. May. My Lord, I know nothing of the Ship's going away.

L. C. J. Holt. You should have stuck to Captain Gibson, and endeavoured to suppress the Insolence of Every. Captain Gibson was the Commander, you ought to have obeyed him; and if any had resisted him, or gone to put a Force upon him, you should have stood by him.

W. May. I was surprized.

L. C. J. Holt. How?

W. May. By Cap. Every, and knew nothing of it.

L. C. J. Holt. You were zealous from the Beginning, and said to one, Damn you, you deserve to be shot through the Head.

Mr J. Turton. And one says you drank a Health to your good Voyage.

W. May. Presently after I heard this Rumour, I came up the Hatch-way, and Cap. Every says, You, May, I believe you do not love this Way, pray get down to your Cabin. So I went to my Cabin, which one that is now at Virginia could testifie; which I hope will be considered, that I cannot have my Witnesses for me.

L. C. J. Holt. What have you more to say? Have you any Witnesses to call?

W. May. I stay'd in the Cabin a considerable Time. I was thinking, I must leave my old Captain without seeing him; and I begg'd them to give me Leave to come to him; and there was two Men stood with naked Cutlaces, and would not let me come to him. We had some Confabulation together, and I begg'd the Favour to come in, and at last they permitted me; and the Doctor was Anointing the Commander's Temples. And as I was coming along, I had my Hand cut; and I went to the Doctor, to desire him to bind up my Hand. When I came out again, they began to hurry the Men away. Here was Mr Gravet, the second Mate, who is now one of the King's Evidence; and I told him he should remember me to my Wife, I am not like to see her; for none could go, but who they pleased: For when those Men were in the Boat, they cryed to have a Bucket, or else they should sink, they having three Leagues to go: And I do not know how they could go so far with more, when their Boat was like to sink with those that were in her, as some of the King's Evidence have testified.

L. C. J. Holt. Who will you call?

W. May. Mr Dan. (Who appear'd.)

L. C. J. Holt. Mr Dan, answer the Question, Whether there was calling for a Bucket several Times by the Men that were in the Boat.

J. Dan. They did call, and a Bucket was given them to pump with.

L. C. J. Holt. You were willing to be rid of them.

W. May. I have more to say. Afterwards, if I should have denied to go with them, I might have been kill'd by them; and I knew not whether it be better to be accessary to my own Death, or to suffer by the Law of the Nation.

Sir Ch. Hedges. You seem to say that you were under a Constraint and Terrour. Did you make any Complaint or Discovery so soon as you had Liberty, or at your first coming into the King's Dominions?

W. May. Yes, at Virginia.

S. C. H. Where did you first arrive in England?

W. M. At Bristol.

S. C. H. When you came to Bristol, did you discover it to any Magistrate?

W. M. When I came to Bristol, I had a Design to discover it to the Lords of the Admiralty.

L. C. J. H. Did you go to a Magistrate?

W. M. I was several Days in the King's Collectors House, and did discover the whole to him; and at Providence.

L. C. J. H. You speak now of Providence, but in England who did you discover it to?

W. M. I was taken sick, and could not go abroad.

L. C. J. H. You might have sent to the Mayor of Bristol.

W. M. I knew nothing of it, I intended to declare it to none but the Lords of the Admiralty. I knew no Man there, but two Men that were Fellow-Tradesmen in Virginia. I came from Virginia by the first Ship; and if that Ship had come away before the Fleet, I had been at Home long before. I lay sick at Bristol four or five Days, and the fifth Day I got Passage for London in the Coach; and was taken three Miles off Bath by the King's Messenger, by one who betrayed me, and I was carried back to Bath again. And there was the Duke of Devonshire; and there they examined the whole Matter, in every particular, as I have now declared to the Court. And my Lord desired the Messenger should take me away again, and see me safe to London, which was all he said to me. I have more to say, as to my being put ashore at Joanna. I had no Place to go to, but lay in a lamentable Condition, I could not put Water to my Mouth without Help, and remained useless of Hands or Feet, despairing of my Life. I desired to go ashore, to see if the Air would do me any good; and I went ashore at Joanna, with another Man, Gunring, and others for Refreshment. So the second Day we went in, there appears three Ships, which were East-India Men. Captain Every being surprized by these Ships, hastened his Men and Water aboard to get out to Sea, that he might not be surprized in the Road without his Men on Board, who were come ashore for the Sick. And I told them, I will not go with you, I will rather trust to the Mercy of my Country-men, or the Mercy of the Negroes; I should endanger my Life, if I go aboard; if I stay, no Question my Country men will have Compassion on me; and if I have committed any Thing worthy of Death, they have Authority to put me to Death according to the Law of the Nation. And I applied my self to Mr Edgcomb, when he came ashore, and he gave me scurrilous Language. But I replied, I am a weak Man, for me to stay behind is Death; I had rather suffer Death by the Laws of my Country, than to be left to the Mercy of these Negroes. Mr Edgcomb says, I will take you down with me, and will hang you there too.

L. C. J. H. Where?

W. May. At Bombay, where he ſaid I ſhould be tried. His Mate, and ſeveral other Engliſh-men came to ſee me, and brought me one thing or other to refreſh me. And at laſt, at Night he ſent his Doctor and Purſer to me, who ſaid, the Captain is juſt now ſending his Boat for you. I replied, I am ready, here is all I have in the World, and he goes away about two a Clock in the Morning. And I remained ſeven or eight Weeks at the Mercy of thoſe Negroes, and had periſhed, but that a Negroe hearing an Engliſh-man was there came to me; he lived at Bednal-Green, and ſpoke Engliſh very well. He went from England in the Ship Rocheſter, taken at Guinea ſome time before. The Captain commanded this Negroe to go for the Long-boat, and turn her adrift; which he does, but goes away with her himſelf; and in the Fight, ſays, the Ship blew up by an accidental Fire, and ſeveral were loſt. This Negroe I got to look after me, and he did really feed me, and got me all Neceſſaries belonging to me: And by that means I ſaved my Life. Now when Captain Every came in again, I could not go nor ſtir.

L. C. J. Holt. Do not call him Captain, he was a Pirate.

W. May. He commanded me, I was forced to obey him.

L. C. J. Holt. For that Matter call Gravet again, becauſe you and he were very kind together; you ſhook Hands with him, and bid him farewel, and remember you to your Wife. Mr Gravet, Do you remember when you went into the Boat? Did W. May take his leave of you, or was he unwilling to be left behind?

J. Gravet. When we had liberty to go out of this Ship, this Man, W. May, took me by the Hand and wiſhed me well home, and bid me remember him to his Wife, and was very merry and jocund, and knew whether they were going.

Mr J. Turton. Did he expreſs any Inclination to go with you?

J. Gravet. No, my Lord, not at all.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to ſay?

W. May. Yes, my Lord, I remained in this Condition till I came to Providence; and the King's Evidence can teſtifie what I ſay. I only beg Mercy of this Honourable Bench, to conſider my weak State and Condition that I have been in.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you done?

W. May. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then the next. W. Biſhop, What have you to ſay?

W. Biſhop. I belonged to the Ship James, and at the Groyn the Men began to complain about Wages, and that was the firſt Beginning of the Diſturbance about this Plotting. We were ſhipt out of England, in Sir James Hubland's Service, to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies. Upon this Mutiny among the Men for their Wages, ſeveral Men went aboard the King's Ships, and deſired to be entertained on Board any of them to go for England; and we all went away again to the Ship becauſe we could not be entertained. But this Deſign of Every's I did not know of. On the 17th Day Captain Humphreys calls, and ſays, my Men are gone aboard the Charles, I think. And he calls out, ſays he, Mr Druit, Man the Pinnace. I being then on the Deck, at Night, the Men all quiet, as I thought, I went into the Pinnace, and I was no ſooner in, but in comes 15 or 16 more that knew of the Deſign; but I was then ſent, and knew it not. And they put off the Boat, and overpower'd us; and ſeveral of us would have gone aboard again, and they would not ſuffer us. And when we came aboard the Ship Charles, they had cut the Cables, and the Sails were looſe, and ſeveral Men went from the Charles to the James in a Boat; and they commanded the Innocent to do what they pleaſed, with Piſtols and Cutlaces; and they commanded me to go into the Hold, to do what they pleaſed. And I not knowing of this Matter, the Men that were in the Boat called, hand the Buckets, or we ſhall ſink. And I heard afterwards, that none went aſhore, but whom they pleaſed, that is, Every and his Crew. And I not knowing of it, could not go; and if I had known it, I had not been admitted to go. Then we were carried two Leagues without the Groyn.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any Witneſſes to call?

W. Biſhop. The King's Evidence is my Witneſs; he commanded me to go into the Boat.

L. C. J. Holt. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

W. Biſhop. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. James Lewis What have you to ſay?

J. Lewis. I had been in France, a little before the Ship came to the Groyn, a Priſoner there; but I knew nothing of Every's Deſign. By the Command of our Officer I went aboard the Boat, and as ſoon as we were in her, we were overpower'd, and carried away; they took the Oars out of our Hands, and carried us to the Ship Charles. And when we came aboard, they put the Boat a drift, and then they commanded me into the Fore-Caſtle; they had Arms but we had none, and ſo were forced to obey them. When the Boat was going off, I heard a Noiſe of crying out for a Bucket. And when we were gone from the Groyn, we were forced to do what they would have us; it was againſt my Conſent, and againſt my Will.

L. C. J. Holt. Jo. Sparks, What ſay you?

J. Sparks. When Captain Humphreys called to them that were gone into the Boat, I was aſleep; but with the Noiſe of Gravet's crying out, He is coming, I awaked; and all put the Candles out for fear I ſhould ſee them. And when the Men were come aboard, I went on the Deck, and they trow'd the Hammocks and knock'd me down.

L. C. J. Holt. Who did it?

Jo. Sparks. The Hammocks they brought from the other Ships. I durſt not do any otherwiſe than they bid me; I was innocent of the Thing. I ask'd what they were going to do, and they ſaid they were going for England.

L. C. J. Holt. Who told you ſo?

J. Sparks. John Dan.

L. C. J. Holt. J. Dan, Did you tell J. Sparks the Ship was going for England?

J. Dan. I do not remember I ſaw him all the Night.

L. C. J. Holt. I would ask you if he had no Share of the Plunder.

J. Sparks. I was forced to take it.

L. C. J. Holt. Phil. Middleton, You had ſome Share, had you not?

Phil. Midleton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of it?

Phil. Middleton. They took it away from me.

L. C. J. Holt. Who took it from you?

Phil. Middleton. J. Sparks robb'd me of it by Night.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he take all away?

Phil. Middleton. Yes, all that I had there, Two Hundred Seventy odd Pieces of Gold; it was in a Belt.

J. Sparks. He took out his Money and ſhewed it to the Troopers, and they made him drunk and got it from him; and the next Morning he ſaid they took it from him.

Phil. Middleton. I was forc'd to ſay ſo, becauſe if I had ſaid he had it, he would have made no more but to cut my Throat.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to ſay?

J. Sparks. No, my Lord.

Mr Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King againſt the Priſoners at the Bar. They are arraign'd for a very high Crime, a Robbery upon the Seas. It was not a leſs Crime becauſe committed on the Sea, but rather the more. Theſe Men had a Truſt repoſed in them to aſſiſt their Captain in his Voyage; but inſtead of that, they reſiſt their Captain, turn him out, and run away with the Ship. They could not find Shelter in any other Part of the World, and I hope you will make it appear ſuch Crimes ſhall not find Shelter here, more than in other Parts of the World. Theſe are Crimes againſt the Laws of Nations, and worſe than Robbery on the Land: For in Caſe of a Robbery on the Land, we know who is to pay it; but in a Robbery by Sea, it often happens that innocent Perſons bear the Loſs of what theſe Men do. It has been very plainly proved againſt the Priſoners, That the Ship Charles was run away with from the Groyn. And it is as plain by two Witneſſes, That all the Priſoners at the Bar were in this Ship; by three that W. May in particular was one of them; and by one that W. May was ſo far concerned, that becauſe J. Gravet ſeem'd to diſlike it, he ſaid he deſerved to be ſhot through the Head: So that he that would make himſelf the moſt innocent of the Five, is moſt Guilty.

Now they have only this to ſay for themſelves, that they were forced to do what they did. But it has been proved to you that they were not forced; it was ſaid, All might go that would. And it is not proved on their Side, that any one of the Priſoners did ſeem to diſſent from their going away. It is proved that they all made uſe of this Ship to very bad Purpoſes; that they took and plundered ſeveral Ships, and ſhared the Booty. We do not produce this to prove them guilty, but to ſhew that they made uſe of this Ship to this very Purpoſe. Now if you allow what they ſay, that they were forced to go away; then you muſt never convict, at any time, one or two Highway-men that robs in the Company of four or five; for they may ſay too that they were over-power'd, and forced by their Company. It is ſo, not only in Caſe of Robbery, but in all other Crimes alſo. They have ſaid a great deal indeed, but without any manner of Probability of Truth. They have produced no Witneſſes for themſelves, to prove any thing they have ſaid. And the Witneſſes for the King have given Teſtimony without any Exception. And, I hope, you will vindicate the Credit of the Nation, and find them guilty as the Evidence has proved them.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, Theſe five Priſoners, E. Forſeth, W. May, W. Biſhop, Ja. Lewis, and J. Sparks, are indicted for a Piracy and Robbery committed on the High Seas, ſome diſtance from the Groyn, in taking and carrying away a Ship, and ſeveral Goods therein contained; ſhe was call'd the Charles the Second. This was done in May laſt was two Years, 1694. You have heard what Evidence has been given on this Indictment againſt the Priſoners.

It has appeared that this Ship was bound in a Voyage to the Weſt-Indies. Two of the Priſoners, W. May, and J. Sparks, were Seamen then on board this Ship, and ingaged in the Voyage; the other three were not Mariners in that, but in another Ship, called the James, that lay, at that time, near the Groyn; but they came aboard the Ship Charles before, and continued on board her when ſhe was carried away.

That there was a Piracy committed on the Ship Charles, is moſt apparent by the Evidence that hath been given; that is, a Force was put on the Maſter and ſome others of the Seamen on board her, who becauſe they would not agree to go on a piratical Expedition, had Liberty to depart, and be ſet aſhore. But the Ship was taken from the Captain, who was poſſeſſed of her for the Uſe of the Owners, and was carried away by Every and others of his Crew that remained on board her; and others came from the James, which taking was a Piracy that is manifeſted by the Uſe they did put her to, for they did afterwards commit ſeveral other Piracies with her, and took ſeveral Engliſh and Daniſh Ships, and then went to ſeveral Iſlands, Countries and Places, as to the Iſles of May and Princes, to Madagaſcar, and then to Joanna, and afterwards to Meat, and then to the Red-Sea; and at the entrance of the Red-Sea committed more Piracies, in the manner as you have heard, and has been very particularly deſcribed to you. So that I muſt tell you, beyond all Contradiction, the Force put on the Captain, and taking away this Ship, called the Charles the Second, was a Piracy; and for that particular Fact theſe Priſoners are now charged.

The Matter you are now to enquire after, is, whether all the Priſoners were guilty of this Piracy, or which of them.

As for Ed. Foreſeth, Biſhop and Lewis, it hath appeared to you, that they, with others, were aboard the Ship James; and that there was a Report ſpread about of a Plot againſt the Captain of the Charles the Second, and a Deſign to carry that Ship away. To prevent which, there were ſome of theſe Men ſent out in a Boat, by the Captain of the James, to this Ship to aſſiſt Captain Gibſon, but inſtead of preventing this Piracy, they ſtayed behind and went along with theſe Men that carried away the Ship.

As to W. May and J. Sparks, that were of this Ship's Crew, they continued on Board, and were Parties in all thoſe Piracies.

There was a Conſult, it ſeems, by ſome particular Perſons, of which Every was the Ring-leader, how to effect this Deſign, Captain Every as they call him; though he was no Captain, but was under the Command of Captain Gibſon that had the Conduct of this Ship.

It's

It's true, it is not proved to you that these Men were at that Consult; for, it seems, they were too many, for they were about 160 that remained on board when the Ship was carried off.

Now for W. May, Jo. Gravet, second Mate, that was aboard, and though he had a Pistol clapt to him to prevent any Resistance, yet had liberty to depart; and upon his going off discoursed with May, who shook Hands with him and bid him farewel, and remember him to his Wife. And therefore it is evident that W. May was under no Force to stay; he stay'd with his good Will, and did consent to the Piracy. And then another Witness is D. Creagh, who says, that May was so zealous in the Matter, that he said to him, God damn him, he deserves to be shot through the Head.

Sparks was on Board the Ship and had a design'd End, and no Compulsion was used towards him, but since had Liberty to depart; but the staying behind by the rest, is a great Evidence to induce you to believe they were Parties in the Design; for why else should not they go ashore as well as others, since there doth not appear any restraint upon them to stay, especially when a general Word was given, that those who would go on Shoar should go on the Deck, and a Boat was ready to carry them off.

They say, they wanted a Bucket in the Boat, and they gave them one to lave out the Water; that is a plain Evidence they were willing to be rid of those that were not willing to engage with them; and if they had not approved of the Design, they were not hindered from going in the Boat. As for those that came from the James, there was no manner of Force on them, but they were sent from the Captain to assist the Captain of the Charles; for those two Ships having lain near together at the Groyn, there was some Intelligence of such a Design in agitation, and these three forsook their own Ship; Every declared his Design to some: And he told them what Shares they should have; and because he was their Captain and Commander, he thought himself intituled to a double Share.

And then you have heard what was done in the whole Progress of this wicked Design, every one of these Men had their Share, even this W. May, though he was sick for some time, and was set ashore at Joanna, and at the Ship's return taken in again, yet he had his share of all the Prizes. W. Bishop had his share, James Lewis had his share, and John Sparks had his share; and, says this young Man Philip Middleton, I had my share, which was above an hundred Pound, which was thought by them to be a good Share for a Boy; and Sparks took him at a Disadvantage, and having an Opportunity, took it from him.

Now if there be a Piracy committed, though contrived but by one Man, yet if others do concur in it they are equally guilty.

Now tho' these Prisoners tell you, there was a Force upon them, it is a meer Suggestion, without any manner of Evidence; but there is Evidence of their consenting and confederating in this wicked Enterprise.

Indeed there hath been a Trial before, which you have all heard of; for the City and Nation have discoursed of it; consider therefore the Evidence. You have a great Trust reposed in you, for you are not to act arbitrarily, but you are accountable to God Almighty, to whom you are sworn, and to the Government for the Verdict you give. If you are not satisfied in your Consciences that the Evidence is sufficient to find these Men guilty, in God's Name, acquit them.

But if you are satisfied in the Sufficiency of the Evidence to convict them, you must find them guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, swear an Officer to keep the Jury; which was done, and the Jury went out to consider of their Verdict. And in the mean time, the six Prisoners were again arraigned upon two several Indictments, the one for piratically taking away a Mooriſh Ship, and the other for committing Piracy upon two Daniſh Ships. To both which Indictments Joſeph Dawſon pleaded guilty; the other five pleaded not guilty, and put themselves upon their Trials.

Then the Jury having been withdrawn a little while returned into Court.

Foreman. If there be any Evidence to prove that John Sparks consented to the running away of the Ship, we desire it may be heard again.

L. C. J. Holt. He was with them at the carrying off the Ship, and at the taking of the several Prizes, and had his share afterwards. What is Consent? Can Men otherwise demonstrate their Consent, than by their Actions?

Juryman. But we understand, my Lord, that he was tried upon his consenting to carry away the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you mean by consenting? If a Ship be carried away with Force from the Captain, divers Piracies are committed with her, one continues aboard and receives a Share of the Profit of the several Piracies; is not that an Evidence of Consent to the piratical Design? Was it not proved that many went out of the Ship, that were not willing to go on that Design? And that was with the Leave of the rest that remain'd.

Mr J. Eyres. And one stood on the Deck, and said with a loud Voice, That they that will not go may have Liberty to go Ashore.

Mr Conyers. No Man was hindred but the Doctor, being a useful Man.

L. C. J. Holt. When a Ship is run away with, and People are aboard that Ship so run away with, that proves their Consent, unless they can produce Evidence to the contrary.

Mr J. Turton. The Captain was in his Bed sick of a Fever at that time, and was not willing to go with them, and they sent him away from them.

Mr J. Eyres. And every Man had his Share.

Then the Jury consulting together a very little time, agreed on their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, Answer to your Names, Jo. Degrave.

J. Degrave. Here (and so of the rest.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Set Ed. Foreſeth to the Bar. Ed. Foreſeth, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; Is Edward Foreſeth Guilty of the Piracy Piracy and Robbery whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Keeper. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl. of Arr. W. May, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Is W. May Guilty, &c. or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Keeper, &c. W. Biſhop, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Is W. Biſhop Guilty, &c. or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Keeper, &c. J. Lewis, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Is Ja. Lewis Guilty, &c. or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Keeper, &c. Jo Sparks, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Is Jo. Sparks Guilty, &c. or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Keeper, &c.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, You have done extreamly well, and you have done very much to regain the Honour of the Nation, and the City.

Then the Court adjourned to Friday next the 6th of November two of the Clock in the Afternoon. On which Day Ed. Foreſeth, &c. were tried upon two other Indictments for ſeveral Piracies.

An Abſtract of the Tryal of Ed. Foreſeth, James Lewis, William May, William Biſhop, John Sparks, (Joſeph Dawſon having pleaded Guilty upon his Araignment) at the Seſſions Houſe in the Old-Baily, Friday, Novemb. the 6th 1696, where were preſent Sir Charles Hedges, Judge of the High-Court of Admiralty, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, with ſeveral others of his Majeſties Judges and Commiſſioners.

After ſeveral Challenges made by the Priſoners, of the Perſons returned upon the Jury, theſe Twelve Gentlemen were ſworn, viz.

Roger Mott	John Watſon
John James	Benjamin Hooper
Richard Rider	John Hibbert
William Hunt	Richard Chiſwell
John Hammond	Daniel Ray
Abraham Hickman	William Hatch.

THEN the Clerk read the Two Indictments upon which they were tried, viz. One for Seiſing, Robbing and Carrying away Two Ships belonging to Denmark, on the 30th of Auguſt, 1694. The other for that they, on the 28th of September, 1695. in a Place 40 Leagues diſtant from Surat, did Forcibly and Piratically ſet upon a Mooriſh Ship, and take away her Tackle and Goods, to a great Value.

Then Dr. Newton, one of his Majeſties Advocates, ſpoke to the Jury, as followeth.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury,

The Crime the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand charged with, and which has been opened to you, upon the Indictments, is Piracy; which is the worſt Sort of Robbery, both in its Nature and its Effects, ſince it diſturbs the Commerce and Friendſhip betwixt different Nations; and if left unpuniſhed, involves them in War and Blood: For ſovereign Powers and Nations have no Courts of Juſtice afterwards to reſort to, as the Subjects of Princes have, in their own Countries, for Redreſs or Puniſhment; but they can only have recourſe to Arms and War, which how expenſive, and how dangerous they are, and what Calamities and Ruin they carry along with them, no Perſon can be a Stranger to. So that thoſe who bring not ſuch Criminals to Judgment, when it lies in their Power, and is their Duty to do ſo, are anſwerable, in a great Meaſure before God and Man, for all the fatal Conſequences of ſuch Acquittals, which bring a Scandal on the publick Juſtice, and are often attended with publick Calamities.

It is not therefore, Gentlemen, to be ſuppoſed, that wiſe or honeſt Men, (and there are none who would be thought to be otherwiſe) who love their Country, and wiſh its Peace and Proſperity, would be guilty in that kind.

Gentlemen, This Piracy was begun in Europe, carried on through Africa, and ended in the remoteſt Indies; ſo that, in a manner, all the World is concerned in this Trial, and expects and demands Juſtice of them, if they are guilty, at your Hands.

Then the Witneſſes were produced to prove the Facts charged upon the Priſoners, viz. Jo. Dan, David Cray, Phil. Middleton, and others; who fully proved againſt them, That the Priſoners, with ſeveral other wicked Perſons, not yet taken, did forcibly take away the Ship Charles the Second from the lawful Commander, Captain Gibſon, with a piratical Deſign. And in the ſaid Ship did afterwards commit ſeveral Piracies; at the Iſle of May they took three Engliſh Ships. From thence they went to the Coaſt of Guinea, and when ſome of the Natives came on board with their Gold, to trade with them, they took away their Gold, and carried them away for Slaves. And then went to the Iſle of Princes and took two Daniſh Ships, and took out what was in them, viz. 40 Pound Weight of Gold-duſt, and other Merchandiſe; and they offered to reſtore one of the Ships to the Maſter after they had robbed her, but the Maſter he ſaid ſhe was inſured, and he would not take her again. And afterwards they burnt one of the Ships, and carried away the other. Then they went to Bobs Key, at the Mouth of the Red-Sea, waiting for the Mocho Fleet, which one Night paſt by them unſeen; but were informed the next Day that they were gone. And then calling a Council they agreed to follow them; and accordingly went after them, and came up with one of them, which was about 250 Tun, and with ſmall reſiſtance took her, and put ſome Men on board her, and took out Gold and Silver out of her to the Value of 30 or 40000 l. with other Merchandiſe. And afterwards met with the Ship called the Gunſway, and robbed her likewiſe of all her Furniture, to a very

a very great Value. And about a Week after they ſhared all the Prizes they had taken; and ſome had a thouſand Pound, ſome had eight Hundred, ſome ſeven Hundred, ſome five Hundred, every Man in the Ship his Share, as they thought they deſerved. And it was particularly proved by the Evidence againſt the Priſoners that they had their Shares. The more particular Relation of which is already Printed at large, in the foregoing Trial.

When the King's Evidence had done, the Priſoners were permitted to ſay what they could in their Defence; but the ſame appearing to be very weak, the L. C. J. Holt ſumm'd up the Evidence; and the Jury going out to conſider their Verdict, after a ſhort ſtay, brought them in all Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned to the 10*th of* November following.

After the Tryal of John Murphey was over, the Pirates were brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Dawſon, you by your own Confeſſion are convicted of Piracy and Robbery. What have you to ſay why Sentence of Death ſhall not be paſſed upon you according to Law?

Joſ. Dawſon. I ſubmit my ſelf to the King and the honourable Bench.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Foreſeth, What have you to ſay, &c.

Foreſeth. I am an innocent Man; and went on to juſtifie himſelf, &c.

Judge of the Admiralty. You and the reſt of the Priſoners at the Bar have had a very fair Trial, and been fully heard upon your Defence; but the Jury your Country-men, upon whom you put your ſelves to be tried, have found you guilty. So that the inſiſting upon your Juſtification cannot now avail you any thing, the Verdict being given; but if you have any thing to offer in Arreſt of Judgment, or can ſhew any Cauſe why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment according as the Law directs, againſt Perſons convicted of Piracy, you ſhall have Liberty to ſpeak, and will be heard.

Foreſeth. I deſire to be ſent into India to ſuffer there.

Cl. of Arr. William May, What have you to ſay, &c.

William May. My Lord, I being a very ſickly Man, never acted in all the Voyage. I have ſerved my King and Country this thirty Years, and am very willing to ſerve the Eaſt-India Company where they pleaſe to command me; and deſire the honourable Bench to conſider my Caſe, and if I muſt ſuffer, I deſire to be ſent into India to ſuffer there.

Cl. of Arr. William Biſhop, What have you to ſay, &c.

William Biſhop. I was forced away; and when I went was but 18 Years old, and am now but 21, and deſire Mercy of the King and the Court.

James Lewis. I am an ignorant Perſon, and leave my ſelf to the King's Mercy.

John Sparks. I leave my ſelf to the King's Mercy, and to the honourable Court.

Judge of the Admiralty. Joſeph Dawſon, you ſtand convicted upon four Indictments, by your own Confeſſion, for Piracy and Robbery. And you Edward Foreſeth, William May, William Biſhop, James Lewis and John Sparks, having put your ſelves upon your Trials according to the Cuſtoms and Laws of your own Country, have been found guilty upon three ſeveral Indictments, for the ſame deteſtable Crimes committed upon the Ships and Goods of Indians, of Danes, and your own Fellow-Subjects.

The Law for the Heinouſneſs of your Crime hath appointed a ſevere Puniſhment, by an ignominious Death; and the Judgment which the Law awards, is this, That you and every one of you be taken from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and that there you, and every one of you be Hanged by the Necks, until you, and every one of you be Dead: And the Lord have Mercy upon you.

According to this Sentence, Edward Foreſeth and the reſt were Executed, on Wedneſday, November the 25*th* 1696, at Execution-Dock, that being the uſual Place for the Execution of Pirates.

The TRYAL of Sir JOHN FENWICK, Bar.

Veneris 6. die Novembris, 1696.

ADmiral Ruſſel acquainted the Houſe of Commons, That his Majeſty had given leave to lay before the Houſe ſeveral Papers in the Nature of Informations of Sir John Fenwick, in which he and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality were named; and deſired that they might be brought up to the Table and Read, and that he might have an Opportunity to juſtify himſelf, or if he did not, that he might fall under the Cenſure of the Houſe. And Mr Secretary Trumbal being preſent did ſay, That he had his Majeſty's Leave to lay thoſe Papers before the Houſe, and if the Houſe pleaſed he would bring them up to the Table.

And accordingly (the Houſe ſhewing a general Inclination for it) they were brought up to the Table and read, (being the Account he gave of the laſt Plot under his own Hand, and his Examination taken by Mr Vernon, afterwards upon on his Trial produced ;) and after the ſame was Read, the Houſe ordered, That Sir John Fenwick ſhould be brought immediately before them, and that no Perſon ſhould in the mean time ſpeak with him, or give or receive any Paper from him. And the Houſe further ordered, That the Lord Cutts, Sir Henry Hobart, and Mr Norris, Three of their Members, ſhould ſee their Order executed.

And in the mean time adjourned to the Afternoon.

About Five a Clock in the Afternoon Sir John Fenwick was brought with a ſtrong Guard (which the Lord Cutts had taken care for) to the Houſe, and being brought to the Bar, Mr Speaker ſpake to him thus.

Mr Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, the Houſe underſtand that you have ſhewed ſome Inclinations to make a Diſcovery of the Deſigns and Practices of the Enemies of the Government ; you have now an Opportunity to do it, and the Houſe require it from you, That you make a full and ample Diſcovery of all you know of that Matter.

Sir John Fenwick. Mr Speaker, I ſuppoſe the Houſe is not ignorant of my Circumſtances ; I am Indicted of High-Treaſon, and have been arraigned : What I have done to ſerve the King and Nation his Majeſty knows, it hath been communicated to him by his Privy-Council. I do not know but what I ſay may hurt my ſelf ; and therefore I deſire that I may have ſome Security for my ſelf, and I am willing to tell the full of all I know.

Mr Speaker. Sir, if you pleaſe to withdraw for the preſent the Houſe will ſend you their Pleaſure.

Sir John Fenwick withdrew. Was called in again.

Mr Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, ſince you withdrew, the Houſe have conſidered of what you ſaid at the Bar. They do not think what you ſaid is an Anſwer to what they require ; they do expect a full and candid Confeſſion from you of what you know, and they think that the beſt Way for you to obtain the Favour of the Houſe is to deal ingenuouſly with them.

Sir John Fenwick. Sir, I am in the Hands of the Law, and I would not do any thing that his Majeſty might be angry with me, for I do not know it is with his Majeſty's Conſent : I have acquainted him fully with all I know of the Matter ; this is all the Account I can give you at this time. 'Tis a dangerous Point that I am under ; I know not but I may come to my Trial in a few Days, and what I may ſay may riſe up againſt me in a Court of Judicature : I humbly propoſe it to the Houſe, if they do not think it a hard Caſe for me to make any Confeſſion here, when his Majeſty hath all that I know. I ſhall be very ready to do what this honourable Houſe pleaſes to command me, but I deſire this Houſe will conſider my Circumſtances ; I would not offend the King, nor offend this Houſe.

Thereupon Mr Speaker again ſpake to him to withdraw. And being withdrawn, the Houſe debated, whether they ſhould acquaint him with their having thoſe Papers of Information. But they did not think fit to do it for this Reaſon, becauſe they thought thoſe Papers were a Contrivance, and made by others for him ; and that the beſt way to get the Truth out of him would be for him to tell his own Story. Beſides, if the Houſe ſhould let him know they had thoſe Papers, he would only refer to thoſe Papers, as he had lately done, when he was examined by the King and Council.

'Twas alſo debated, whether there ſhould be any threatning Words uſed towards him, but they thought that not proper ; for his Confeſſion ought to be free and natural. It was alſo debated, Whether they ſhould take notice of his Majeſty's Conſent ; but that was not thought fit, being thought derogatory to the Privileges of the Houſe : So the Houſe ordered him to be called in again, and Mr Speaker delivered the Senſe of the Houſe to him in theſe Words.

Sir John Fenwick at the Bar.

Mr Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, The Houſe has conſidered of what you have ſaid, to excuſe your making a Diſcovery of your Knowledge of the Deſigns and Practices of the Enemies of the Government, and they think what you ſtand upon is only an Excuſe ; they think you have no Reaſon to apprehend the King ſhould be angry with you for making any Diſcovery to this Houſe, this being the proper Place to enquire of all things that do relate to the King and Government, eſpecially his Majeſty's Safety ; and you ought to diſcover to them what you know : As to what you ſtand upon, that you ſhould not be prejudiced by what you diſcover here, I am commanded to tell you, they do take notice by what you have ſaid here, that you have already, notwithſtanding what you ſay, diſcovered it to the King and Council ; and they command me to tell you, that you have no Reaſon at all to apprehend, that you ſhall ſuffer any thing if you make a full and free Diſcovery here, no Man that ever did ſo, and dealt candidly with this Houſe, ever did : 'Tis in your Power to deſerve the Favour of the Houſe ; 'tis required by the Houſe, that you make a Diſcovery, and this is the laſt time that you are like to be asked to do it.

Sir John Fenw. Mr Speaker, I know not what Anſwer to make to this Houſe, I would not willingly offend it ; what I have informed the King of is a great deal, and a Man would have ſome little time to recollect himſelf ; and I have been kept a very cloſe Priſoner, and had no conveniency of Pen, Ink, and Paper ; 'tis hard to remember juſt of a ſudden, and I would willingly be ſecure his Majeſty will not be angry with me ; I was in hopes that his Majeſty would have informed the Houſe himſelf, he hath all that I know ; my Circumſtances are hard, I am in danger every Day to be Tried, and I deſire to be ſecured, that what I ſay ſhall not riſe up in Judgment againſt me ; 'tis hard to make me to accuſe my ſelf under theſe Circumſtances, and very hard to put me on it now.

Mr Speaker. As to what you ſay relating to the fear of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, and the other Excuſe, you have had your Anſwer already ; as to what you ſay relating to time, if you will now declare what you know and remember, the Houſe will take it into Conſideration, whether they will give you farther time to make up the reſt.

Sir John Fenw. Sir, his Majeſty hath all exactly, 'tis impoſſible for me to inform you of it without accuſing my ſelf ; I do not really know what to ask but a little time, if they would pleaſe to give it me.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you know already what the Houſe require of you.

Sir J. Fenwick. I do: But 'tis no Excuſe that I have made: What I have told is Truth, to the beſt of my Knowledge: I am not very good at Speaking, and if I might have a little Time, I ſhall do what they pleaſe to command me.

Mr. Speaker. If that be all you have to ſay, if you pleaſe to withdraw, you ſhall know the Pleaſure of the Houſe.

Sir John Fenwick withdraws. Is called in again.

Mr Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, this Houſe have conſidered what you ſtood upon when you were here laſt, that your Memory was bad, and that you deſired Time, but the Houſe think it a Matter of great Moment to the King and whole Nation, That thoſe that are their Enemies ſhould be diſcovered as ſoon as poſſible; and this being a Matter within your Knowledge, the Houſe do not think fit to give you Time; but if they find by your Diſcovery, that you deal candidly and ingenuouſly with them, and have told them as much as you know upon your Memory, they will conſider of your Requeſt of giving you Time for the Reſt.

Sir J. Fenw. When firſt I ſpake to the Privy-Counſellor, I propoſed it to him, Whether I might have a Pardon without being an Evidence againſt any Man, and in that Caſe I would ſerve the King ſo as to tell him all that I knew. It was upon Honour that I did it to him, and he took the Words in Writing from me, and ſent them to the King in Flanders: The King's Anſwer was, That he made no Objection as to my being an Evidence, nor his giving me a Pardon; but that I could expect no Pardon till he knew what I could ſay; upon that, I was incouraged to do what I did for his Majeſty's Service: And I have found in all my Buſineſs ſince, whatever I do or ſay, the Anſwer is, 'Tis not Satisfactory, and I am where I was. When this was done, there was a Meſſage ſent to me from the Lords Juſtices, That this was not Satisfactory, and I muſt tell all I know: Now when a Man hath told all he knows, and this muſt ſtill be the Anſwer, 'tis very hard. The King's Anſwer was, That I ſhould more fully make good what I had ſaid. Sir, I did afterwards explain what I had informed that honourable Perſon, and ſtill it was not Satisfactory. I hope I ſhall not find this from this Honourable Houſe; I am upon my Life, and I hope this Houſe will conſider of it: I know this Houſe is good Security if I had it, but till I have it I am under theſe Circumſtances, and I may at laſt be told all is not Satisfactory: I deſire the Houſe will pleaſe to conſider of it.

Mr Speaker. Sir, you know the Pleaſure of the Houſe, you know what they require of you.

Sir J. Fenw. I am very unwilling to offend the Houſe; but theſe are very hard Circumſtances, to be told, when I have done all I can, 'Tis not Satisfactory.

Mr Speaker. Sir, you know what the Houſe does expect; you muſt either give them Satisfaction in it, or withdraw.

Accordingly he withdrew.

And a Motion was made for Leave to bring in a Bill to Attaint Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon, and after a Debate thereupon, the Houſe divided.

Yeas —— 179. Noes —— 61.

So it paſſed in the Affirmative.

Lunæ 9. die Novembris, 1696.

The Bill for Attainting Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon was preſented to the Houſe, and after a long Debate of ſeveral Hours, the Queſtion was put for the ſecond Reading of it; whereupon the Houſe divided.

Yeas —— 196. Noes —— 104.

So it paſſed in the Affirmative, and Friday Morning was appointed for it.

The ſame Day the Houſe Ordered, That Sir John Fenwick ſhould have a Copy of the Order for reading the Bill the ſecond Time, and a Copy of the Bill, and that he ſhould be allow'd Pen, Ink, and Paper.

And further Ordered, That Mr. Attorney General, and Mr Sollicitor General, ſhould prepare and produce the Evidence againſt him on Friday Morning.

And Mr Speaker this Day acquainted the Houſe that he had received a Letter from Mr. Fuller, which he thought fit to acquaint the Houſe with; but upon a Queſtion for reading of it, it paſſed by a very great Majority in the Negative; ſo that there was no Diviſion upon that Matter, but the Letter was writ in the Words following.

SIR,

I Preſume that no Perſon whatever, in the Intereſt of the preſent Government, hath been more actually engaged with Sir John Fenwick than my ſelf, it being my Fortune ſeveral Times to bring Letters to him from the late King and Queen at St. Germains, and to carry his Anſwers: I have alſo been with him at private Conſults of the late King's Adherents, as my Informations aſſert; ſo that if I may be Serviceable to the detecting his Treaſons, I ſhall be very ready to ſerve the Government, and to demonſtrate my Integrity, I am,

Sir,

Your Honour's moſt humble
and devoted Servant,
W. Fuller.

Martis 10. die Novembris, 1696.

Sir John Fenwick ſent the Speaker a Letter in theſe Words.

SIR, Newgate, Nov. 10.

I Would have addreſſed my ſelf in the humbleſt Manner I could to the Honourable Houſe of Commons, from whom I received a Copy of a Bill againſt me with their Order; but my Keeper will not carry any Paper from me but to your ſelf, to whom I durſt not preſume to ſend a Petition to deliver for me. Therefore I beg the Favour you will pleaſe to acquaint the Houſe, that it is my humble Petition to them, That they would give Leave for my Council Sir Francis Pemberton, Sir Tho. Powys, and Sir Barthol. Shower, to come to me, with my Sollicitor, Chriſtopher Dighton, to adviſe with alone. The Keeper will not ſo much as let me ſend the Copy of the Bill and Order to my Sollicitor, ſo it is of no

Uſe

Uſe to me: I humbly beg they will pleaſe to give Order, that I may have all Aſſiſtance that is neceſſary for me, and that you will pardon this Trouble from, Sir,

Your moſt humble Servant,

JOHN FENWICK.

Upon this Letter they did readily order that he ſhould be allowed two Council to make his Defence, and that they might be alone with him; and after ſome Debate, did give Leave that he might have the Sollicitor he deſired, tho' it was ſaid, his Sollicitor was a very great Jacobite; and it was inſinuated, That he was ſuſpected to be concerned in the Eſcape of Goodman; but it was alſo ſaid, That he had been made uſe of as his Sollicitor to prepare for his Tryal, and before that, in other Matters, and ſo that it might not be thought that there was any Hardſhip upon him, in that reſpect the Houſe thought fit to allow Mr. Dighton to be his Sollicitor.

Jovis 12. die Novembris, 1696.

A Petition was preſented from Sir John Fenwick, as follows.

To the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled,

The humble Petition of Sir John Fenwick, Bar.

Sheweth,

THat there being a Bill of Attainder brought into this Houſe for the Attainting of your Petitioner of High Treaſon, and your Petitioner is adviſed, That there are many weighty Reaſons to be offered againſt the ſaid Bill;

Your Petitioner therefore moſt humbly prays, That your Honours will be pleaſed to hear him by his Council againſt the Paſſing of the ſaid Bill at the Bar of this Honourable Houſe; and to appoint ſuch Time for the ſame, as to your Honours ſhall ſeem meet. And your Petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c.

J. FENWICK.

Which Prayer of his Petition was granted.

Veneris 13. die Novembris, 1696.

Sir John Fenwick was brought to the Houſe (by Order) from the Priſon of Newgate; and there being a very great Company of Strangers, both in the Lobby and Speaker's Chamber; and the Houſe being full of Members, to prevent the Inconvenience that ſuch a Number of People crouding in might occaſion, the Lobby was Ordered to be cleared of all Perſons that were not concerned, and alſo the Speaker's Chambers, and that the Back-door of the ſame ſhould be lock'd, and the Key laid upon the Table: But it having been ſaid, That the Lords did admit the Members of this Houſe to hear their Debates; there was private Intimation given the Serjeant to let them remain in the Speaker's Chambers, when others were removed.

Then Sir John Fenwick was Ordered to be brought to the Bar: But it being a Proceeding of that Nature, that none of the antienteſt Members could give a Precedent, it was neceſſary to ſettle ſome Preliminaries; and the firſt Queſtion that was moved, was, Whether the Mace ought to lie upon the Table when Sir John Fenwick was in the Houſe, or whether the Serjeant ought not to ſtand by him with it at the Bar?

Mr Smith. Sir John Fenwick being a Priſoner, the Mace ought to be at the Bar, and then no Member can ſpeak.

Mr Boyle. This Hearing, of any Thing I can think of, is moſt like the Hearing of an Election, and then the Mace is upon the Table, and every one has Liberty to ſpeak and ask Queſtions.

Mr Chanc. of Excheq. The Mace ought not to be upon the Table, becauſe he is a Priſoner: The Sheriffs of London can't have him in Cuſtody here, and ſo they deliver him into Cuſtody of the Serjeant.

Mr F. Howe. That Argument would be good, if he could not be in Cuſtody of the Serjeant unleſs he had the Mace in his Hand.

Mr Brotherton. The Mace ought to be upon the Table, becauſe the Bill is to be read.

Mr Chr. Muſgrave. The Mace ought to be upon the Table. Never any Bill was read but the Mace was upon the Table.

Col. Granvile. If the Mace be not upon the Table, it would be a great Hardſhip to the Members that they cannot ſpeak, and a great Hardſhip upon the Priſoner that he can't ask any Queſtions. My Lord Torrington was brought Priſoner from the Tower, and upon Account of his Quality the Houſe did not let him go to the Bar: But while he was in the Houſe the Mace was upon the Table, and he gave an Account of the whole Campaign, and every Body was at Liberty to ask what Queſtions they pleaſed.

Mr Att. Gen. The Matter is very new; and I think 'tis neceſſary you reſolve upon the Method before you call in the Council, that you may acquaint the Council with it: I think it not proper that the Mace ſhould be upon the Table, becauſe he is a Priſoner, though it may not be neceſſary that the Serjeant ſhould have it upon his Shoulders all the Time, but he may eaſe himſelf. I believe you will ask Sir John Fenwick what he has to ſay, but no Queſtions to make him accuſe himſelf: And I humbly propoſe it to you, That after the Council is called in, they may open the Nature of the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick; and then, Whether you will permit them to go on, or they ſhall withdraw, and the Houſe will conſider what Queſtions ſhall be asked.

Col. Mordant. I hope the Queſtions will be taken down upon a Paper by the Speaker, and then read to us, that we may ſee if they be right, and ſo asked by the Speaker.

Sir Will. Williams. If the Mace is not upon the Table our Mouths are muzzled; we are in the Nature of Judges, and ſhall we paſs a Vote that the Judges ſhall not ask any Queſtions?

Sir Tho. Dyke. I can't be informed without asking of Queſtions: I know not whether you are a Houſe without it, without having the Mace upon the Table. And will you act in your higheſt Capacity without being a Houſe? I do not know how it was when the Lord Torrington was here, but when the Duke of Leeds was here the Mace was upon the Table.

Mr Boyle. I wiſh you had appointed a Committee to have ſettled the Preliminaries, and that the Bill had not been brought in at all; what they labour as a Matter to avoid delay may occaſion more. For though when you carry the Mace to the Table no Member ſhould have the Liberty to ſpeak, yet any Member hath Liberty to deſire that the Council may withdraw, and then they must withdraw, and the Mace must be brought upon the Table.

Mr Chanc. of Exchequer. That Gentleman is certainly in the right: But I think the Mace must not be upon the Table 'till when the Prisoner is here; and I think the Questions must be asked by the Chair.

The longest Examinations that I remember was of the Admiralty, and then the Questions were asked by the Chair. For the Instance of my Lord Torrington, 'tis true, he had not the Mace with him, but he came at his own Request, he came to give you an Account of his Proceedings; and in that Case not a Question was asked by any Member; any Member hath Liberty to propose any Question, but it must be asked by the Chair.

Afterwards the Question was put, and it passed, That Sir John Fenwick should stand with the Mace at the Bar.

Then a Question arose about reading of the Bill: Some Gentlemen said, it could not be read when the Council was present, for the Mace would be off the Table; (and they seemed to be under a Difficulty by having passed the last Question;) others said, It was not necessary to read it whilst Sir John Fenwick was present, he having had a Copy of it; but at last it was thought reasonable, it being in the Nature of a Charge upon him, that it should be read to him when present with his Council; and 'twas said, it was done so in the Case of Indictments, tho' Copies were delivered to them: But it should be read only as a Matter of Form, as a Charge to which he was to answer; but it could not be reckoned a second Reading, according to the Rules of the House, the Mace being off the Table, and therefore it should be read again when the Council and he was withdrawn.

And it was said, That the Journals did take notice that in some Cases, as in the Case of an adjourned Debate, that some Bills had been read four Times, and so it was agreed, and that Difficulty was solved.

And the Serjeant took the Mace, and brought Sir John Fenwick to the Bar; and Council was admitted for him, and for the Bill, viz.

Mr. Serjeant Gould, King's Serjeant, and Mr. Recorder Lovel likewise King's Serjeant. And Sir Thomas Powys and Sir Bartholomew Shower, for Sir John Fenwick.

And Mr Speaker opened the Matter thus.

Mr Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, the House have received Information that you have been in a horrid Conspiracy against the Life of his Majesty, and for bringing in a French Force to invade this Kingdom, that you have been indicted thereof; and they have considered the Nature of the Crime with which you stand charged, and how destructive it would have been (if it had succeeded) to the very Being of this Kingdom; and therefore that you may not go unpunished, if you are guilty, have ordered a Bill to be brought into this House to attaint you for High Treason, which hath been once read, and will be now read to you at the Bar; and then you will hear the Evidence against you, and have Liberty to make your Defence: And though you cannot claim any Right thereto, this House (to shew how ready they are to favour you, in giving you any reasonable Help to make your Defence) do allow you Council to assist you therein; and having granted you this their Favour, they do expect that you will make a good Use of it. I am likewise to acquaint those that are your Council, That this House do reckon their own Prudence will so guide them, as not to give any just Offence to this House; and that they will not be allowed to question the Power of Parliaments to pass Bills of Attainder when they judge it requisite, of which this House is more proper to judge than any private Person, and therefore they will not allow you to debate that Point.

Let the Bill be read.

Clerk of the House of Commons reads.

WHereas Sir John Fenwick, Bart. was, upon the Oaths of George Porter, Esq; and Cordel Goodman, Gent. at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer held for the City of London, on the 28th Day of May, 1696. indicted of High Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of his Majesty, and adhering to his Enemies, by consulting and agreeing with several Persons (whereof some have been already Attainted, and others not yet brought to their Tryal for the said Treason) at several Meetings, to send Robert Charnock, since attainted and executed for High Treason, in conspiring to assassinate his Majesty's Sacred Person (whom God long preserve) to the late King James in France, to invite and incourage the French King to invade this Kingdom with an armed Force, by promising to joyn with and assist him with Men and Arms upon such Invasion. And whereas the said Sir John Fenwick did obtain his Majesty's Favour to have his Tryal delayed from Time to Time, upon his repeated Promises of making an ingenuous and full Confession of his Knowledge of any Design or Conspiracy against his Majesty's Person or Government, and of the Persons therein concerned. And whereas he has so far abused his Majesty's great Clemency and Indulgence therein, That instead of making such Confession he hath contrived and formed false and scandalous Papers as his Informations, reflecting on the Fidelity of several noble Peers, divers Members of the House of Commons, and others, only by Hearsay; and contriving thereby to undermine the Government, and create Jealousies between the King and his Subjects, and to stifle the real Conspiracy. And whereas Cordel Goodman, one of the Witnesses against the said Sir John Fenwick to prove the said Treason, lately and since the several Times appointed for the Tryal of the said Sir John Fenwick, at one of which Times the said Sir John Fenwick had been accordingly tryed, had it not been for the Expectation of the said Discoveries so often promised, is withdrawn; so that the said Cordel Goodman cannot be had to give Evidence upon any Tryal. Be it Enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That the said Sir John Fenwick is hereby Convicted and Attainted of High Treason, and shall suffer the Pains of Death, and incur all Forfeitures as a Person Attainted of High Treason.

is

Mr Speaker. Mr Serjeant Gould, the House expects from you, and Mr Serjeant Lovel, that you open the Evidence you have to prove the Suggestions of the Bill.

Mr Serjeant Gould. Mr Speaker, we are here in Obedience to your Commands to give an Account of the Charge, and likewise of the Evidence of the Fact, that is against this Gentleman, Sir John Fenwick. The Charge against Sir John Fenwick is for High Treason, and High Treason of the highest Degree; 'tis no less than a Design of deposing the King, and subverting the Government, and subjecting it to a French, arbitrary, and slavish Power. It further charges, That in prosecution of this Conspiracy he hath met together, with several others, who have consulted, consented, and agreed together, to bring in a French Army upon us; and in order to that, as a particular Overt-Act, it is charged, That they contrived to send one to the late King James to bring in a French Power upon us. It is charged likewise, That he conspired to levy War upon us, and for that Purpose did provide Pistols, and other warlike Arms. This I take to be the Substance of the Charge as laid in the Indictment.

Now, may it please you Mr. Speaker, as for the Evidence of the Fact charged and alledged in this Indictment: It is no Secret certainly to any at this Time of Day (after so many Tryals, so many Convictions, so many Attainders) that for some Years last past there hath been a wicked Conspiracy to bring in a French Power upon us, to subject this good Government, and to depose the King; but God Almighty, by special Providence, hath always prevented and disappointed them. We know ever since the Business of la Hogue (in which even by a Miracle, God disappointed them) they have been still restless, and have been industrious to set up again this Design; and for this have plotted to bring in a French Power, and have not had any regard to the King's Mercy shewed to them, and that in passing several Acts of Parliament, but have still persisted in the same Designs.

As to the Charge upon this Gentleman at the Bar, we shall shew you that in Time: In the Year 1694, for several Months there was a Conspiracy carried on, but did not take Effect; afterwards, in Time, I think the Beginning of June, or latter End of May, there were several Consults, or Meetings, at the King's Head Tavern at the upper End of Leadenhall-street, where this Gentleman that now stands charged at the Bar was present; there was several Gentlemen, and among the Rest (as it hath and will appear upon Evidence) there was Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, and several others, whereof Captain Porter and Goodman were there likewise present: It was then proposed, That one Charnock (since executed, and agreed upon by all to be present) should go over into France to the late King James, to communicate to him their Resolution and Sincerity in being serviceable to him in levying War here to depose the King, and subvert the Government; who was to interceed with the French King, so that there might be Forces sent from France. But after this Charnock (present still this Gentleman) comes and proposes this Thing again, and tryed whether they were sincere and real in their former Resolutions: To which they all replied, and did agree and assent, That it should be done, and they were very zealous in the Matter, and the Forces were at that Time proposed. And what was that? Why truly, no less than 8000 Foot, and 2000 Dragoons of French, with an Assurance of 2000 Horse from this Country. Charnock did go into France, and did communicate this Matter; and after he had communicated this Matter he came back, and brought Answer, That King James had endeavoured to answer their Expectations, but at that Time the French King could not spare his Forces, but however returned his Thanks to them.

This passed on till towards Christmas last; then comes over Sir George Barclay upon this Expedition, and there was a Commission prepared for that Purpose: And as to one Part, he brought along with him a Detachment of some of King James's Guards, who was to assassinate the King. The next Part was for raising a Rebellion; now that fell to Sir John Fenwick's Part: As to the assassinating Part, you have had several Examples made already: This we have Evidence to prove, and if we prove this Matter as we have opened it, then I think there is no Person whatsoever, but will agree that this is High Treason in the highest Degree. Now, Sir, here stands our Matter: Here was an Indictment found according to the Law you made last Sessions of Parliament, by two Witnesses, to one Species of Treason against Sir John Fenwick; we have one of these Witnesses here viva voce: But Sir John Fenwick hath protracted his Tryal by frequent Assurances of making a Discovery, which hath terminated in what you have already mentioned in your Bill; by Means of which, Sir John Fenwick hath not been Try'd; whereas he had been Try'd in course, without these Applications, and found guilty: But now he hath had all this Time, that Goodman is withdrawn is plain, and we think (but that we must leave to the Judgment of this Honourable House) may be reasonably supposed, by Contrivance, to take off this Prosecution of Sir John Fenwick. For why? The Inference is from a Fact that we shall prove to this Honourable House: There hath been the like Attempt upon Captain Porter, but Captain Porter hath been more stedfast; he hath been so resolved, that he stood his Ground; and, to speak the Truth, notwithstanding he hath been highly attempted: For we shall prove to you, that one Clancy comes to Captain Porter, and tempts him to withdraw into France, with Assurance of a Pardon, and he hath Three Hundred Pounds paid him in Hand, and Three Hundred more he was to be paid when he should come into France, to be remitted by Bills of Exchange: Besides, he was to have 300 l. a Year; 100 l. from my Lord Aylesbury, 100 l. from my Lord Montgomery, and the other 100 l. a Year from Sir John Fenwick, and this to be an Annuity during his Life; and thus far we suspect Sir John Fenwick may be concerned; for his

Lady

Lady came (he did not come Perſonally, but his Lady did) and gave her Honour and Aſſurance, that it ſhould be all performed, and much more, if he would withdraw himſelf.

Captain Porter preſently made a Diſcovery of this, and takes the 300 l. which was paid down; upon this it hath been ſo far proceeded, that Clancy hath been Indicted for it, and Convicted, and hath received Judgment, and I ſuppoſe there hath been Execution: We have the Record of all theſe Proceedings.

We have this Circumſtance farther in the Caſe (which it is my Duty to open to this Houſe) to ſhew what Labour there hath been to ſtifle the Truth of the Fact, upon taking off Sir John Fenwick: There was one Webber taken with him, and he ſlid a Letter into one Fowl's Hand, and this was to be ſent to my Lady Fenwick; and what is the Import of this Letter? The Import of it is (they could not prevail with Porter, as I opened juſt now, therefore) you muſt influence the Jury, get two or three ſtout Jury-men to ſtarve the Reſt, for we have nothing elſe to depend upon: Theſe Things we ſhall humbly offer to prove according to our Duty, and according to the Order of this Houſe, and then leave Sir John Fenwick to make his Defence.

Mr. Recorder. Sir, In what I ſay, I ſhall endeavour, as I ought to do, to purſue the Method of this Bill: And firſt, I will take notice, That it is the Pleaſure and Direction of this Houſe, that we ſhould attend this Houſe this Day, to produce the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick.

The Crime for which he ſtands indicted is High Treaſon: I preſume the learned Gentlemen on the other Side will not deny, but that the Compaſſing and Conſpiring the Death and Deſtruction of the King, is High Treaſon; and that to endeavour it, or ſhew it by an Overt-Act, to cauſe a foreign Power to invade the Realm, or to hold Correſpondence, or adhere to the King's Enemies, is likewiſe High Treaſon; and therefore I ſhall not trouble the Houſe to ſay any Thing to it one Way or another, becauſe I believe they will not deny it.

In the next Place the Bill does take notice, That Sir John Fenwick hath been Indicted at the Old Baily in May 1696. Sir, by the Law of this Houſe of Parliament made laſt Seſſions, no Man ought to be Indicted of High Treaſon without two Witneſſes; purſuant to that Law, Sir John Fenwick hath been Indicted upon the Oaths of two Witneſſes, Captain Porter (whom we have here) and Goodman (whom we then had) and he did Swear; and upon the Evidence of theſe two Witneſſes the Jury found the Bill.

We have this farther Matter: For before the Time the Bill was preſented to the Grand Jury, there was an Examination taken both of Porter and Goodman in Writing, and I think it was before a worthy Member of this Houſe, to whom I appeal in this Caſe, and in thoſe Informations (if I miſtake not) the ſame Informations they gave againſt Sir John Fenwick, as they gave againſt Mr. Cook; and upon the Tryal of Cook they were Sworn, and did juſtify and verify the Informations they gave before: And then, if you pleaſe, we ſhall call Witneſſes to prove, That upon the Tryal of Cook, Porter and Goodman gave that Evidence that did equally affect Sir John Fenwick (for he was then withdrawn, and could not be taken) and the Evidence was, that Cook, Sir John Fenwick, with my Lord Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Charnock, Goodman and Porter, were all together at a Conſult eſpecially appointed for the carrying on theſe traiterous Purpoſes; they gave the Court a great deal of Trouble, whether Goodman was there at that Time, and they did call ſome Servants of the Houſe that did prevaricate, but the Court was throughly ſatisfied, and it hath appeared more plainly ſince, that they did abuſe the Juſtice of the Court, for that Goodman was undoubtedly there. Sir, Cook upon the Tryal was convicted, and had Judgment of Death. And, Sir, he is Attainted, but it does not become me to ſay, Why he is not Executed? His Majeſty, no doubt, hath great Reaſon for it. But this I may ſay, being preſent at the Tryal, nothing was made more plain; and Sir John Fenwick appeared to be equally concerned.

To ſhew Sir John Fenwick is guilty, I crave leave to add this, he did withdraw himſelf, and fled, and was enquired after with Diligence; and at laſt he was found.

We ſhall make good all we have with, by Evidence (we hope) to the Satisfaction of this Houſe.

Mr. Speaker, if you pleaſe, Mr. Baker, that is Sollicitor for the King in this Caſe, does attend at the Door with all the Papers; we deſire that he may be let in.

Mr. Speaker. Serjeant, call in Mr. Baker, (which was done.)

Mr. Speaker. What do you call Mr. Baker for?

Mr. Serjeant Gould. To give an Account of this Indictment, for we have a true Copy from the Record.

Sir Thomas Powys. Mr. Speaker, ſince I am here aſſigned Council for the Priſoner, by the Allowance of this Honourable Houſe, upon his Application, without my Privity, I crave leave humbly to acquaint you, in behalf of my Client; I take it for granted, that he is, I am ſure we that are Council for him are, a little ſurpriſed in what the King's Council are going about; for in Truth, we were not aware, nor do we find that any Notice was given to the Gentleman at the Bar, that there would be any Proceeding againſt him by examining of Witneſſes, or giving of Evidence; he had (it ſeems) the Vote of the Houſe ſent to him, and likewiſe a Copy of the Bill; but I could not underſtand that the Houſe had given Notice that he ſhould be prepared by Witneſſes, if he had any, or be at Liberty to produce them. Nor was there the leaſt Notice to him, that there would be a Proceeding againſt him by Way of giving Evidence. He did, as I find, humbly apply himſelf, by Petition, That he might be heard by Council, againſt the Paſſing of the Bill, and I ſhall very carefully obſerve thoſe Directions you gave us, which I hope we ſhould not have ſtood in need of, but have behaved our ſelves as becomes us, and not have drawn in Queſtion the Power of Parliaments: I never had a Thought to do ſuch a Thing; but this I humbly lay before you for your Conſideration, Whether, without any Sort of Notice, that I perceive, he had from this Houſe to make his Defence to any Evidence, and conſequently there could be no need of Witneſſes on his Behalf, whether you will ſo proceed, unleſs he had had Forewarning to provide himſelf otherwiſe than by the printed Votes, which (I ſuppoſe) he had no Opportunity of ſeeing? And, Whether, within the Words you are pleaſed to acquaint us with, we may be heard, as to the Reaſonableneſs ſonableneſs of this Proceeding, that by and by we muſt crave leave to ſpeak unto.

Mr Speak. Sir John Fenwick did Petition, it is true, That he might be heard by Council at the Bar againſt Paſſing the Bill; but he likewiſe Petitioned for Council and a Sollicitor, and the Anſwer from the Houſe was, That he ſhould be allowed Council to make his Defence.

Sir Tho. Powys. Yes, Sir, I have ſeen the Order of the Houſe; and truly there did not any Thing occur from it to me, That it ſhould be expected that he ſhould produce Witneſſes, for he Praying that he might be heard againſt Paſſing of the Bill, and the Order of the Houſe being that he might have Council for making of his Defence, I did not apprehend that it impowered us ſo to be prepared as to bring Witneſſes, eſpecially there being no Notice given to him to bring Witneſſes, nor no Way for him to compel them to come here.

Sir Bart. Shower. Mr Speaker, we do acknowledge that we are ſo far ready as to offer ſome Conſiderations againſt the Reaſonableneſs of the Bill, not againſt ſuch a Bill in general, but againſt Sir John Fenwick in particular, and upon thoſe Suggeſtions in the Bill; but in Reſpect of his making his Defence againſt Matter of Fact, and to anſwer the Charge of the Bar, we are not ready. The firſt Time we had Notice that Sir John Fenwick ſhould attend, or be brought to the Bar, was laſt Night at Nine or Ten a Clock at Night; 'tis true, the Order ſaid the King's Council ſhould produce Evidence for the Bill upon this Day; but it was not Ordered that there ſhould be Evidence produced for Sir John Fenwick, or at that Time that he ſhould be Perſonally preſent: We are ready, with Submiſſion, to offer what we have to ſay againſt the Paſſing of this Bill, upon the Suggeſtions made in the Bill, as Sir John Fenwick's Caſe is there repreſented; but to anſwer them in Reſpect of Truth or Falſehood, that we are not prepared to do; whether you will hear them to that, before you have heard us, in the other Particular, that we ſubmit to you.

Note, This Order was made the Day before at the riſing of the Houſe.

Mr Speaker. Sir, you had Notice on Wedneſday laſt, that Sir John Fenwick ſhould have Liberty to make his Defence by Council; and if you had doubted whether he ſhould be admitted to do it by Witneſſes, you might have applied to have known the Pleaſure of the Houſe: But if that be what you ſtand upon, if you will withdraw, you ſhall know the Pleaſure of the Houſe.

Mr Serj. Gould. I muſt confeſs we depended on it, and expected no other Thing than the Bar Evidence. This was our Order, and I apprehended that the Petition meant the ſame Thing; For, as I remember, it was an Order likewiſe that the King's Council ſhould produce the King's Evidence: What Reaſon was there for that Evidence, unleſs Sir John was to apply himſelf to anſwer it?

Mr Recorder. I beg your Leave to obſerve with what Reaſon the Council on the other Side make this Objection; when 'tis the Import of this Bill, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High Treaſon: And your Order ſays, They are to be heard againſt the Bill, that is to ſay, They are to be heard againſt the High Treaſon charged upon him by this Bill. Therefore the Houſe did direct us to produce the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, to verify the Suggeſtions of this Bill: And ſo I cannot apprehend what can be more proper at this Time, but to prove the Fact againſt Sir John Fenwick; and 'tis their Buſineſs to defend it as well as they can.

Sir Tho. Powys. What was ſaid by the Learned Gentleman on the other Side, I hope, will be ſome Reaſon why we might be of Opinion, that we ſhould not have Occaſion to produce Witneſſes: And the Truth is, This Bill does no where ſo much as ſay, Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High Treaſon; and therefore Mr Recorder was under ſome Miſtake, when he ſaid the Bill charged that he was guilty. The Bill does not any where make ſuch an Allegation; there is nothing but a Recital that he was Indicted for ſuch a Treaſon; and then it recites, That whereas he had protracted his Tryal by ſuch Means, and Goodman had withdrawn himſelf, (but it does not ſay with his Privity;) and then follows the Enacting Part, Be it Enacted, &c. So that there is no ſuch Thing as any Allegation that he is guilty. Whereby we could imagine that that was the Fact or Queſtion between us. We now offer theſe Things humbly to you, and ſhall readily ſubmit to what you think fit to do in it.

Mr Recorder. Sir Tho. Powys ſays, That Sir John Fenwick is not charged with his doing any Act, or being guilty of High Treaſon; but the Bill takes Notice that he ſtands Indicted for it: Then it will be enough for us to prove, that he ſtands Indicted, unleſs the Houſe think fit to let us go into the Evidence of his being guilty.

Sir B. Shower. We do not oppoſe the producing Evidence to prove the Suggeſtions of the Bill, and the Recitals of the Bill ſpecified: But if they attempt to prove him actually guilty, by living Witneſſes, as they have opened it here, that we humbly beg Leave to oppoſe. But if they think fit to prove the Suggeſtions of the Bill, That there was an Indictment, that there were Witneſſes ſworn, and one is withdrawn, and the Promiſes of making Confeſſion, and his Prevaricating in that Matter, we are ready to make our Defence to that.

Mr Speaker. Gentlemen, you muſt withdraw before you have the Directions of the Houſe.

Accordingly Sir John Fenwick, and the Council of both Sides, withdrew.

And being withdrawn.

Mr Speaker. Gentlemen, you have heard what is ſtood upon by the Council for Sir John Fenwick: They ſay, if you call only Evidence to prove the Suggeſtions of the Bill, they are ready to anſwer them; but if you call any Evidence to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of a Conſpiracy, by living Witneſſes, they pretend they are not ready, and ſay, They did not know they ſhould be allowed Liberty to produce any Witneſſes.

Sir Tho. Littleton. Mr Speaker, the Council could not think that the Bill ſhould ſet forth that Sir John Fenwick was Indicted, but that the Houſe would know by what Means; and that Goodman was gone away, and we ſhould not enquire by what Means. What are the Objections by the Council againſt the Bill? Say they, We are ready to give Reaſons againſt the Bill; they do not ſay down-right againſt your Juriſdiction: But, ſay they, we are ready to ſhew 'tis not reaſonable in this this Caſe, as ſtands Circumſtances, to paſs this Bill: Sir John's Petition was to be heard downright againſt the Bill. If that was your Intention to hear him to that, and to that only, I conceive you would not have worded your Anſwer as you did: You ordered him Council to make his Defence, and at the ſame Time ordered the King's Council to produce the Evidence; How could they underſtand it, but to make Defence to the Evidence; It may be they have a Mind to have another Fee; whether you will think fit, in the Circumſtances you ſtand, to give them further Time I do not know: But the Circumſtances of the Kingdom, and King's Life, muſt be conſidered as well as Sir John Fenwick. What is the Meaning that they are not prepared? I ſuppoſe it is to have further Time; but I think your Order is ſo plainly worded that they could not ignorantly miſtake it.

Lord Norryes. I riſe up to the Matter of Fact; that Gentleman tells you your Order is plainly worded; 'tis ſo, if they had timely Notice of it: But the Council at the Bar tell you, they had no Notice of this Order till Ten a-Clock laſt Night.

Mr Speaker. That noble Lord does miſtake; for that which they ſay they had no Notice of till laſt Night, was, That Sir John Fenwick ſhould be brought hither; but the Notice that he ſhould be heard by his Council for his Defence was ſent him the Day before.

Lord Norryes. This very Order, for his Majeſty's Council to produce the Evidence, was made but upon Thurſday.

Mr Speaker. Then I miſtake. But the Order that was made upon his Petition I ſent away immediately: But the Order they mean, I ſuppoſe, is that for bringing him hither.

Mr Cooper. Say the Council for Sir John Fenwick, We come prepared to make Defence to every Thing charged in the Preamble of the Bill, but what is not charged, we do not come prepared to make Defence to. Now they conceive the Fact of High Treaſon is not charged upon him by the Bill, and if true, it is of great Weight; but as it is, 'tis none: For firſt, 'tis plain, the Preamble recites that he was Indicted for High Treaſon by the Grand Jury, That is a Charge of High Treaſon within the Bill; for it ſays, he was Charged by the Oaths of his Country upon the Oaths of two Witneſſes, and there is the very Overt-Act recited in the Preamble of the Bill. Now, allowing this its due Weight, Can any one think that ſits here as a private Judge, That the High Treaſon thus recited, as found by the Grand Jury, was no Part of his Charge? The very Nature of the Bill ſpeaks; for could any one think, That you would ground a Bill of Attainder upon a Suggeſtion, that he being Indicted of High Treaſon had ſpirited away one of the King's Evidence, or for giving falſe Information? So that this is Trifling with the Houſe, with Submiſſion.

Sir Rich. Temple. Can any Body ſay any Thing of the Intention of the Houſe, when 'tis reduced into a Bill? Is it not the Bill that he is to make his Defence to? And the Gentleman that ſpake, ſays, That no Body could think otherwiſe: Why, Sir, no Body is to think otherwiſe than the Bill ſtates it.

Now the Thing before you is, Whether upon the Suggeſtions of this Bill 'tis fit for you to paſs it? The Caſe of Mortimer was, That he had made his Eſcape, being under an Indictment of High Treaſon, and it came before the Houſe, Whether upon the Statute of 25 E. 3. it was High Treaſon: But they did not debate the Fact.

Now you have brought a Bill here, and all the Ground is, That he was Indicted for High Treaſon, had thus and thus prevaricated and delay'd his Tryal, upon Promiſes of Confeſſion, and in Concluſion one of the Witneſſes is withdrawn: Sir, no Man is to make his Defence but to what is in the Bill; nor can you examine to any Thing but what is ſuggeſted in the Bill. If you had put the Iſſue upon the Guilt of Sir John Fenwick, he muſt have a fair Tryal in ſome Place, and that he can't have here upon Oath; for upon all Bills of Attainders they have had a fair Tryal above.

Mr Smith. I always thought when a Bill of Attainder was to paſs through this Houſe, That every Man was concerned to hear what Evidence he could, to make it appear whether the Perſon was guilty of the Facts that were alledged againſt him to condemn him for; and, I take it, the principal Thing to be conſidered is, Whether he be guilty of ſuch a Crime as deſerves ſuch a Puniſhment. So that, I take it, the Queſtion now is, Whether Sir John Fenwick hath had that Notice to produce his Evidence as is convenient? For I think we ſhould loſe Time to let Council ramble upon the Reaſonableneſs of our Proceedings; the Queſtion is, Whether he is guilty of the Fact? Sir, I can never think the Council could underſtand your Order, when it ſays to make his Defence, but it muſt be to the Fact upon which he is to be condemned. You have already determined that Point, as to his Prevaricating, but that is not the Matter that ſhall make me find him guilty; but the Evidence that will weigh with me is the Evidence of High Treaſon, and how far they can anſwer it.

Mr Hooper. The Queſtion is, Whether or no there be a ſufficient Guilt laid to this Man's Charge? For in all Courts of Judicature this is a certain Rule, You muſt proceed Secundum Allegata & Probata; and you ſhall not go about to prove a Thing unleſs it be alledged. Now the Queſtion is, Whether this Thing be alledged in the whole Bill, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High Treaſon? And if not, you will go about to prove what is not alledged. 'Tis true, it hath been alledged that a Bill hath been found; but ſeveral have been Indicted who have been acquitted. It is poſſible the Priſoner at the Bar may be guilty; but I think we muſt obſerve that Method here, that is obſerved every where elſe, and that is not to go about to prove any Thing that is not alledged.

Mr Clerk. The Learned Gentleman hath made an Objection that perhaps would hold very well in Weſtminſter Hall: But I ſuppoſe he may remember this Bill muſt have a ſecond Reading before you, as a Houſe; and then perhaps the Allegations may be different from what they are now. But the principal Matter before you is, Whether this Gentleman be guilty of High Treaſon, or no? And if they did not prepare to that Part, I think they were negligent to their Client; for it appears to be that Part that is moſt ſenſibly like to affect him.

Mr Howe. The more I hear the Matter debated, the more it ſeems ſtrange to me. I have heard the Bill read, and took Notice of the Heads of it: I always underſtood the Preamble of of the Bill to be the Inducement to the End of it; I was mightily ſurprized to hear the King's Council attempt to make good —— I think they did not ſpeak materially to one Point of the Allegations in the Bill, ſo that the Allegations do ſignify nothing: Or elſe, if they intended theſe Allegations ſhould ſignify any Thing, we muſt have theſe Allegations proved before we paſs our Judgments upon the Bill. Whereas the Council, inſtead of endeavouring to prove that he was Indicted for High Treaſon, (though hinted at) would prove him guilty of High Treaſon; inſtead of proving that he had prevaricated, they ſay not one Word of it; inſtead of proving that he has forged Papers, in Order to alienate the Minds of the King's Subjects, they ſay nothing to it, tho' in the Bill it is alledged as High Treaſon.

We muſt not go here upon private Fancies and Opinions; no Man that heard my Lord Delamare's Tryal but believed him to be guilty of the Fact, yet he was acquitted, becauſe there was not Evidence ſufficient againſt him. I think you muſt ſtick to one of theſe Points; if you ſtick to this, to prove him guilty of High Treaſon, you muſt alter the Bill; and then that muſt be proved out of the Mouths of two Witneſſes. If you pleaſe to ſtick to the Bill, then I hope the King's Council will go on to prove the Allegations of it, or let us know why they do not: I ſhall no more give my Vote to hang him, becauſe he is Indicted of High Treaſon, than I ſhall becauſe he hath been in Newgate.

Mr Sloane. I think a great deal of your Time in Debating this Matter may be ſaved; though I will allow the Bill might have been drawn better, and that a Bar Indictment is not a ſufficient Ground of it ſelf for a final Deciſion of this Matter: But when at the Time of the finding the Indictment there was two Witneſſes, and one of them is withdrawn, and as is ſuppoſed by his Means; if the Bill ſeems imperfect, for any Thing before you now, you will not ſtay all the Proceedings upon it; but if you ſee it imperfect, and it may be amended, you will amend it at the Committee. I think the Favour you have given is abuſed, and that 'tis perfect trifling from the Bar. In one Breath they ſay, They could not get ready, for they had no Notice till laſt Night; and in the next Place they ſay, They will go on to every Thing but his being guilty; and I believe they never will be prepared for that.

Mr Att. Gen. Sir, I am very unwilling to ſpeak any Thing in this Matter; becauſe, Sir, by the Place I have the Honour to ſerve his Majeſty in, as one of his Council, if it was in the Courts below, I muſt proſecute on behalf of the King: But I am very ſenſible, while I am in this Houſe, I am in another Capacity; I am to vote here as a Judge, and not as a Party.

That which I do now trouble you about, is in Relation to the Matter that hath been objected; That the Bill does not expreſly affirm, that Sir John Fenwick was guilty of High Treaſon, but only that he was Indicted for it: Truly I thought, and do ſtill, with humble Submiſſion to the Houſe, That that Matter of affirming him to be guilty of High Treaſon was not to be inſerted in the Bill; for that will be the Conſequence of your Judgment, and Opinion, upon hearing of the Evidence. That worthy Member that ſpake laſt ſaid, the Bill might be better drawn; I am ſorry we had not his Aſſiſtance in it: But with Submiſſion to his Underſtanding, I think that had been too much Preſumption, 'till you are ſatisfied whether he was guilty or no. We could only go ſo far as to ſet forth the Faults that we knew; as that he was Indicted that we can verify, and can't take this to be like the Caſe of an Indictment; for there you muſt affirm ſuch and ſuch Things that cannot be altered afterwards: But a Bill in Parliament hath many Steps, you read it ſeveral Times, and commit it; ſo that you alter the Suggeſtions of the Bill as the Caſe appears to you to be verify'd; and if you be of Opinion that he is not guilty, you will not condemn him becauſe he is Indicted: However that is not unmaterial, but proper to be ſet forth for a Ground of your Proceedings, That there was a Probability of his being guilty from that Accuſation. Therefore, Sir, I confeſs, I can't think that thoſe Gentlemen that are Council for Sir John Fenwick could think, that you did intend to proceed otherwiſe than to hear Council as to the Fact; they could not think that upon Proof of his being Indicted, that that would be Ground enough for you to proceed to paſs the Bill: For how could any Body think, but you would come to examine the Fact? I can't ſee how they ſhould come to miſtake, unleſs 'twas wilfully.

Mr Price. The Matter now debated, is, What Method ſhall be followed, or what Evidence ſhall be given upon this Bill, or whether Evidence ſhall be given of any other Matter than is ſuggeſted in the Bill; I muſt confeſs, making a falſe Step at firſt ſetting out, hath put us out of the Way hitherto: For in the Caſe of my Lord Strafford Witneſſes were examined, and Adjudication that he was guilty, before any Order for a Bill of Attainder; but ſince you are in this Way, conſider whether the Council againſt the Bill have gone according to their Order: The Order was, That Council ſhould be heard to prove the Suggeſtions of the Bill, and the Council for Sir John Fenwick do not oppoſe that, but the Council for the Bill open more Things than are comprehended in the Suggeſtions of the Bill; for the Suggeſtion is only a Recital, and hath no poſitive Averment. And though the Bill and an Indictment is not the ſame, yet they muſt be the ſame in this, to put a Charge upon the Perſon; if the Preamble is not to any Purpoſe, What need they have made any? but have ſaid only, Let him be attainted: To what Purpoſe does Sir John Fenwick come to the Bar? If it is to any Purpoſe, 'tis to anſwer the Charge of the Bill. That learned Perſon ſays, to ſuggeſt that he is guilty till the Matter is proved, then there muſt be an Amendment in that Point, and that will make it a new Bill, and then he muſt have another Day to anſwer the new Charge: But they might as well have ſaid he was guilty of High Treaſon, as to ſay in the Enacting Part, that he ſhould be attainted. Therefore if the Gentlemen for the Bill, will proceed and prove the Preamble of the Bill, let them; otherwiſe let there be another Day for Sir John Fenwick to attend, and let them do all together.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave. I think as to that learned Perſon, nothing is to be laid to his Charge, for I think they have drawn the Bill purſuant to the Directions; and I am ſure if they had drawn it otherwiſe, before they had known the Senſe of the Houſe, I think they had been guilty of a Crime.

That which ſeems to be before you, is what was opened by the King's Council, and that was to prove the Treaſon. Now, Sir, I would be glad to know of any Perſon, Whether any Thing is to be admitted to be proved at your Bar but what is in your Bill? For let us have a little Regard to the Proceeding in Weſtminſter-Hall. Can any Perſon upon an Indictment of High Treaſon, offer Evidence of any Treaſon but what is expreſs'd in the Indictment? And I think this is the ſame in Effect; for here you draw a Bill of Attainder againſt Sir John Fenwick, and in Juſtice you ſend him a Copy of it, and with great Favour too, you allow him Council to defend himſelf to that, as to the Suggeſtions that are in the Bill; otherwiſe to what End did you ſend him the Copy of the Bill? Now if you will admit of any Thing to be proved but what is in your Bill, I know not of what dangerous Conſequence it may be, for 'tis impoſſible to be prepared to it.

Mr Sol. Gen. If the Council againſt the Bill could be any Way miſtaken, or think the Bill defective, I am for giving them longer Time to make their beſt Defence, but think neither one nor the other of them true; but your Order was to draw a Bill for Attainting Sir John Fenwick of High Treaſon, and I think if the Bill had gone no farther, but Enacted that he ſhould be Attainted of High Treaſon, we had ſtrictly purſued your Order, for the Preamble is no neceſſary Part of the Bill.

A Bill and an Indictment are of quite different Natures; there is a Form for an Indictment, but no Precedent for an Act of Parliament.

As to the Preamble, the Debate when it was Ordered went no farther than that he was accuſed of High Treaſon, and was like to have been brought to his Tryal, and to delay it he pretended to make an ingenuous Confeſſion, and inſtead of that, there was produced a Paper which you have cenſured (as you thought fit,) and upon that you voted a Bill to be brought in to Attaint him of High Treaſon; what then could be expected more for the Inducement, but the Debate upon which it was Ordered.

If this Houſe had thought fit to examine Witneſſes before, (as now) no Doubt but the Bill would have ſuggeſted that he was guilty of High Treaſon; but 'tis Time enough for you to ſuggeſt that, after you have heard what Witneſſes there are; if the Council did not know this, notwithſtanding all that I have ſaid I am for giving them Time, but (with Submiſſion) it was impoſſible for them to miſtake it; if the Bill had went no farther than, Be it Enacted, That he ſhould be Attainted of High Treaſon; then they had ſome Colour to ſay there were different Species of High Treaſon, and they could not tell to what particular Facts they muſt apply themſelves: But when the Indictment is recited, which charges him with particular Facts, and tells him by what Witneſſes the Bill was found, it was impoſſible not to know that this was the High Treaſon you did intend to Enact that he ſhould be Attainted for; but when they ſay they are not ready, truly there may be ſome Reaſon for it, for I believe they never will be ready; ſometimes Men will be wilfully miſtaken, and ſometimes 'tis their Misfortune to be ſo. They ſay they are miſtaken, which of theſe are true I know not, but we have ſeen already the Time when he hath trifled with the Courts of Juſtice, he hath delay'd his Tryal till one Witneſs is withdrawn; if you give him longer Time, he may have the good Fortune to have the other gone too; I ſee no Reaſon for you to forbear hearing of the Evidence.

Mr John Mountague. I am not ſurprized to hear Sir John Fenwick deſire Time, for giving him Time is giving him Life; nor for his Council to tell you his Witneſſes are not ready; 'tis a common Excuſe. I hardly ever knew a Perſon brought upon his Tryal, but that was his Excuſe; and yet I have ſeldom known it allow'd as a good Excuſe: But 'tis objected, you muſt go ſecundum allegat' & probat', and nothing being in this Bill like what the Council for the Bill did open, 'tis not fit to hear them call Witneſſes to what is not alledged in the Bill. I grant that; and yet I think they ought to be allowed to call Witneſſes to prove every Thing they have opened to you: 'Tis agreed they ought not to have brought in a Bill to ſay in point blank Terms, he is guilty of High Treaſon; but, they ſay, you ſhould have charged with what Treaſon he is accuſed of, and then they ſhould have been admitted to prove it. With Submiſſion, the Bill does that Thing; for the Bill does recite, That he is Indicted of High Treaſon in Compaſſing, &c. This is the Treaſon that is charged upon him by this very Bill: Now ſure you will permit them to prove what is alledged in the Bill; What did the Council for the Bill open? That at ſeveral Meetings they met to conſult of the Matter that this Bill takes Notice of: Did not he tell you when Charnock came firſt there for that Purpoſe, and when Charnock met them again for their Aſſurance? Now this being ſo plainly ſet forth in the Bill here, which recites that this Matter was proved by two Witneſſes, upon the Credit of whoſe Teſtimony this Matter was found, and that one of them is gone away; and ſay they now, we are ready to prove the Matter then ſworn: Is not that proper to ſatisfie Gentlemens Conſciences that won't convict this Man without Evidence?

Sir Franc. Winnington. Mr Speaker, I humbly conceive the Queſtion is not now, Whether Sir John Fenwick is guilty or no? But, Whether the Objections the Council for him have made, be ſo ſtrong as you will grant what they move to you? They tell you, if Council will proceed upon nothing but what is ſuggeſted in the Bill, according to your Order, we are ready to make our Defence. It was ſaid the King's Council was Ordered to give their Evidence, that can have no Interpretation but as to the Matters in the Bill.

Says the King's Council, We will prove him guilty; ſays the Council on the other Side, I hope the Houſe will give us Time to encounter them in that; for you have no ſuch Thing in the Bill; the ſending them the Copy of the Bill was as much as to ſay, you need not prove any Thing but what is therein aſſerted. 'Twas ſaid by the learned Gentlemen there, that there might have been an Act of Parliament which might have ſaid only, Be it Enacted, That ſuch a Man be Attainted, without giving any Reaſon. I cannot deny but it might be ſo without any Reaſon, but I don't believe it will be ſo. And another learned Perſon was for Mending of the Bill; ſays he, When you have the Matter of Fact proved before you, it may lead you to the amending of the Bill, and Inſerting what you pleaſe, and Enacting of it; but does that anſwer what the Council ſaid on the other Side? Would you have us anſwer what we did not know that you would ſtand upon? The Queſtion is not, whether he be guilty or no? But whether the Objections that are made be good to give them time?

Coll. Granvill. Sir, the Council (by what I obſerved from them) have ſtarted two Difficulties, and really (to me) both ſeem very material; the firſt is, Whether the King's Council ſhall be at liberty to prove any thing that is not ſuggeſted in the Bill: The other is, whether Sir J. Fenwick had due notice to make his Defence.

The firſt is a Matter of very great Moment; you are proceeding upon a Bill where not only the Life of Sir John Fenwick, but the Life of every Man in England is in ſome meaſure concerned; when a Precedent is made in this Caſe, no Body knows who may be affected or hurt by it, and therefore I deſire you will ſettle that Matter, and have the Judgment of the Houſe, whether they will admit the Council to prove any thing that is not ſuggeſted in the Bill; if you will, I do not ſee how any Man that ſtands at the Bar of your Houſe, can be prepared to make his Defence. For there ſhall be one Crime alledged in the Bill, and when he comes to the Bar, the Council that are to proſecute, ſhall go quite off from that which is laid in the Bill, and produce you Evidence to a new Crime; and he ſtares and looks round him, and you had as good allow him no Council, or Copy of the Bill. This you thought ſo neceſſary for every Man that was to come upon his Tryal for his Life for Treaſon, that you altered that Tryal, and declared no Man ſhould have any Treaſon proved againſt him that is not alledged againſt him in the Indictment.

We have had great Complaints of Weſtminſter-Hall, and if the Parliament ſhould proceed in this manner, may have the ſame again. If they are too raſh in their Proceedings, they will be countenanced mightily in them, if you ſhould proceed againſt a Man, and condemn him for one thing when he is accuſed of another; I deſire to know, how we can proceed in a Bill upon which Sir J. Fenwick is to be proved guilty, and he hath no Opportunity to anſwer it? I take it, as this Bill is drawn, Sir John Fenwick's Guilt is no way concerned in it: For whereas the worthy Gentlemen tell you the Treaſon is ſpecify'd, there is no Treaſon ſpecify'd, otherwiſe than he is Indicted for it.

Mr George Rodney Bridges. Sir, I think the proper Queſtion before you is, whether you will allow Sir J. Fenwick time to produce ſuch Witneſſes as he ſhall deſire for his Juſtification? 'Tis a little ſtrange to me, that the Gentlemen that are of Sir J. Fenwick's Council, ſhould inſiſt upon thoſe things, to deſire farther time for his Preparation; when (I think) 'tis very plain, they were told what they were to prepare for by the Bill, which was, they were to juſtifie Sir J. Fenwick againſt thoſe things he ſtands indicted for; and the Matter of the Indictment is the Thing to be proved before you, and the Witneſſes to make it good, are likewiſe mentioned; one of them is gone, but his Teſtimony remains upon Oath, not only to the Grand Jury, but in another place, that I am told of; I do not think you will think it reaſonable, after the King's Council have made out their Evidence, to give him time to make their Obſervations upon the Charge; ſo you will conſider before you hear the King's Council, whether you will allow him farther time, or no.

Sir Joſ. Williamſon. Mr Speaker, the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt, ſtates the Caſe to be, Whether you will think it reaſonable to allow Sir J. Fenwick farther time to produce his Witneſſes? You may, Sir, make that the Queſtion; but that will depend upon another, which is, Whether you think that Sir J. Fenwick had not notice enough to prepare to defend himſelf againſt the Charge contained in the Preamble of the Bill? And I add this further, Whether the Manner and Way of expreſſing that particular Charge in the Bill, is not ſo Worded, ſo Charged, as here expreſsly to become a Charge that he is to anſwer for; and not only as a Matter of Fact Hiſtorically related, not to come in Proof here: For if it proves to be well Charged in the Preamble, 'tis a particular Fact of Treaſon he is to anſwer for in this Houſe, and then he hath had time enough; ſo that now you are to judge of your own Way of expreſſing your ſelves. I believe every Gentleman knows it was the Senſe and Meaning of the Houſe, that thoſe are the particular Treaſons mentioned in the Indictment with which he ſhould be charged at the Bar, and have time and liberty to defend himſelf; and not only to the Allegations that he had been Indicted, &c. Now, Sir, if you ſhall allow theſe Gentlemen to except againſt your Way of expreſſing your ſelves, that I ſubmit to you: But 'tis clear to me, that this was a very good and proper Way of expreſſing your ſelves, to charge him with theſe Facts, and to give him Liberty to diſprove it. If he and his Council underſtood it otherwiſe, the Queſtion is, Whether their differing with you in the Way of expreſſing it ſhall be allowed to them, without taking a reaſonable Exception to it? You are ty'd here to the ſtrict Rules of Juſtice, but as to the Forms of Proceeding below, I don't think you are. Our Meaning was moſt certain (though he was indicted, that was nothing to us) that they ſhould bring their Proof to our Bar to prove him guilty; and if you ſhould give him two or three Days time, you muſt mend your Bill to their Way of Expreſſion, and to their Senſe.

Mr Brotherton. I take the Queſtion to be now, Whether the King's Council ſhould give Evidence of any other Matter than what is alledged in the Bill? As to that I muſt obſerve to you, that this Bill does not ſet forth any particular Charge againſt him; it does not ſay, that he ſuch a Day did ſuch a Fact, whereby he can make his Defence, 'tis only the Recital of an Indictment; and it does not ſay the particular Time and Place where the Fact was done. Now as to what that Gentleman ſays, if it had been ſaid generally, that he ſhould be attainted, it had been ſufficient. 22 H. 8. The Statute for attainting one for putting Poiſon into a Pot, &c. there is the Day and Year when the Fact was committed, and ſo he might make his Defence. Then the King's Council offer to prove, that this Goodman was conveyed away by Sir J. Fenwick, and there is no ſuch Charge in the Bill; for the Bill only ſays, that he is withdrawn; and I am of Opinion they ought to give Evidence of nothing but what is in the Bill.

Mr Whitaker. As to the Exceptions made by the Council to the Inſufficiency of the Bill, by which they pretend Sir J. Fenwick was lead into an Error, ſo that he had no due Notice, I muſt needs ſay, if they were in Weſtminſter-Hall they would be in the Right: but this Houſe is not bound to thoſe Forms; for I believe the Enacting Clauſe would do the Buſineſs of Sir J. Fenwick well enough, if all the reſt were laid aſide; and I will conſider it with as much Tenderneſs and Conſcience for the Priſoner at the Bar, as any that brings Arguments from Weſtminſter-Hall. I would conſider, Whether ſuch a Defence as they have made, that from the Bill (as to what is laid in it) he had not Notice enough to prepare to make his Anſwer: They ſay, a Recital is no direct Affirmation in Civil Matters; It is an Aſſimation. For to ſay, Whereas ſuch a one is Bound, is good in a Declaration upon a Bond. Now I would know, Whether this be not enough to ſay, that he is Indicted, without an Allegation that he is guilty? Had the Bill no recital at all, it had been an Objection; but it may be it had been ſuch an Objection, that they ought to have done ſomething of their Parts, as to have deſired the Opinion of the Houſe to what they ſhould have anſwered: For ſuppoſe there had been no Recital at all, (and you may make what Recital you think fit) what ſhould Sir J. Fenwick have done? There are ſome Inſtances at Common Law; A Man is indicted for being a common Barrater, and there are no Inſtances given in the Indictment; why then he comes and prays the Court, that they may declare what Inſtances they will give, and that they may give no other Words in Evidence: Therefore I queſtion not but that ſhou'd have come on his Part, he is to be heard as to the enacting Part of the Bill; and under Favour you could do no otherwiſe. Now if they do offer to give Evidence of any Treaſon that is not ſpecified in the Recital of the Bill, and the Council make an Objection to it, I ſhall agree with them.

Becauſe many Lords in the Gallery.

Sir Ed. Seymour. My Lords, and you Mr Speaker, what hath been ſaid to you by that worthy Perſon that ſpake laſt, no doubt is true; That if there had been no more than the enacting Clauſe, it would have done Sir J. Fenwick's Buſineſs with a Witneſs, or rather without a Witneſs: But that is not the Queſtion we are diſputing here; but the Queſtion is, whether you will give Sir J. Fenwick longer time to make his Defence to that Part he inſiſts on, that is not contained in the Bill. You are well ſatisfied that you can't go through with the Suggeſtions to Night, and the Debates, and what relates to it; and I find no Perſon againſt putting it off, but becauſe it would be a delay. and if it be no delay that Reaſon is out of Doors.

Paſt 3 a Clock.

They tell you the Council could not but take Notice of the Matters ſuggeſted in the Indictment: I cannot think that is reaſonably argued; becauſe they do know the Practice and Method is ſuch, That they can take Notice of nothing but what is ſpecified and contained in the Bill. And therefore there being no Guilt charged upon Sir J. Fenwick in the Bill, Is it reaſonable they ſhould come and accuſe themſelves here, or make a Defence to what is not Charged? No; but, ſay they, it is implied. This is an untrodden Path, and you ought to walk as ſecurely in it as you can. 'Tis extraordinary that you bring Sir J. Fenwick here to anſwer for Treaſon, when 'tis allowed in the Suggeſtions of the Bill; you have but one Witneſs to that Treaſon, and when you take theſe extraordinary Steps, you ſhould comply with him as much as you can in the Forms. For if Treaſon be not Treaſon unleſs it be proved by two Witneſſes, and you will give him Liberty to make his Defence, I think it no loſs of Time; for you can't go through the Bill to Night, to ſee whether Sir J. Fenwick be guilty of what is contained in the Indictment. And I will give you one Reaſon why he could not be prepared to make his Defence in ſo ſhort a Time, for he could not produce his Evidence if he had any; and if you give him longer time, I ſuppoſe you will think fit that Sir J. Fenwick ſhould give an Account of what Witneſſes he ſhall make uſe of for his Defence, and you will give an Order for thoſe Witneſſes.

Mr Harcourt. If Sir J. Fenwick's Buſineſs muſt be done, I hope we ſhall do it like rational Men, and what we Enact be able to give a reaſonable Account of it in the Preamble of the Bill.

As to the Queſtion propoſed, your Debates have run ſeveral Ways: The firſt is, Whether Sir J. Fenwick ſhall be allowed further Time? And in this Caſe, whoever I differ with, 'tis of that Nature that I muſt deſire the Liberty of ſpeaking my Mind. I muſt confeſs I ſee no Room for inlarging the Time, and I ſhall humbly ſubmit my Opinion to other Gentlemen, whether he ſhould have further Time to prepare his Witneſſes: And for that, pray conſider the Nature of the Matter before you.

Sir, there is nothing certain that is alledg'd in the Bill; and ſhould you allow him further time, to anſwer that which is not alledged, I can't imagine what Effect you would have of it. 'Tis ſaid indeed, he ſtands Indicted; but 'tis no where ſuggeſted, that he is guilty of that Indictment. This general Charge ſeems a great Hardſhip: There is no one Thing that ſo many have been unjuſtly taken off by, as the Uncertainty of alledging general Facts in Indictments of High-Treaſon; nor has any Thing been complained of in ſuch Trials for a greater Grievance. What have you done in the Bill for regulating of Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon? In that Bill you have reformed that Abuſe, and taken care, That whatever Treaſon a Man might be guilty of, yet he ſhall never upon his Indictment anſwer to any Fact, unleſs the particular Overt-Act be expreſsly laid and affirmed in his Indictment.

That which ſeems moſt reaſonable in this Caſe to be done, is not to inlarge the time; but when you think fitting to proceed, proceed upon what is before you. Here are ſome Matters expreſsly alledged; let them go over the Recital, ſee whether they can prove that; but I can't imagine to what purpoſe you ſhould give the Priſoner further time to anſwer nothing, for that which is not Charged is ſo.

Mr Finch. Mr Speaker, Sir, this is a Queſtion in my Opinion of very great Conſequence: You are very well told from below, that this is an untrodden Path, and I am the more confirmed 'tis ſo from this Debate.

We are told, That Sir J. Fenwick, or his Council, could not be ignorant of what they were to prepare themſelves for. For this was our Meaning, ſays one Gentleman, though I find the Path is ſo untrod we are very unfortunate in expreſſing of it; for we have not ſaid it at all in this Bill; we have ſaid, Sir J. Fenwick was indicted, &c. Sir J. Fenwick hath had a Copy of this Bill ſent him,

Coun-

Council allowed him, and upon a ſecond Reading he comes to make his Defence. We are told, the Proceeding upon this Bill is not to be reſembled to the Proceeding in Weſtminſter-Hall, and this is ſufficient in a Bill (though in an Indictment it would not) without alledging that Sir J. Fenwick is guilty. But one would think that if Sir J. Fenwick is guilty; every Allegation in the Bill, that is, the Inducement to the Bill which is for attainting him, ſhould be a good and juſt Ground for the Attainder; and then, this Gentleman that hath had a Copy of the Bill to prepare for his Defence, and ſhew you Reaſons why the Bill ſhould not paſs, though our Proceedings are not to be reſembled to the ordinary Proceedings, yet we are to expect from him ſuch a Defence as the ordinary Proceedings in Weſtminſter-Hall would require: But I think this is hardly to be expected; one might have thought, and reaſonably enough, that it might have come into his Imagination, that if there had been Ground to attaint him, by the ordinary Proceedings and Methods of Juſtice, the Parliament would not have taken an extraordinary Courſe to come at it: For I can never think it a good Reaſon to proceed this Way, that is, for the ſaving of Time; and if there be extraordinary they muſt gueſs at that out of the Bill: Now that is grounded upon thoſe Suggeſtions that I have cited; and then I ſhould have imagined, that whereas he had been indicted upon the Oaths of two Witneſſes, as the Law requires, and one of them was withdrawn; that you had rather intended to have charged him with ſome Contrivance to elude Juſtice, whereby you had reaſon to exert your extraordinary Authority to proceed againſt him by way of the Legiſlative; and I do not find we have any Precedent to warrant this Proceeding, though in our Debates we have endeavoured to find one; yet I can't but obſerve the Conſequence of this hereafter: For whether we can find a Precedent to warrant this Proceeding in former Ages, or not, we are making a Precedent for our Poſterity. And conſider the Conſequence of this Precedent you are making; I think all the Bills in Parliament are grounded by the moſt ſerious Ways of Deliberation, before you come to Judgment: And Bills of Attainder ought much more ſure to require the Seriouſneſs of your Debates; but I can't but obſerve the Steps now made; I am afraid there was a wrong Step at firſt; I was not here the firſt Day: But I recollect ſome Things from the Bill it ſelf; the tenderneſs of thoſe Things upon which this enacting Clauſe does ſtand. Here was no Evidence given to introduce the Houſe to bring in this Bill of Attainder; when this Bill is brought in the Houſe, and the Preamble, that ſuggeſts that which is the Ground of the Enacting Part conſidered in the Houſe; and the Houſe did not think it reaſonable to proceed to the Reading of it a ſecond time: I remember we were told, Won't you read it a ſecond time, when you may have an Opportunity of having thoſe Suggeſtions proved to you? This was the Ground why this Bill was read a ſecond time. For conſider, otherwiſe a Gentleman may in any other Caſe as well as this, deſire leave to bring in a Bill for attainting ſuch a one, and tell you, you ſhall have good Reaſon given to you for it afterwards; and though the Reaſons ſuggeſted in the Bill, are not ſufficient, you may have Reaſons out of the Bill that are ſufficient. What a Precedent will this be? Why Sir, length of Time gives a Sanction to thoſe Precedents which the Age that made them think not of; and they become good Examples to Poſterity, that were even very heinous Precedents to the preſent times. Now if this ſhall ſtand, as now in the Bill, I would ask what Man in England is ſecure when a Parliament ſhall ariſe that hath a Mind to attaint him? Why then, Sir, if you do amend the Bill, conſider the Method of your Proceedings; you do your ſelves, in effect, declare, That for bringing in of the Bill, for twice reading of the Bill, you had no Ground at all; for otherwiſe you had good Grounds recited in the Bill, and that muſt be a ſufficient Ground to attaint him; and if you declare it no ſufficient Ground to attaint him, you declare you have brought in a Bill, and read it twice, without any Ground. Whether you will allow liberty to offer at your Bar any Suggeſtions otherwiſe than in the Bill, that I muſt ſubmit to you; and for giving time, ſince that is a Queſtion of a very extraordinary Nature; but have humbly offered my Thoughts, whether any thing ſhall be offered otherwiſe than is ſuggeſted in the Preamble of the Bill? I hope you will not, for the Precedent ſake you are now making, which if you do, I am afraid Bills of Attainder may be come now as frequent as Bills of Attainder were in Richard the II. time, which I hope never ſhall be.

Lord Norreys. Mr Speaker, I will not pretend to tell you that you are bound by other Rules than Rules of Juſtice; but what is Juſtice in Weſtminſter-Hall, is ſo here, and every where. And laſt Year you thought it Juſtice that no Man ſhould be brought to a Trial, but he ſhould know what were the particular Facts that were alledged againſt him.

Lord Cutts. I think it, in ſome meaſure, a Misfortune, That a Matter of this Nature, as is your preſent Debate, hath held you ſo long; and conceive it a Thing to be wiſhed, that every Gentleman that ſpeaks upon this Occaſion, would apply himſelf more cloſely to Reality, and leſs to Forms; I mean to Forms conſidered meerly as Forms, for it ought to be true Reaſon that is convincing to you: And you ought not to tie your ſelves to any Forms upon this Occaſion, but ſuch as are grounded upon Reaſon; and really I have not heard any thing that fell from any Gentleman that ſhews his doubt of the Nature and aggravating Circumſtances of the Crime of the Priſoner; but it hath conſiſted with the great Candour and Juſtice of this Houſe, to ſhew this Favour to the Priſoner before you: The Council ſay, they are unprepared; if they mean they ſhould prepare themſelves for more grounds of Difference and Chicanry, I would not give them farther time; I can't perceive there is any reality of Argument in it, and there is in Reaſoning, as in Religion, ſometimes a Form without a Power.

Sir Tho. Dyke. Sir, you have now two or three Queſtions before you; I deſire you will confine our Debates to one Point; I think whatever Opinion Gentlemen may be of concerning the Proof, I think the Point under your Conſideration, if you will make a right Judgment, is the Preamble of your Bill, which I take to be the Foundation of it, and the Cauſe for which you attaint this Gentleman: Now the Preamble does not recite, and ſay, he is guilty, but only indicted, nor ſet forth any time; nay it does not ſay he was arraigned. So that theſe things are very uncertain, and yet you muſt attaint him for the Things recited recited in your Bill. And you know these Acts of Attainder are extraordinary Methods in Cases of Treason; and if you put it upon this Point, that the Act attaints him for one Thing, and the Council shall prove another, it makes it more uncertain than it is, and no Man can be safe; and therefore I hope you will confine the Council to Proofs of the Matter contained in the Bill.

Mr J. How. Sir, I shall not move you to any thing that may tend to a delay of the Matter before you: I think, if you please to go on upon the Matter suggested in the Bill, they are Allegations which must be proved before the Bill is committed, (and that will not hinder Sir J. Fenwick from being examined to the Treason likewise.) Therefore all that is alledged in this Bill, I suppose, being thought necessary to be proved, I desire he may be called in, and the Council may go on to prove what is alledg'd in the Bill, and afterwards Sir J. Fenwick may answer them.

Lord Coningsby. If the Question was, whether you should grant this Gentleman time or no to make his Defence, I should not have troubled you? But the Question now seems to be, whether the Bill does depend upon the bare Suggestions of the Bill, or upon the Guilt of Sir J. Fenwick? And therefore if Gentlemen do insist upon it that he should have longer time to defend himself, as to his being Innocent or Guilty, I shall not oppose it; but if you think fit to put it off, as if the Fate of the Bill did depend upon the Suggestions of it, I can't agree to that Matter; therefore I desire a short time may be given him to answer the Matter of his Guilt.

Mr Harley. I find all Gentlemen that speak of this Subject, do say this Matter is of a very extraordinary Nature, and you have entered into it by very extraordinary Methods: But I must only observe, that this being the first Bill of this kind that hath been brought into the House, before any Proof, Gentlemen must be excused if they are cautious what Steps they do take; and when the Wisdom of the House have thought fit to take quite different Methods, as to the Preliminaries, 'tis not to be wondered if they meet with difficulties in their Proceedings.

Some Gentlemen press for more Time to be given to Sir J. Fenwick to be prepared; and others urge, that you should declare, whether the Council should be heard to any Thing, but what is suggested in the Bill? And I think you must give a Determination to the last Question, though the whole House agreed to give him longer Time: For if you give him longer time, it will after come to the same Debate, whether they shall be heard to any Thing but what is suggested in the Bill? If you should think fit to add any Thing, then it will be reasonable that he also should be heard to that; for in the Case of the Death of a Man, let him deserve never so much, yet he does not deserve to die unjustly by your Hands.

It seems a very plain Proposition, that when a Man is accused, he should not answer to what he is not charged with; and to charge it with Innuendo's and Implications is so uncertain, that as I always have seen it denied in this House, so I hope I shall not see so great an Assembly give any Countenance to it. They did tell you, they were prepared to speak to the Reasonableness of the Bill; but this Matter not being suggested in the Bill, they are not prepared to speak to it.

Sir Tho. Littleton. I see now where your Debates have led you: I thought the regular Subject of our Debates had been the Point upon which the Council withdrew; and that was for Time. For what? Why, to prepare themselves to answer any Evidence that might be given against them; because they perceived you did expect the Council for the Bill should produce their Evidence. But they made an Objection; say they, we did not understand your Order was, that we should come prepared to oppose any Testimony Vivâ Voce to be given against us, but only prepared to speak to the Reasonableness of the Bill. Now, Gentlemen, after five or six Hours Debates, have been willing to accommodate the Matter (that no Body might think that any one pressed a Matter unreasonable) that they might have time: But some Gentlemen will not be satisfied with granting what the Council desired, but they desire more. And what is that? Why, that is to know the Opinion of the House, whether you will admit any one Thing to be proved that is not suggested in the Bill? And I do take this to be within the Suggestions of the Bill as fully as can be expressed. For what does the Bill say? The Bill does say, he was indicted of High-Treason, and that one of the Witnesses are gone: And, Gentlemen come to the Conclusion, and skip over the intermediate Part of the Bill; for the Bill does say, that he did incite and consult, &c. And the Objection of the Council was not against the Evidence; but they said, they were not prepared at that time to answer it, and there they leave it; and thereupon the House go on upon the Debates. What can we expect that they intended? They might think, either we shall gain our Point, and the House will give us time; or otherwise, if they go on, and hear this Evidence, then we say we wanted time. And that will be only Evidence ex Parte, and not carry so much Weight with it, though we have nothing to say to it; or they might think it may have this Effect, that the House will not go on, and hear any Evidence at all; in either of these Cases, we have the fairest Advantage that we can have, on the second reading of the Bill, in defence of our Client: All they desired was, that they might have time; and I hope that which satisfied them that are most concerned, may satisfy any Gentleman of the House.

Mr J. Howe. The Question is not, what they asked? But what is reasonable for us to grant? I was in the Beginning against any Delay and I think there is no occasion of Delay; All I desire is, Sir, That the King's Council may be desired to prove the Suggestions of the Bill ex Toto.

Mr Soll. Gen. Most that have spake of this Matter have said, that the Matter is very generally laid in this Bill, and the Council could not very well know to what to apply themselves: That it speaks of High-Treason in general, and of Aiding the King's Enemies, which is very general: It recites that indeed; but the Indictment is legal, according to the late Act of Parliament. 'Tis not only said, that he designed the Death of the King, but for that Purpose, he, and others, met together and agreed to send Charnock to France, to go to King James, to induce the

French

French King with an Armed Power to invade England. Now how can any thing be more particularly charged? And the Indictment is so charged in your Bill. I think therefore the Council could not be ignorant to what they ought to apply themselves: But by what I perceive, Gentlemen are very well contented to give him further time. I remember, when the Bill was first brought in, there was a long Debate for a second Reading; and some Gentlemen thought it hard to be tried by so great an Assembly, and said, they had rather be tried by a fewer Number: But I shall observe, that you have sent the Copy of the Bill to Sir J. Fenwick before hand, and you sent him Notice that he should provide himself. But I remember a much better Man than Sir J. Fenwick, who had the Misfortune to be under an Accusati- of High-Treason, had his Indictment one Hour, and was tried the next; and though he pleaded to have his Trial put off till the Afternoon, he could not prevail with the Court of Justice to do it. Sir John Fenwick hath had a Copy of his Bill for two or three Days, but he never had any Copy till he had pleaded.

Mr Waller. I stand up only for my Information; that which I would know is, whether the Council did not ask you the Question, whether they should be bound to answer any thing that is not in the Bill? If they asked that, then the Gentleman that spake here is answered; and the Gentlemen of the House do not insist upon what Sir J. Fenwick's Council did not insist on. And I do think the King's Serjeant, who opened the Proceedings, after he had opened what had been before the Grand Jury, seemed to make it a Charge, as if Sir J Fenwick had been condescending to the withdrawing of Goodman. Now that seemed, as if they designed to make that a Part of the Evidence.

Sir Richard Temple. The Council did not insist upon it only to answer the Suggestions of the Bill: Every Body knows, they objected to the others going on with the Evidence they opened, because it was not in the Bill; and the King's Council could not so much as alledge, that it was in the Bill; and they would have gone on to have proved the Indictment. There is another Thing: It is told you as if the Preamble had suggested something of this kind, that there was a Meeting. Now that Gentleman that spake last but one, has cleared it, that it only recites he was Indicted for these Things, and this brings nothing in Issue, whether he be guilty or no? Now, I think, the present Question, and only Question before you, is upon the Suggestions of the Bill; for you can bring nothing in Issue here, but what is in the Bill; and no Body can insist, by the Rules of Reason or Justice, That any Man should be heard to any Matter of Fact but what is in the Bill. And therefore I think there is nothing before you, but that you should give Direction to hear them to what is suggested in the Bill.

Mr Methwen. Sir, I speak to the Method of your Debates: Your Debates arise upon an Objection that was made by Sir J. Fenwick's Council, against the Council for the Bill going on, with their Evidence to prove Sir J. Fenwick guilty of High-Treason.

I must beg leave to differ as to what the Council did say; for some of the Gentlemen that spake last, the Force of their Objections was, that they should not now go on, for they were not prepared to answer them; and the Reason they gave, was, that they had not formal notice; and the other afterwards spake to the Shortness of the Time; your Debates for a long time went pursuant to this, whether you should allow them further time or not? But the length of your Debates hath raised a new Matter. Though I think that Doubt, though it was not made by the Council, may be very properly made by any worthy Member that hath that Doubt, whether as the Bill is brought in, the King's Council might at any time speak to that Point, though Sir J. Fenwick be acquainted with it? And I must always agree that Doubt ought to be resolved, before you come to resolve whether further time shall be allowed him or not; and therefore I propose it, that this Question may be put, whether the House will hear, at the Bar of the House, the Evidence there is to prove Sir J. Fenwick Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he was indicted?

Col. Wharton. You have three or four Questions upon your Paper; and now after so long a Debate as we have had, I hope Gentlemen will not think fit to start new ones; and I hope you will take care that Gentlemen shall not rise up three or four times to speak to this Matter. You have another Rule of the House, That when a Question is moved, and seconded, though another Question is moved afterwards, yet that must be the first Question that is to be put, and I hope you will keep us to these Rules.

I wonder at some Objections: 'tis told you, that this is such a Proceeding that never any thing of this Kind was before; and that you are here going to read a Bill of Attainder before you have had any manner of Evidence, upon which you should ground the bringing in of this Bill. Gentlemen must remember, or should have informed themselves; for 'tis very certain that you had very good Grounds to vote this Bill to be brought in: I see the Gentleman that brought in his own Accusation; you had his own Discovery read, and Mr Attorney did inform you what was against him, and how he stood indicted. And another Gentleman by me told you, he was with him, and there was a Treaty for his Pardon; this was Evidence for reasonable Men to go upon: And to tell you that these Precedents will endanger your Liberty? Under favour, this is the Ground of all your Liberty. 'Tis by this Power of Proceeding, when you have not that Evidence that Westminster-Hall requires, by which you will keep great Men in Awe.

Now give me leave to speak to the Question that I think you ought to put; 'tis told you, by the Council for the Prisoner, that they are not appraised what the Sense of the House was, and upon that Account they desired further time: I confess, when you allowed Council, I was of Opinion it was a Favour; and now since they have made this Objection, though I do not believe you are obliged to allow them further time; yet I had rather err on that than the other Side; and therefore I think the fairest thing is to allow them some further time.

Mr Secretary Trumball. Mr Speaker, I have attended all this Day to your Debates, which are now in my Opinion of a very extraordinary Nature; for a great deal of your time hath been spent upon Motion of the Council for the Prisoner at the Bar, whether you should allow them further Time or no: And now, by what I recollect from from the Senſe of ſeveral Gentlemen, the Houſe ſeems willing to allow them further time; even that is oppoſed at this Time of Day.

Sir, the King's Council have opened the Matter of Fact, upon which they did intend to produce their Evidence; and when they had opened the ſeveral Heads, the whole Objection that I heard made by the other Side, was, They did not think the King's Council could have proceeded to examine Witneſſes upon thoſe Facts, and that they were not prepared to bring Witneſſes on the Side of the Priſoner, and therefore prayed for further time; truly, whether that be reaſonable or no, or whether upon one Favour the Houſe think fit to grant another; I can't tell what might appear, if it had come to a Queſtion; ſince the Life of a Man is concerned, we ought to be tender of it, and I ſhall be as tender as another; therefore I am of Opinion, that a reaſonable Time ſhould be allowed. To do what? Why, upon the Evidence the King's Council ſhould produce, they ſhall bring their Witneſſes on the other Side to anſwer them: Whether the King's Council will produce Evidence that is foreign to the Bill, that will be in Judgment of the Houſe; but it was a good Motion made below, which I cloſe withal, that a ſhort Time may be allowed them to make their Defence, and bring their Witneſſes.

Mr Speaker. Gentlemen, you have had a long Debate; I don't remember any formal Queſtion that was propoſed at firſt, till ſuch time as I read to you what I thought was the Queſtion upon the Debate; when I read you the Queſtion for further Time, there were ſeveral Members ſtood up, and ſaid, that was not the Queſtion; and took Exceptions to it, and propoſed that the Council ſhould be confined to produce Evidence only to the Matters ſuggeſted in the Bill; ſo that now I have two Queſtions upon my Paper, which I will read to you, and put which you will. One Queſtion is, That they be confined to make their Proof to what is ſuggeſted in the Bill. The ſecond Queſtion is, that Sir John Fenwick be allowed further Time, &c.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave. A Gentleman ſaid, the ſecond Queſtion upon your Paper was but lately ſtarted; but I remember, a little after the Council was withdrawn, it was moved, Whether you would give them further Time? And I, preſently after in the Debate, did take the Freedom to ask, Whether it was intended they ſhould Anſwer to any Thing but what was contained in the Bill? And I remember there was a Gentleman of the long Robe ſaid, That there was nothing offered by the King's Council, but what was within the Suggeſtions of the Bill. Another Gentleman ſaid, when they may have longer Time, they'd not ſeem ſo fond of it; 'tis indifferent to me, provided he be prepared to Anſwer. But I can't but obſerve, That the Concluſion of that honourable Perſon was, that at laſt you muſt come to determine the Queſtion. You were likewiſe told, by an honourable Perſon nearer the Bar, Why do you diſpute this, now you have ordered the King's Council to produce the Evidence, and ſo you have concluded your ſelves? But for my ſelf, I muſt confeſs I did never think the Evidence was to be heard otherwiſe than as to the Suggeſtions of the Bill. And if that Point be to be determined, Why will not you determine it now, rather than to have another Debate upon it?

Mr Boſcawen. That which is preſſed by ſome Gentlemen, is Begging of the Queſtion. What have we here brought Sir John Fenwick for? Was it not to ſatisfy our ſelves, whether Sir John Fenwick was guilty of High Treaſon? Now that is ſuppoſed by ſome Gentlemen not to be within the Bill: If it be not within the Bill, I deſire you would throw out the Bill. But the Thing is, we muſt not examine to thoſe Things that will make Sir John Fenwick guilty. Sir, This is a very nice Thing, and very curiouſly woven. The great Thing, ſay ſome Gentlemen, we muſt take care of, is the Blood of a Man: Does any one ſay he is Innocent? No: But we muſt have ſome Way or another that he muſt not be brought to his Tryal. I deſire, as Engliſh Men, you will not only take Care of the Life of one Man, but of the Life of the King; of the Lives of our Wives and Children, and all our Families. What will they ſay without Doors? You are afraid to meddle with Sir John Fenwick; and therefore you will ſlide it away upon another Point, That his being guilty of High Treaſon is not within the Bill. I am not for taking the Advantage of Time; I deſire, as it was moved before, That you will give him Time, and try whether he be guilty of this Treaſon or no, or otherwiſe do nothing in it at all.

Then the Order was made for Candles to be brought in.

Sir Thomas Littleton. Now you have Candles brought in, it will be fit for you to return to the Queſtion: For my Part I am willing to put both: But I think the laſt Queſtion that you have upon the Paper, properly ſpeaking, is to be put firſt; and that is, That the Houſe will proceed to examine Witneſſes to the Treaſon in the Bill for which he ſtands Indicted.

Mr. J. How. I think the Queſtion ought to be, That his Counſel be directed to bring Witneſſes to the Allegations in this Bill.

Sir Thomas Littleton. I propoſe it to you thus; That the Houſe will proceed to examine Witneſſes at the Bar, to the Treaſons mentioned in the Bill for which he was Indicted.

Mr. J. How. I think that Gentleman might very well have moved the Queſtion without that Limitation; for that is as much as to ſay, That Witneſſes ſhall be examined to none of the Treaſons in the Bill, except thoſe for which he hath been Indicted; and that is a Limitation I hope ſhall not be put to the Enquiries of this Houſe. I hope you will put it, That they ſhall bring Evidence to the Matters alledged in the Bill generally: There are ſeveral other Allegations in the Bill which I would have him anſwer to; as the allienating the Affections of the King's Subjects from him, which I take to be High Treaſon.

Members. No, no.

Mr. J. How. Why? If it be not High Treaſon, it hath nothing to do in that Place. I believe 'tis a very high Crime, and would induce me very much for the Puniſhing of Sir John Fenwick.

Mr. Norris. Sir, I do not know how the Queſtions may be carried ſince Candles are come in; but I think 'tis for the Better. I think there are two Things have been ſpoke to; one is this Bill: I find thoſe Gentlemen that were againſt the Bill on Friday, are more againſt it now. I was for the Bill then, and am now for a ſecond Reading of it: I think the Bill is very plain, and know not what they would have mentioned in it more, unleſs leſs they would have had the King's Head Tavern, and what Wine they drank there. I think there is all the Reaſon in the World to hear the Witneſſes to prove him guilty of High Treaſon. As to the Point of Time, I ſhould be very willing to allow it them, if that Queſtion was put; and I think you have been very favourable to him already, in allowing him Council.

Mr. Smith. I would only obſerve, when the Bill was to be brought in, the Objection was, That you had not Witneſſes. And now the Queſtion is, Whether you can hear Witneſſes upon Facts not particularly aſſigned in the Bill. I believe no Man can ſay, but that in the Indictment there are particular Facts that ought to be examined: I do own, for my Part, if Sir John Fenwick was a greater Man than he is, It were better he ſhould eſcape, than you ſhould ſpend ſo much Time about him. Sir, the Indictment is mentioned in the Bill; no Man thinks that Goodman's going away, is Reaſon enough for bringing in ſuch a Bill againſt Sir John Fenwick

Mr. Speaker. Shall I read you the Queſtion?

That Sir John Fenwick be allow'd further Time to produce Witneſſes in his Defence, againſt the Charge of High Treaſon, and that he name his Witneſſes.

Which Queſtion was put, and paſſed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker. The other Queſtion is,

That the Council, who are to produce their Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, be allowed to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of High Treaſon?

Sir Thomas Littleton. I do think one of the Reaſons why this Bill was brought, was, becauſe poſſibly, by the Abſence of this Witneſs, he could not, ſtrictly ſpeaking, be proved guilty; though all Mankind is ſatisfied in his Guilt. And therefore I queſtion whether it will amount to a legal Proof: And if you had ſuch a Proof as would convict him by the common Proceedings of Law, I ſhould not have been for a Bill of this Nature: For 'tis againſt the Honour and Dignity of this Houſe, to do the Work that an inferior Court can do. But probably, by the Abſence of this Witneſs, Sir John Fenwick, at a Tryal in the Old-Bailey, might eſcape; though at the ſame Time 'tis highly probable, the Witneſs that is wanting to convict him, is by his Means gone out of the Way. Therefore I ſpeak to the wording of the Queſtion; you ſay, Shall be allowed to prove. I would willingly prevent what may be objected when we come upon this Debate: If you do uſe the Word Prove, they may ſay, this is not Proof; for ſtill Goodman is not here. If you pleaſe to ſay, That we will examine Witneſſes to the Treaſon, and we will be Judges how far it appears to us, whether he be guilty, or not guilty.

Mr. Speaker. Will you let me propoſe it to you thus then? That the Council, in producing their Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, be allowed to examine Witneſſes touching the Treaſons mentioned in the Bill, for which Sir John Fenwick is Indicted?

Mr. Mountague. I do not obſerve, that in Reading of it, you ſay any Thing as to the other Allegations of the Bill: I think you ſhould word it, That the Council be allowed to produce Evidence to the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treaſons whereof he ſtands Indicted.

Mr. Speaker. Well then, the Queſtion is this, That the Council that manage the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, be allowed to produce Witneſſes touching the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treaſons whereof he ſtands Indicted?

Which Queſtion being put, it paſſed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker. Will you pleaſe to appoint a Time for it?

Mr. J. How. That I would move you is this. You were ſo extreamly late before you went upon this Information, That you had not Time to go through any Part of it; therefore I would move you, that you would appoint early in the Morning for Sir John Fenwick to be here.

And thereupon it was Ordered, That Sir John Fenwick ſhould be remanded to Newgate, and brought to the Houſe on Monday 10 a Clock.

Mr. James Mountague. Sir John Fenwick now inſiſted he had not Notice; I humbly move, that he may be brought in, and acquainted with what you have Ordered. And accordingly Sir John Fenwick was brought to the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. The Houſe have conſider'd, of what Sir John Fenwick hath ſaid at the Bar, by his Council, and they are of Opinion, That Witneſſes ought to be examined there, to prove the Allegations of the Bill, and to prove him guilty of High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted; but in favour to you, becauſe your Council ſaid you were not prepared, the Houſe is willing to give you Time till Monday next, to make your Defence; and they require you to give in a Liſt of your Witneſſes, and if you ſend to me, you may have a Warrant for their appearing at that Time; and they require you to be here, ſo that they may proceed upon the Bill exactly at Ten a Clock.

And Sir John Fenwick being withdrawn,

Reſolved,
That the Bill for Attainting Sir John Fenwick of High Treaſon, be read a ſecond Time on Monday next.

Lunæ 16 die Novembris, 1696.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, I would receive your Directions in one Thing: You have Ordered a Member to produce a Letter, and the Council, in opening the Evidence, have referred to it. That Member deſires to know the proper Time for him to do it; Whether, while the Council are managing the Evidence at the Bar, or whether he muſt ſtay till they are withdrawn?

Mr. Sloane. As to this Matter, I do not queſtion but 'tis to be offered as an Evidence; and by the ſame Reaſon that you give him the Favour to examine the Witneſſes that are produced againſt him; for the ſame Reaſon the Letter ought to be read in his Preſence, that he may explain it, or deny it: And give me leave to tell my Thoughts of another Matter: If that worthy Member is to offer Evidence of what he took from Sir John Fenwick's Mouth, (though a Member commonly gives his Evidence in his Place, after the Council is withdrawn) I think 'tis not only fair to produce the Letter in his Preſence, but that Sir John Fenwick ſhould hear what he ſays, and deny if he can.

Mr. Speaker. Is that your Pleaſure, that the Letter be produced before Sir John Fenwick, and that the Evidence to be given by Mr. Vernon ſhall be in the Preſence of Sir John Fenwick?

The Queſtion being accordingly put, it paſſed in the Affirmative.

Then the Serjeant was Ordered to take his Mace, and go into Weſtminſter-hall, and ſummon the Members.

And being returned, The Order of the Day for Proceeding on the Buſineſs of Sir John Fenwick was read. [It being a Quarter before Eleven a Clock.]

Then Sir John Fenwick, and the Council and Sollicitors on both Sides, were brought in.

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, when you were here laſt, you inſiſted upon it, That the Council againſt Sir John Fenwick ſhould be kept to the Proofs relating to the Allegations in the Bill only; or elſe that you might have further Time, becauſe the Witneſſes were not ready. The Houſe have conſidered that Matter, and in favour to Sir John Fenwick, that he might have no Surpriſe, have given him to this Day; but they do allow the Council to give Evidence not only as to the Allegations in the Bill, but to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of High Treaſon; and therefore Mr. Serjeant Gould, you are at liberty to go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. May it pleaſe you, Mr. Speaker, We are here to give in our Charge; and the Evidence that we have againſt Sir John Fenwick. I find by your Order, That we are now allowed to produce Evidence touching the Allegations of the Bill, and likewiſe of the Treaſons for which he ſtands Indicted; therefore I ſhall beg leave to open firſt, how he ſtands charged by the Indictment.

The Indictment firſt charges him with compaſſing and deſigning to depoſe the King, and put him to Death. The ſecond Charge is, For inciting the French King to ſend an Army of Soldiers to invade this Kingdom, and to make a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of this Kingdom. The Third Thing is, For adhering to the King's Enemies. The Fourth Part is, That to effect this, That he, together with ſeveral others, that is to ſay, Charnock, Sir John Freind and others, did conſult, propoſe, treat, and agree to invite the French King to ſend a Number of Soldiers to invade this Kingdom, and to procure great Numbers of armed Men againſt the King, to riſe and be formed; and with theſe Enemies, upon their landing and invading this Kingdom, to join, for to make and carry on a Rebellion and War in this Kingdom. And further it charges, That he did conſult, conſent and agree, to ſend Charnock as a Meſſenger from Sir John Freind, and others, into France to the late King James, to propoſe to him, to procure the French King to ſend Soldiers and armed Men to invade this Kingdom. Then likewiſe to effect this, the Indictment charges him with providing Horſes, Piſtols, and other warlike Arms. This is the Charge of the Indictment; and theſe Matters are in the Bill: For the Bill does charge him with compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King, with adhering to his Enemies, by conſulting and agreeing with ſeveral Perſons at ſeveral Times, to ſend Charnock to the late King James in France, to invite and encourage the French King to invade this Kingdom with armed Forces, and Promiſes to join them, and aſſiſt them with Men and Arms.

Then the Bill does take notice of other Matters, That Sir John Fenwick hath protracted his Tryal, by giving Aſſurances to the King to make a plain Diſcovery; by Reaſon of which he did not come to his Tryal, and now one of the Witneſſes againſt him is withdrawn. May it pleaſe you, Sir, This is the Charge as it ſtands before this Honourable Houſe; and the Evidence we ſhall charge him with, will be of this Nature: We ſhall give you an Account, That the latter End of May, or Beginning of June, Sir John Freind and Charnock, and ſeveral other Perſons, met at the King's Head, and upon that Meeting they conſulted how to invade this Kingdom; and they concluded in this, That they would ſend Charnock into France; and he was to propoſe it to King James, That he ſhould procure 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe and Dragoons; and upon their Landing they were to join them with 2000 Horſe. After this they had another Meeting; for Charnock, to be Sure of the Matter, would have another Meeting; and then he propoſed it to them, Whether they continued in the ſame Reſolution? And they all then declared, particularly Sir John Fenwick, That they did approve of it, and ſtuck by it; and that Charnock ſhould go for that Purpoſe to France. Charnock, in purſuance and execution of this Treaſon, does go to France, and brings back a Meſſage, That the Matter had been communicated to the French King, but at that Time he was not ready for them, and could not ſpare his Soldiers, and his Troops. Then it reſted for ſome Time, till towards Chriſtmas, when Sir George Barclay came into England, and he brought with him a Detachment of about Sixteen, and their Province was to aſſaſſinate the King: But there was another Part, and that was the Invaſion; and in that Part was Sir John Fenwick concerned, which we ſhall produce our Evidence to prove upon him; but it does fall out that we have but one Witneſs to this Matter, that we can produce viva voce; though when this Indictment was found, (for it was found upon the Act laſt Seſſions, which required two Witneſſes to each Species of Treaſon) we had two, but one is ſince withdrawn, and that is touched in the Bill, as in Truth the Fact is. Now if Sir John Fenwick had come on in the ordinary Courſe of Proceedings to be Tryed, Sir John Fenwick might have been Tryed upon his Indictment, for then Goodman had been there; but he procraſtinates his Tryal, he makes application to the King, and gives him Aſſurances from Time to Time of an ingenuous Diſcovery; but inſtead of that, when Goodman now is withdrawn, theſe Aſſurances have terminated in this counterfeit Confeſſion that hath been laid before the Houſe, and is charged in the Bill.

But, Sir, to ſupply this, we ſhall produce the Examination of Mr. Goodman; we ſhall prove to you not only the Evidence that hath been given upon this Indictment, upon which he hath been arraigned; but alſo the Evidence which hath been given upon the Tryal of Cook, who was convicted upon that Evidence. We ſhall go by theſe further Steps in the Caſe; and humbly offer it to the Conſideration of this Houſe, how far Sir John Fenwick will be affected in it. And that is this: Here hath been Goodman, and Captain Porter who ſtill

ſtill ſtands his Ground; but they have tempted him with 300 Guineas in Hand, and 300 more was to be remitted to him upon his firſt landing in France, with Aſſurance likewiſe of King James's Pardon, and likewiſe 300 l. a Year; 100 l. a Year whereof was to be ſettled by Sir John Fenwick; this Propoſition ſprung from one Clancy: It could not be expected that Sir John Fenwick ſhould appear in his proper Perſon, but he did by his Lady, who was with Captain Porter, and gave him Aſſurance of all that was propoſed by Clancy, that That ſhould be performed, and a great deal more.

We ſhall further give this Account, That when Sir John Fenwick was taken, there was a Letter handed to a third Perſon; and it appears by That, that he thought himſelf at that Time not ſafe, unleſs they could corrupt the Jury: For, ſays he, we muſt now get two or three ſtanch Perſons that will ſtarve the Reſt. Theſe Steps we ſhall proceed upon, and begin with the Indictment, and call our Witneſſes to it.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. Mr. Speaker, I ſhall not repeat what hath been ſaid; becauſe I know what hath been materially ſaid, can't paſs the Obſervation of this Houſe. The Method we deſire leave to proceed in, is the Method you have preſcribed us; and that is, firſt to prove the Allegations of the Bill: And that we ſhall make appear to you by undoubted Proofs. That Sir John Fenwick does ſtand indicted for theſe Treaſons at the Seſſions at the Old Baily, the 28th of May, upon the Oaths of Porter and Goodman, that we ſhall prove by Records, and that is not capable of any Traverſe or Denial. We ſhall alſo prove, by Matter of Record, That ſeveral who were concerned with Sir John Fenwick in this Conſpiracy have been tryed and attainted; and then we ſhall call a living Witneſs to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of Treaſon in the higheſt Manner. Mr. Tanner, deliver in the Indictment of Sir John Fenwick.

Which was delivered in, and read at the Table.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. The Bill does charge, That he ſtands Indicted upon the Oaths of theſe two, Captain Porter and Mr. Goodman: Beſides, I muſt beg leave to obſerve, that by the Act of Parliament made laſt Seſſions, 'tis enacted, That no Perſon ſhall be indicted unleſs upon the Oaths of two Witneſſes; had not theſe Witneſſes been Sworn before the Grand Jury at that Time, this Bill could not have been found according to that Law, nor would Sir John Fenwick have pleaded: But he hath been arraigned, and pleaded; ſo that we ſubmit it to this Houſe, that it does appear upon Record, That this Indictment was found upon the Oaths of two Witneſſes: Beſides that, two Witneſſes are ſubſcribed to the Bill. Now that other Perſons have been indicted, and convicted upon the ſame Evidence, we ſhall prove, and that likewiſe by Records.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. I thought when we came to give you an Account of the Abſence of Goodman, then to have given you Account of this, aud other Matters.

Mr. Speaker. You will agree upon your Method, Gentlemen: Who do you call in the firſt Place?

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Captain Porter, Sir. (Who being preſent.)

Mr. Serjeant Gould. I deſire, Mr. Speaker, that he will give an Account of what he knows concerning this Matter, as alſo of what is charged in the Indictment.

Mr. Speaker. Captain Porter, the Houſe requires you to give them an Account of your Knowledge of any Conſpiracy, by Sir John Fenwick, againſt the King and this Government; and likewiſe of your Proceedings upon the Indictment againſt him for High Treaſon.

Captain Porter. About the Middle of May was Twelve-months, there was two Conſultations, one at the King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, and the other in Pall-mall; theſe two Conſultations were for the Conſidering of the beſt Means to bring the late King James into England again: For it was ſaid, That King William being gone beyond Sea, he had left but few Forces, and therefore they thought they could not have a fitter Opportunity than that Juncture; upon which, they pitched upon Charnock to go into France, and make ſome Propoſals to the late King James, to borrow 10000 Men of the French King, whereof there ſhould be 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; and it was propoſed, when they came over, to meet them with 2000 Horſe.

Mr. Speaker. Where was this?

Captain Porter. Our firſt Meeting was at the King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet; after that, Mr. Charnock deſired another Meeting, and then we met at Mountjoy's in St. James's, and we all ſtood to what he had before reſolved, That he ſhould go over to King James, and make this Propoſal; and that if he could get ſo many Men of the French King, we would meet him with ſo many Horſe.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you ſay the firſt Meeting was at the King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, who was then preſent?

Captain Porter. There was my Lord Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Charnock, Mr. Cook, and my ſelf; we dined there, and after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in to us.

Mr Speaker. Did Sir John Fenwick hear this Diſcourſe?

Captain Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Did Sir John Fenwick conſent to it?

Captain Porter. He did abſolutely conſent to it. Sir John Friend did propoſe it; ſays he, Do not let us propoſe more than we can bring.

Mr. Speaker. Then you ſay you had a ſecond Meeting.

Captain Porter. When we agreed upon this Buſineſs in Leadenhall-ſtreet, Captain Charnock deſired another Meeting, to know if we continued in our Reſolution; and the next Meeting was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, I think then my Lord Montgomery was not there, nor Mr. Goodman; but there was my Lord Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock and my ſelf.

Mr. Speaker. How long after?

Captain Porter. About eight or ten Days, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Speaker. What was ſaid at that Meeting?

Captain Porter. The ſecond Meeting was to agree to the ſame Thing: We deſired Charnock to go as ſoon as poſſible to acquaint King James, that the ſooner he came that Year, the better.

Mr. Speaker. Did Sir John Fenwick conſent and agree, at the ſecond Meeting, to his going into France to procure the Forces?

Captain Porter, Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Will you give the Houſe an Account of any Thing elſe you know, relating to this Matter?

Captain Porter. That is all.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Was you examined by the Grand Jury, when the Bill was preſented againſt Sir John Fenwick?

Captain Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Gould. What Evidence did you give to them?

Captain Porter. The very ſame I give now.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serj. Gould, what have you to ſay further to him?

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We would ask, whether Mr. Cook was at the firſt Meeting?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, he was at both Meetings.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Was Mr. Goodman at the preferring of the Bill of Indictment at the Old Baily?

Captain Porter. I ſaw him go in to the Jury, and he told me it was for the ſame Thing.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We have ſome of the Jury here, and we will call them to that.

Mr. Serj. Gould. Now, if it pleaſe you, Sir, we will ask him to the Matter concerning Clancy's tampering with him.

Mr. Speaker. Will you give the Houſe an Account of that Matter?

Sir Tho. Powys. By your Favour, I hope you will give us leave to interpoſe in this Matter: For I am ſure in the Caſe of Life, and in Caſe where there is a Law prepared to be made, ſubſequent to the Fact, to condemn any Man to Death, you will not only have good Evidence, but that which is legal Evidence. And I take it, that in Caſes of this Nature, of a ſubſequent Law, the Evidence ought to be much ſtronger, and much fairer than when a Man is to be tryed by a Law in Being. If they ſhould offer that which was ſaid in the great Caſe of my Lord of Strafford, (which Attainder there hath been an Act of Parliament to reverſe) by a Gentleman that did then appear againſt my Lord of Strafford, That where the Houſe proceed in a legiſlative Way, there needs no Evidence at all; but every Man may follow the Dictates of his own Thoughts and Conſcience. 'Tis in Peniſhworth's Collections, fol. 377. Yet, I hope, you will be of another Opinion, and expect ſtronger Evidence, than if a Man was to be tryed by a Law in Being. Now that which is offered now, cannot be allowed in any Court of Juſtice: They were going about to ſhew, That my Lady Fenwick, the Wife of the Gentleman at the Bar, that ſhe had uſed ſome Means to take off Goodman's Evidence, and they would make uſe of that againſt her Husband. Now, what any Man's Wife ſays cannot be made uſe of againſt him, as nothing that ſhe ſays, or does, can be made uſe of for him; and, by the ſame Rule of Juſtice, it cannot be made uſe of againſt him: For otherwiſe the Rule would be unequal, That ſhe might be a Witneſs againſt him, but not a Witneſs for him; that ſeems ſo unjuſt, that it will not be admitted in any Court whatſoever.

Sir Barth. Shower. By your Votes the Priſoner is allowed Council, and the King's Serjeant is to produce the Evidence againſt the Priſoner: That Phraſe of Evidence makes us believe, or at leaſt to hope, that you will give us leave to object to that which is not ſo; and in this I appeal to the Knowledge of the Gentleman on the other Side, who hath had a great deal of Experience of this Kind; and I am ſure, in all his Obſervations in the Old Baily, he can't ſay this was ever admitted in Caſe of Treaſon, nay not in Felony, the Actions or Sayings of other Perſons; and I muſt confeſs I wonder to hear him move it now.

When attempted on behalf of a cloſe Priſoner, that was not viſited by any Body, it was not admitted that the Actions of a third Perſon at large, ſhould be admitted againſt him: There the Actions of a Wife cannot be Evidence for, nor againſt her Husband. It was never but in one Caſe, and that for Sodomy, allowed, and that was after two or three Witneſſes beſides had been produced, and by the Opinions ever ſince, it hath been allowed not to be Law; and that for the Oeconomy, the Danger might follow in Caſes of Matrimony and Families. Now they both do concern the Acts of other Perſons, and not Sir John Fenwick. Beſides, I have one Objection more, and that is, There is no ſuch Thing alledged in the Bill; and with Submiſſion, you have declared, That they ſhould produce Evidence as to the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treaſons in the Indictment; but I can't find any Order that they ſhould produce Evidence concerning the carrying away of any Witneſs; and 'tis not alledged, that Goodman is withdrawn by Sir John Fenwick's Privity: As to Porter's being tampered with, there is no Colour of Suggeſtion in the Bill; ſo that this neither being in the Bill, nor being Evidence at Law, we muſt be ſurprized very much by it, if you ſhould admit it.

Mr. Speaker. You hear the Exception, What do you ſay to it?

Mr. Serj. Gould. I think what theſe Gentlemen ſay, will receive a plain Anſwer. They have made an Objection without anſwering the ſubject Matter; it is an Allegation in the Bill, That Goodman hath withdrawn himſelf. Now the Uſe we make of this, is to let us in to give an Account of what Goodman hath Sworn, and to entitle us to read his Examination: For, ſay we, he hath been tampering to ſtifle this Conſpiracy, to take off the King's Evidence. For no Body doubts of the execrable and wicked Conſpiracy; and 'tis as plain here hath been two Witneſſes to prove it; and as plain that this Indictment is found, according to the late Act of Parliament, upon the Evidence of Porter and Goodman. Now to ſhew this Conſpiracy is carrying on, we offer to prove the Tampering that hath been, to take off the King's Evidence, and to lay that before the Conſideration of this Houſe; ſo the Uſe we make of it, is only preparatory to let us in to tell you what Goodman hath Sworn, and in good Time we ſhall produce to you an Indictment, where, upon his very Oath, and upon the ſame Evidence as we offer here, another of the Traytors hath been convicted; and therefore we humbly offer it, Whether as this Caſe is, we ſhall not be admitted to prove this Tampering?

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Before we withdraw, I beg two Words as to what is objected on the other Side, for the learned Gentleman appeals to me; and I muſt appeal to the Knowledge of ſome Members that are learned in the Law, and to all, That even in criminal Caſes, Courts are not bound up to poſitive Evidence, but that the Evidence of Circumſtances, and ſome Perſons to corroborate them, is admitted: And if it ſhould be ſo, that nothing but poſitive Evidence ſhould convict, we ſhould have very few Convictions at the Old Baily; as to Clipping and Coining, where One is convicted by poſitive Evidence and direct Proof, Forty are convicted and attainted by Circumſtances, as Materials found about them, and putting off Counterfeit-money. Sir, I muſt ſubmit mit to you, Whether, as the Nature of this Caſe is, this Houſe will not think fit to hear all Evidence that may concern this Matter, whether Certain or Circumſtantial; and the Wiſdom of this Houſe will diſtinguiſh afterwards, what they think is Material, and what is not. We do take this to be Part of the ſame Conſpiracy we do charge the Priſoner at the Bar with, that he might not come to condign Puniſhment; and therefore we pray, that let the Proceedings of other Places be what they will, that you will hear the whole Matter in this Caſe, whether the Evidence be Poſitive or Circumſtantial.

Sir Thomas Powys. I think they miſtake us when they give us ſuch an Anſwer; we doubt not but there is poſitive Evidence and circumſtantial, but we ſuppoſe this to be no Evidence at all: Mr. Recorder tells us true, That circumſtantial Evidence is frequently made uſe of; but we ſay, That whatever my Lady Fenwick hath ſaid or done, is not to be admitted as Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; becauſe what ſhe hath ſaid by Way of Endeavour to draw off Goodman, is no Evidence at all to be offered againſt her Husband, and is not ſo much as circumſtantial Evidence.

Sir Barthol. Shower. We do agree, If the Bill had been brought in againſt my Lady Fenwick, or againſt Clancy, this had been proper Evidence; and they did, and may deſerve Puniſhment for it themſelves: But this is no Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, that is here.

Mr. Serj. Lovell. We think 'tis properly before the Houſe, even by the Order of the Houſe it ſelf: For in the firſt Place, we are to ſpeak to the Matters contained in the Bill. One Matter is, That Sir John Fenwick had been Tryed before now, but for Reaſons mentioned in the Bill; and that he delayed his Tryal, till ſuch Time as Goodman was withdrawn; therefore what lies before us by the Direction of the Houſe, is, That till ſuch Time as Goodman was withdrawn, Sir John Fenwick did pretend to go on to make a Diſcovery, and afterwards put it off with what is charged in the Bill: But ſay they, What is done by my Lady Fenwick, is no Evidence againſt him. When all the Circumſtances are laid before the Houſe, what Dealings there was with Captain Porter, and what was ſaid at that Time, and the Conſequence preſently after Goodman's going away, I hope it is as much Evidence as the Caſe will bear.

Sir Richard Temple. Sir, Deſire they may withdraw.

Accordingly they withdrew.

Sir Richard Temple. I think it much concerns the Honour of the Houſe, when a Priſoner is at the Bar, that he ſhould be allowed the Right of an Engliſhman; what you do here, may be a Precedent in after Ages; you are told what is offered as Evidence here, is admitted in no Court, and the Anſwer that is made to it, is of no Force at all; they tell you there is no Allegations in your Bill, That Sir John Fenwick had any Hand in his withdrawing, nor nothing in the Indictment of it, and for that Reaſon the Evidence ſeems improper; and if it was, this would be no Evidence at all; for the Oaths of other Perſons is no Evidence againſt the Priſoner, to make him guilty of any Thing.

Lord Cutts. I think 'tis agreed already, That the Council for the Priſoner ſhould not meddle with the Authority and Juriſdiction of this Houſe; for if we are to be ty'd up to all the Forms and Niceties obſerved in inferior Courts, then to what End is the Priſoner brought here? I think Evidence ought to be admitted, that may clear every Man's Conſcience, that this Bill againſt Sir John Fenwick ought to paſs.

Mr. F. How. A Gentleman ſaid, We are not ty'd to the Forms of inferior Courts; but tho' we are not ty'd to the Forms of inferior Courts, we are ty'd to that which was the Ground of them, and that is right Reaſon and true Senſe: They have alledged that he was Indicted, no Body doubts it. That Goodman is withdrawn, no Body doubts it: But what is that to Sir John Fenwick? It might be with a Deſign for Good or Evil to Sir John Fenwick. My Lord Jefferies ſaid, at my Lord Delamare's Tryal, (as I am informed) That one Witneſs, with good Circumſtances, was enough to convict a Man of High Treaſon. And I am told, it was told him then, that if they ever met him in the Houſe of Lords, he ſhould anſwer it with his Head. I deſire you would ask Captain Porter, when he comes in, Whether this was diſcourſed before Dinner, at Dinner, or after Dinner? And whether he knows that Goodman heard this or no?

Mr. Chancel. of the Exchequer. There ſeems a particular Shyneſs to know the Truth of this Matter; I mean in the Council t'other Day: The Gentleman ſays, That Goodman might be withdrawn to the Prejudice of Sir John Fenwick, as well as for his Good; I deſire you will not let the Government be ſo Stigmatized. You have given leave to the Council to examin to any Thing that may be added to the Bill; for upon a Commitment, I can move you to put any Thing that ſhall be thought reaſonable.

Sir Thomas Dyke. It may be a reaſonable Thing to enquire why Goodman is withdrawn? But the Queſtion is, Whether this be a proper Time? The Houſe is not ty'd to the common Forms, but they are ty'd to the common Rules of Equity: And the Queſtion is, Whether the Houſe will permit any Perſon to ſuffer by the Acts of another?

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is diſcretionary, whether you will determine that this is Evidence now, or after you have heard it. I can't tell at whoſe Tryal it has, but I won't enter upon the Legality of the Thing: 'Tis one Thing when a Man is to be Tryed by a Jury, and another Thing when he is to be Tryed before Judges. A Jury may be ſo ſway'd and poſſeſſed by it, that it may not be fit for them to hear it: But look into the Court of Chancery; and there, Depoſitions, if one Side ſay, they are Evidence, and the other Side ſay, they are not, are every Day admitted; and the Rule is, That it is ſooner diſpatched by hearing of it, than not. You do not ſit here as a Jury, but as Judges; and will conſider how far the Actions of a Wife ſhall concern her Husband; you will do the Priſoner Right, and your ſelves Right, if you will hear them.

Sir Francis Winnington. The Queſtion is, Whether the King's Council ———

Mr. Speaker. Let me ſet you Right; they are not here as King's Council.

Sir Francis Winnington. Very well: But in this Houſe you are the Judges and Jury too. The Evidence that is opened, is to induce you to believe that he is guilty, and the Gentleman that ſpake laſt, will not allow it to be a legal Evidence. Then the Queſtion is, Whether, you being Judges of the Fact, as well as of the Law, ſhould be afraid to be induced to believe a Fact, by that which is not legal Evidence? Suppoſe my Lady Fenwick had had the Deſign, and had told her Husband what ſhe

ſhe intended to do, and he ſhould have ſaid, he ſcorn'd it: This is poſſible, if you go to ſuppoſing; and that he might apprehend it would do him a Miſchief. Now it can be to no purpoſe to hear this Evidence, unleſs it be to ſatisfy the Houſe, in order to attaint the Priſoner. No, but ſay they, Let us hear, and we will judge afterwards: Why ſo? It can't affect the Priſoner: And if any Perſon hereafter have a Mind to have my Lady Fenwick puniſhed, they may examin it.

Mr. Sloane. The Gentleman that ſpake laſt, hath made one Suppoſal; let me make another. He ſuppoſes, That it may appear by the Evidence, upon the Examination of Witneſſes, that what my Lady Fenwick or Clancy did, was contrary to the Direction of Sir John Fenwick: If the Evidence happen to be ſo, 'tis nothing. But we may ſuppoſe again: Suppoſe it happens, that it appears by the Evidence, that it was for the Benefit of Sir John Fenwick, to the greateſt Degree, to get away one of the Witneſſes, & Cui bono, is the ſtrongeſt Preſumption to me. I do allow, in Weſtminſter Hall, that a Woman ſhall not be a Witneſs for or againſt her Husband; but if ſhe be directed by her Husband, Qui facit per alium, facit per ſe; you do not alledge all the Evidence in the Indictment, that runs in general; if the Evidence differs as to Time and Place, ye may find him guilty of the Indictment.

Lord Norryes. Becauſe I would not willingly go upon Suppoſitions, I deſire the Clerk may read the Queſtion that you have paſſed the laſt Day, to examining Evidence.

Which was accordingly read.

Now I deſire to know, Whether this be Treaſon within the Indictment, or any of the Allegations of the Bill; otherwiſe I think you have tied your ſelves up by that Rule.

Mr Pelham. I did expect the Gentleman that ſpake lately, would have cleared the Matter. He gave you a Diſtinction between the Proceedings of Weſtminſter Hall and the Court of Chancery. I am ignorant of both. I deſire to know, whether we are to go here by the Proceedings of Weſtminſter Hall, or the Court of Chancery? If we are not tyed by theſe Rules, we may let our ſelves into any Evidence that will induce us to believe him guilty or not guilty. If we are tyed to thoſe Rules that are obſerved in all Courts of Juſtice, where Tryals of Treaſon are had, this can be of no Validity: So I deſire to know, whether we are to go according to the Proceedings of thoſe Courts, or whether we may proceed as the Court of Chancery?

Sir Tho. Littleton. The honourable Member that ſpake laſt, deſires to know, Whether we are bound by the Rules in Weſtminſter Hall, in their Proceedings or not? I believe it would have been to very little Purpoſe to have thought of this Bill, if thoſe Courts could have convicted him. I believe if the Council had tyed you to the Proceedings of Weſtminſter Hall, and therefore that you could not have proceeded on this Bill, you would have taken Notice of them, and reprimanded them for ſaying ſo. I know not what to ſay to the Proceedings of Chancery in this Caſe; but I ſuppoſe upon this Tryal, you will inform your ſelves by the beſt Methods you can; and every Man, according to his Judgment, be for, or againſt the Bill. If upon what I hear, I am of Opinion, he is notoriouſly guilty, I ſhall freely paſs the Bill. If I do ſo much as doubt that he is guilty, according to the old Rule, Quod dubitas ne feceris, I ſhall not be for it; and in Order to this, I am for hearing every body that comes before us. It is ſaid, that poſſibly Goodman is withdrawn to Sir John Fenwick's Prejudice: I would be glad to hear that; if ſo, I ſhall have the worſe Opinion of the Bill. They ſay, 'tis not alledged in the Bill, concerning Captain Porter's being tampered with; but 'tis alledged, That Goodman is withdrawn, and that 'tis not alledged, that Sir John Fenwick was privy to it; but it may weigh to Gentlemens Judgments, how he comes to be withdrawn. They that tamper with one Witneſs, may be thought like to tamper with another. They tell you, That the Evidence of a Man's Wife will not weigh againſt her Huſband. It may be ſo in Point of Law; but if you think your ſelves bound up to the ſtrict Rules of Law, diſpoſe of your Bill preſently.

Sir Will. Coryton. You have been pleaſed to give Leave to the King's Council to prove Matters againſt Sir John Fenwick: You have heard Captain Porter upon the Fact. If they had opened the Matters, that Sir John Fenwick was inſtrumental to convey Goodman away, I ſhould have been willing to have heard it: But they opened it, That my Lady Fenwick was inſtrumental in Conveying away Goodman: And this ought in no ſort to be admitted. An honourable Gentleman of the Long Robe, made a Difference in the Proceedings between the Court of Chancery, and the Courts of Weſtminſter Hall: But I would fain know, if a Fact was ſtated, Whether my Lord Keeper could determine the Matter before a Commiſſion went to prove it. 'Tis true, we are not tyed to the Forms of Law, but we are tyed to the Forms of Juſtice. I know no Caſe where a Wife is admitted to be a Witneſs for or againſt her Husband. In Brown's Caſe indeed, who took a Woman away, and forced her to marry him; the Queſtion was, Whether ſhe ſhould be admitted? And in that Caſe ſhe was admitted as a Witneſs, becauſe the Neceſſity of the Thing required it; and there was no other Way to prove, whether he had her Conſent or not. Another Caſe there was of my Lord Caſtlehaven, where from the Nature of the Thing, it was admitted; for it was impoſſible there ſhould be any other Proof of it. But if my Lady Fenwick be guilty of this Matter, it muſt only by Way of Inference affect Sir John Fenwick. They tell you, they inſiſt upon it as an Indictment; then it comes to be a Matter of Conſequence; and therefore ſince the Matter hath been fully ſtated to the Houſe, as to what they would prove: I think we may now give our Judgment upon it.

Mr Boſcawen. You are here in your Legiſlative Power, and are no more tyed to the Rules of Law in Examining of Witneſſes, than you are in giving of Judgment; for you can give thoſe Puniſhments that never are given in Weſtminſter Hall. I am of Opinion, that my Lady Fenwick cannot be examined for or againſt her Husband; but if he ſend her to ſolicite for him, it ſhall have ſome Weight with me. Thoſe that don't believe it from what he ſays, may give their Judgment accordingly: I deſire to know of this Gentleman, if I don't believe it, whether I can give Judgment againſt him? I believe a Man's Conſcience ought to go with his Judgment.

Mr Speaker. I will read the Queſtion. That Captain Porter be examined to the Attempt of taking off his Teſtimony as to the late Conſpiracy.

Which

Which Queſtion being put, it paſſed in the Affirmative.

Mr Harley. I ſuppoſe you will let the Council of both Sides, have firſt done with their Queſtions; and then there will be ſome Queſtions propoſed to you.

Mr J. Howe. They tell you how that Sir John Fenwick was Indicted, and that Goodman is withdrawn; but there is one Thing the Council of both Sides ſlip over, and that is, Sir John Fenwick hath given in falſe Informations; it looks as if they were agreed on both Sides in that Matter: I deſire the King's Council may be asked, Whether they have any Evidence of that Matter?

Col. Crawford. Since I am mentioned in that Paper ——

Adm. Ruſſel. I believe though that Gentleman was afraid that Matter would have been paſſed over, yet that the Gentlemen of this Houſe that are therein named will take Care, for their own Vindication, That that Matter ſhould not be ſlipped over; I ſuppoſe the proper Time for that is, when the Evidence is over: I aſſure you, if no Body elſe will, I will.

Then Sir John Fenwick, and the Council of both Sides, and Captain Porter, were brought in.

Mr Speaker. Sir Tho. Powys, The Houſe hath conſidered of your Exception to the Teſtimony of Captain Porter, as to the Point he was to be examined to, and they are agreed, That 'tis fit that all the Evidence ſhould be laid before them, and they can judge afterwards, whether it be material or fit to be allowed, or not. Therefore, Captain Porter, pray do you give the Houſe an Account at large of what Attempts have been made upon you, at any Time, to draw you off from your Teſtimony, with Reſpect to the late Conſpiracy.

Capt. Porter. I had a Meeting with one Clancy, firſt in Mitre Court, at and afterwards at the King's-Head Tavern by the Play-houſe: At thoſe Meetings he propoſed to give me 300 Guineas to bear my Charges to France, and to ſend me a Bill for 300 more; and likewiſe that I ſhould be allowed 300 l. a Year.——

Mr Speaker. How long had you been acquainted before?

Capt. Porter. Several Years.

Mr Speaker. Did he tell you who he came from?

Capt. Porter. He ſaid, he had been with —— Fenwick, who deſired him to make this Propoſal to me.

Mr Speaker. How often had you Meetings with him?

Capt. Porter. About ſeven or eight Times.

Mr Speaker. What Satisfaction did he give you, that Sir John Fenwick would perform the Agreement?

Capt. Porter. He told me, my Lady Fenwick, and my Lady Montgomery, ſhould meet and confirm every Thing that Night. The Day before I was to go, I met with my Lady Fenwick, who told me, my Lady Montgomery could not come, becauſe one of her Children was fallen ſick.

Mr Speaker. What Satisfaction did ſhe give you, that Sir John Fenwick would perform what Clancy had propoſed?

Capt. Porter. She ſaid, what Clancy had propoſed ſhould certainly be made good.

Mr Serj. Gould. Did you receive any Thing in Part, in Purſuance of this Agreement?

Capt. Porter. I received 300 Guineas of Clancy, and he promiſed to me a Bill of 300 more, which was depoſited by —— Fenwick in his Hands, to be ſent after me into France.

Mr Serj. Gould. Pray what Letter was that he brought you?

Capt. Porter. He brought me a Letter, and ſaid, It was writ by Sir John Fenwick to King James on my Behalf.

Mr Speaker. Did he deliver that to you?

Capt. Porter. No; he delivered it to the Gentleman that was to go with me, one Captain Donelagh.

Mr Speaker. Why did you not take that Letter into your own Hands?

Capt. Porter. I had it, and read it, before it was ſeal'd up.

Mr Serj. Gould. Do you remember the Contents of it?

Capt. Porter. As much as I remember was, He deſired his Majeſty, by Reaſon that my going away was to ſave my Lord Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, &c. to pardon what I had done.

Mr Serj. Lovel. Who ſubſcribed it?

Capt. Porter. It was not Sir John Fenwick's Name, but they told me, King James would know who it came from.

Mr Serj. Lovel. How did you proceed after the Meeting with my Lady Fenwick?

Capt. Porter. The next Night after that he had paid me my Money, and ſhewed me the Bill, and I was to go away the next Day after; They ſaid, the Boat was provided.

Mr Serj. Lovel. Can you tell whether the Boat was provided?

Capt. Porter. They were taken up preſently after.

Mr Serj. Gould. We will now produce a Record to confirm the Evidence that he hath given you: This Perſon hath been convicted for this Tampering.

Accordingly the Record for Clancy's Conviction was produced.

Sir Tho. Powys. I deſire to know, Whether they offer this as Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick?

Mr Speaker. They offer to prove, That this very Perſon hath been tampered with, to take off his Teſtimony; and they leave it then to the Houſe to judge, who is moſt likely to be guilty of Goodman's Withdrawing. They begin to ſhew you, there hath been an Attempt to take off this Perſon's Teſtimony; you have heard the Perſon himſelf to it already: So now they offer to read the Conviction of Clancy to this Matter.

The Record of Clancy's Conviction was read.

Mr Serj. Lovel. We will prove the like Solicitation hath been made by Mr Dighton, who is the Sollicitor for the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr Speaker. What is your Witneſs's Name?

Mr Serj. Lovel. Thomas Roe. If you pleaſe, Sir, to ask him, what Endeavours have been uſed by Mr Dighton, to make Uſe of him, that Goodman might withdraw himſelf.

Mr Speaker. Mr Roe, You are required to give this Houſe an Account of what hath paſſed between Mr Dighton and you, in Order to take off the Teſtimony of Mr Goodman.

Mr. Roe.

Mr Roe. About the Middle of September laſt, I had Occaſion to go to Mr Dighton, to enquire, Whether the Commiſſioners of the Land Tax in Surrey, ſate; for I knew he was concerned in ſome Affairs for that County: He told me, He did not poſitively know, but would ſpeedily enquire. At the ſame Time, he took Occaſion to tell me, He knew it was in my Power to do Sir John Fenwick Service. I asked him, What he meant by it? Says he, I know you know Goodman well, and it will be the better for you, if you will tell me: I asked him, What he meant by that Way of Talking? He deſired I would meet him ſome other Time, and I ſhould know further of his Mind; accordingly I did meet Mr Dighton: Says he, You know Goodman well, and if you can ſay any Thing that can diſcredit Goodman's Teſtimony, you ſhall have 100 l. a Year ſettled upon you for your Life. Says I, Sir, I do know him well: Says he, Did you never hear him talk of Poyſoning the Duke of N. and Robbing on the High-way, and that he is concerned with Clippers: Says I, I have heard him talk of thoſe Matters ſeveral Times, but you can't think I will be a Witneſs, and expoſe my ſelf, and diſparage People, till I know for what. Says he, For that you ſhall be ſatisfied; you ſhall have 100 l. a Year ſettled upon you, provided you can diſcredit Goodman's Teſtimony, that Sir John Fenwick may come off, and it will be done by a Friend of yours.

We accordingly agreed to meet the next Day at a Coffee-Houſe in the City, and appointed a Friend to be there, but Mr Dighton did not meet at the Time; and the Reaſon he told me, was, becauſe Sir John Fenwick was that Day to be arraigned. As ſoon as Mr Dighton had made this Propoſal, I told Mr Goodman of it, and he adviſed me to go on with him, and ſee if I could get any Offer under his Hand: I told him, he had appointed to meet me in the City, and a Friend to be there to hear me: I went, and told Mr Dighton, but Mr Goodman would not be ſatisfied with that, but ſaid I muſt go to the Arch-Biſhop and tell him what paſſed; ſo I did go and tell the Arch-Biſhop what I have told you now.

Mr Speaker. Had you any Meeting after that?

Mr Roe. Yes, on the 19th of September, and then he made great Aſſeverations, that what he ſaid ſhould be performed; and that I ſhould not only oblige Sir John Fenwick, but my Lord Montgomery; and that Goodman was a loſt Man by being become a Common Evidence; and that it would not be in his Power to oblige any Man, my Lady Dutcheſs having diſcharged him of his Employ, and he would not be in a Condition to do further for me; and ſays he, whatever you would have gotten by ſerving my Lady Dutcheſs in her Concerns, ſhall be made up over and above this 100 l. a Year that I have promiſed.

Mr Serj. Gould. I deſire he may be asked, Whether Goodman did not acquaint him, that a Siſter of Sir John Fenwick's had been with him, and upon what Occaſion?

Mr Roe. About the Time of the Preferring of the Bill againſt Sir John Fenwick, I ſaw Goodman at Hicks's Hall; and a little after, he told me, that a Siſter of Sir John Fenwick's had come to him, and made ſome Propoſals to him, and I acquainted the Duke of Shrewsbury's Deputy, Mr Vernon, with it.

Mr Speaker. Did you purſue this Diſcourſe with Mr Dighton, ſo as to come to any poſitive Agreement?

Mr Roe. No otherwiſe than what I told you, my Deſign was to have Mr Dighton to have given it me in Writing, or elſe for him to have ſaid it before ſome other Man; but I don't know any Thing whereby I could have diſcredited Mr Goodman, if he would have done it.

Mr Serj. Gould. You obſerve, Sir, that one of the Witneſſes whoſe Name is ſubſcribed to the Bill of Indictment, is withdrawn: Now to give you an Account that he is withdrawn, I deſire the King's Proclamation may be read.

Members. No, no.

Mr Serj. Lovel. We have Mr Goodman's Examination under the Hand of Mr Vernon; we pray it may be read.

Sir Tho. Powys. Mr Speaker, I deſire to be ſpared a Word to this Matter: I take this to be a great Point, not only as it concerns the Life of this Perſon, but as it may be a Matter of Example in all Times hereafter; that which they would offer, is ſomething that Mr Goodman hath ſworn, when he was examined by Mr Vernon; Sir John Fenwick not being preſent or privy, and no Opportunity given to croſs-examine the Perſon; and I conceive, that cannot be offered as Evidence; for if that ſhould be allowed for Evidence, then what is ſworn behind a Man's Back, in any Caſe whatſoever, may as well be produced as Evidence againſt him; and they know, that in a Caſe of the Value of Five Shillings, no Depoſitions or Examinations of any Man can be made Uſe of; and I am ſure they will not ſay, that the Depoſitions taken between other Perſons, where a Man is not a Party, can be made Uſe of as Evidence againſt him; and if not admitted where Property is concerned in the loweſt Degree, I hope you will never admit it in this great Place, from whence inferior Courts (as to Juſtice) take their Meaſures.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. Mr Speaker, I deſire you would ſpare me a Word of the ſame Side. I humbly oppoſe the Reading of this Examination, as not agreeable to the Rules of Practice and Evidence, and that which is wholly new; and this in civil Cauſes can't poſſibly be done: No Depoſition of a Perſon can be read, though beyond Sea, unleſs in Caſes where the Party it is to be read againſt, was privy to the Examination, and might have Croſs-examined him, or examined to his Credit, if he thought fit; it was never pretended, Depoſitions could be read upon other Circumſtances. But in criminal Caſes, I appeal to the Gentlemen on the other Side, who know the Proceedings in the Old Baily very well, it was never admitted: Nay, in an Appeal of Murder, if Depoſitions be taken before the Coroner, and there be an Examination of Witneſſes upon the Indictment, though the Appeal be for the ſame Fact, and in order to bring the Perſon to the ſame Puniſhment; yet, in that Caſe, thoſe Depoſitions can't be read, becauſe 'tis another Suit: But it was never attempted in any Court of Juſtice, that the Examination of Witneſſes behind a Man's Back, could be read in any Place whatſoever. Our Law requires Perſons to appear, and give their Teſtimony viva voce; and we ſee that their Teſtimony appears credible, or not, by their very Countenances, and the Manner of their Delivery; and their Falſity may ſometimes be diſcovered by Queſtions that the Party may ask them, and by examining them to particular Circumſtances, which may lay open the Falſity of a well-lay'd Scheme; which otherwiſe, as he himſelf had put it together, might have looked well at firſt; and this we are depri-deprived of, if this Examination ſhould be admitted to be read.

Now, though the Practice of other Courts does not oblige this Houſe, yet we know you will conſider the Rules of Juſtice; 'tis but Juſtice in criminal Caſes, eſpecially as our Conſtitution is, that the Perſon ſhall ſee his Accuſer. A Man may ſwear to a Depoſition reduced into Writing, whoſe Conſcience perhaps would not let him publickly accuſe the Priſoner, Face to Face: Experience hath ſhewed it often, that ſeveral that will calumniate another privately, will not juſtify the ſame in open Court of Juſtice. What Goodman is, 'tis not proper for us at preſent to give an Account of, but we oppoſe it at preſent, for that we were not preſent, nor privy, nor could have Croſs-examined him; 'tis only an Information before a private Juſtice; for if not ſo, we know not what Authority he had to examin him; and then if ſo, Mr. Recorder knows, that in the Old Baily, if Goodman had died, it had not been Evidence: In caſe he had been ſick, or withdrawn without our privity, they could not have read it: Nay, if he were withdrawn by our privity, it could not be read: 'Tis true, the Inticing him to withdraw, had been puniſhable in another Man, but could not have been read to have convicted the Party; and ſince this Examination could never have been read there; and if it muſt be unjuſt, and hath not been practiſed, I hope you will not do it now.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, what do you ſay to it?

Mr. Serj. Gould. I obſerve this Gentleman's Objection, why this Examination ſhould not be read; and under Favour, we think we are regular, as this Caſe is, to have his Depoſition read. 'Tis true, as long as the Witneſſes can be produced in all Courts, and Practice of the Law, you ſhall not read his Examination, or what is taken before a Juſtice of Peace: But that is not our Caſe: It is now fully proved before you, that he is withdrawn; and it is fully before you, that he hath given Evidence for the King, and hath been examined; and this is an extraordinary Caſe, and that is the Reaſon we are in Parliament: He hath Sworn this Matter, and before a proper Officer; Why then ſhall not his Evidence be read and allowed, when he is wilfully withdrawn, and we ſay, by the Contrivance of the Priſoner at the Bar? And the Thing ſpeaks it ſelf. Now, with Submiſſion, I take it to be every Day's Practice, that where an Evidence is dead, his Depoſition ſhall be read. It appears to you, that there was to have been a Tryal, but the Witneſs is withdrawn; and it appears plainly, that he hath been tampering: The Evidence, is full, in the Caſe as to Porter; and we have produced a Record of Conviction, that does confirm it: Now this is ſuch a Practice, we come into Parliament to have it remedied; for otherwiſe Men ſhall commit Treaſon, and by their Contrivance and Art, the Witneſſes ſhall be drawn away, and the Priſoner ſhall not be brought to condign Puniſhment. Here is the Record in which he gave Evidence, and he is withdrawn; and therefore I hope, in this Caſe, we ſhall be admitted to read his Depoſition; for I deny what the Gentleman ſays, to be Practice; and Mr. Recorder can give you a better Account, who knows more of the Practice of it, That if a Witneſs is dead, they may read his Depoſitions. We are here before you in Parliament, and by the ſame Reaſons that others have been tampered with, this Witneſs may be preſumed to be tampered with; and therefore we are in your Judgment, Whether in this Caſe his Depoſitions ſhall not be read.

Mr. S. Lovel. 'Tis objected, on the other Side, That this Evidence ought not to be offered; and for what Reaſon? Becauſe, ſay they, a Jury ought to go Secundum allegata & probata; and what is not ſtrictly Evidence by Law, you are not to take notice of; but in Criminal Caſes (which is this Caſe) where Perſons do ſtand upon their Lives, accuſed for Crimes, if it appears to the Court, that the Priſoner hath by fraudulent and indirect Means, procured a Perſon that hath given Information againſt him to a proper Magiſtrate, to withdraw himſelf; ſo that he can't give Evidence as regularly they uſed to do; in that Caſe his Information hath been read. Which, I ſuppoſe, with humble Submiſſion, is this Caſe; but I ſuppoſe, we are not here tied up to formal Evidence; but 'tis our Duty, ſince the Houſe hath Commanded, to lay the whole Fact before you, and you are Judges what is Material, and what is not Material.

Sir Thomas Powys. 'Pleaſe, Sir, to ſpare me a little; for ſure this is no ſmall Matter. I did expect that they, if they intended to have ſupported this Evidence, would have mentioned ſome Author, ſome Caſe, or ſome Precedent where this has been before: —— But he makes ſuch a Diſtinction, I am mightily ſurpriſed at; for Mr. Recorder cites no one Inſtance, that ever he ſaw ſuch a Thing in his Life; nor cites one Book that hath ſuch Authority; but he gives you a Diſtinction, whether it be of his Side or ours, I muſt ſubmit to you; for he ſeems to agree, that in Caſes of Property, ſuch Evidence is not allowed; but in Caſes of Life, in which we ought to be more tender, he ſays, 'tis to be allowed. Sure, if it be not Evidence where Five Shillings only may be at Stake, I ſubmit to you, whether it ought to be admitted in the Caſe of Life? For my Part, I know nothing of it, if it be a Rule; but I always thought the Evidence ought to be more Clear and Full in the Caſe of Life, than in the Caſe of Property; but Mr. Recorder turns it upon us, and ſays, though it is not Evidence in Caſe where Property is concerned, yet 'tis Evidence in Caſe of Life: But I deſire he will ſhew any one Lawyer in England, that ever ſaid it but himſelf.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. I anſwer to what Mr. Serjeant Gould ſays, That this is an extraordinary Caſe, I will not pretend to ſay any thing, you are the proper Judges of that; we now oppoſe it in reſpect of the Rules of Juſtice. As to Mr. Recorder's Diſtinction between Civil and Criminal Cauſes; he hath admitted, that in Civil Cauſes it would not be allowed; and I hope you will be of Opinion, that it ought not to be admitted in Criminal. The Jury muſt go Secundum allegata & probata. I deſire to know what other Rules a Jury hath in Criminal Caſes? But they ſay, that a Juryman hath not as much upon his Oath in trying a Priſoner for his Life, as in trying an Action of Treſpaſs? Is not the Oath, You ſhall well and truly Try, &c. according to the Evidence you have heard? Now, I would know whether the Form of the Oath, which the Wiſdom of our Anceſtors hath thought fit to uſe for 1000 Years paſt, does not direct what ſhall be Evidence? Evidence of Prima Faciæ muſt be Evidence of living Perſons: I am ſpeaking for the Life of a Man, and for maintaining the Rules of Law, which I hope ſhall continue for ever: And that is, that the Examination of a Perſon that is abſent, ſhall not be read to ſupply his Teſtimony. What you ſhall think fit to do here, we muſt ſubmit to; but that 'tis allowed below, we muſt deny.

Mr. Recorder. Sir, I do, with humble Submiſſion, ſtand to what I ſaid: As to the Definition of Allegata & probata, in matter of Property, we agree with them; but as to Allegata & probata, in Matters Criminal, we muſt differ with them: I did ſay it before, and do ſay it again, with Submiſſion, That in many Caſes Criminal, there need no poſitive Evidence at all: and yet the Jury according to Allegata & probata, in that Caſe, may convict a Criminal. And I do ſay, with Submiſſion, that where there is no poſitive Proof at all, yet in that Caſe, many Criminals are, and ſtill will be convicted. I did inſtance before in the Caſe of Clipping and Coining, which are Matters ſo ſecretly practiſed, as 'tis very rare, there can be any poſitive Witneſs to prove the Fact: What is then the Method? Why we go by Circumſtances, by Information of other Perſons, by Tools, and other Inſtruments that are found; and though no Body ever ſee them do the Thing, yet they are convicted. We do not offer this Evidence to be as concluding Evidence, as if Goodman was here; but a Corroborating Evidence of what Captain Porter hath ſaid. If it did wholly depend upon this Evidence, it may be it might have no great Weight; but ſince there is other Evidence Viva Voce, and ſince you have been pleaſed to order us to lay before you all the Evidence, we humbly offer it to you, and pray it may be read.

Mr. Manley. I humbly pray they may withdraw,

Mr. Speaker. If you pleaſe to withdraw; but firſt I am required to ask, if on both Sides you inſiſt upon this Point?

And the Council for both Sides declared, they inſiſted on it.

And then withdrew.

Mr Manley. I ſhould not have preſumed to have given you this trouble of their withdrawing, but that a Thing is inſiſted on by the Council for the Bill, which I think is of the greateſt Conſequence to all the Freemen of England; 'tis true, the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall are not binding to the Legiſlative Power; but I would not have the Legiſlative Power to be governed by the private Senſe of any Man whatſoever; but by thoſe Rules that are the Rules of Juſtice and common Equity. God forbid that we ſhould, upon Suppoſitions, ſuppoſe our ſelves out of all the Rights of the Law. I never heard any Gentleman of the Long Robe, before the Learned Serjeant at the Bar, aſſert, that an Examination before a Juſtice of the Peace, could be read againſt a Man for his Life. 'Tis known to all that have looked into the A B C. of the Law, that it was never practis'd. 'Tis, true, in Equity, Depoſitions may be read, becauſe they are taken by the Conſent of all Parties; and 'tis as well a Depoſition of one Side, as of the other, and the Witneſſes may be croſs examined. But that is nothing to this Purpoſe.

Mr. Sloane. I believe I may ſave you a great deal of trouble in this Matter; for thoſe Gentlemen from the Bar that made Objections ſpake without Book, but I ſpeake by Book; (having my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales Pleas of the Crown in his Hand.) No leſs a Man than my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales (and I think he was paſt his A B C. of the Law; I know not how far this Gentleman is advanced.) In his Pleas of the Crown, in that Part where he ſhews what is Evidence to the Petit-Jury, he ſays, Firſt, By the Statute 1 & 2 Phil. and Mary. c. 13. and 2 & 3 Phil. and Mary. c. 12. the Juſtice hath Power to examine the Offender, and Informer; and ſo he goes on in ſeveral Particulars: And then, 5. He ſays, theſe Examinations, if the Party be dead or abſent, may be given in Evidence. I muſt allow, ſuch an Examination not of the ſame Authority as if the Witneſs was preſent it would be, becauſe he can't be croſs examined; but ſtill it muſt be of ſome Weight, and it muſt be read: But in this Caſe, 'tis of greater Weight than in that which my Lord Chief Juſtice puts; for he ſays, it would be Evidence, if the Party was dead; or if he was withdrawn without the Conſent of the Party againſt whom he is a Witneſs, and that comes to the Caſe in Chancery, every Day practiſed; That if any Perſon gets my Deeds and Evidences into his Hands, and he hath imbezled the Deeds, they ſhall be preſumed to ſay what I alledged, becauſe 'tis his Fault he does not produce them. So this withdrawing by the Inſtigation of Sir John Fenwick, is a ſtrong Preſumption, that what he Swears againſt Sir John Fenwick, is true.

Sir Richard Temple. No Man can give Evidence of any Depoſitions, nor was it ever admitted to be Evidence either upon the Party's Death or Abſence; and I would not have that Doctrine paſs, that we are not tied to the Rules of Law: My Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan, when he was of this Houſe, told us, we were not bound to the Forms of Law, but we were tied to the Rules of Law; and if you are not, how will you judge of this Crime? How will you judge it to be Treaſon in the worſt of Times? In the Tryal of my Lord Mordant, who was try'd before the High Court of Juſtice, they would not allow of this Piece of Evidence, though they had thrown aſide Juries. We are tied by the Rules of Law, or we are tied by nothing.

Sir Thomas Littleton. The worthy Member here tells us, we are tied by the Rules of Law, or we are tied by nothing. I hope he does not intend to put the Pun upon us, that was by a Noble Lord. You are tied by Rules or no Rules; if you are tied by no Rules, what Rules are you tied by? I think you may act by Rules, and yet admit of this Evidence. I told you before, I ſhould not reckon my ſelf ſo tied by the Rules of Law, but that I would hear all Evidence that ſhould be offered; and I do not think 'tis for our Honour to ſtifle any thing that may bring out the Truth. A worthy Lawyer ſaid, Let them produce one Evidence that is of the Recorder's Opinion; and a Member hath produced the Opinion of my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales: And I hope we ſhall not be debarr'd from the Satisfaction of hearing what they might hear in the Courts below. Here are two Witneſſes that have been examined againſt him, which the Jury did believe that found the Bill. If we can't have theſe two Witneſſes, let us have as much as we can. We have heard what one ſaid: We have an Opportunity of hearing what the other ſaid. No, ſays the the Gentlemen, we do not desire to be informed; but I believe it must come to that at last.

Sir Richard Temple. The Gentleman that spake last, insinuated, as if I had dropped something he could not understand. Give me leave to tell you, there was the Courts of the Precedents of Wales, when they urged Rules of Law, then they were a Court of Equity; and when they argued from Points of Equity, then they were tied up by the Rules of Law: And so gave Judgment neither according to the one nor the other; and so it was taken away by Act of Parliament.

Mr Boscawen. I have seen it my self, that a Justice of Peace has been examined himself, as to Depositions he hath taken, and I take it to be an ordinary Examination.

Mr Harcourt. Sir, I must say, if you were to pick all the Absurdities out of the Trials in the last Reign, you could not pick out more than has been endeavour'd by the King's Council to be imposed upon you this Day: This does in some measure convince me of what was said by another Gentleman the other Day, that it is much better to be tried by an Assembly of 400 Gentlemen, than at the Old-Baily. There was a Quotation of a learned Author, and the Gentleman read you what was Evidence, and what was not. And the Conclusion was, That these Depositions, if the Party was dead or absent, is Evidence. Why Sir, if these Depositions be Evidence if the Party be absent; then what are we doing of all this Day? If that be a certain Rule, there is no manner of need of applying in this extraordinary Way; but if you please to enter into the Consideration of that Point (I am neither afraid, nor unwilling to be informed.) If Gentlemen will take it, De bene esse, For better for worse, with all my Heart, but if you enter into that Matter, I will freely tell you my Opinion of it.

Sir Edward Seymour. It hath been made a Question, how far you are bound to pursue the Rules of Law? I suppose it is no new thing I am going to say, That Bills of Attainder, and Judgments of Attainder, have been reversed for no other Reason, but because the Parliament have not proceeded according to the Rules of Law: I will not say, you are bound by the Rules of inferiour Courts, but you must be bound by the Rules of Parliament, and by the Proceedings and Practice of Parliaments, which is the Law of Parliament. And then I would know, whether this House did admit of an Affidavit for Evidence? And the Reason is this, because by that you make this, which is the superiour Court, lame, without the Assistance of an inferiour Court.

Mr Geo. Rodney Bridges. The Matter before you is, whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty, in your Judgments, of this Conspiracy? And if so, I can't imagine why you should not take all the Information that is offered to you; and why not hear all the Circumstances of it: If you do not read this Affidavit, I do not say but 'tis a Kindness to Sir John Fenwick; but what Kindness will it be to the Country and Government?

Mr James Mountague. I hope you will not spend much more time about this, because the Law is so plain: If there be any thing in the Objection, 'tis this, That if it be Evidence, the other Courts below may proceed upon it: but that I take to be no Objection neither; for though it be Evidence, there are not two Witnesses; and the Courts below require two Witnesses, though there be other Evidence, and one Witness besides, so that you can't try him without two Witnesses; it would be admitted in the Case of Felony, and there two Witnesses are not required expresly by the Law. And I can tell you; upon my Reputation, I have seen it done several times. The Learned Gentleman tells you, my Lord Chief Justice Hales's Opinion is so, and that is grounded upon an Act of Parliament; and I think that is of greater Authority than any Judge; and therefore I think that Objection will vanish. He says, you have no Authority to receive Affidavits, but sure we must take Notice of Acts of Parliament; and if that requires Depositions to be taken, and to be Evidence against Criminals, we ought to take notice of it, so that what the Law makes to be Evidence will be good in this Place.

Mr Harley. I look upon this Matter under your Debates to be of the greatest Consequence to the Lives of the Subjects of England, that possibly can come before you: Gentlemen have given you several Reasons for reading these Depositions; one, that it was my Lord Chief Justice Hales's Opinion; another, that there is an Act of Parliament for it: Now, I think, it would be proper to join Issue in these two Points, If any Act of Parliament can be produced for this, then the Debate will be at an End; but if there be an Act positive in Fact against it, then I hope you will not receive it: And if my Lord Chief Justice Hales's Book, have not one Word relating to this, then I hope that will be no Argument. He begins his Chapter of Evidence, and says, that the Evidence to the Jury, in Cases of Treason, must be two Witnesses; and then comes to the Cases of Felony: But is that any Debate before us? And he tells you, that Informations might be taken of the Person himself, but that was not by the Common-Law, but was allowed of by particular Acts of Parliament; and then tells you, that his Information, and that Depositions before the Justice, were to be admitted, (but he was to be by:) But is this any thing to lead you? Have they brought any Statute that tells you, there must be two Witnesses in this Case? If you will take Notice of a Statute, you must take notice of a Statute that is in Point. If any Man suffers by one Witness, I believe all the World must say, he suffers unjustly: I think 'tis of the greatest Consequence to admit of Affidavits. Here it is, that the Boundaries are established for the Lives and Liberties of Mankind: And this is an Observation that is found in History, that those that have broke their Bounds down, it hath returned upon them to their Prejudice.

Sir Robert Richard. I am sure now we are not upon the Point of Reading, whether it be much or little, but upon the Point of Hearing, and that I speak to: And, I think, the Gentleman near the Table, did not mistake what the Bar said; for the Council on the other Side insisted positively, that neither by the Practice, nor by the Books, was a Deposition to be read as Evidence: Against that, the Gentleman near the Chair produced that Book, as to the Matter of Treason, every Parliament Man can remember, that you have made an Act, that there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of Treason. Now at the ſame time, it will be taken notice of, that you have taken Care in that Act, that the Proceedings of this Houſe ſhall not be tied up. The Gentleman tells you, of a Court that wavered between Law and Equity, and ſo came to nothing; and I am afraid, if we bring the Houſe of Commons down to the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, they will make nothing of us neither: I do not ſay, that this Paper ſhall be as ſtrong Evidence as if Goodman was at the Bar; but to ſay, it ſhall weigh nothing, I can't agree neither; I agree alſo to make a common Practice of reading Affidavits, will be of ill Conſequence: And if you take this to be a Matter of ſmall Conſequence, I am not for reading this Affidavit. Now I aim not at Sir John Fenwick's Blood, but the Safety of the King and Government: And I would not refuſe any Evidence in this Caſe, be it never ſo ſmall. Theſe Gentlemen ſpeak againſt a Matter being Evidence before it is read; 'tis offered as Evidence, if it be ſmall, or come to nothing, it is the better for the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr Pelham. I am indifferent whether I hear that Paper read, or no; but what is ſaid by a Learned Gentleman ſtartles me; ſays he, in Weſtminſter-Hall they are bound to the Evidence of two Witneſſes, and there this Evidence would not be proper, but here we are upon another Foot: I hope we are not here upon another Foot; I hope though here, we are not to be tried by the Chicanry of the Law, we are to be tried by the Equity and Subſtantial Reaſons of it: I deſire to know, if any one can be tried for Treaſon upon one Witneſs? And if we are not tied by the Rules of Law, we may hear any Evidence whatſoever, if the King's Council thinks it may ſatisfy your Fancies, it muſt be received.

Lord Cutts. I conceive, Gentlemen, we are out in the Way of arguing; I muſt put you in Mind that we are at the Bottom, only arguing againſt the Juriſdiction of this Houſe; and though that Matter hath been ſettled before, we are told very often of the Law, and Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; in anſwer to that, I muſt obſerve there are ſeveral Sorts of Laws; there is the Law of Nature, the Law of Nations, the Law of God, and there is the Legiſlative; and 'tis a Self-evident Maxim not to be contradicted, that no Superiour is to be circumſcribed by an Inferiour: And I would ask, if the Courts below are not inferiour to the Parliament? There is nothing can limit us, but the Law of Nature, the Law of God, and the Law of Parliaments; and though I cannot tell you very well what is the Law of Parliaments, yet no Gentleman hath ſaid any thing upon that Subject, that is, againſt the Queſtion before you: The Matter was in a Courſe of Law; but upon an extraordinary Accident, and for extraordinary Reaſons, 'tis brought before you. The Accident is the withdrawing of a Witneſs; the Reaſon is the Securing of the King, the Government, your ſelves, and Poſterity. I don't think any Man that ſpoke againſt it, is for favouring Sir John Fenwick; for I think this is the worſt way: I would appeal to every Man, what Prejudice 'tis to you to hear this Paper read? And it may be a Diſadvantage to you not to hear it.

Mr How. There have been many Arguments given for and againſt the Reading of this Paper; and if I did not take it that the Reading of this Paper could be of no uſe to the Judgment we are about to make, I ſhould be for the reading of it; either it amounts to a Proof of High Treaſon againſt Sir John Fenwick, or it ſignifies nothing to you. If you ſuppoſe it to weigh any thing, I can never agree to the reading of it; for 'tis only an Hearſay brought to convict a Man that is tried for his Life. But there is a greater Argument which weighs more than the Reaſon hath been urged; and that is, your Enemies will have an Advantage, and your Government is at Stake: But I don't take that to be ſo much an Argument of their Strength, as of their Weakneſs and Neglect; however when they prove that, I will ſee how far I can go. 'Tis ſaid, that in the worſt of Times, they would not convict a Man upon one Evidence; as to Sir John Fenwick, though he ſhould not be a good Engliſh Man, yet his Cauſe may be a good Engliſh Man's: The Queſtion is, whether there be more danger by the withdrawing of a Witneſs, and the eſcaping of Sir John Fenwick, or the withdrawing of the Witneſs and the convicting of Sir John Fenwick? Here they let Goodman (ſuch a Rake) go about, and he is gone; and now the Fate of the Government ſeems to depend upon it. The Precedent on the other Side is not ſo much to be feared; for I ſuppoſe future Governments will take care not to let a Witneſs go about the Streets again: But it may happen that certain Men, for aſſerting the Liberties of their Country, may be run upon by ill Governments, and Attempts made upon their Lives by falſe Witneſſes: But the Bill of Treaſon provides, that no Perſon ſhall be proſecuted without two Witneſſes. Now it may happen that they ſhall have no ſuch Witneſſes as can convince a Jury; (I believe this Man to be as much guilty, in my own Thoughts, as I believe any Thing in the World, and yet I will condemn no Man upon my private Fancies;) but here are two Witneſſes brought before the Grand Jury, and nothing is ſo eaſie as to get a Bill found by them (and that is all that is done by Goodman.) Now ſay they, if this ſhould come before a Pitit Jury, one of theſe Witneſſes may not be credited, ſo they will carry him away, and urge this for a Precedent, and ſo this Man may be convicted.

Mr Smith. I think we are come to the Debate of the Bill, inſtead of reading the Paper. Was the Queſtion, whether this Paper ſhould be allowed as a ſecond Witneſs? Then it would be a great Queſtion with me, whether it ſhould be Read; but the Queſtion, as to Coll. Sidney, was not whether the Paper ſhonld be read, but whether it ſhould ſupply the Place of a ſecond Witneſs? But your Debate is extraordinary; your Bill takes notice of Goodman being gone away, and now you won't take notice of what he hath left behind him, which I ſhould the rather be ſatisfied in, becauſe I ſaw a Gentleman ſoliciting at the Bar, that did endeavour to get him away. If Goodman had been brought a Priſoner to the Bar, I do not know, whether it might not have been reckoned as great a Fault, as now his having too much Liberty. It hath been cited as a great Lawyer's Opinion, that it might be given in Evidence; but he does not ſay what Weight ſhall be laid upon it.

Mr Pelham. I am ſorry that honourable Gentleman miſtook me ſo much; I thought I had ſpoke very plain; I told you, I was not againſt reading of the Paper, till the Learned Gentleman told you, you were not tied up as the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, to two Witneſſes. As to what I ſaid of Mr Sidney's Caſe, it was not againſt reading that Paper; but I ſaid; he did rely upon it as againſt Common Juſtice, to be attainted upon one Witneſs: And that Attainder you have thought fit to reverſe; and the Reaſon he gives for it, was becauſe it was impoſſible for a Man to make any Defence againſt one ſingle Witneſs.

man

Mr Att. Gen. The Matter you are now debating upon, is, whether theſe Papers ſhould be now Read. And Gentlemen have let themſelves into a Debate foreign to the Queſtion. A great many are againſt it upon this Argument, that they would not be of Opinion to condemn him, unleſs there were two Witneſſes: That is not the Queſtion, for I think no Man is ready to give his Opinion to Condemn or Acquit him, unleſs there were two Witneſſes: One Gentleman is againſt the reading of it, and yet believes Sir John Fenwick guilty. I muſt reſpite my Judgement, till I have heard his Defence: I think that the Council for Sir John Fenwick at the Bar, are very much miſtaken, when they ſaid, that ſuch a Thing as an Examination in Writing, was never read in any Court of Juſtice. I think that is in a great miſtake, and a good Authority hath been cited for it; and every one knows the Practice is otherwiſe; 'tis often allowed, that the Examinations before a Juſtice of Peace are read. The Queſtion is now, whether the Examination ſhall be read? If there do not appear another Witneſs to prove him guilty, you will debate that Matter then, Whether you will condemn him without two Witneſſes? You might as well have debated before, whether Porter ſhould be examined, becauſe no Man will condemn him without two Witneſſes, and therefore do not examine one. Why, we know not what further Witneſſes may be produced, if Sir John Fenwick was upon his Trial; I think this Information might have been admitted for Proof, if Goodman was out of the Way; but if it was admitted, unleſs there was another Witneſs produced, I believe the Court will tell the Jury, here are not two Witneſſes, and thereforey you muſt acquit him.

Sir William Coryton. I muſt crave leave to differ from that worthy Gentleman; I think this is the proper time to determine, whether this Evidence is to be admitted afterwards? Indeed you may determine, how far it is available. I thought both in Law and Juſtice, before I came into the Houſe, that this ought not to be admitted for Evidence. A Gentleman grounded his Argument, upon what? My Lord Chief Juſtice Hales's Opinion; but the Fate is, that my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales States the Difference in Caſes of Treaſon, and in Caſes of Felony. Now in Felony, they make uſe of Depoſitions; and the Reaſon is, becauſe 'tis more for the Advantage of the Priſoner than his Diſadvantage; for if the Witneſs differ from his Examination before the Juſtice of Peace, that turns to the Advantage of the Priſoner. In the Nature of the Thing it ſeems not to be reaſonable, for it is eaſie to turn the Tables. And ſuppoſe Goodman in the Place of Sir John Fenwick, and Sir John Fenwick in the Place of Goodman; it would be hard (take the Informations to be as they are) to admit them for Evidence; which in my Opinion, are great Reflections upon Perſons of great Honour and Worth.

Sir Charles Muſgrave. That which I perceive to be your Debate, is that upon which the Council withdrew; you heard it aſſerted, That there was no Inſtance in a Criminal Caſe, where an Affidavit was allowed for Evidence: And I think the Learned Council at the Bar, did not much inſiſt upon it; and yet I don't think they were ignorant of the Caſe quoted out of my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales, but they thought it was not applicable to this Buſineſs before the Houſe: But only related to Felonies, and when Depoſitions were taken in the Preſence of the Party. 'Tis ſaid, we are not tied up to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; and that Parliaments may Denominate Crimes after they are committed; but I never did hear, that the Parliament did take upon them to determine that to be Evidence which is not Evidence in any Court of the World. If you read this Paper to inform your ſelves, you admit that to be Evidence, which is no where elſe to be admitted. You are told, you are not tied to the Forms of inferiour Courts of Law, nor Equity: If you are not bound by them, you are bound by your own Conſtitutions. You are told, you are uſed to read Affidavits in Common Cauſes; but if my Memory ſerves me right, you have always had it oppoſed in this Houſe: Therefore I think, according to the Rules of your own Houſe, we ſhall not read Affidavits. Will you make a new Rule in this Caſe? Pray conſider the Conſequence of it hereafter. Suppoſe there came down Affidavits upon another Perſon, againſt a Great Man for High-Treaſon, Whether that may not be thought ſufficient for to govern your Judgments: I hope thoſe that hear me, will have a Care of the Matter. Why, by the Parity of Reaſon, may not two Affidavits do by the help of the Legiſlative Power? I would be glad to know, whether in the Caſe of an Impeachment, they ever heard of Affidavits being read? And this is much in that Nature; and therefore, why ſhould you admit of an Affidavit now, when the Party charged was not preſent, when that Affidavit was taken?

Sir Joſeph Williamſon. I am ſorry this Point coſts us ſo much time; the Gentleman that ſpake laſt, hath brought us to the Queſtion, How far you will admit this Affidavit (as they call it) to be read: I am of Opinion notwithſtanding all that hath been ſuggeſted, that it not only may be read, but that it ought to be read. None of the Caſes that have been inſtanced, comes up to the Caſe in Queſtion; all the Caſes that are brought, are from inferiour Courts, and the laſt that is brought, is from the Example and Uſage, in leſs conſiderable Caſes; and indeed of a different Nature.

This Bill of Attainder, is indeed a Thing ſo extraordinary (as hath been ſaid) as it never ought to be uſed but upon extraordinary Occaſions; and upon that Principle, all that is feared, is all anſwered and avoided. It is to be thought never to come, but upon the like Occaſion; and then God forbid, but they ſhould be governed by the like Precedent; and if that was proper to ſpeak now, which will be at the bottom of it, when we come to give Judgment, and we have time to conſider of it; I can't think we ſhall differ in many Voices. Whether it be Evidence, and how far it is ſo, is not now the Queſtion;

but

but the Queſtion is only, whether it be ſuch an Evidence as ought to be read? And all the Inconveniencies that have been alledged, depend only upon this, that it ſhould not be admitted in the ordinary Proceedings in the Courts of Juſtice. Now I ſay, there was a Power lodged in the Parliament of England to make a Man guilty of Treaſon, that was not ſo before; and that even in a Reign, when they came to determine what Treaſons were: They did not think it for the Safety of the Community of Mankind, but that there ſhould be a Power lodged in the whole, to declare that to be a Crime, that was no Crime before it was committed, giving them more than is asked here: For here can be no Queſtion, but as to the Forms of Proceedings. The Queſtion is not upon his Crime, that is no Queſtion; and I take it, that if upon any Occaſion 'tis to be juſtified in this, and the Law hath truſted the Parliament with a greater Power than now they are about to execute, and there are only Objections to it raiſed from another Place, which I think can never conclude in this.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. I am for reading of this Paper, though I don't think it Evidence equivalent with Viva Voce; nor do I think, that in like Caſes it ought to be admitted below; but I think, in your Proceedings in Parliament, it ought to be read, whether it be an Affidavit or not; and I am more of that Opinion, from what happened in a Caſe to Day. We had a diſpute, whether Porter was to be examined, becauſe the Teſtimony of a Man's Wife was not good below? But when that came to be examined, it was not the Teſtimony of a Man's Wife, but his own, better appeared in Evidence; and Clancy told Porter, he came from Fenwick himſelf, and therefore the Evidence which at firſt, for that Reaſon, was urged not to be heard, did amount to more when it came to the Proof. I would have this Paper read; not becauſe it ſhould ſupply the Place of a Witneſs: No, but becauſe you ſee he hath been indicted by the Evidence of Goodman and Porter, and the firſt is withdrawn; and by whoſe Means you have heard: And I would know, whether Goodman's Evidence did amount to accuſe him of the ſame? I do ſay, in your Power of Judging, you are not conſtrained to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall. And I would ſay, that for your Conſtitution, the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, are to be governed by the Letter of the Law; but there is lodged in the Legiſlative, a Power to judge thoſe Crimes that are ſheltred behind the Law; and I believe, if the ſeveral Attainders were examined, there was never any Attainder that went upon a more juſt Proceeding than this. I take the Crime to be a Plot with your Enemies, to bring in a foreign Power; and as if that was not ſufficient, he hath made a Falſe and Scandalous Confeſſion, to bring a Diſtruſt and Jealouſy among the King and his People; and he hath dallied and gain'd ſo much Time, as he hath had Opportunity to corrupt one of the Witneſſes; and therefore it would be hard, if no Law ſhould reach him. 'Tis ſaid, Why did not you keep the Witneſs? It would be hard, after a Perſon hath made a Confeſſion for the Good of the Kingdom, that he ſhould be always kept in Irons. We are debating of the Bill, while we are now only, purely to ſee what is in this Paper. I ſhould not have offered to have made uſe of this as a ſecond Witneſs; but the being an Affidavit or not, is not material in this Point; The Commons proceed upon Impeachments, without Affidavits: 'Tis offered as Evidence, That Goodman was a Witneſs againſt him (you have had proof of;) and that he hath been tamper'd with, to withdraw, by the Friends of this Gentleman. I do think we have gone more fairly and equally to work, than upon any of the Records of Attainder in your Journals.

Mr. Brotherton. The Queſtion is, Whether this Paper ſhall be read? Firſt, It hath not been proved before whom it was taken, nor nothing at all. It hath been objected, that there ought to be two Witneſſes, by the late Statute. But I muſt put you in mind, that it was ſo by the Statute of Edward V. and ſo was the common Law before; and my Lord Coke ſays, there muſt be two Witneſſes, and they brought Face to Face: And ſo goes to the Divine Law; and if it ſhould not be ſo, I will put you in mind of an Inconveniency. Eleven Witneſſes were produc'd before the Grand Jury; and when they came to give Evidence, Face to Face, before the Pitit Jury, the firſt Witneſs did not know the Criminal, that he had ſworn againſt. It was in the Caſe of Sir Rowland Stanley.

They mention a Paper againſt Algernoon Sidney; but that Paper was wrote by himſelf. 'Tis ſaid, this Houſe are not bound by the Rules of other Courts; for that Reaſon, they ought to give Rules for other Courts. Nothing is more common, than to ſay, Judgment was ſo in the Houſe of Lords, and that ſettles the Law in other Courts below.

Sir Godfrey Copley. Several Gentlemen have ſpoke to the reading this Paper; ſome have ſaid, That it ſhould be read as Evidence; ſome others are for reading of this Paper; but yet at the ſame time tells us, It is not to be looked upon as Evidence, at leaſt, not equivalent to a Witneſs: If the Paper be to be read at all, I would know for what Reaſon? If it be to have any ſway upon our Judgment; if it hath any Effect upon my Judgment, then in ſome meaſure it is equivalent to a Witneſs, when 'tis in the Nature of a Witneſs; and if it ſhould be read to ſupply the Defect of a Witneſs, then I would know, what the Conſequence of this might be? I do very well underſtand, that the Court of Parliament does take no Precedent from Weſtminſter-Hall; nor am I afraid of any Precedent they ſhould give to Weſtminſter-Hall: But I am afraid of a Precedent to future Parliaments. Suppoſe the Information of Sir John Fenwick, that hath been delivered in here, ſhould be produced as Evidence againſt any of thoſe Honourable Perſons that are charged in it, though I believe they are very Innocent; and ſome Knaves, or Raſcals, in future Reigns ſhould come in againſt them, and this Paper ſhould be brought to ſupply another Witneſs, what a Conſequence would that be?

Sir Henry Hobart. I muſt differ with the Gentleman that ſpake laſt; as to the Gentleman that ſpake before, I did not expect any thing to be quoted out of Lancaſhire againſt the Reading of it. I will tell you why I think this Paper ſhould be read; you have it ſuggeſted in the Bill, that Goodman was one of the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick; they are to make good the Suggeſtions, and this will ſhew, that Goodman was an Evidence. You are told the Danger of the Precedent, and there may come ill Reigns, and ill Parliaments; as to that, I ſhall only ſay, in a good Reign, and a good Parliament, there is no Danger; and in an ill Reign, and ill Parliament, they they will make Precedents without your giving of them. Mr. St. John tells you in his Arguments, 'tis true in inferiour Courts, by the Statute of Edward VI. they are bound by two Evidences Viva Voce; but you are not preſcribed by that here, but you are to judge in your own Conſciences as the Thing appears: I may ſay as another did upon another Occaſion, let it be read; Valeat quantum valere poteſt.

Sir Marmaduke Wyvell. I deſire to take notice of one Argument, that hath been made uſe of by one or two honourable Perſons; which is, that they tell us, that Goodman hath been tampered with by Sir John Fenwick: I remember no ſuch thing that hath been proved; but indeed it was ſaid, that Mr. Dighton offered Mr. Roe 100 l. a Year, to invalidate Mr. Goodman's Teſtimony.

Lord Caſtleton. Let me ask you this Queſtion. Whether if you read this Affidavit you read it as Evidence?

Mr. Soll. Gen. I deſire you would conſider what you did, before you ordered Captain Porter to go on with his Evidence, and did agree you would conſider of it afterwards. Some are for reading this Paper, and others are indifferent, whether it be read or no; and thoſe that are againſt reading of it, are againſt reading of it becauſe 'tis no Evidence: But that is no Reaſon why you ſhould not read it; for it is at moſt, but doing a vain Thing.

I think you have been told already, if it was inſiſted on below, it muſt be read; and the other Side muſt demurr. The Court might ſay, 'tis not Material, but it muſt be read before they can demurr: So that the Queſtion, Whether it is Evidence? muſt come afterwards; and if you go according to the Rigour of Law, with Submiſſion, it muſt be read.

Mr. Price. I did not deſign to trouble you in this Matter, but the Doctrine laid down by ſome Men of our Gown, ſurprizes me: 'Tis only an Argument, that the Court below ought to admit this Paper to be read; but there is no Precedent ſhewed, nor convincing Reaſon given, why the Courts ſhould admit it. The Queſtion is, Whether an Information taken before a Juſtice of Peace, ought to be read here? If it be to introduce a new Law, and make a new Crime, then you make a new Sort of Evidence: But if this be a Crime againſt an Act of Parliament, or Law in being, then you muſt take the Evidence the Law doth afford you, in the Nature of the Crime. The Charge here is a Charge of Treaſon againſt a known Law: But the great Argument is, this is an extraordinary Offence; that Sir John Fenwick, or his Lady, had a Hand in ſending Goodman away: 'Tis a Miſtake; and offering one Thing that is not Evidence, brings us to another; the Evidence of Clancy's tampering with him; Captain Porter does not ſay, that Sir John Fenwick employed him; only that Clancy ſaid ſo, which is but a Hearſay, and that is no Evidence, unleſs Clancy was at the Bar, and would ſay it.

In the next Place, it is ſaid, That there was a tampering by a Sollicitor: What is that? Is it not natural for a Sollicitor to ſay, is there any Objections to ſuch a Witneſs? Is it not natural for him to leſſen his Reputation if he can? Now you would have a Copy of an Information to be Evidence. 'Tis ſaid, 'tis Tanta Mount: If ſo, then the Courts of Weſtminſter ought to intermeddle with it, and not this Houſe. A Noble Lord mentioned to you the Law of Nature, the Law of Nations, and the Law of God; but he forgot one Law, which was moſt Material, and that is Marſhal Law; which if he had ſaid, does juſtifie the taking away a Man's Life upon extraordinary Evidence, he had ſaid right.

Mr. Speaker. The Queſtion is this, that the Information of Cordel Goodman, taken upon Oath, 24th of April, 1696. be read?

Which Queſtion being put, the Houſe divided.

Ayes, 218. Noes, 145.

So it paſſed in the Affimative; and Sir John Fenwick, and the Council, and Sollicitors on both Sides, were called in again.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, ſince you withdrew, the Houſe have conſidered of the Matter, upon which you did withdraw, and they have thought fit, that the Information of Cordel Goodman, taken upon Oath, before Mr. Vernon, 24th of April, 1696. be read.—— Clerk, read it.

Clerk of the Houſe of Commons. Reads—— This is Signed, Cordel Goodman, and ſworn 24th of April, 1696. before James Vernon.

About ſome two Years ſince, or better, I underſtood, Col. Parker was Reſident here, in order to engage ſeveral People for the Service of King James; and Captain Porter told me, he had a Mind to ſee me, which he accordingly did; where he told me, there would be an Invaſion, and that King James would be reſtored; and that in order to it, he had Commiſſion to levy Men, and to grant out Subordinate Commiſſions for a Regiment of Horſe, and did ask if I would accept of one, which I accordingly did. He likewiſe ſaid, he would ſee me as often as he could; and that Captain Porter and I ſhould receive Directions from him, from Time to Time upon ſeveral Meetings; and having received my Commiſſion, I underſtood what Captains were to be in the Regiment; which were Captain Porter, Sir William Parkyns, Mr Charnock, Sir Hugh Smithſon, Mr. Higgens, and my ſelf; and one Mi. Witherington, to be Lieutenant Colonel.

The Commiſſions were to be Blank when they were to be delivered, and to be filled up by the Captains, &c. I then came acquainted with Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Parkyns; and by them and Parker, Captain Porter and I were informed, that there was a great Body of Horſe to be ready in the North; but though I asked, yet they never named any Perſons to me, but ſaid, it was ſufficient I ſhould receive Orders, and a Roll to March, to Rendezvous upon Occaſion; and indeed I did not much preſs it, becauſe I did gather there were a great many concerned; and at this time, Captain Porter and I took a Houſe in the Chaſe, with Stables and Barns, fit for holding Horſes, and as a fit Place to meet, upon Orders given us to March, which were then daily expected.

Sometime after this, Colonel Parker was taken, and being Committed to the Tower, he made his Eſcape; and after that, I ſaw him, and then he told me, he would be ſure to correſpond with me and Porter; and I ſhould receive his Letters of Mr. Charnock, or Mr. Johnſon, and he accordingly did; and in his Letters he ſtill gave us

Hopes,

Hopes, and ſaid, he would certainly ſend us notice to be in readineſs Time enough, to be ſerviceable to the Deſign of the Invaſion.

The laſt Letters I received from Parker, gave me Advice, That he doubted not, but the Cauſe would come to a Hearing as this Eaſter Term; and he ſhould write no more, but bring the Orders himſelf; upon which I went to Charnock, and he told me, he did expect him here in a ſhort time: But always, or moſt commonly in his Letters, he told me, for a Sign, That when the Thoulon Fleet ſhould join the Breſt Fleet, I might certainly depend, that we ſhould be invaded here.

During theſe Tranſactions, Captain Porter complained, that ſomething he was ſending to Lancaſhire, had miſcarried; he deſired me to ſet by two Boxes, which I looked not into, but ſuppoſed them to be Arms, and I did ſet them by for him: I had not bought any Arms, but had beſpoke ſome of one Perry, a Gunſmith, who ſaid, I ſhould have them at a Week's Warning.

After Parker's having made his Eſcape, and getting into France, Mr. Charnock came to me, ſometime before the King's going to Flanders, and ſaid, he had ſomething to propoſe to me; and deſired me to go along with him, which I did; and he brought me to one Mr. Waugh, who ſaid, he expected a Commiſſion from King James, to ſeize King William; accordingly we went to the Chocolate-Houſe in St. James's-ſtreet: and after ſome Diſcourſe about the Commiſſion he ſaid he expected, we appointed another Meeting at that Place, and adjourned from thence to my Houſe in Brownloe-ſtreet, where was preſent, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter, Mr. Waugh, Major Matthews, and Mr. Donelagh. The Subject of our Diſcourſe was, about the Surprizing and Seizing the King, as he came from Richmond; and after ſeveral Ways propoſed to that Purpoſe, I particularly asked; Suppoſe that the King were in our Power, What then? For we ought to have regard to ſome End or other in ſuch an Undertaking; for I was not willing to offer any thing to his Perſon. Mr. Waugh ſaid, we might have a Coach, and convey him away; and he ſaid, he was aſſured of a Fort to be delivered to him, and put into his Hands (to the beſt of my Remembrance, it was Deal) which might give us Shelter till we might find Opportunity to carry him into France by Shipping. I muſt confeſs, I did ſee very little Probability in what he ſaid, neither did I believe, that he would receive any ſuch Commiſſion, as he ſaid he expected: (For about two Years ſince, I remember I ſaw Sir George Berkeley, with Col. Fountain, and Mr. Porter; Sir George was then going over to France, and it was the only Time that ever I ſaw him; and then Captain Porter and I did deſire, that if King James deſigned any ſuch thing as Seizing King William, he would ſend over a Commiſſion, and a Pardon withal in Caſe of an Accident; which Meſſage Sir George carried over, and King James refuſed to ſend it.) However, we had another Meeting after that at my Houſe, by which time, he ſaid, he would ſhew us the Commiſſion, and facilitate the Deſign; it was at a Houſe behind the Temple, where the aforeſaid Company met, and Mr. Waugh brought with him one Mr. Hays, who, he ſaid, could furniſh us with a Ship, which would be ready to tranſport us after we had ſeized the King; but upon Diſcourſe with Mr. Hays, we found that the Demands were ſo exorbitant, and not in poſſibility of being complyed withal; and beſides, no Order nor Commiſſion being produced, we did deſiſt then; for Captain Porter, and Major Matthews, and I, did declare we would not meddle without ſight of the Commiſſion. After ther this, Captain Porter and I talked of having a Veſſel, and ſending Le Rue and Charnock about it. We met at the Fountain by the Temple-Gate, and Sir William Parkyns was there; and during the Time of our being there, one called Sir William out, and Sir William called out Porter, who came in, and ſaid, there was a Gentleman that could help us in this Affair; who he was, I know not; I believe Captain Porter may, for I ſaw him not: But all this proved ineffectual, for the King went away ſuddenly, and no Commiſſion ever came. And by Letters from France, I underſtood King James was angry, that they uſed his Name to what he had not promiſed; and Porter and I wrote over by his Order, the Truth of the whole Matter.

Sometime after this, Captain Porter, the Earl of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, and Sir John Fenwick, and others, met about ſending over ſome Propoſals to K. James, to expedite an Invaſion; and likewiſe Captain Porter ſaid, it was proper I ſhould be there, for he had engaged for me. I told him, I would come, and at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, I found the Perſons above-named, together with my Lord Montgomery, and one Mr. Cook.

The Effect of their Conſultation was, the ſending Mr. Charnock with a Meſſage to this Purpoſe; That if the King of France could ſpare ſuch a Number of Foot, and ſo many Dragoons, amounting to about 12 or 15000, or thereabouts, in all: That then upon Notice given, that every particular Man there, was to furniſh ſuch a Number of Horſe; ſome more, ſome leſs, to be ready to ſuccour the Forces from France, when Landed. Mr. Charnock went and returned with a Refuſal, that Forces could not be ſpared; Sir John Freind, and my Lord Aylisbury were of Opinion, that if King James would venture hither with ſome ſmall Retinue, he had Friends enough to appear for him, without any Foreign Forces; but that was held in doubt.

I uſed afterwards to ſee my Lord Aylesbury; I always asked what News he heard? He ſaid, when he received any Orders he ſhould know; for he having been in France (as he did not deny) I ſuppoſed him not to be ignorant of what was intended.

And to the better facilitating an Invaſion, Sir John Fenwick uſed to ſend over a Liſt of the Forces, and how they were quartered, and what were in Garriſon, and what otherways diſpoſed of: He having made a Miſtake in the Account, Parker did by Letter, deſire me to try if I could procure ſuch an Account; which I accordingly did of one Gibſon, a Clerk in the Office, and ſent it over frequently.

After the Eſcape of Parker out of the Tower, Sir John Fenwick, when I asked him, how he got away, and how much Money was given? He ſaid, 200 l. promiſed, and 300 l. given; for when a Perſon came in and told him, he had brought him Liberty, and was to have 200 l. he replied, you ſhall have 300 l. and it was made good to him afterwards.

Cordell Goodman.

Much

Much about the ſame time, I uſed now and then, with Captain Porter, to be with Sir John Fenwick, and it was agreed, that if Parker ſhould not bring us timely Orders, that what Forces we could bring in, (viz.) Porter and I, we were to take Orders from Sir John Fenwick; this we offered him, and he kindly accepted: And then he ſaid, That he believed, moſt of my Lord Oxford's Regiment would go to King James. When I told Mr Paradiſe had promiſed to bring in 7 or 8 to me, and that Mr. Aynſworth was to bring in 20, and Parker had ſaid, if I made 30, it was ſufficient for me.

As to keeping the Horſes, Sir John ſaid, it was dangerous, and they would certainly be Seized; but the beſt Way was, to have a Liſt of what Horſes were in and about the London Stables.

Captain Porter and I, ſent accordingly to view the Stables. I ſent Mr Reyhough, and Captain Porter ſent Cranborn, and they took an Account.

Cordell Goodman.

Jurat. 24. April, 1696. Coram me, Ja. Vernon.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Now Mr. Speaker, if you pleaſe, we will call ſome of the Grand Jury that will give you an Account what Evidence they found the Bill upon ——— Mr. Gracedue, you were one of the Grand Jury that found this Bill?

Mr. Gracedue. Yes, Sir.

Sir Thomas Powys. This is ſo far from being Evidence, that I think 'tis the Oath of the Grand Jury, that they ſhall not diſcloſe or diſcover the King's Secrets. The Bill of Indictment is but an Accuſation. A Bill of Indictment cannot be given in Evidence againſt a Man for the leaſt Crime ſoever. It can't be given in Evidence to be credited, becauſe 'tis but an Accuſation; and by Conſequence, whatever any Witneſs ſays at that time, can go no farther. When a Perſon comes upon his Tryal; they can't ſo much as reſort to any Thing that is ſworn before the Grand Jury, nor make uſe of it.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. We humbly oppoſe this Evidence; becauſe the Gentlemen can give no Inſtance either in their Reading or Obſervation, that the Teſtimony that hath been given before a Grand Jury, hath been given in Evidence to a Petit Jury: And 'tis Part of the Oath of a Grand Jury-Man, that it ſhould not be diſcloſed. We do not ſay, it will bind your Houſe, but I hope it will be Evidence to you, that 'tis not agreeable to the Rules of Law.

Members. Go on, go on.

Mr. Speaker. Mr Gracedue, Will you give the Houſe an Account, who were the Witneſſes before you upon finding the Bill?

Mr. Gracedue. The Witneſſes before us, were Captain Porter, and Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Speaker. Can you remember ſo well, as to give an Account to this Houſe of what Evidence Mr. Goodman gave.

Mr. Gracedue. Yes, I think I can. When he came before us, he told us, That he was at a Meeting at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, where there was Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, Captain Porter, Mr. Charnock, and others; and the Buſineſs was to ſend Mr. Charnock over to France, to procure Men to invade this Kingdom; and 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe was propoſed. He told us, the Reſult of that Conſult was, that if France would ſupply 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, it would be a ſufficient Power to come over; and that they would ſupply 2000 Horſe among themſelves. Upon which Charnock replied, Gentlemen, you ſend me over upon Uncertainties; you ſay, you will ſupply 2000 Horſe, but unleſs you give me ſome Aſſurance, I can't, nor will I go. And the Queſtion was propoſed to all of them, if they would make good their Proportion, and they promiſed ſingly: Says I, did Sir John Fenwick promiſe? And he ſaid, Yes. Says I, Did my Lord Montgomery? And he ſaid, Yes. He was asked, Who elſe? But, ſays he, 'tis not a Queſtion for you to ask us; and for that he referred himſelf to me: For, he ſaid, he was not bound to anſwer further, having proved the Indictment.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. We deſire Mr. Joſhua Meade may be asked to the like Purpoſe. Were you one of the Jury that found the Bill againſt Sir John Fenwick?

Mr. Meade. Yea.

Mr. Speaker. Pray, who were the Witneſſes before you upon finding of the Bill?

Mr. Meade. There was Captain Porter, and Mr. Goodman, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Can you remember what Mr. Goodman teſtified then?

Mr. Meade. Mr. Goodman did then teſtify, That Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, &c. were at the King's-Head Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet; and Charnock, and the reſt there did conſult how to bring in their old Maſter; as to Charnock, That they agreed to ſend him over to King James, to know whether the French King could furniſh them with 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, and that they would endeavour to meet him with 2000 Horſe. Hereupon Charnock (Goodman ſaid) put it to every Man of them, to know if they were all of one Mind; and they all ſaid they were. This he did prove, and this is all I can remember.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. We have many more to the ſame Purpoſe, if the Houſe think fit to hear them.

Members. No, no.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. We will go thus much further; That upon the Tryal of Mr. Cook, wherein there was Evidence given by this Gentleman, and in that this Gentleman that is the Priſoner at the Bar was particularly named to be concerned, we will call them that were preſent there at the giving of the Evidence: But firſt, we deſire to read the Record of Cook's Conviction.

Thereupon a Motion was made for the Council to withdraw; and being withdrawn, a Motion was made for Candles, which paſſed in the Affirmative without a Diviſion, in regard it being dark without Candles, there could be no Motion made for adjourning the Debate, or remanding the Priſoner.

Afterwards a Motion being made for adjourning the Houſe till to Morrow Morning, the Houſe divided.

Ayes 141. Noes 163.

And ſo it paſſed in the Negative; and Sir John Fenwick, and the Council, and Sollicitors, were brought in again to the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, the laſt Evidence you were about to offer was, That of the Record of Mr. Cook.

Sir Thomas Powys. Mr Speaker, we oppoſe that being offered as Evidence; as I underſtand it, they are going to give in Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick what was ſworn againſt Mr. Cook; that is not admitted in the Courts below; for, according to that Method, the Tryal of one in the Company would be the Tryal of all the reſt. This was never allowed in any other Caſe, and I hope you will not allow it here.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. The Indictment is, that they did conſult together, but their Crimes are ſeveral; if they had been mentioned in one Indictment, and one had been tried at one time, and the other at another, it would not have been allowed that they ſhould give in Evidence againſt the one, what had been ſworn againſt the other: For though their Charge is by the ſame Witneſs, and for a Fact done at the ſame time, yet the Defence of the Parties may be different; and it cannot be expected, that we, on the behalf of Sir John Fenwick, are prepared to give an Anſwer, in regard of any thing that was Sworn againſt Mr. Cook.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, you hear the Exception.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. We hope in this Caſe we ſhall go on with our Evidence, as offered and propoſed to this Houſe. Theſe Gentlemen have made their Objections, as if they were below in the inferiour Courts; but we are here now before you, in a Parliamentary Way; and what is that which brings us here, but becauſe there is a Witneſs withdrawn by Artifice, ſo that we cannot produce him? And therefore we come, and humbly apply our ſelves to this Honourable Houſe. Now, Sir, you are Judges of the Method of coming at the Truth, and ſupplying that Defect? if we could produce him, there would be an End of the Matter; but in this Caſe we are in the Judgment of this Honourable Houſe, Whether we ſhall not give ſuch Evidence as he hath given upon his Oath, though in other Caſes it is not admitted.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. When we produced the Record of Conviction, we only produced it to ſhew you there was ſuch a Tryal; and by that means to let us in, to ſhew you what was Sworn by Mr. Goodman at that Tryal.

Then upon the Motion of Colonel Granvil, and Sir Richard Temple, Sir John Fenwick, and the Council, and Sollicitors, withdrew.

Sir Richard Temple. If I did not believe what is now offered, is what was never offered before, and of dangerous Conſequence to every one here, I would not have troubled you at this time of Night. There has nothing been offered that this hath ever been done. They ſay, It hath not been done in Inferiour Courts: Pray let us ſee if ever it hath been done in Parliament, That what was given in Evidence at another Tryal, ſhould be given in Evidence againſt another Perſon here, when this Perſon was not by, and had no Opportunity to defend himſelf againſt it; I am ſure it was never done yet.

Sir Thomas Mompeſſon. This Gentleman complains this was never done. When the Duke of Monmouth was Impeached, the Bill was read three times in one Day, and that Gentleman moved for the Impeachment.

Sir Richard Temple. Here were three Witneſſes that did declare they ſaw him in actual Rebellion, at the Head of an Army; but I hope I am not to anſwer for all the Proceedings then.

Colonel Granvil. When I ſaw them going on to make uſe of that as Evidence, which was never allowed in any Court; I thought I ought to move for them to withdraw. I ſhall not give my Conſent to have it read, till ſome Body ſatisfies me 'tis good Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick: I can't ſee how you can admit this for Evidence: Are we to read all the Tryals that are upon this Plot? Therefore I deſire you will bid them produce what is Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, and not to trifle with you.

Sir Thomas Littleton. If you proceed in this manner, I know not when you will have done. They do not tell you, they produce this as Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick; nor do I take this to be the only Evidence to prove him guilty. If nothing but exact Proof would have ſatisfied, this Bill would not have been brought in: But this is to make as good Proof as the Nature of the Thing will bear; you have heard ſeveral Things before, in Relation to Goodman, that poſſibly might ſtrictly be no more Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick than this, as Goodman's being withdrawn. Firſt, they offered to prove that he was gone; that it was ſuſpicious that Sir John Fenwick was privy to his going: Why did you admit the Evidence of what he ſaid to the Grand Jury? What is this, but to give Evidence of what he ſaid to the Petit Jury, wherein the Grand Jury and Petit Jury have both believed him?

Mr. Harley. I think if you had come to one Determination before you had entered upon this Matter, you had very much ſhortned your Buſineſs; that is, that you would not expect ſuch Proof as is neceſſary at Law; and it may be if you would come to it now, it would ſave you time: For I find by the Council, that what is ſworn againſt another Man, at another time, would not be Evidence at Law againſt the Priſoner; and I believe if he ſhould except to a Jury-Man, becauſe he was upon Cook's Tryal, it would not be allowed as a good Exception, and he would be told, he was no way concerned in another's Tryal.

Mr. How. 'Tis a ſtrange Sort of Evidence that is offered here, and 'tis a ſtrange way of bringing it in. The Houſe made nothing lately of Hearſay, and yet now Hearſay muſt be taken for Evidence. I have heard that the Grand Jury take an Oath not to diſcover what was ſworn before them; this ſince the Grand Jury have ſubjected themſelves to (yet you have brought them here as Witneſſes to give an Account of what was ſworn before them,) which I am afraid is a Breach of their Oath, it ſhall make me give leſs Credit to what they ſay. We are here to attaint a Man, but we muſt not talk of Proof; that is a ſtrange Thing. I am ſure, if you do not find it with Proof, it would be againſt Proof. Shall I be plain with you? I queſtion if this Houſe had heard what Goodman ſwore at that Tryal, and what was alledged againſt it, whether this Houſe would have been of that Juries Mind: For I have heard that two or three did ſwear, he was not at the Place at the time he ſwore he was, as plain as a Negative could be ſworn.

Mr.

Mr. Harcourt. If you please to let the King's Council go on upon this, you will save a great deal of Time, and prevent any Exception to any Evidence afterwards: For 'tis not in the Power of Man to offer any Thing more absurd. I don't believe that ever any Man heard of such a Thing offered, That a Record should be given in Evidence against a Man, that is no Manner of Party to the Record: I am sure never any such Thing was attempted before. As for the other Things, you had something offered that made it seem doubtful how far you should give Credit to them. Upon those Matters, the Council at the Bar for the King told you, That there was some Pretence that it was Law, and practised below, and a Book was produced to justify it: But in this Case, if there be Book, Practice, Precedent, or any Thing to justify it, I will sit down; the Answer made it ten times worse. The Gentleman said, he would not have the Record read; but upon that Record to prove what was sworn at the Tryal, Why, does that concern any Person in the World but Cook?

Lord Cutts. If the worthy Gentleman that spake last had made out all his Propositions with Clearness, equal to the Assurance with which he asserted them, they would have more Weight: But I will say, That which he hath asserted does not appear to me so. I take this to be the same Thing in some Measure debated over again: It hath been told you, That this House are to give their Judgment in a Matter of great Importance; and therefore I think 'tis fit that all the whole Matter should be laid before them; when that is done, they only are the Judges of what Weight it is.

Mr. Sloane. I go along with those Gentlemen, That this is no sort of Evidence against Sir John Fenwick: But our Question is about a Witness that is withdrawn, and to know what he said, and how he was believed when he was here. How he is gone, we have seen already; and therefore though I think the Verdict against Cook, nor nothing of that, can be given in Evidence against Sir John Fenwick; but yet if he hath withdrawn the Witness, and the Credit of him is at Stake, as you have heard Evidence of what he said upon Oath, before the Tryal came on, by the same Reason you may hear what he said at the Tryal.

Mr. Pelham. I think it would shorten our Debates, if we were truly satisfied about what we are a doing; That we are Trying Sir John Fenwick, as we were told at the Bar; he called it a Tryal, and 'tis a Tryal. I must confess I was in hopes I should never sit in the House of Commons to try any Body; I did not think it the Business of us; if I had, I would not have come hither: But since we are come into it, is any Thing more natural, than to examine whether this Evidence be proper, or such Evidence as any Court would allow of?

Sir William Williams. I suppose there is no Gentleman of our Profession that hath seen any Record will say, That this hath been offered in any Court of Law: I believe, if he was upon his Tryal upon the Indictment, no Body will say it would be read against him. Let us consider how many Judgments that have been given hastily, in the late Reigns, have been reversed. What is the Reason that is given for it? It is for receiving that for Evidence which was not Evidence in the Law: Your Bill of Right takes Notice of it.

Mr. Sollicitor General. I did not think this Matter would have held you a quarter of an Hour: But if Gentlemen will debate upon the same Matter that hath been over-ruled twice before; all that is to be proved by this Record is, That one Peter Cook was attainted for High Treason; if the Council on the other Side would have owned Peter Cook to have been Attainted, you had not been troubled to have the Record brought to the Table. But as to what they say, That Sir John Fenwick was no Party to the Record, and therefore it can be no Evidence against him; I suppose it would be Evidence for him. Suppose Goodman had sworn he never had been at the King's-Head Tavern, would not the Prisoner have produced a Witness to prove what he had sworn? Then I would put you in mind of a Case, because there is a Nicety in this Matter without any Reason: It was in the Tryal of Alderman Cornish; he was Indicted and Tryed, and the great Fact was in the House of one Sheperd; there was a Witness against him, one Rumsey, who swore, &c. Says Mr. Cornish, he was a Witness at my Lord Russel's Tryal, and he did not name me to be one; and it went so far, That when Sheperd said, I was in the Room; he stood up and said, No, it was read before I came in. Mr. Cornish would have produced a Witness to have proved what Rumsey said; says the Court, We cannot admit of that; for it does not appear to us, that my Lord Russel was ever tryed for High Treason; and there, upon that Slip, was that Gentleman destroyed. I pray it may be read; I have given no Opinion of what Force it is, but I think it depends upon the same Reason; nay, you have more Reason to do it, than any Thing you have read to Day.

Mr. Price. 'Tis very much pressed, That you should read that, which when Read, they say, is not Evidence, but only to introduce another Matter. If it be not Evidence, upon what Account shall they read it? But if it introduce other Evidence, this is an Ingredient and Part of that Evidence. Now suppose the Record should be produced, and they should bring Witness to say what Goodman swore at that Tryal; would that be Evidence? No sure, for no Body ever pretends that this hath been admitted either at Law, or in Parliament. By what Law? By what Rule? By what Measure of Reason are we to proceed in this House? If you would permit to be produced a Record of Conviction against a Third Person, and this to be Evidence against one that is not present; I think you may as well admit to be produced a Record of the Conviction of any other concerned in the Assassination. But I stood up Principally upon the Observation made at the Bar, and he put you that which he takes to be a sinister Case; for, says he, suppose Sir John Fenwick had brought this Record, and made use of it to take off Goodman's Testimony, should it not be Evidence? Yes, no doubt of it, and there is the Distinction: 'Tis one Thing where you are to give in a Record to Convict and Attaint a Person; and another Thing where it is to prove a Man perjured, and to invalidate his Testimony; for when Evidence is brought against a Prisoner, he hath no Way to lessen his Evidence but what is Collateral; if it be upon a Tryal when another is concerned, if the Witness gave a contrary Evidence, or the Party was acquitted, then the Record may be made use of against the Witness: But it differs very much, where you bring Evidence to take off the Credit of a Witness, and where you bring it to Convict or Attaint a Person. The Case of Cornish, that turns upon the same Reason; and it was only to be uſed to take off the Teſtimony of Rumſey; but if this Record of the Conviction of Cook be brought to any Purpoſe now; 'tis to ſatisfy your Conſciences, that Goodman gave a good Teſtimony at that Tryal; and I wonder the Serjeants ſhould offer it, who are Sworn to offer nothing in Violation of the Law.

Dr. Oxenden. If I did not think this Queſtion had been determined before, I ſhould not trouble you in this Debate, for did not we receive what Goodman depoſed upon Oath before a Juſtice of Peace? Was it read becauſe it was taken in Writing, or becauſe it was his Evidence? Now they offer you an Evidence of his, that was not put into Writing, but they will prove by Witneſs; what is the Difference? If it had been taken down in Writing, it muſt have been admitted as the ſame was before.

Sir Marmaduke Wyvell. That worthy Gentleman deſired to know the Difference, &c. That Depoſition was againſt Sir John Fenwick, but this Evidence that they offer now, was given againſt Peter Cook.

Mr. Att. General. You are now upon a Debate, Whether you ſhall read the Conviction of Peter Cook? I do agree with thoſe Gentlemen that have ſpoke of this Matter, that the Conviction of Cook, nor any Evidence upon his Conviction, can be Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick. I don't pretend that this is: Nor don't believe that this is offered upon any ſuch Conſideration; but 'tis one of the Allegations of the Bill, that ſeveral of theſe Gentlemen were preſent at this Conſult, of which Sir John Fenwick is accuſed; therefore I ſuppoſe the Council for the Bill, did offer this Record to make good that Allegation, and ſo think it may be properly offered, unleſs it be admitted: I don't ſee how it can be made good further; I do not think it proper to examine to what Goodman Swore at Cook's Tryal.

Sir William Williamſon. I ſpeak only to ſhew my Concurrence with the Attorney General; Mr. Attorney hath Stated it right no doubt, as to the Conviction of this Perſon; as Mr. Attorney offers it, it may be proper enough.

Members. Call them in, call them in.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave. I hear Gentlemen ſay, Call them in; do you intend when you call them in to read this Record? I think the learned Gentleman hath ſtated it, That it ought not to be read as Evidence. Now the Council for Sir John Fenwick ſaid, they hoped you would not ſuffer it to be read as Evidence againſt the Priſoner: I never heard the Council ſay, that Cook was not Attainted, nor ever heard that any Man did doubt it; then if it be no Controverſy between the Council, to what End is it brought hither? Do you think that the Steps that are urged to be taken in this Caſe, will not be a Precedent for Poſterity? I take it that there is a great deal of difference between the Paper you have read, and this Record, and therefore if you call in the Council, I hope you will not gratifie them in reading of it.

Mr. Edward Harley. Before you call the Council in, I humbly propoſe it to you to conſider to what Purpoſe this Record ſhould be read; if as Evidence, you are through all the Courſe of Proof that is ſettled by the Common Law, and Statute Law; for it hath been in all Tryals oppoſed to give in Evidence that which is improper, becauſe it ſhould not influence the Jury. I would not have it ſaid, that under the Reign of King William, any Thing was done contrary to the Law and Conſtitution of the Nation. There hath been an Inſtance given of the Tryal of Mr. Corniſh, though that Caſe does not come up to it; but we know what was done in thoſe Reigns hath been juſtly reflected upon: And I hope you will not make a Precedent here, to encourage Judges to do what is againſt Law.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, This is your Queſtion, That the Record of the Conviction of Peter Cook ſhall be read.

Which Queſtion being put, the Houſe divided.

Ayes 181. Noes 110.

So it paſſed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen you have had another Queſtion that hath been the Subject of your Debate, That the Council for the Bill be admitted to give Evidence, as to what Goodman ſwore againſt Peter Cook.

Mr. Robert Harley. The Learned Gentleman did tell you, That what Goodman ſaid at that Tryal, ought not to be given in Evidence; and therefore, I think, Gentlemen won't inſiſt upon that, that is, carrying it too far; and I think, he opened it, that it was only to prove that Cook was Attainted, and to make uſe of it no further.

Mr. Speaker. Is it then your Pleaſure, that Sir John Fenwick and his Council be called in?

Which Queſtion being put, it paſſed in the Affirmative, and accordingly they were called in.

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, The Houſe hath determined to have this Record read, not as Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, but to prove the Allegations in the Bill, and that Cook was Attainted.

Read the Record.

Accordingly that Record was read by the Clerk.

Sir Barthol. Shower. We are ſure the Record does not prove that he was Convicted upon Goodman's Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Look upon the Indictment.

Sir Thomas Powys. It appears by that, that Goodman was a Witneſs upon the Indictment; but it does not prove by that, that he was a Witneſs upon the Tryal.

Mr. Serj. Gould. May it pleaſe you then, Mr. Speaker, thus far 'tis agreed, that here is a Record of the Conviction of Cook; and 'tis agreed, and the Record ſpeaks it, That Goodman was a Witneſs, for it is indorſed upon the Indictment. Now the main Diſpute is, Whether Goodman's Evidence did prevail to Convict Cook upon that Indictment? And for that we ſhall apply our ſelves. Call our Evidence, ſome of the Jury, and ſome that were then Witneſſes, and they will give you an Account upon what Evidence that Conviction was.

Sir Thomas Powys. In what you were pleaſed to acquaint us at our laſt coming in, you were pleaſed to give ſuch a Reaſon in Relation to the Reading of this Record, that if we had heard it before, we would not have troubled you to have withdrawn; for it was proper to make out the Allegations of the Bill, and that Cook was Convicted; but we apprehend, they can carry it no further than what they have applied it to. But I perceive from hence, the Gentlemen of the other Side are encouraged to proceed to another Piece of Evidence, ſuch they call it; they are going to call the Witneſſes to prove what was ſworn at the Tryal of Cook, where Sir John Fenwick, nor no Perſon on his behalf, was preſent, either to hear, or obſerve, or croſs examine, or offer any Thing to their Credit, which poſſibly he might be furniſhed with, though Cook was not; I hope that will be no more allowed of as Evidence here, than in any other Place.

Sir Barthol. Shower. We humbly oppoſe their calling of Witneſſes to give this Account of the Evidence given at Cook's Tryal. And we ſubmit it to your Conſideration, whether you will think it Juſt, that the Evidence that is given with reſpect to one Man only, ſhall conclude another Perſon that ſtands at the Bar in defence of his Life; or that it ſhall be given againſt him. Every Man's Defence is ſeveral; and we oppoſed the Reading of the Record before, and ſo do now the calling of any Witneſſes to this Purpoſe, for the ſame Reaſon.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. We call theſe Witneſſes for no other Purpoſe, but to prove, that Goodman, what he did inform by that Paper, he did Swear before a Jury.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you muſt withdraw.

Accordingly they withdrew.

Mr. Manley. I thank God I have that regard for the Laws of England, and to every Engliſh-man's Life, that when I ſee any Thing attempted againſt it, I muſt give my Teſtimony againſt it; I did not believe they would have inſiſted on it, for there was a Gentleman that ſate near to you, who in the cloſe of his Debate, I thought had ſatisfied every Body, That this was a Thing that ought not to be read; if they ſhould do it, it would be a Thing of dreadful Conſequence; if you ſhould admit of every Thing theſe Gentlemen that come in for the Bill offer, I know not where it will end. How will it appear, that upon Goodman's Evidence the Jury found Cook guilty? For they might find Cook guilty, and yet give no Credit to Goodman; for he was contradicted materially, and there might be other Evidence upon which they might find him guilty, and yet lay aſide the Evidence given by Goodman: But whether one Way or the other, we can't tell. They tell us, We are not to be guided by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, but we are to be governed by the Rules of Juſtice; and we are not at this time to ſeek a Way to the King's Favour by voting againſt a Criminal for High Treaſon.

Mr. Sloane. There is no manner of doubt of it, That that Gentleman is in the Right, who tells you, If this Indictment and Conviction of Peter Cook, ſtood ſingly, as to Sir John Fenwick, 'tis no Evidence; and if they will produce Goodman now, it ſhall be no Evidence againſt them; but take the Caſe as it is, here is a Witneſs, who hath given me Satisfaction, that 'tis one of Sir John Fenwick's Friends or Agents (which is the ſame Thing as if done by himſelf) by whoſe Means this Witneſs is withdrawn: Now the Queſtion is, What could this Witneſs ſay, when he was here? What did he ſay? 'Tis not Concluſive, but 'tis Material for you to hear what he did ſay when he was upon his Oath.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave. The Gentleman of the Long Robe that ſpake laſt, was pleaſed to tell you, It is very reaſonable that you ſhould hear thoſe Perſons, as to what Goodman ſwore at Cook's Tryal; I confeſs, I think this is harder than all the reſt, becauſe what you have hitherto Admitted was in Writing; one was an Examination before a Juſtice of Peace, the other a Record; but for any Man to ſay, he can exactly repeat what any Man ſwore at the Tryal, to me is wonderful: Why, in his Evidence, the leaſt Miſtake of a Word alters the Nature of the Thing, and therefore this would be a bold Undertaking for any Man; for if he wavers in the leaſt Circumſtance, 'tis not true that he ſwore ſo; then this Gentleman was no Ways concerned in that Tryal; and to what Purpoſe is it read, if not to the Prejudice of Sir John Fenwick? I do not know but by the ſame Rule, you may hear Evidence of what any Man hath ſworn upon all the Tryals this three quarters of a Year.

Mr. Sloane. I have been called upon, to know in what Caſes Teſtimony hath been given, that Witneſſes have ſworn ſo and ſo at a former Tryal. 'Tis every Day's Practice between Party and Party, that where a Witneſs doth die, between the ſame Parties (I will ſtate the Caſe fairly) 'Tis given in Evidence, that ſuch a Witneſs at ſuch a Tryal, did Swear ſo and ſo; ſometimes they take it in Short Hand, and then they can tell the Words of it, otherwiſe they repeat it upon their Memories, but I will not ſtrain it: But I put it with a further Reaſon upon it, for we do not deſire to hear it as Concluſive Evidence upon the Priſoner, but only in this Senſe; here is a Witneſs ſuppoſed to be carry'd away by the Priſoner's Means; and therefore, Is it not neceſſary to hear what he ſaid before he was deluded and carried away? Not that after it is heard, it is any Concluſive Evidence, but it is reaſonable we ſhould come at the Truth, Omnibus viis, & modis quibus Melius ſciri poterit.

Sir Thomas Littleton. A Gentleman ſays, to what purpoſe ſhould it be read, if it be not to the Prejudice of Sir John Fenwick? On the other Side, we may ſay, 'tis for his Benefit; that is only ſuppoſing one Way or another: I will hear any Body to his Benefit, and any Body to his Prejudice. Says a worthy Gentleman, It is not done in Criminal Caſes: Why, in this Caſe you have heard the Grand Jury, what he Swore before them already; and what Objection is there more againſt hearing what he Swore in another Caſe, than againſt hearing what he Swore upon the Indictment? The main Inducement for you to hear it, is becauſe he is gone away, and can't be heard Viva Voce, and with Suſpicion that it was by Contrivance of the Party.

Mr. Gery. I would ſpeak but one Word as to what the Gentleman that ſpake laſt but one ſaid, and that is, as to the Courts below, That one Man is allowed very often to give in Evidence what another Swore; it hath been ſo, and 'tis at the Peril of any Perſon that Swears that he Swear Truth; for he may be proſecuted if he does not Swear Truth; but I would ask him, what Remedy there is here, if he do not ſay the Truth? We have no Remedy againſt him if he takes away this Man's Life by what he ſays here.

Mr. Smith. Truly, Sir, if I muſt give my Opinion, I do think 'tis very reaſonable, that Bills of Attainder ſhould be only upon extraordinary Occaſions; I think, that take it at beſt, if there was not a Place where the Witneſſes are to be Sworn, and more particularly examined, I know not whether I ſhould give my Conſent for the paſſing of this Bill through your Houſe; for the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner are not Sworn, nor the Witneſſes neſſes brought againſt them; ſo that we can only give our Opinion upon the Probability of the Matter; for what that Gentleman ſays, weighs with me, That 'tis a difficult Thing for any Man to charge himſelf with what was Sworn at a former Tryal; for the Miſtake of a Word may alter the Senſe very much. We are told, by a worthy Gentleman, That there was two or three Witneſſes that did give ſuch Evidence againſt the Teſtimony of Goodman, that 'tis a Wonder almoſt how Cook could be found guilty: It is our Misfortune that Goodman is not here, it would have been worth our While to have heard what Goodman could have ſaid in his own Defence; but ſince there are ſuch Witneſſes like to be offered againſt Goodman's Teſtimony, Is it not reaſonable that we ſhould hear what Goodman ſaid for himſelf?

Mr. How. Sir, I always thought it very reaſonable, that you ſhould hear any Evidence that might tend to your Information; but I think 'tis plain, that nothing can tend to your Information that is alledged by any Perſon that is not to be believed; that is to ſay, is not to be believed from the Nature of the Evidence, though from the moſt credible Perſon in the World. I know not whether theſe Witneſſes are to be brought or no, but I have heard that Cook, after he was condemned to die, without any Apprehenſion of his being ſaved, did, upon the Sacrament, declare, That Goodman was not upon the Place at that Time he ſwore himſelf to be there. I have heard ſince, that the ſame Divine that gave him the Sacrament, Dr. Wake, when he had confeſſed it, after he had made ſuch a Declaration, had ſuch an Abhorrence of it, that he would go to him no more; but I can't think we can have Information from theſe Perſons, that I ſuppoſe did not think of giving Evidence in this Tryal, and therefore did not take notice ſo particularly of what he ſaid; and if ſo, 'tis loſing your Time to hear it.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, the Queſtion is this, That the Council againſt Sir John Fenwick be allowed to examine Witneſſes, as to what Goodman Swore at the Tryal of Peter Cook.

Sir Godfrey Coply. I muſt confeſs it would weigh with me, if it had been made appear, that Sir John Fenwick had taken off any Evidence, and I ſhould be ready to apply it as well as I could; but I muſt needs take notice of what was ſaid in this Debate, that we had done as much as this comes to already; this makes me a little more apprehenſive, and to take care what we do now, ſince what this Houſe does, hath ſo quick an Operation. We are citing Precedents of this very Day already, and make one Thing a Hand to draw on another, and ſo they may eaſily be made uſe of in after Parliaments.

Sir Henry Dutton Colt. I believe no one Gentleman doubts, that Cook was convicted upon the Evidence of Goodman; if they do, I would know the Reaſon of it; for upon the laſt Act, there are to be two Evidences to the ſame Treaſon: There were but two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him for Treaſon, and they were Porter and Goodman: I think, therefore, he was convicted upon the Evidence of Goodman; what then needs any Perſon to remember any Particulars that paſſed at the Tryal, if they remember in the Whole, that he was convicted by the Evidence of Porter and Goodman?

Mr. Speaker. As many that are of Opinion that the Council againſt Sir John Fenwick be allowed to examine Witneſſes, as to what Goodman ſwore at the Tryal of Cook, ſay, Aye.

Ayes 180. Noes 102.

[Afterwards the Queſtion of Adjournment was put, and it paſſed in the Negative; and ſeveral Gentlemen that were againſt the Bill, to about Forty, went away together in a Body; ſome of them having declared, that their Health would not give them leave to ſtay there longer.]

And Sir John Fenwick, and the Council were brought in again.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, the Houſe do allow you to examine Witneſſes as to what Goodman ſwore at the Tryal of Cook; pray go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Lovell. We call Mr. Collins, Sir.

Who was brought to the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. Was he a Jury-Man?

Mr. Serjeant Lovell. He was one of the Petit-Jury, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Collins, can you give the Houſe an Account of what was Sworn by Goodman, upon the Tryal of Cook?

Mr. Collins. To the beſt of my Memory, I will give the beſt Account I can. Goodman did depoſe, That he came to the King's Head in Leaden-hall Street, and enquired for Captain Porter, according as the Captain had ordered him; and the Captain came down and carry'd him up into the Room where the Gentlemen were. There was Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and Sir John Fenwick; there was two others, if you pleaſe to have me name them.

Members. Yes, yes.

Mr. Collins. My Lord Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery: This was what he depoſed.

Mr. Speaker. Go on, Sir, you have named thoſe that were at the Meeting.

Mr. Serjeant Lovell. Did he give you an Account of what was Agreed on at that Meeting?

Mr. Collins. I think it was about ſending Charnock to France.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you ſhould repeat all the Particulars what Charnock was to do.

Mr. Collins. I can't remember any Thing further than what I have told you.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. If you pleaſe that Mr. Cooper may be asked to this.

Mr. Speaker. Was you of the Petit-Jury that convicted Mr. Cook?

Mr. Cooper. Yes.

Mr. Speaker. Can you give the Houſe an Account what Evidence Goodman gave to you for conviction of Cook, and what he ſaid in that Evidence?

Mr. Cooper. Mr. Goodman did declare upon his Evidence, That he was at the Old King's Head in Leaden-hall Street, where he did meet with divers Perſons that were in Conſultation; he named Charnock, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, and divers others.

Mr. Speaker. What was the Conſultation?

Mr. Cooper. It was about ſending Charnock over into France.

Mr. Speaker. To what purpoſe?

Mr. Coo-

Mr. Cooper. To bring over Forces, or encourage the Bringing over of Forces: That was the Purport of his Meſſage.

Mr. Speaker. Will you produce any other Evidence to this Point?

Mr. Serjeant Gould. We deſire this Gentleman may be asked to the ſame Purpoſe.

Mr. Speaker. Was you one of the Petit-Jury.

Another Witneſs. There was Captain Porter, and Mr. Goodman, that were the two Evidences; and Goodman did ſay, That he had been at the Old King's Head in Leaden hall Street, one Coxe's, and Sir John Fenwick was there, and ſeveral other Gentlemen, conſulting of an Affair to ſend over into France for ſome Forces to be brought over into England; and that Charnock was the Perſon, and they all agreed he ſhould go over.

Mr. Speaker. But did he give you an Account of what Cook and the others did agree to, upon which you found Mr. Cook guilty?

The ſame. We did apprehend that Cook did conſent that Charnock ſhould go over to France, and acquaint King James, That there had been a Meeting of ſeveral Gentlemen, and that they had made ſeveral Offers of Soldiers and People that were to be raiſed here, and to acquaint King James with it; and he declared, That Sir John Fenwick was there at the ſame Time.

Mr. Speaker. Pray, can you give this Houſe an Account of what Exception was taken to Goodman's Credit, and how it was anſwered?

The ſame. There was Exception taken, That he was guilty of a great many Crimes, and that he had his Pardon, and the Fines were levy'd upon him; but it was ſaid then, that he had paid his Fine, and that he was a very good Evidence in the Caſe.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, Have you any other Evidence to produce?

Mr. Serjeant Lovell. If you pleaſe, Mr. Speaker, here is Mr. Tanner, the Clerk of the Arraignments, that beſt knows the Nature of theſe Things; that as to theſe Objections that were made, it appeared to the Court to be a Contrivance, for he was never Bailed, but diſcharged without any more to do. If you pleaſe that he may be asked, What Objections were made to Goodman's Reputation, and what Anſwer was made to it?

Mr. Speaker. I did ask the Jury-man that; and I ſuppoſe you need not labour this Point, unleſs the Credit of Goodman comes in queſtion here.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Then may it pleaſe you, Mr. Speaker, we have one other Piece of Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, which we are humbly to offer to your Conſideration, and I think 'tis very Material; and 'tis ſome of the Evidence which I did open in Stating of the Caſe, wherein Sir John Fenwick hath, in a Manner, given a Verdict againſt himſelf; for while Sir John Fenwick was working of his Eſcape to go beyond Sea, at that very Time there was a Letter written by him, directed to his Lady, and delivered into the Hands of one Mr. Fowler, who was to cauſe it to be delivered to his Lady, by one Webber, who was taken up when Sir John Fenwick was; this Letter imports, That Sir John Fenwick look'd upon himſelf, as having no Defence, but depended only upon a Contrivance with the Jury; they were to work with ſome Perſons of the Jury, who were to ſtand it out, and to ſtarve the reſt; and ſo by that Means to ſave him. Our Evidence of this will be, That it fell out that Webber, (we have him not here now, but have endeavoured it as much as was poſſible; but he is gone too out of the Way.) That he was taken at the ſame Time that Sir John Fenwick was; but by reaſon of the protracting of Sir John's Tryal, he comes, and is delivered, there being no Charge againſt him; and he is ſince his Deliverance, upon his Habeas Corpus, gone out of the Way; but we ſhall, in the Method of our Evidence, produce you Mr. Fowler, the Perſon to whom this Letter was handed, who will give you an Account of this Letter; and then will produce this Letter: To which End, we muſt humbly beg the Favour of a worthy Member of this Houſe, Mr. Vernon, who hath this Letter, that it may be produced, and ſhewed to Mr. Fowler.

Mr. Vernon. Sir, I receiv'd your Order to bring the Letter that Sir John Fenwick wrote, while in Cuſtody at Rumney, which was ſent up to me by Mr. Maſcall, who had it of Mr. Fowler; and, if you pleaſe, I am ready to deliver it.

Mr. Speaker. Who ſent it to you?

Mr. Vernon. One Mr. Maſcall, a Juſtice of Peace of Rumney.

Sir Thomas Powys. I hope now we ſhall make an Objection to this Letter, with good Authority. Surely for them to produce a Letter, as Sir John Fenwick's, is not to be allow'd as Evidence, unleſs it was prov'd that he wrote it, becauſe that Sort of Evidence was particularly taken notice of by Parliament: And Judgment given upon that Sort of Evidence, by Compariſon of Hands in the Caſe of Mr. Sidney, and the Act of Reverſal of his Attainder, does allow it to be illegal Evidence. This is ſuch an Authority as, I hope, will bear no diſpute: And the Courts of Weſtminſter Hall, have ſince thought it ſo; they did ſo in the Caſe of Crosby, who was Tryed the other Day in Weſtminſter Hall.

Sir Barth. Shower. In this Objection we have the Opinion of inferior Courts, and the Parliament too; for the particular Evidence Mr. Sidney was convicted upon, was upon a Paper which was found, and proved by ſome who pretended to know his Hand; and I am ſure that is more than they can pretend to, and more than they have yet opened. We do therefore humbly oppoſe this Evidence, it being in the Caſe of the Life of a Man; and the King, Lords and Commons, having declared, That this Sort of Evidence ought not to be allowed: And therefore, I hope, you will not allow it in this Caſe. And in Crosby's Caſe, upon reading the Act of Parliament, this Evidence was not allowed, and Crosby was acquitted.

Sir Thomas Powys. I have a Copy of the Bill for reverſing the Attainder in my Hand; and it ſays, The producing a Paper found in the Cloſet of Mr. Sidney, which was not proved by any Witneſs to be his Hand-writing, &c. and, we hope, if in the Judgment of the Parliament that was not thought reaſonable Evidence to Attaint him, this will not be thought reaſonable in Parliament to Attaint this Gentleman.

Mr. Serj. Gould. As this Caſe is, we hope this may be a concurring Evidence: It will be plain, upon the Evidence we ſhall give, That Webber was with Sir John, and taken with him; and at that Time this Letter was handed by him over to Fowler, to be carried to my Lady. Now, Sir, we humbly offer it to your Conſideration, How far it is available, and what Operation it will have? Whether, in a Caſe of this Nature, theſe two being taken together, and Webber delivers this Letter to Fowler to deliver it to Sir John Fenwick's Lady

dy, and the import of the Letter concerns Sir John Fenwick for his Acquittal, you will not ſuffer it to be read? 'Tis not to charge him with a Treaſon, for that is the Caſe of Algernoon Sidney: 'Tis not to prove a Crime upon him; but we will prove that Sir John Fenwick handed this Letter over, that it might come to his Lady; by which he deſired his Lady ſo far to work the Matter, That ſome Jury-man might be found to ſtarve the Reſt, and ſtand out for him: If we could produce Webber we would; 'tis plain, Webber correſponded with Sir John, and was with him.

Mr. Serj. Lovell. I humbly beg one Word in this Matter: The Council on the other Side do very well know, the conſtant Practice is, That in the Caſe of a Deed or Will, let the Value of the Eſtate be what it will, if the Witneſſes can't be produced, or are gone beyond Sea, they always admit Evidence by Compariſon of Hands. But for the Caſe of Algernoon Sidney, there is no doubt but his Attainder ought to be reverſed, becauſe that Attainder was upon no other Evidence; for there was no other Proof, but a Paper, that he himſelf did ſay, was only for the Exerciſing of his own Ingenuity and Parts; and was ſaid to be written for no other Purpoſe, and proved only by the Compariſon of Hands. Had there been any other Witneſs to corroborate, it had altered the Caſe; but in our Caſe, we do produce the Letter, not for the Convicting of the Priſoner at the Bar; but we are humbly to lay before you all the Matter of Fact. It will be worthy of your Conſideration, what you will think fit to take, and what to reject; that is a Matter for your own Judgment. We produce this Letter for this Purpoſe, to ſhew you, That after Sir John Fenwick was taken, he apprehended his Caſe to be ſo deſperate, that he uſed theſe indirect Means.

Mr. Speaker. What mean you by that? This Letter came from Mr. Fowler.

Mr. Serj. Lovell. Here is Mr. Fowler that receiv'd it from Webber, when Sir John Fenwick was by, in the Preſence of Sir John Fenwick.

Mr. Speaker. Shew Mr. Fowler the Letter.

Accordingly the Clerk went down to the Bar, and ſhew'd Mr. Fowler the Letter.

Mr. Speaker. Do you know that Paper?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Where have you ſeen it before?

Mr. Fowler. I had it from one Webber, that was at Rumney, about the Third of June, as I remember.

Mr. Speaker. Was that the Time that Sir John Fenwick was ſeiz'd?

Mr. Fowler. He was then at Rumney. Mr. Webber, I was told, had ſome Acquaintance with me, and deſired to ſpeak with me. I went to him; and he was riſing; and when up, ſays he, Mr. Fowler, I would deſire you to put a Letter into the Poſt; ſays he, There is no Hurt in it; it is directed to Mrs. Frances Farrer, at the Counteſs of Carliſle's in Soho-Square; and when I had deliver'd it, he deſir'd me to come to him again.

Mr. Speaker. Did you come to him again?

Mr. Fowler. Mr. Maſcall of Rumney ſent for me to his Houſe, and told me, That he had heard that I had received ſome Letter from Mr. Webber; and when he had open'd it, and ſaw what it was, he thought fit to ſend it up to the Secretary of State; and I made my Mark upon it, that I might know it again.

Mr. Speaker. Have you made your Mark upon it?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Lovell. I deſire he may be asked, Whether Sir John Fenwick was not in the ſame Room when Webber delivered it?

Mr. Fowler. Yes: But I queſtion whether he ſaw Mr. Webber give it; for he delivered it privately, as I thought.

Mr. Speaker. Was Sir John in the Room then?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Can you ſay any Thing more of Sir John Fenwick's Knowledge of that Paper?

Mr. Fowler. No, I know no more.

Mr. Serj. Gould. If you pleaſe then, Mr. Speaker, becauſe perhaps there may be ſome Objections, that we ſhould give an Account of Webber, we will call a Witneſs, that we have done our utmoſt to find him out.

Members. No, no.

Sir Thomas Powys. That which I was going to offer is, That this Proof is ſhort; if that which in the Act of Reverſal of the Attainder of Mr. Sidney, is admitted to be no Proof againſt him; for the Act recites that Letter was found in his Cloſet, and proved by Compariſon of Hands, and yet for all that, this Sort of Evidence is condemn'd by this Act of Reverſal, as illegal Evidence. This Caſe before you comes ſhort of that; for here is no Proof by Compariſon of Hands, nor that it was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir John Fenwick: But only that a Perſon in the Room, without the Privity of Sir John Fenwick, delivered it to another; and the Witneſs ſays, he did it in a private Manner.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. With Submiſſion, this Letter could not be read in any Place whatſoever, againſt Sir John Fenwick, in a Civil Cauſe; for even in that Caſe, they muſt prove it to be his Hand-writing, by Compariſon of Hands.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. I think not to inſiſt upon it: But that we ſhall deſire is this; we have now done with our Evidence, only we ſhall deſire the worthy Member, Mr. Vernon, to give an Account what was the Reaſon, why Sir John hath not been Tryed; for indeed, he hath very much trifled with the Government, pretending ſtill to make a free and ingenuous Confeſſion.

Sir Thomas Powys. I am of Council for this Gentleman at the Bar; for his Life, for his Fortune, for All that he hath in the World. 'Tis not only this Gentleman's Caſe, but 'tis a Caſe that may be of great Conſequence in all future Times. I have, as 'twas my Duty, attended for at leaſt theſe twelve Hours, either in opening the Matter, or by producing ſuch Evidence as, we hoped, we did fairly Object to. Sir, there are ſeveral Things offer'd on their Parts, which I confeſs we little expected, and which will require ſomething to be ſaid to; and I have a great deal to offer on the Behalf of Sir John Fenwick, both as to this Method that is taken, and what is alledged in the Bill, and what is contained in the Indictment upon which the Bill is founded, wherein I deſire to be heard; and ſince you have been pleaſed to allow us to be Council for him, I am ſure we ſhall have a fair and favourable Hearing. We have a great deal to offer to you, both as to the Matter of the Indictment, and the Manner of it: And I hope to ſhew you, That the Indictment, as it is laid, does contain a ſufficient Charge of Treaſon. We have likewiſe a great deal to ſay, as to the Evidence they have offer'd, at leaſt what they call ſo: But I muſt make it my Requeſt, That we may have

have Liberty till to Morrow Morning to make our Obſervations, and Anſwer what hath been ſaid by the Council on the other Side. I am not in a very good Condition by this long Attendance, and by attending my Duty in the Courts in Weſtminſter-hall; and I am afraid I am not now in a Condition to do my Duty, as may be expected from me. I muſt own it, I am not prepared as I ought to be; and I hope when there is ſo great a Stake, you will allow us till to Morrow Morning?

Sir Bartholomew Shower. I beg your Favour in the ſame Manner, and to the ſame Effect as Sir Thomas Powys hath done. It is to be acknowledg'd there are ſeveral Things offered in Evidence, which is new to us Lawyers; we do not deſire to Trifle: We do not deſire it on behalf of the Priſoner by Way of Delay; but on behalf of the Length of the Proceedings, that you will give us a fair Hearing, as you have allowed it to the King's Serjeants; and that we may make that Defence that is incumbent upon us in diſcharge of our Duty to the Priſoner.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you muſt withdraw. (And being withdrawn.)

Mr. Smith. I would not give an Opportunity to any Man to practiſe with Witneſſes, to hinder the Truth of the Matter from appearing, after they have heard the Evidence for the Bill. I would know what Liſt of theſe Witneſſes Sir John Fenwick hath given in?

Mr. Speaker. You did make an Order, That Sir John Fenwick ſhould deliver in a Liſt of his Witneſſes; but I believe he did not ſend any Liſt to any Body upon that Account, for I have made no Order for any.

Lord Coningsby. I am convinc'd that you are obliged to ſit ſo long as to hear the Witneſſes on both Sides; and therefore my Motion is, to call in the Council, and ask them, if they have any Evidence to produce; but I do not deſire the Council ſhould go on to make their Obſervations to Night.

Sir Walter Young. I think you are rightly moved by that noble Lord that ſpoke laſt. I think if Sir John Fenwick hath any Evidence to produce, he ought to produce it now; and that you ought not to give him Time till to Morrow Morning to produce That.

Mr. Speaker. Is it your Pleaſure that Sir John Fenwick and the Council be called in, and told, That the Houſe do expect, if they have any Witneſſes, that they do examin them to Night; but as to their Obſervations, the Houſe will give them Time till to Morrow Morning.

[Which was generally conſented to, and they were brought in again.]

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, the Houſe have conſider'd of what you ſaid, when you went out, and they are inclin'd to allow you Time for making your Obſervations; but they have commanded me to ask you, Whether you have any Witneſſes to produce? and to let you know, That if you have any Witneſſes to produce, they expect you ſhould produce and examine them to Night.

Sir Thomas Powys. Sir, I would acquaint you with all the Openneſs that becomes me on this Occaſion. I muſt confeſs, we have not any Witneſſes that we propoſe to call; but when we come to ſpeak to the Matter, we hope to give you ſome Satisfaction as to That; but at preſent, we have no Evidence to produce, unleſs it be a Copy of a Record.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, If you pleaſe to withdraw, you ſhall know the Senſe of the Houſe.

Accordingly they withdrew.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. I ſuppoſe, ſince the Gentlemen have no living Witneſſes to produce to Night, you will not think fit to receive them at any other Time, for 'tis giving them too much Advantage; and the whole Meaning of the Chicanry of the Council, is only to get Time to Reply, Mr. Dighton having heard the Evidence. And now I have mentioned him, give me leave to tell you, That I think you can't riſe without taking ſome Notice of him. I think there is as plain a Subornation prov'd in Dighton, as can be, by one Roe; and when you have heard ſuch a Character of a Man, and there is no other Evidence that he can ſollicit, I think you ought to take care that he be forth coming; and that he ſhould be taken into Cuſtody. I think you may give the Council further Time: As to the Record, that can't well be falſified, tho' I believe, in a Matter of this Moment, where the Government is concern'd, there never was ſuch a Proceeding by the Council, as this has been, to entertain us ſix or eight Hours together, by Delays.

Mr. Smith. I ſuppoſe before you hear any Thing as to Dighton, you will do ſomething as to the putting this Cauſe off to another Day; I humbly propoſe that you will go on this again on Wedneſday.

Sir H. Hobart. When 'tis proper to go upon Ways and Means, I ſhall come into it: But while this is upon your Hands, I believe you will never get heartily into other Buſineſs: And therefore I humbly move you, that you will go upon this to Morrow Morning.

Thereupon the Houſe came to theſe Reſolutions.

Reſolved, That this Houſe will proceed further in relation to this Buſineſs of Sir John Fenwick to Morrow at Twelve a Clock.

Ordered, That Sir John Fenwick be remanded to Newgate.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a Second Time to Morrow Morning.

Mr. Ruſſel. I am unwilling to trouble Gentlemen at this Time of Night: But I would know, Whether, when Sir John Fenwick is called in, you will ask him any Queſtions upon that Paper?

Members. No, no.

The Council were called in, and withdrawn again.

Reſolved, That this Houſe being informed that the Council for Sir John Fenwick have no living Witneſſes to produce, except to prove a Record, that this Houſe will not hear any Witneſſes, except to prove the ſaid Record.

Ordered, That Mr. Dighton do attend to Morrow Morning.

Adjourned till to Morrow Morning Twelve a Clock.

[Memorandum, It was half an Hour after Ten, at the Time of Adjournment.]

Martis 17. die Novembris, 1696.

[Sir John Fenwick and the Council of both Sides were called in.]

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, you that are of Council for Sir John Fenwick, the Houſe agreed laſt Night, to give you Time till to Day to make your De-

Defence; your Obſervations upon the Evidence that hath been given.

Sir Thomas Powys. Mr. Speaker, I am of Council for Sir John Fenwick, who now ſtands before you upon the greateſt Concern he can have in this World; and as you have been pleaſed to aſſign us to be of Council for him, and I muſt own have very favourably heard us hitherto, ſo I ſhall think my ſelf very unfortunate if I ſhould let fall any Expreſſion in his Defence, that ſhould ſeem indecent, and give Offence to this Houſe, for I am ſure I have no Intention to do it; but on the contrary to behave my ſelf with all the Deference that is poſſible, in a Caſe of this Nature.

The Thing I ſhall inſiſt upon, will be upon Three Heads.

Firſt, The Manner of Proceeding, and Method that hath been taken in this Proſecution.

Secondly, I ſhall take notice of thoſe Things that are alledged againſt him in the Bill, upon which he is to make his Defence.

In the Third Place, I ſhall beg your Favour, to Obſerve what Sort of Proofs they have offered on the other Side, and which they call Evidence.

As to the Firſt Matter, I muſt intreat the Favour of you to be thus underſtood; That when I ſay any Thing in Relation to the Manner of Proceeding, I do not ſpeak in Oppoſition to the Power of Parliaments; for I know very well, that our Lives and Eſtates, and all that we have, are ſubject to Acts of Parliament; but I hope you will permit me to offer ſome Reaſons, which (I hope) may be of Weight, in Oppoſition to the Exerciſing of that Power in the Way you are now going. No Body can ſay, but when an Act of Parliament is paſſed, though the Party concerned may think it was upon hard Terms; yet when it is become a Law, it is not to be oppoſed. I can't ſay but thoſe Perſons, who in the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, were Impriſoned by an Act ex poſt facto, and ſubſequent to the Fact complained of; yet when it was paſſed into a Law, they were legally detained: But, I hope, I may ſo far take notice of their Caſe, as ſome kind of Reaſon againſt this, to the End that thoſe Laws may not grow familiar, that they may not eaſily be obtained; becauſe Precedents generally grow; and as that Law ex poſt facto, extended to Liberty, ſo this extends to Life: One Precedent is apt to beget another; and therefore, ſure you will be careful how you give Precedents, eſpecially in Caſe of Life.

The firſt Thing I obſerve is obvious; that is, the Perſon who is to be ſentenced by this Bill, is forth-coming, in order to be Tryed in the ordinary Method of Juſtice. He is not only Indicted, and actually under Proceſs, but he hath Pleaded, and he is ready when his Majeſty, in the Courſe of Juſtice, ſhall call upon him to undergo his Tryal; and either there is ſufficient Evidence, legal Evidence againſt him, as the King's Serjeant inſiſted there was; and if there be ſo, then, under Favour, there is no Reaſon but he ſhould have the Benefit of an Ordinary Tryal, which is the Birthright of all the King's Subjects; or there is not ſufficient Evidence againſt him; and if there be not, it will be a good Reaſon againſt making a particular Law for taking away his Life: For, we think, nothing can be ſaid for this Law, but want of Evidence; and that, to my underſtanding, is a very odd Reaſon.

Sir, I would not ſpend Time in taking Notice, That the meaneſt Subject in the Kingdom, is Entituled, by being born in this Kingdom, to be Tryed by a Jury, where there are thoſe juſt Advantages that can't be had in another Caſe: There is a Liberty of Challenging of 35, without ſhewing any Reaſon, and as many more, as he can any way object to, with Reaſon. The Witneſſes are upon Oath, and all the Proceedings are by certain known Rules and Methods, and not only by the Statute of Magna Charta, but by the Common Law of England, much more Antient than that Statute; and though the Proceedings therein, are ſuch as a Criminal may ſometimes eſcape; yet the juſt Advantages are ſo much beyond any Thing of that Nature, that I hope we ſhall never complain of that antient Courſe of Proceeding by Jury; I am ſure it is the Honour of our Government, the Mark of our Freedom, and Envy of our Neighbours; and, I hope, that Method of Tryal ſhall never be laid aſide, though ſometimes it may not have the Effect that is deſired by it.

I would take notice to you, that in a Caſe of the greateſt Crime, and moſt Notoriety of Fact; yet the Perſons concerned in it were brought to their Tryal. The Regicides, who did not fly, but were found upon the Reſtauration of King Charles II, though their Treaſon had the worſt Effect even in the Murder of the King; yet notwithſtanding, though the Fact was ſo Notorious, thoſe that were found upon the Place were admitted to their Tryals in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice; although at the ſame time there was a Bill of Attainder againſt ſome that fled, and ſome that were dead, and ſo could not be Tryed.

I would, with your Favour, likewiſe obſerve, That the Parliaments of England have been ſo far from depriving Perſons from their ordinary Tryals, that whereas the Common Law of England ſays, that Perſons Out-law'd for Treaſon and Felony, if taken, ſhall be put to Death without Tryal; yet the Parliament, in the Reign of Edward VI, made a Law, providing, That Criminals that returned within a Year, according to that Law, ſhould be admitted to their ordinary Tryals.

Sir, all along, the Statutes run in favour of Tryals; there are no leſs than Two Acts of Parliament in the Reign of Edward VI, in the Firſt and Fifth Year of his Reign, that ſay, there ſhall not be leſs than Two Witneſſes againſt any Perſon for Treaſon: And I hope I ſhall never ſee a Law made ſo much in oppoſition to thoſe Acts, as that a Perſon ſhall be ſentenced to Death without ſo much as one Witneſs, as I ſhall ſhew by and by.

Perhaps it might be thought Extraordinary, That in the ſame Parliament that paſſed a Bill for regulating Tryals in Caſes of High Treaſon, requiring two Witneſſes with great Strictneſs, and giving further Advantages to the Criminal than ever were before allowed; An Act ſhould paſs, to put a Perſon to Death, without any Tryal at all. And let any one compare the Preamble of that Act with this Bill.

Sir, I take it, with humble Submiſſion, that the preſent Caſe is not at all to be likened to moſt of thoſe Bills of Attainder that may be cited; thoſe, when they come to be looked into, will be found either to have paſſed againſt ſuch Perſons as fled from Juſtice; and therein they only purſued the Rules

Rules of the Common Law, which allowed them to be Out-lawed, and by Conſequence to be Attainted. And the Parliament therefore, in Attainting them, did but the ſame Thing; and therein, there was nothing done extraordinary. True it is, That where Perſons have been forth-coming, there have been ſome few Bills of Attainder: But I will preſume to ſay, they are never mentioned without heavy Cenſures, and a great Complaint againſt them.

This Cauſe is not like the late Inſtance of the Bill of Attainder againſt the Duke of Monmouth; for he was preſent in the Kingdom; yet he was in direct Oppoſition to any Method of Tryal; he was in Defiance to all Courts of Juſtice: But here is a Perſon who ſubmits himſelf, and hath Pleaded, and ſtands ready to be Tryed; and I hope, I may take notice, to take off all Prejudice that may be raiſed; That this Gentleman, though he was of the Parliament that paſſed that Bill, yet he was not in Town, till at leaſt a Month, after the Bill was paſſed.

I do agree, there are ſome Caſes where Perſons have been Attainted without being admitted to be Tryed. In the Beginning of the Reign of Edward III. Roger Mortimer was Attainted, and Executed, without being Tryed; but 28 Ed. III. it was reverſed, becauſe he was not brought to Judgment according to the Law of the Land, 1 Ed. III. The like in the Caſe of Edmund Earl of Arundel: But 4 Ed. III. Richard his Son, Petitioned in Parliament, ſetting forth the Proceedings to be againſt the Great Charter, and inſiſting, That there ought to have been due Proceſs of Law, and he was then reſtored in Part; but 28 Edw. III. there was an Act of Reverſal, Declaring, That it clearly appeared, that the ſaid Edmund was unduly put to Death; and that the Statute by which he was Attainted, was Void, Erroneous, and Null. There is an Inſtance in 32 H. 8. Co. 4. Inſt. fol. 37, of Thomas Cromwel Earl of Eſſex, who, though he was in Cuſtody in the Tower, yet he was Attainted without being Tryed: But the Words of my Lord Coke, are as follow, Auferat oblivio, ſi poteſt, ſi non utrumq; ſilentium legat: For the more High and Abſolute the Juriſdiction of the Court is, the more Juſt and Honourable ought it to be in its Proceedings, and to give Examples of Juſtice to Inferior Courts. And he adds further, to the end, as I apprehend, That the Rehearſal of this Attainder may be of no ill Uſe: I am, ſays he, confidently perſwaded, ſuch Worthy and Honourable Members, ſhall from Time to Time be of both Houſes of Parliament, as never any Attainder, when the Perſon is forth-coming, ſhall be had hereafter, without hearing of him: Which I underſtand to be, without Trying of him; and 'tis memorable, what my Lord Coke recites, That he, who thus died, attempted the like againſt another.

There is another Caſe of Thomas Seymour, Admiral of England, who likewiſe was Attainted by Act of Parliament; and as it appears, without Execution: You have an Account thereof in the Second Part of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, fol. 98, 99, 100. whither I will refer you, only to read the Sentence of the Learned Author, there pronounced againſt him. That latter Caſe is, that of my Lord Strafford, which every Body knows. I ſhall, as the beſt Account of that Matter, crave leave to read the Words of the Parliament in the Act of the Reverſal. I will not trouble you with reciting the Whole, but only read the Beginning, and ſome Part thereof in another Place. Whereas Thomas, late Earl of Strafford, was Impeached of High Treaſon, upon Pretence of endeavouring to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws, and called to a Publick and Solemn Arraignment and Tryal, before the Peers in Parliament, where he made a particular Defence to every Article objected againſt him; inſomuch, That the Turbulent Party then ſeeing no hopes to effect their unjuſt Deſigns, by an ordinary Way and Method of Proceedings, did at laſt reſolve to attempt the Deſtruction and Attainder of the Earl, by an Act of Parliament, to be therefore purpoſely made to condemn him upon Accumulative Treaſon —— And then it goes on to ſhew, it was carry'd by the Tumult of the People, and then follows —— And to the End that Right be done to the Memory of the Deceaſed Earl of Strafford aforeſaid: Be it further Enacted, That all Records and Proceedings of Parliament relating to the ſaid Attainder, be wholly Cancelled and taken off the File, or otherwiſe Defaced and Obliterated, to the intent the ſame may not be viſible in After-Ages, or brought into Example to the Prejudice of any Perſon whatſoever. So that the Parliament that Enacted that Reverſal, did conſider thoſe Proceedings as very Evil and Unjuſt, and was not willing there ſhould be any Remains of ſuch an Example to future Ages.

Sir, having made theſe Obſervations as to the Manner of Proceeding, I come now to that which is the Subject Matter of the Bill at preſent before you, and which we take to be the Charge againſt Sir John Fenwick: I muſt crave leave to obſerve, That in all Courts of Juſtice, where any Perſon is accuſed, he is to make his Defence ſecundum allegata & probata: 'Tis not enough that a Matter is proved, if it be not alledged; nor that it is alledged, if it be not proved: But if it be both alledged and proved, then it is a full Charge, and requires an Anſwer. It is not only the Law of England, but I believe, of all Nations, and whereever any Perſon is to make his Defence, eſpecially in Capital Crimes, that to which he is to anſwer muſt be alledged againſt him, from whence I ſhall obſerve what is alledged againſt Sir John Fenwick; for, I hope, we are not concerned to defend him further than as to what at this Time he is charged with. This Bill of Attainder, as it is drawn, and now ſtands before you, doth not ſo much as alledge, or ſay, That Sir John Fenwick is Guilty of the Treaſon whereof he was Indicted; and that hath prevented us from producing Witneſſes to that, and ſeveral Matters which the King's Council have entered upon: For though you have permitted them to examine Witneſſes to ſeveral Things quite out of the Bill; yet, I hope, you are not come to any Reſolution, That theſe Matters ſhall be thought fatal to Sir John Fenwick, that are not ſo much as alledged againſt him. We do not therefore think we are bound, or ought to follow them in thoſe Things that are totally out of the Bill; and therefore his being guilty, is not now the Queſtion, becauſe 'tis not a Charge upon him.

The firſt Thing that is alledged in the Bill is, That Sir John Fenwick was indicted at the Seſſions; for that which is laid in the Indictment to be Treaſon (which by and by I ſhall crave leave to be heard to) and, I think, no Body will ſay this alone does require any Anſwer, further than to own the Fact or to deny it: And we do admit that he was ſo Indicted. I need not labour much to clear him of the Conſequence of that alone; for very often innocent Perſons have been Indicted and Accuſed, (for an Indictment is no more than an Accuſation;) and this Bill, as I have obſerved, doth not ſay he is guilty. When the Bill hath recited that Matter, it proceeds to take notice, That they by ſome fair Prevarications (for ſo I agree they were, if the Facts alledged in the Bill are true, which by the Way hath not been yet proved, by producing any one Witneſs) did obtain the King's Clemency to put off his Tryal, in expectation of an ingenuous Confeſſion, which the Bill takes for granted he hath prevaricated in, by Charging ſeveral Perſons of Honour and Fidelity with Matters of a High Nature, only by Hear-ſay; and by uſing other unfair Artifices to put off his Tryal. How far it is made out, that I muſt ſubmit to you; we think at preſent there is no Proof of it, and by Conſequence we are not concerned to anſwer it: But had they proved it as fully as it is laid (though far be it from me to excuſe ſuch a Behaviour;) yet when a Criminal is to be tryed for that which will be of fatal Conſequence to him if he be Convicted, no Body can ſay it comes near Treaſon, by unfair Means, to contrive to put off his Tryal.

The next Thing the Bill recites is, That one of the Witneſſes, who might have been produced againſt him upon his Tryal, if it had proceeded as was intended, is ſince withdrawn. I can't ſay, but Goodman is withdrawn: But as the Bill does not ſo much as alledge, That it was by the Means or Procurement, no nor Privity, of Sir John Fenwick; ſo from thence that Part of the Bill charges no Offence home to Sir John Fenwick: For in Caſe the ſame Witneſs had hapned to have died by the Act of God, it would not have been ſaid to have been a good Reaſon for this Bill of Attainder againſt Sir John Fenwick, unleſs he had contributed to it.

From theſe Premiſſes follows the enacting Part, that Sir John Fenwick be Attainted of High Treaſon; and in future Times the Act muſt be ſuppoſed to be grounded upon the Inducement to it. And I humbly ſubmit it to you, Whether this Bill condemning him for High Treaſon, upon ſuch Recitals, will be thought to be reaſonable?

Theſe being the Allegations of the Bill, I will now, with your Favour, come to that, which they on the other Side do call Proofs; and I muſt humbly obſerve to you, and ſubmit it to your Judgment, Whether in a Caſe where a Man's Life is to be taken away, by a ſubſequent Law made on Purpoſe for him, the Proofs in that Caſe ought not to be much more Evident, than if he were to be tried by a Law already in Being? In my poor Apprehenſion (I ſpeak it with all Submiſſion to you, Sir,) It would be too much at once to make a ſubſequent Law to condemn a Man to Death, and to do it upon doubtful and uncertain Evidence, or rather upon no Proof at all. Nothing could excuſe ſuch a Law, but an undeniable Proof of the Fact. And therefore ſurely the Poſition we find of Mr. St. John's, in my Lord Strafford's Caſe, is of moſt dangerous Conſequence. I am afraid none are ſafe if that be admitted, That a ſubſequent Law may take away a Man's Life without any Evidence, other than the private Opinion or Conſcience of every particular Law-maker. He is pleaſed ſo to aſſert, That it may be done as in Ruſhworth's Hiſtory of that Tryal, fol. 677. I am ſure if this be ſo, no Man knows how long his Life is his own: I hope this Doctrine ſhall never be followed or approved. Sir, we have the Happineſs to live under an Eſtabliſhment that every Man does, or may know the Law he is to go by: Every one is bound at his Peril to take notice of the Laws, and to act accordingly, becauſe they may be known: But at this Rate none but Prophets can live amongſt us.

In the next Place, I would obſerve what Courſe they have taken in their Evidence who are the King's Council.

Firſt, They have betaken themſelves to that which is not Alledged in the Bill; and we think that this is not agreeable to a Courſe of Juſtice.

In the next Place, to make out that they inſiſt on, they have produced but one Perſon that comes hither viva voce to ſpeak to it; and I muſt take Notice to you, That he is not upon Oath. I know very well it is not your Courſe in this Houſe to adminiſter an Oath; But I know very well, though it is not your Courſe in this Houſe to adminiſter an Oath, yet, I hope, that is ſo far from being a Reaſon why this Bill ſhould paſs here, without an Oath; that it is a good Reaſon why ſuch a Bill ſhould not begin here: There is no Place in the World, where a Perſon is ſentenced to Death without an Oath. In the Caſe of my Lord Strafford, the Proceeding firſt was by way of Impeachment, and the Witneſſes had been firſt examined upon Oath in the Houſe of Peers; and that Bill of Attainder takes notice of it, reciting that it had been fully proved; and, by Conſequence, we may ſuppoſe, that they would not otherwiſe have paſſed it, that being the Ground of their Proceeding upon that Bill of Attainder: But for the Bill to begin originally in this Place, to form ſuch a Judgment, the Heavieſt that can be pronounced againſt a Man; a Judgment of Death, corrupting of his Blood, and forfeiting all he has in the World; and this upon bare Allegations, without ſo much as the Sanction of an Oath, is extreamly hard. Mr. Porter is ſuch a Perſon, that I know not how he hath gained ſo much Credit, that this Act ſhould paſs upon his Parole to take away the Life of a Man. He was lately of that horrid Conſpiracy of the Aſſaſſination of the King; and ſhall that Man, who was ſo lately of that villainous Diſpoſition, to be ingaged in a Crime of that black Nature, and not convicted by his own Conſcience, but by the Danger he had run himſelf into, not ſo much as pardoned his Crime, but at this time, if I may without Offence uſe that Expreſſion, Drudging for his Pardon; I ſay, ſhall this Perſon's Life be taken away by his Parole?

Sir, The next Thing I would go to, is that (which likewiſe they call Evidence) which is an Examination, as they term it, of Goodman, taken before a Juſtice of Peace: But he was not examined, and I muſt inſiſt upon it; That though you permitted it to be read, yet I did obſerve you did not declare it to be Evidence; but you were, I preſume, willing to hear all Things, and then judge what would be the Evidence. And, I think, the King's Council did not preſs it further. Sir, as this is not Evidence that would be allowed in an inferiour Court, ſo, I hope, you will not allow it to be Evidence here; for then it is like to be followed by other Courts, who obſerve the Proceedings ceedings here as their great Rule: 'Tis only what Mr. Goodman thought fit to write down without being examined.

Sir, the next Thing they reſort to, is What Goodman ſwore upon his Examination in another Cauſe, where Sir John Fenwick was neither Party, nor Preſent. Sir, there are, I ſuppoſe, ſuch Reaſons againſt that ſort of Evidence from natural Juſtice, that it is not admitted in any Court; becauſe there may be a weak Defence, or the Perſon that ſwears it againſt one, perhaps may not, when Face to Face, have the Confidence to perſiſt in it, in Caſe it be falſe againſt another; or at leaſt that Perſon, who was not a Party before, when he comes upon his Tryal, may think of ſuch Queſtions as may go a great Way to diſcover the Truth, may produce ſuch Evidence againſt his Credit as may overthrow it.

But if what is Sworn at one time againſt one Man muſt be always taken for Truth againſt all others, the Tryal of one in the Company is the Tryal and Condemnation of all the reſt: And how contrary is this to a fundamental Rule in our Law, That no Evidence ſhall be given againſt a Man, when he is upon Tryal for his Life, but in the Preſence of the Priſoner; becauſe he may croſs Examine him who gives ſuch Evidence, and that is due to every Man in Juſtice.

But I would with Submiſſion inquire, how they are ſure that Goodman would have ſwore this Matter again, if he was now forthcoming? Becauſe he did ſwear ſo in Cook's Cauſe, is it neceſſary that he would ſwear ſo again now, if Face to Face, with Sir John Fenwick? No Body can ſay ſo poſitively and abſolutely; they only can imagine it, becauſe he once ſwore it, therefore it is poſſible that he would do ſo again: Whereas we may as well ſay, he did then ſwear to ſave his own Life; and having done that, and found an Opportunity to get out of the Way, his own Conſcience might put him upon flight, to prevent his doing of it again; and that might be the Reaſon for the withdrawing of himſelf. However, I inſiſt upon it, That there is no Proof that it was by the Procurement of Sir John Fenwick: The Bill does not alledge it, and the Proofs do not come up to it: Nay, there is nothing offered to ſuch Purpoſe, ſave only that Mr. Porter was pleaſed to ſay, That another Man told him, that the 300 Guineas he was offered, and 300 more he was to have received, were to have come from Sir John Fenwick: But hearſay Evidence is to be rejected, eſpecially againſt a Man for his Life; becauſe every Man is at liberty to talk at large: But God forbid that that ſhould be allowed for Evidence.

The next Thing they went upon was what Mr. Roe ſaid; That Mr. Dighton, who by your Permiſſion is Sollicitor for Sir John Fenwick, was inquiring of him what he could ſay to take off Goodman's Evidence: The Words I think he uſed were, What he could ſay to diſcredit Goodman's Evidence; and, I hope, that does no way affect Sir John Fenwick. For it does not appear that he had any Authority from him; but 'tis only ſuſpected, becauſe he is now Sollicitor for him, which he was admitted to after the Time ſpoken of. But I take the Words to be nothing relating to Goodman's withdrawing of himſelf; but to inquire what he could ſay to diſcredit his Teſtimony, which ſuppoſeth he would appear, and imports the quite contrary of withdrawing himſelf: And if he had gone on further, I think, there had been no Fault in that; for any Sollicitor may enquire up and down for the Advantage of his Client; and the Word Sollicitor imports his Employment. As to the Offer Mr. Roe ſays he made him, of a very great Recompence, how far he is guilty of that, I ſuppoſe, he can give ſome Account, if you ſhould pleaſe to enter into the Examination of it: And as I find he does not doubt to clear himſelf, ſo that Sir John Fenwick is in no ſort proved to be privy to Mr. Goodman's withdrawing himſelf, much leſs to be proved to have had a Hand in it.

There is one Thing more I would offer, and that is grounded upon the Bill of Indictment preferred at the Old Baily againſt Sir John Fenwick; That the Matter in the very Indictment that they have read on the other Side, as it is there laid, and as far as it hath been offered to be here proved, does not amount to Treaſon; or, at leaſt, it hath been made a very great doubt, and by ſome within theſe Walls: But this I offer, with all Submiſſion, I have the Author in my Hand, who is a Perſon of Note of the King's Council, he hath furniſhed me with ſuch Arguments as, I hope, I may be admitted to put you in mind of without Offence.

The Indictment lays, That there was a Conſpiracy and Agreement to call in Foreign Power, and to that Purpoſe to ſend Charnock to France; but the Indictment does not ſay, That Charnock was ſent, only that there was a Meeting, and an Agreement, and a Conſpiracy, to ſend him: So the Indictment does not lay it as a Thing done, nor does the Bill charge it ſo; but only takes Notice, That he, I mean Sir John Fenwick, was Indicted for Conſpiring and Agreeing to call in a Foreign Force; ſo that this Bill does not ſay that Charnock was ſent. And I appeal to you, Whether it be proved that he was ſent: For Mr. Porter ſays no more, but that there was a Meeting at the King's Head, and he named Sir John Fenwick to be one who was preſent; and there it was, he ſays, agreed, That Charnock ſhould be ſent into France. Now, if there was nothing more than an Agreement and Conſpiracy to do it, and no further Act, but ſuch a Meeting to do it, but the Perſon was not actually ſent, or, at leaſt, not proved to be ſent; then, from this learned Author's Opinion, I inſiſt upon it, that this is not a ſufficient Overt-Act of Treaſon. In the late Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, whoſe Innocency is vindicated by this Author, he takes notice, That a Conſpiracy or Agreement to levy War is not Treaſon, without actual levying War; and of that Opinion was my Lord Coke, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales. A Conſpiracy or Agreement to call in Foreign Forces, unleſs actually done, or a Perſon, at leaſt, actually ſent, or ſomething more than a bare Agreement for that Purpoſe, is the ſame as a Conſpiracy to levy War. And in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, the Proof being only, That he, and others, met together, and agreed to ſeize upon the Guards, and levy War, which he never actually did; it is inſiſted upon by this Author, That that was not Treaſon; for that Indictment went no further. And therefore my Author ſays, Show me where ſuch an Accuſation was ever agreed to be more than a Conſpiracy to Levy War? And that ſuch a Conſpiracy was ever agreed to be Treaſon within the Statute of Edward III. till within theſe few Years?

Sir,

Sir, now I muſt humbly ſubmit it to you, whether this be any Thing more? And for the Purpoſe you will pleaſe to conſider, What this preſent Bill, and what that Bill of Indictment is: For it is not, for that Charnock was ſent into France to ſollicite Foreign Forces; but only that Sir John Fenwick was at a Meeting, where they did agree ſo to do. Calling in Foreign Forces is levying War, but Conſpiracy to levy War is not Treaſon, unleſs it be actually done: A Conſpiracy to call in Foreign Forces is nothing more. And therefore I humbly inſiſt upon it, That neither by this Bill, or by the Indictment recited in it, or the Proofs offered before you, any Thing is charged, but only an Agreement at that Meeting mentioned by Captain Porter, a ſingle Perſon, and he not upon Oath, to call in Foreign Forces. For he only ſays, That Charnock told him he had been in France. I ſhall not trouble you any further; we have not thought fit to produce Witneſſes, for the Reaſons I have offered: For that we do not find, That Sir John Fenwick throughout the Bill is charged with being guilty of Treaſon; and we are not willing to enter upon the Defence of a Matter not charged upon him. I hope, Sir, you will not make a Precedent, That where a Perſon is Indicted, and ready to abide his Tryal, in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, as Sir John Fenwick now is, that he might be taken out of the Hands of the ordinary Judges, and be brought to this Bar, to receive his Tryal here.

A Matter of this Nature may be of very great Conſequence: We know at preſent upon what Ground we ſtand; for by the Statute of Edward III. we know what is Treaſon; by the 2 Statutes of Edward VI. and the late Act of Treaſon, we know what is Proof; by the Statute of Magna Charta, we know how we are to be tried, per legem terræ & per judicium parium; That is, a Peer by his Peers, and a Commoner by a Jury: but if Bills of Attainder come into Faſhion, we ſhall neither know what is Treaſon, what is Evidence, nor how, nor where we are to be tryed. Sir, I ſubmit it to you, and hope this Bill ſhall not paſs.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. Mr. Speaker, I am of Council for Sir John Fenwick, the Priſoner at the Bar; and firſt, I am humbly for to thank you for your Candour, of which I have had frequent Experience; and humbly beg for my ſelf, That if I offer any Words that are indecent, or unfit for me, that you will interrupt me, for it is furtheſt from my Intention ſo to do.

The Bill that is brought into this Houſe againſt Sir John Fenwick, is that whereby every one of you (with Submiſſion) are to declare and pronounce, That he ſhall be Drawn, Hanged and Quartered, as a Traytor. And the Queſtion before you is, Whether you will do this in this Caſe?

Sir, I ſhall not pretend to queſtion, nor enter into any Debate or Argument in this Thing concerning the Power of Parliaments: No queſtion, but in all Governments, there is ſome Supream Power; and by our Conſtitution, it is lodged in the King, Lords and Commons.

There are Precedents of Attainders, and that many; but can they ſhew me, where there hath been any Attainder by Parliament, for High Treaſon upon one ſingle Act, which if Treaſon, was Determinable at Common Law; there have been Bills of Attainder for flagrant Treaſons, and for Great Miniſters of State; ſome topping Sinners, who have been above Judges and Jury, and whom Inferiour Courts could not tell what to ſay to: But I believe I may ſay this, That for a ſingle Conſult or Agreement between four or five private Gentlemen, in a private Room, in which there was no Danger, but by the Conſequence of the Reſolution, if it was put in Practice, no Man can ſhew any Precedent for Attainting any Perſon in Parliament.

If you pleaſe to obſerve the 25 Edw. III, reſerves the Power to Parliament, to proceed in Treaſon not expreſſed within the Statute; but as to the Compaſſing the King's Death, Adhering to the King's Enemies, and thoſe Things that are there particularly ſpecified, it ſeems the Senſe of the Parliament to leave them to the Rules of the Common Law. So 1 H. 4. No. 144. upon the Roll it is at large complained of Accuſations in Parliament for Treaſons and Felonies, and declares for the future, they ſhould be determined in the Inferiour Courts.

1. This was occaſioned by Sir Raw. Harray; Cotton's Abridgment, 189.

There is a Melancholy Precedent or Two of ſingle Acts of Attainder; but they are moſt of them reverſed. Sir Thomas Haxey in Richard the IId's Time, was Attainted for bringing in a Bill into the Commons Houſe againſt the Prerogative; but 1 H. 4. it was reverſed with great Cenſure, Cott. Abridg. 362. 363. There are others in H. 8. Time, but they were for Acts in that Reign, which were queſtionable, whether or no within the Statute of Edw. III. and were for ſuch Actions, as perhaps were not for the Honour of the Prince, or Good of the Government, to diſcloſe by publick Tryal, as the Attainder of the Queen, and others concerned.

I beg leave to repeat the Words of a great Author, the Biſhop of Salisbury, in the Hiſtory of the Reformation, which I crave leave rather to do, becauſe it hath been approved of by this Houſe, for he had Thanks of the Parliament for it; fol. 359. 360. where ſpeaking of theſe ſort of Attainders, then he ſays, After theſe Executions, followed the Parliament in 1539, in which theſe Attainders were not only Confirmed, but divers others were made of Perſons in Cuſtody, without bringing them to Tryal; (and he ſays) which can't be enough condemned as a Breach of the moſt Sacred and unalterable Rules of Juſtice.

That of the Marchioneſs of Exeter, &c. I ſhall make no Paraphraſe upon it: There is no queſtion but you will Agree, and I muſt Admit, Salus Populi to be Suprema Lex; but for an Act, not the laſt of May, but laſt May was Twelve Months, the Danger paſſed, the Perſons executed, that were concerned in the Great Treaſon, and all Danger that might have been from that Act gone, and no Fear now concerning it: I hope you will not uſe the extraordinary Power of the Legiſlative, to puniſh for that Fact which may be puniſhed by the ordinary Rules of Law.

The Reaſon ſuggeſted in the Bill is, That 'tis impoſſible to have this Gentleman Tryed by the Rules of the Common Law; for otherwiſe there is none: For you will not waſte your Time; and if the Doctrine that was broached here yeſterday, be true, there is no Occaſion to trouble you now; for according to their Doctrine, there is legal Evidence, and there is no need of a Bill of Attainder; but taking that for granted, that we muſt do; otherwiſe there is no Reaſon for this Bill. Then the Bill ſays, That Goodman was an Evidence, and that he is withdrawn; which I muſt obſerve, is neither laid, nor proved to be by the Privity, Conſent, or Procurement of Sir John Fenwick: There is no pretence of it in the Bill; no Inſinuation of it, nor any Evidence to that Purpoſe. Then ſuppoſe Goodman is withdrawn, we may preſume you will not paſs a Bill to put Sir John Fenwick in a worſe Condition than if Goodman was preſent, if he had been ready to have ſworn the ſame Thing.

the

In caſe you do paſs this Bill, you do put Sir John Fenwick in a worſe Condition than he would have been if Goodman were here: Perhaps it might have been reaſonable to have an Act paſſed, That Goodman's Depoſitions ſhould be read at the Tryal, if Goodman was withdrawn; but we hope it can't be a Reaſon to condemn Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon without Tryal; for the Conſequence of this is (if it were by his Means) that he is puniſhed greater than the Thing requires. For if Goodman was here, Sir John Fenwick would have had his Tryal by a Jury, the Benefit of Challenges, Exceptions to the Array, might have Challenged upon Account of Favour, if any of the Grand-Jury had been impanelled, had his legal Exceptions to the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes, might have theſe Witneſſes examined upon Oath, might give Evidence upon Oath to it, and all this he is deprived of: So that now he is in a worſe Condition, by Goodman's abſence, than if he was preſent. We inſiſt upon it therefore, and ſubmit it to you, whether any Puniſhment can be impoſed by the Legiſlative Power, but only to ſupply that Defect; and put the Caſe in the ſame Circumſtances it would have been, if ſuch a Miſcarriage had not been committed: But this Bill is to condemn him to Death upon the Oath of one Witneſs, though there was your Act of Parliament laſt Year requires two. With ſubmiſſion to their Judgment, it was the Law of the Land, before that; and in all Caſes, where Tryals are per Teſtes; and 'tis the Law of God, and the Law of the whole World; and no Law allows a Man to be condemned but by two Witneſſes; and the Reaſon that here one Witneſs is admitted, is, becauſe he hath the Benefit of a Jury, and Challenges to them, who the Law ſuppoſes are privy to the Fact, and therefore are to come from the Vicinage, from the Neighbourhood of the Place where the Party dwells; and for that Reaſon, in Caſes of Felony, where no Statute interpoſes, the Law allows but one Witneſs. Natural Reaſon requires two Witneſſes in caſe of ſo great Crimes, becauſe that one Witneſs can be no Rule to guide your Judgments; one affirms, the other denies, this is equal; and Preſumption ought to be on the Side of Innocency, rather than otherwiſe; but we hope, in this Caſe, it will not be thought reaſonable to paſs the Bill to condemn Sir John Fenwick for Treaſon, and to condemn him to the baſeſt of Executions, upon the Teſtimony, nay, upon the Parole of one Witneſs. And 'tis no more than if Goodman had been dead, then you would not have done it: If Goodman and Porter had both come to this Bar, you would not have done it, but have referred him to his Tryal at the Common Law. Now what is there pretended by them to induce you to judge the contrary, or at leaſt without ſo much as an Allegation in the Bill, that Sir John Fenwick procured his withdrawing. I propoſe it to your Conſideration, Whether there be any Proof that Goodman is withdrawn? He was once in Cuſtody, let out upon Bail, the Proſecutors approved the Bail, he never yet called upon his Recognizance; nay, there is not one Tittle of Evidence, but that Goodman may be in the ſame Lodging where he was: And then, ſuppoſe when you have paſſed this Bill, Goodman ſhould appear again and contradict his Teſtimony he has given before: Then it may be too late for you to do Right to Sir John Fenwick. 'Tis not ſo much as offered that Goodman could not be found; they offered a printed Proclamation, which I am ſure the King's Serjeant will not allow to be any Evidence. Whether it paſſed the Great Seal before it was printed, or whether it paſſed it at all, non conſtat; for it was not read; they waved it. It does not appear Sir John Fenwick conſented, or procured Goodman's withdrawing; he could not procure it, for he was a Priſoner, and ſo not likely to effect it, being a Priſoner, eſpecially for his Life.

As for my Lady Fenwick, whether ſhe did ſo or not, I am ſure you'll be of Opinion, it ought not to affect Sir John Fenwick: Suppoſe Clancy a Stranger to Sir John Fenwick, and in Truth he never ſaw him: Or ſuppoſe him a Friend, and he officiouſly did what he did; he ought to anſwer for it, and I think he hath undergone the Puniſhment the Law thought fit to inflict in that Caſe; 'tis his own Crime, and by the Rules of Juſtice, no Man's Crime ought to tend to the Puniſhment or Misfortune of another Man: The Act of one Criminal, thought to be a Party, or Acquaintance, or a Friend of Sir John Fenwick's, ought not to affect him, nor no Body but the Actor; 'tis he that hath ſuffered for it.

And what hath been ſaid in that Matter, ought not to influence your Judgments; for 'tis not improbable, but what Clancy told Porter, is falſe; you will never allow Hearſay, nor permit your Judgment to be governed by any Thing but what is certain, and hath all the moral Rules of Perſuaſion. Hearſay was never, by any Law in any Court of the World, allowed, nor indeed believed in private Converſation.

As to my Lady Fenwick, there is this further, That Husband and Wife, in reſpect of Crimes, are diſtinct Perſons; and what one does, cannot affect the other, no more than ſhe deſerves to be executed for what Sir John Fenwick did; and as to what Porter ſays concerning it, it only relates to himſelf; it proves no Suggeſtion of the Bill, which is, That Goodman is withdrawn, becauſe a Stranger to Sir John Fenwick, (and it muſt be ſo in Conſtruction of Law) made an Attempt upon Captain Porter; therefore Goodman being withdrawn, there was an Attempt upon him, and by the ſame Perſon, and by the ſame Means; this is no Evidence; it carries no Logick in it, and won't prevail upon your Judgment.

We offer another Thing to your Conſideration. 'Tis ſaid, that one Roe was ſpoke to by a Sollicitor of Sir John Fenwick's, Whether or no he could ſay any Thing to the Diſcredit of Goodman, as to his Robbing or Clipping? The asking of that Queſtion was lawful; and to deſire him to teſtify it was lawful: I muſt agree, to offer too great a Sum of Money, may ſubject him to an Information in the King's Bench; (but Mr. Attorney knows that beſt) but God forbid it ſhould affect Sir John Fenwick; Mr. Dighton was not his Sollicitor at that Time, not appointed, nor had any Liberty to come to him; beſides, it can't be an Evidence, nor can't induce you to believe, That the ſame Perſon was inſtrumental to get away Goodman, becauſe cauſe he asked Roe, if he knew Goodman to be guilty of thoſe Crimes; for there is no Evidence, that he asked him to perſuade him to withdraw himſelf.

There's another Thing we could offer to you: There's no Proof of that, which, upon the firſt Reading of this Bill, was aimed at, to be puniſhed with greater Pains than the common Law inflicts, and that is, the Giving of falſe Papers and Accuſations againſt great Perſons; they have not attempted any Thing like it; ſo that That is to be taken as if there was no ſuch Thing. Neither is there any Proof of protracting his Tryal, by any Promiſes of Confeſſion or Diſcovery; they opened it, but did not attempt the Proof of it, but waved it.

But take it to be ſo; I hope you will not paſs an Act to Attaint a Man for making a falſe Accuſation, which only incurs an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, or Fine and Impriſonment upon an Indictment; and, I hope, you'll not condemn him to a greater Puniſhment, when, at the Time he did it, he had no Notice of that Puniſhment. The Deſign of the Law, is to influence Men by Fear of Penalty; and how can that be, when Penalties are not known at the Time the Fact was committed? I ſpeak with Submiſſion ſtill; it ſeems not Juſt, that I ſhould forbear with ſo much Caution, from an Action that expoſes me to the Penalty of 20*l.* as from an Action for which the Law ſays, I ſhall forfeit my Life: Now, Sir, in this Caſe, it might be expected that he ſhould incur the Penalty of Fine, Pillory, and Impriſonment; but not that he could incur the Penalty of Death.

Then, Sir, as to the protracting of his Tryal by ſuch Promiſes of Confeſſion. Certainly the putting off his Tryal, in it ſelf, is ſo far from being a Crime, that it can't be thought but lawful; 'tis every Man's Duty, upon the Principle of Self-preſervation; and it was at the Liberty of the Government and Miniſters, to do as they thought fit in it.

In the next Place we do inſiſt, That there is no Treaſon alledged nor proved in this Caſe: There is no Pretence of Truth nor Charge, in reſpect of the Aſſaſſination; nor of buying of Arms or Horſes, though mentioned in the Indictment: And if Sir John Fenwick had been to have been Tryed upon this Indictment, and they had had both theſe Witneſſes there, all that could have been proved, muſt be of the Conſult; as to the Reſt, he muſt have been found not Guilty: And I believe 'tis moſt notorious, that the whole Company there, could not have raiſed what was talked of. Now as to this ſingle Act, it hath been ſaid, That a Conſpiracy to levy War is not Treaſon: My Lord Ruſſel was attainted for it, and that Attainder was reverſed upon this very Account, and the Act declares the Reaſon of it, he being deny'd his lawful Challenges, and by ſtrained Conſtruction of Treaſons, he was unlawfully convicted of Treaſon. Now the Overt-Act in the Indictment was this, That my Lord Ruſſel, and others, did conſult and conſpire to ſeize the King's Guards: The Proof of it went further, That they ſent Sir Thomas Armſtrong to view them and ſeize them: But then the Queſtion is, Whether the Conſulting to ſend a Man to invite foreign Forces, is any more than a Conſult to ſeize the King's Guards? We ſay each are levying of War, and 'tis not within the Clauſe of adhering to the King's Enemies; for they muſt be either preſent aiding and abetting of them, or ſending them Money, Arms, and Ammunition, and the like; and I think, for that, I may appeal to your Act made againſt correſponding with the King's Enemies; which, I ſuppoſe, if the Law before was otherwiſe, it needed not to have been made. Now here is only a Conſult and Agreement to do this Act.

It hath been queſtioned, Whether Scribere eſt agere? But here it is only mittere; nay, it is not ſo much, 'tis only agreare mittere; ſix Men had between them a little private Diſcourſe, and at laſt One of them did agree to ſend Charnock to France: The Queſtion is, Whether the Law of the Land will warrant this to be Treaſon? And if not, then you muſt not Paſs this Act upon ſuch a ſingle Point. Dr. Story's Caſe is deny'd to be Law; this Caſe is no more than that in my Lord Dyer, for writing a Letter to invite the Spaniſh King to invade England; and it was a Time of great Fear of them, as it is of the French King now; and he was attainted upon that, but that Judgment hath been queſtioned and deny'd to be Law. My Lord Hales expreſly, in his Pleas of the Crown, ſays, That a Conſpiracy to levy War, is not an Overt-Act of the King's Death; and that attempting to levy War, is not Treaſon. Now the Sorts of Treaſons are theſe Three; compaſſing the King's Death, levying War, or adhering to the King's Enemies. Now for compaſſing or agreeing to levy War, to apply that to be an Overt-Act of compaſſing the King's Death, hath been always complained of as a Strain of the Law.

Upon theſe Reaſons, we think this would not have been an Act of compaſſing the King's Death, as laid in the Indictment; and then if it be but a Queſtion, Whether it be or no? We hope you will not proceed in your Legiſlative, eſpecially when he is deprived of the Advantage of inſiſting on this at his Tryal at common Law: Witneſſes are there upon their Oaths; he might have had a Challenge to the Jury; he might move in Arreſt of Judgment. Now the Queſtion is, Whether you will pronounce Sentence of Death upon him for High Treaſon, upon one ſingle Act, a Year and a half ago, juſt after the Act of Parliament for regulating Tryals in Caſes of High Treaſon; and if we had had a Tryal at Law, we ſhould have canvaſed theſe Things; if we had Witneſſes upon their Oaths, for the Pardon reached the 29th of April, they could Swear no new Diſcourſe but juſt in May; and now they ſay it was in the Middle of May, if it had been before, the King's Grace would have exempted Sir John Fenwick from Puniſhment; and theſe Things we ſhould have had the Advantage of, if we had had the Liberty of a Tryal.

There's another Conſideration: Sir John Fenwick hath pleaded, and hath ſo pleaded to Iſſue, and Iſſue is joined, and a Venire Facias is awarded. Now we ſubmit it to you, whether you will think fit to take it out of the Hands of the Common Law, when there is no extraordinary Neceſſity? And the Conſideration we have to offer to you, if you do not caſt out this Bill, if we ſhould have the good Fortune, as we hope for in another Place, Sir John Fenwick ſtands ſtill liable, and muſt ſubmit to his Tryal, if the King's Council think fit to proſecute him, and we think it hard to undergo your Cenſure, to be condemned in this Place; and if (perhaps) he be acquitted here, to undergo the like Danger in another, and then to be Tryed in a Third: And for theſe Reaſons, we hope, you will reject this Bill.

Mr. Ser-

Mr Serj. Gould. May it pleaſe you, Mr. Speaker, I have hearkened to what theſe Gentlemen have Objected, and could not be aware of all they have ſaid. They have enlarged upon ſeveral Topicks; I ſhall recollect them as well as I can, and Anſwer them in the Method they have taken. I never did think, that the Parliament would take Things out of the Ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, nor Attaint any of Treaſon, unleſs in Caſes Extraordinary; and theſe Gentlemen have agreed, That in Caſes Extraordinary they have done it. They likewiſe have agreed, and Sir Bartholomew Shower has told you, That there are ſome Treaſons, by the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. reſerved by that Act, to be declared by Parliament. Sir Thomas Powys ſays, This is taken out of the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice: So ſays Sir Bartholomew Shower; ſays he, Here is an Indictment before you, the Party hath pleaded not Guilty, and they ſay, he may be Tryed in the ordinary Courſe of the Law; and therefore they look upon it as improper to bring it here.

The Gentlemen are miſtaken very much, to think that I did ſay, That the Examination that I ſaid was Evidence here, would be allowed below. If I had thought ſo, I ſhould have thought at the ſame Time, this Houſe would not have meddled with it: But I do diſagree with them in this; and take it, That where a Caſe is Extraordinary, you will come and meddle with the Matter. Here is an abominable Treaſon, that is agreed on all Hands. Here is Plot upon Plot: Here hath been a Plot now to take away the King's Evidence; there was two Witneſſes in the beginning, and 'tis very plain that one of them is not here; for that here was a Proclamation produced, and I did look upon that Matter as taken for granted, That Goodman was withdrawn, and for that Matter they may be eaſily ſatisfied. They ſay, we have not proved the Suggeſtions of the Bill; but we think we have: For firſt of all, Captain Porter hath here Sworn it expreſly; it is not a Thing of looſe, bare Talking; but he hath proved a deliberate and formed Conſpiracy; he hath proved, that it was actually agreed upon, a Firſt and at a ſecond Time; and that Charnock was ſent in order to the Execution of it: And what was it for? It was plainly to depoſe the King. He tells you, for that Purpoſe, they had deſired 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons from the French King; and theſe Gentlemen agreed to join them. Now, can there be a greater Evidence of depoſing the King, and conſequently of imagining his Death? 'Tis an Evidence of the Imagination of the Death of the King, as well as of the Rebellion; it being ſo in the neceſſary Conſequence of it. Now, I think, he hath fully proved That. Then we offer to you, how far you will allow of this Examination: Why? Becauſe upon a ſecond Contrivance, here is a Witneſs withdrawn; and can we give you greater Evidence of that, than we have given? We have proved that there was tampering, let the Thing run as far as it will. Captain Porter was dealt with, had 300 Guineas in Hand, and 300 more he was to have remitted to him; and was to have 300 l. a Year, whereof Sir John Fenwick was to pay One. It does follow after, that he is withdrawn, we muſt leave it to this Honourable Houſe, what Conſtruction you will make of That: Whether here is not a ſecond Plot?

Now this Matter is brought before this Honourable Houſe, we have gone ſo far in it, as to produce Goodman's Examination that was taken before a Juſtice of Peace: We have ſhewed you the Evidence that he hath given upon a former Tryal; and now he is gone, ſure no Body but muſt juſtly infer, 'tis by Sir John Fenwick's Means: So that here they have taken away the Evidence that is neceſſary in the ordinary Courſe of Proceedings. In ſuch an extraordinary Caſe, I think it hath been uſual for the Parliament to interpoſe: Therefore, what they pretended, under Favour, that this ſhould not be Evidence, is all taken off. For now we are in Parliament, you will make uſe of ſuch Informations as can give you any Light into the Matter, and may obviate and cure the Diſtemper that is upon us; and you are Judges of your own Methods, and how far Sir John Fenwick hath been concerned upon the Inſtances we have given you, that is in your Judgments. As for what Sir Thomas Powys tells you; ſays he, This Power hath not been executed by Parliaments very frequently, but it hath generally been done where Perſons are withdrawn from Juſtice, and can't be come at in the ordinary Courſe. Why, we are in the like Caſe; if ſo be we can't come at Juſtice in the ordinary Courſe, and that by our Evidence having been tampered with, and drawn away; then, Sir, under Favour, by their own Arguments, 'tis proper to come before this Honourable Houſe; ſo that notwithſtanding what hath been ſaid, we do think we have given you Evidence.

And as for what they ſaid, That we have not given any Account that Sir John Fenwick, by giving Aſſurance of his Confeſſion, had protracted his Tryal; for that I did apply my ſelf, That Mr. Vernon might give you an Account of it: So that upon the whole Matter, we muſt leave it to your Conſideration, and hope we have given you good Satisfaction, that there hath been a great Plot againſt the Government; and there was no Evidence of any other Matter before the Judges, and they allowed it to be High Treaſon. Here is the ſame Evidence, only we have not one of them Viva Voce.

Mr Serj Lovell. Mr. Speaker, I ſhall not trouble you nor the Houſe very long; but I humbly hope, with a little Pains, to ſatisfy the Houſe, that moſt that hath been ſaid on the other Side, is not much to the Purpoſe. Sir, I will conſider, with the Leave of this Houſe, what the Common Law was before 25 Edw. 3. and how the Law does now ſtand; and draw ſome Conſequences from thence, and the Neceſſity of this Caſe.

The Statute of 25 Edw. 3. I muſt obſerve it, is not an Enacting Law, it is only a Law Declaratory; for all thoſe particular Inſtances of Treaſons that are mentioned there, were Treaſons before that Law was made; and ſo, by the Preamble of it, plainly appears: But the Judges had a greater Liberty upon conſtructive Treaſons, and upon accumulative Treaſons; and that was left too much at the Diſcretion and Liberty of the Judges below, and the executive Power of the Law. Then that Statute comes and reſtrains the Judges in that Point; and ſays, That they ſhall not give Judgment in any Caſes of Treaſon, but only in theſe Caſes, particularly mentioned there: And that Statute ſays, That if any other Matter which ſhall be thought Treaſon, ſhould come before them, they ſhall not proceed to Judgment, but acquaint the King in Parliament with it. I only make uſe of it, to prove how Treaſons ſtood before that Act, and how it comes to be altered from the Common Law: And I am ſure it is not to be denied, but that one Witneſs was ſufficient at the Common Law: But then comes 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. and that, for the Security of the Subject, does ordain,

That in Cases of High Treason there shall be two Witnesses of the Fact: But that Statute does not alter, but was made for the more Security of the Subject in Point of Proof. But in that Statute of 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. that does provide there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of High Treason, there is an Exception of Treason for counterfeiting and forging of the Coin; and that is the Reason that the Law is taken now, that though there must be two Witnesses in the Cases of other Treasons, yet in the Case of Coining, there needs but One. The Offence or Crime is never the greater, because there are to be two Witnesses to prove it. In this Case that is here before you, we come to desire your Help, because one of the Witnesses is by Art and fraudulent Means withdrawn: Does that purge the Crime at all, or lessen it? No Man will say the Crime is less, but it does prevent a regular Tryal before the Courts below; and that is the Reason why we did come here; and we hope this Defect shall be supplied by a special Law: But, say they, 'tis very hard a Law should be made ex post Facto, to take away a Man's Life. It would be very hard, if the Case was as they have cited it, to make a Crime ex post Facto, that was not so before: But I do not take it to be hard for a Law to be made to repeal another, to make a Matter Tryable, that was not Tryable before.

Suppose a Law should be made, That all Treasons from and after such a Time, suppose from a Time before the Fact is here supposed to be committed, as May was Twelve-months, should be tryable as at the Common Law, no doubt the Parliament may repeal a Law in Part, or in All. No Man can say, but Sir John Fenwick might be Tryed at the Common Law, by one Witness, before the Statute of 1 Ed. 6. So that I do observe, and humbly submit it to you, That this Law, by the Act, is not changed as to the Crime; the Crime is as it was before, it is only changed as to the Number of Witnesses. The Instances that have been observed on the other Side, with humble Submission, I think do not reach our Case. We do not insist that there are two legal Witnesses; we do confess the Information that hath been read, is not a legal Proof; but this House, in their Legislative Capacity, is not to be confined to the Evidence that a Jury must have below. This House may take what Ways and Methods they please to satisfy themselves: Say they, Here is the Life of a Gentleman that is concerned. I know all good Men will be tender of the Life of a Man: But here is the Life of the King, and the Safety of the Kingdom, the Peace and Safety of us all, that is concerned in the same Case; and let them put these Things into the Ballance, and consider which ought to weigh most.

You have a Record before you of the Conviction of Peter Cook, who was Indicted by the same Witness.

A Learned Gentleman, that is of Council for the Prisoner at the Bar, did make the same Objections as are made now at the Old Baily; (it may be there are some other Particulars now) and after all the Debates and Arguments that could be used at that Time, it was unanimously resolved, That the Crime was High Treason: And if it was High Treason in Peter Cook, 'tis no less in Sir John Fenwick, who was present at the same Time, and engaged in the same Business: For what was a Crime in one, was the same in both.

I think 'tis too determinative an Expression, to say, This was nothing but a little Twittle Twattle. They did there meet upon a solemn Consultation; and not only once, but they did meet a second Time; and what was it to do? It was to invite a Foreign Power to invade this Land, and to make War with the King and Kingdom; and they did promise, and solemnly ingage to assist them with armed Forces; and it was proved, That they did agree with Charnock to go into France; and Charnock was not willing to go the first Time he was desired, till he found they were stanch and steady in their Resolutions; and upon a second Meeting they were all found so, and then he would go: I think that is an Overt-Act of Treason, if there be any. And when he came back, he said, he had been in France, and brought an Answer to the Message he went about: This is all now laid before you. But, say they, this is an extraordinary Case: I do agree it; but because it is an extraordinary Case, and for the Safety of the King and Kingdom, it is fit there should be an extraordinary Remedy.

They ask, What Mischief it would be, if this Gentleman should be left to the ordinary Course of Law? It hath been the Wisdom of all Ages to make a Law, to punish such as by their Artifice would evade the Law. Here is this Gentleman, as we say, guilty of High Treason; but that we submit to you.

This Gentleman was in the Prosecution of the Law, and might have been Tryed in the regular Way, had the Witnesses upon their Oaths; (the Grand Jury have found Billa Vera upon their Oaths;) but we must appeal to a worthy Member of the House (who because he was a Member we did not call upon him) to give you an Account how he did Delay and Portract his Tryal; and now they know he can't be Tryed at all, they pretend he is willing to be Tryed: And because he can't be Tryed, they would have it as an Argument that he should not be punished by any other Means.

Sir, if so notorious a Crime as this is, should be committed against the Body of a Nation, and go unpunished, either in the common Course, or by some extraordinary Methods, the Nation would be in a doubtful and dangerous Case.

When this House hath passed their Judgments in this Matter, it will go to another Place, where it will have another Examination; and it will have that regular Consideration that all other Acts have. We are in an extraordinary Case, and do think, That this extraordinary Case does deserve an extraordinary Punishment.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. I beg Pardon but for one Word: No Man does abhor such Consults more than my self; but I do not think that Discourses are such an Overt-Act of High Treason, as deserves the Punishment of Death.

Sir John Fenwick and the Council withdrew. And being withdrawn.

Admiral Russel. I think this may be a proper Time to ask Questions: If so, I think my self enough concerned to trouble you with one or two. I think in the Paper that hath been read, I am mentioned twice. These are the Questions I desire to have asked; What Proof he hath of this? Whether ever he saw —— And what Proof he has that I sent Captain Lloyd over? And that I gave him a List of the Ships? And that that I ſaid, we could not fit out thirty Ships in May? And whether or no, ſince this Revolution, he hath had any Converſation with me?

Meaning Fenwick's Informations.

Colonel Crawford. What that honourable Perſon ſays, calls me up; my Name is mentioned in Sir John Fenwick's Paper: I deſire you would ask him, Why he mentioned me in his Paper, as he hath done? And that you would require him to make Proof of what he ſays in relation to me.

Colonel Godfrey. I deſire ſome Queſtions may be asked him in relation to a noble Lord, my Lord Marlborough: If he be Guilty I would have it known, and I would as willingly have it known if he be Innocent, as I believe it will ſo appear. I would have him asked, Whether, ſince the Beginning of this War, or from the Time of this King's Landing, Sir John Fenwick did ever ſpeak to him, in Publick or Private? Or ever did write to him, or receive any Meſſage by Word of Mouth, or Letter, from my Lord Marlborough? He ſays, That ſome Service he had promiſed King James, which inclined him to promiſe him his Pardon: I would know what that Service was? And in relation to his ſending Lloyd into France, Whether he can, by any Body elſe, make that appear?

Colonel Crawford. That Gentleman hath put me in mind of one ſhort Queſtion; Whether ever he converſed or ſpake with me in his Life?

Mr. Bridges. Whether Sir John Fenwick hath any Body but himſelf, to ſupport the Hearſay he hath given an Account of? And I deſire a Queſtion may be asked him on behalf of the Duke of Shrewsbury; What Proof he has that the Duke of Shrewsbury came into the Office of Secretary of State again, by the Operation and Conſent of King James?

Mr. Vernon. I deſire a Queſtion may be asked previous to that, becauſe 'tis ſo in Time; How he knows that noble Lord was in Treaty with King James, before he went out of the Secretary's Office, when he firſt came there?

Colonel Granvil. I deſire he may be asked, What Proof he can give, that my Lord Bath was to betray Plymouth into the Hands of King James, or the King of France, and whatever elſe my Father is accuſed of in that Paper?

Mr. Harley. I humbly propoſe it to you for the Method of your Proceedings, ſince you take this Method, Whether it will ſave you Time for you to look upon that Paper, and ask him as to the ſeveral Parts of it, what Proof he can make of it.

A Vote made a little before, by which that Paper was condemned.

Mr. How. I do not oppoſe Sir John Fenwick's being examined to this Paper, but it might have been more to your Credit, if you had Examined him before your Vote: But here are a great many Gentlemen riſe, to ask a Man to that which he does not pretend to any Proof of. The beſt Way for ſaving your Time is, I conceive, to have the ſeveral Parts of the Paper that does concern theſe Gentlemen read to him; and to ask him upon what Grounds he gave the King that Information. This will lead him into all that he knows of the Matter.

Mr. Boſcawen. I am not againſt the Queſtion that is propoſed laſt; but you may ask him that at laſt. But there is a noble Lord that is reflected on in that Paper, and that is my Lord Godolphin; I deſire you would pleaſe to ask the ſame Queſtions as to him.

Lord Coningsby. I did intend to take care of my Lord Godolphin; there is a hard Reflection upon that noble Perſon; but, under Favour, you muſt, I think, let him know you have ſuch a Paper; and then ask him in General, What Proof he has to the Particulars of that Paper? And then you will do Injuſtice to no Body.

Mr. Norris. There have been ſeveral Queſtions moved by ſeveral worthy Members; and, I think, the Queſtions ought to be asked: But, I think, there is one previous Queſtion to all theſe; and that is, when you tell him that you have ſuch a Paper. I think the firſt Queſtion ſhould be, Whether ever he delivered thoſe Papers to the King?

Sir R. Delaval. I find I am named in that Paper that Sir John Fenwick hath given; I deſire that Part that relates to me may be read to him; and that he may give a Reaſon, why he hath ſaid ſo of me, and Mr. Killigrew.

Lord Walden. There is another mentioned, and that is Commiſſary Crawford; I deſire he may be asked, What Proof he hath, that he gave Mr. —— a Liſt of the Army?

Mr. Chanc. of Exchequer. I can't blame Gentlemen for asking Queſtions that concern them, or their Friends: Some are for reading of it to him, I am againſt that: But yet I would have you to enquire into this Paper. And being you intended to do it, it might have been as well enquired into before Mr. Dighton came laſt to him. I think you may put your ſelf into an eaſy Method, and avoid all leading Queſtions; and ask him upon every Name in that Paper, as you come to it, What he knows of that Gentleman? And ask him no other Queſtion.

Mr. Smith. I was ſtanding up to the ſame Purpoſe: I would not have you to put Words into his Mouth, nor let him know by any Queſtion what Anſwer he is to make.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, I am willing to do you any Service I can; but here are long Informations, and I never read them, nor know the Contents of them, but as they were read at the Table.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think the Method lately propoſed, will ſave you a great deal of Time, and is proper for the Diſcovery of the Truth; That you will Name the Perſons to him in Order as they are in the Paper, and ask him in general, What he knows of thoſe Perſons? But when you call him in, I am not for asking him to the particular Things he hath ſaid againſt them in that Paper; becauſe that Paper, though it is under his own Hand, is not his own; and if he knew it then, he knows it ſtill.

Colonel Mordent. I won't pretend to propoſe any Thing, only for the Shortning of your Time: If after you have informed him there is ſuch a Paper, that you ſhould ask him, Whether he will own it? And then, What Sort of Proof he will bring to prove it? You will find he will either tell you, he will Adviſe with Council, or whether he will give any Anſwer at all.

Lord Cutts. I have only one Queſtion to be asked Sir John Fenwick; 'tis not a Queſtion that relates to any Perſon named in that Paper. I think there is no one Perſon that he hath named, but is eminently known or believed to be in the Intereſt of this Government; and none but what are in ſome Poſt of Truſt, and Employment in it. Then, I think it highly neceſſary to know, How it comes to paſs that he hath had ſo much Converſation with Perſons of that Character, and none with thoſe People that he hath been ſeen daily to converſe with? And if he hath, Why he hath not diſcovered them, as he hath done the Reſt?

Mr. Speaker. Is it your Pleaſure I inform him we have the Informations?

Mr. Palmer. If I am not miſtaken, when you firſt called Sir John Fenwick before you, he referred himſelf to what he had informed the King; and referred himſelf to that Paper, as often as you asked him any Queſtions. And if you ask him general Queſtions, I preſume he will give you the ſame Anſwer: Therefore, I think, it may be proper to ask him, Whether this is the Paper that he delivered in, or not? Or otherwiſe, I doubt, he will tell you, He knows nothing but what is in that Paper. Now, if he refers to that Paper, you may ask him, If he knows it again, if it be ſhewed to him?

Mr. Sloane. What this Gentleman has ſaid, has partly interrupted what I was going to offer; but as to what he ſays, That when he was here before, he referred to his Confeſſion delivered in to the King; we did not tell him we knew of that: But he put it further, That he was not bound to accuſe himſelf, and that what he ſaid might be given in Evidence againſt him; and ſo far he was in the Right. For if he knew of any Body that was concerned in a Conſpiracy againſt the Government, that was Miſpriſion of Treaſon at leaſt in him. I don't queſtion but it was a very miſchievous Contrivance; but if he ſhould confeſs it, without ſome Aſſurance of being indemnified, he proves himſelf to be Guilty of it.

Mr. Vice Chamberlain. You are now upon the Method of your Proceedings: There is great Suſpicion whether this Paper be Sir John Fenwick's own or no. If you will tell Sir John Fenwick, that in the Paper in your Hand he hath laid Things to the Charge of Perſons of Truſt, whom this Houſe hath a good Opinion of; and that this Houſe deſires to know, What Ground he hath for it? If he does not think fit to give you an Account of it, there is an End of your Enquiry.

Mr. James Mountague. The Houſe ſeems to agree, that they will have Sir John Fenwick ſent for in: I ſuppoſe you will not have the Council, nor Sollicitor by; and when he withdraws, I deſire he may be kept private, from his Council and Sollicitor.

Lord Cutts. By Sir John Fenwick's Behaviour, when he firſt appeared at the Bar, and by what he ſaid then, I believe Sir John Fenwick did tell you to this Senſe, That he had Aſſurance from a noble Perſon, that what he then ſaid, ſhould not riſe againſt him in Judgment; and I think he was told, If he dealt ingenuouſly, he might expect Favour, or to that Effect. I do, for the Saving of Time, mention it to you, to conſider how far the Houſe may give him Security, that what he here ſays, ſhall not riſe up in Judgment againſt him; and that if he dealt Ingenuouſly, he might expect ſome Favour from this Houſe.

Mr. Harley. You are upon the niceſt Thing, in its Nature, that poſſibly can come before you. I think before you call him in, it ought to be underſtood that the Queſtions be very plain.

Mr. Manley. I think you have been well moved from the other Side, That we ſhould not read this Paper to Sir John Fenwick: And I am of that Opinion from this Conſideration, beſides what hath been mentioned; we are here in a judicial Capacity as well as a Legiſlative; and this Paper I take to be an Examination made upon Sir John Fenwick; and as my Memory ſerves me, ſome Things he ſpeaks of as Matters of Fact, which he does poſitively aſſert; which being contained in the ſame Paper with other Matters of Hearſay, if you ſhould read that Paper to him, and ask him a Queſtion, Whether that be his Paper? That, I doubt, will be contrary to the Rules of Law: For it will be asking, Whether this Information againſt himſelf be true or falſe? And I think it does not become the Dignity and Honour of this great Aſſembly, to ask him any Queſtions that may make him Accuſe himſelf.

Mr. Vernon. I would obſerve to you, that he has not conſidered theſe two Papers: The firſt of theſe Papers I think the Bill refers to, and that is under Sir John Fenwick's Hand; and there he does charge nothing at all upon himſelf, but it is an Accuſation upon the Perſons named. In the firſt Paper he does ſay, There was a ſelect Number to manage the Affairs of King James, and ——— was ſent over, but they are not named; and afterwards he went about to explain it in the Second; and the Bill referring only to the Firſt, I ſuppoſe you will confine your ſelves only to the firſt Paper.

Mr. Chancellor of Exchequer. I would think of ſome Way to reconcile theſe Things you are going upon: For though Gentlemen are in the Right to preſs for theſe Queſtions; yet I do not think it the Buſineſs before you. Therefore I think you ſhould acquaint Sir John Fenwick that this Paper hath been preſented to you, which this Houſe hath thought falſe and ſcandalous: But before he goes away, this Houſe has a Mind to hear what he would ſay to it; and let him ſay what he would upon that, then you would not lead him by any Queſtion. The firſt Perſon that is named, I have a great Reſpect for, and am as willing he ſhould be vindicated as any. The firſt Queſtion that you ask him is, What he knows of my Lord Godolphin? But that you ſhould literally ask him Queſtions, as the Paper ſtates it, I don't think it proper for this Aſſembly to ask: For there are Facts beyond the Act of Indemnity many of them. After you have done with the Paper, I have ſome Queſtions to ask him: I take theſe Matters to be falſe; but I ſhall have ſome Queſtions to ask him, which I believe will prove true.

Mr. Bridges. Before you call in Sir John Fenwick, I would offer one Thing to your Conſideration; I think that Paper you are upon, is written with Sir John Fenwick's own Hand. Why may it not be fit for you to ask Sir John Fenwick if that be his Hand?

Members. No, no.

Mr. Speaker. Is it your Pleaſure that Sir John Fenwick be called in?

[Which Queſtion being put, it paſſed in the Affirmative. And he was brought in without his Council.]

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, this Houſe does underſtand that you have given in Informations againſt ſeveral Perſons of great Quality, that have been in the Government; and they do expect from you, that you ſhould deal clearly and candidly with them, and give them an Account of what you know in relation to thoſe Perſons. I am commanded, in the firſt Place, to ask you, What you know of my Lord Godolphin, in relation to this Matter?

Sir John Fenwick. I am under a double Proſecution for my Life; I know not but what I ſay may turn to my own Prejudice: I hope the Houſe will not think it Obſtinacy in me; and ſince this Houſe House have done me the Favour to hear me by my Council, I hope they will pleaſe to conſider what they have ſaid.

Mr. Speaker. No doubt the Houſe will conſider what you have ſaid by your Council, that is, in reference to your own Defence; but they do expect from you, as I told you before, That you do deal candidly with them in what you know of this Matter.

Sir John Fenwick. Sir I am under Proſecution for my Life; and, I hope, the Houſe will pleaſe to conſider, That I know not what Inconveniency may come upon me by it; and, I hope, the Houſe will Excuſe me, for I do it not out of Obſtinacy, but for my own Preſervation.

Mr. Speaker. You would do well to adviſe your ſelf well in this Matter, 'tis of great Concernment; the Favour of this Houſe, if you deſerve it, may be of great kindneſs to you. I have only in command to tell you, what the Houſe expect, and you are to conſider how to Anſwer it.

Sir John Fenwick. I hope the Houſe will not put me upon any thing that may hurt my ſelf: I ſhould be ſorry to incur the Diſpleaſure of this Houſe, but I hope they will conſider my Condition; and I am ſure the Juſtice and Honour of the Houſe is ſuch, That they will not preſs any Man to do any Thing that may hurt himſelf.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, if you pleaſe to withdraw.

Accordingly Sir John Fenwick withdrew.

Lord Cutts. I would humbly propoſe ſomething to you to ſave your Time, and remove this Inconveniency. The Houſe have heard what Sir John Fenwick ſays; I can't but ſay, that in Matters of Blood we can't be too tender; but that I would propoſe to you, if this Houſe approve of it, is this; Suppoſe you wave the whole Matter to the laſt Moment of paſſing your Bill, and then I ſhall have ſomethlng more to ſay to you in the Matter.

Mr. Clerk. Now I think it very proper for you to proceed in your Legiſlative Capacity. I am glad the Houſe have taken ſo much Pains in the Examination of the Matter; and it is no ſmall Satisfaction to me, That the Gentleman was brought to the Bar upon this Enquiry; very probable another Time may induce him more to comply than he does at preſent; though, if I may ſpeak my Opinion, there is little hope of the Gentleman's Anſwering your Expectation here: And I think the firſt thing you are to do now, is to read your Bill.

Mr. Pultney. One of the Allegations of the Bill is, That his Tryal was put off upon ſeveral repeated Pretences of making a Confeſſion. The Council for the Priſoner took Notice, That that Allegation was not proved: The Council for the Bill told you, They muſt refer to a worthy Member of this Houſe, who could prove it; the worthy Member is Mr. Vernon. I ſuppoſe before you enter into a Debate, as there will be after the ſecond Reading of the Bill, Gentlemen will deſire to have all the Evidence. And I find your Order is, That Mr. Vernon do give in his Evidence while Sir John Fenwick is at the Bar; and therefore I humbly move, That Sir John Fenwick may be called in while Mr. Vernon gives his Evidence.

Mr. Speaker. I ſuppoſe if Mr. Vernon gives Evidence, you will call in the Council.

Members. Yes, yes.

Mr. Speaker. Pray then hear the Motion that hath been made. Shall I put the Queſtion, That Sir John Fenwick and the Council be called in, while Mr. Vernon does give his Evidence?

[Which Queſtion paſſed in the Affirmative; and Sir John Fenwick, and the Council on both Sides, were brought in.]

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you that are of Council of both Sides, the Houſe, before they proceed any further, was willing to hear the Teſtimony of a worthy Member of this Houſe which has not yet been given; and they are willing that Sir John Fenwick, and you, ſhould be preſent while it is given. Mr. Vernon, will you pleaſe to acquaint the Houſe, &c.

Mr. Vernon. If I underſtand the Council for the Bill aright, that which they did appeal to me for, was about the Portracting of Sir John Fenwick's Tryal, and upon what pretence it was. The Account, Sir, that I can give of it, is this; That Sir John Fenwick's Tryal was put off, will appear beſt from the frequent Adjournments of the Seſſions at the Old-Baily for ſix or ſeven Weeks together. For when Sir John Fenwick was committed to the Tower (which was as I take it) on the 19th of June, there was, I believe, a Seſſions to be held ſoon after; for as I remember it, the firſt Application that Lady Mary Fenwick made for putting off Sir John Fenwick's Tryal, was upon the 30th of June; and the Petition was, That he might have ſome Friends come to him to adviſe him how to make his Application to the King: On the 30th of June, or about that time, my Lady Mary Fenwick did firſt Propoſe, That ſomebody ſhould be ſent over from Sir John Fenwick to the King upon ſome Matters of Importance, but did not declare what they were; but only that ſhe was told there was ſuch Matters, and ſhe had a proper Perſon to ſend, and would acquaint the Lords Juſtices with the Man, if he might have leave to go: But afterwards my Lady Mary Fenwick ſaid ſhe could not provide a Perſon ſo ſoon; and, I think, the 2d of July, ſhe came and offered to go her ſelf, and ſaid, if it was not as much for the King's Service, as Sir John Fenwick's Benefit, ſhe would not undertake the Journey. She had leave to go, and would have capitulated, that the Tryal ſhould be put off till ſhe returned; but the Lords ſaid, when ſhe ſhould return, would depend upon her pleaſure; but they would write to the King at the ſame time, and give notice of her Intention, and that the Tryal ſhould not go on till they had an Anſwer of their own Letter.

There was a Paſſage in the Tranſport Ship going to Holland, and my Lady Mary Fenwick deſired to ſpeak with Sir John in Private, in Order to her Journey; the ſame Night ſhe came back again, and ſaid, ſhe had conſidered of it, and ſaid, ſhe would not go, and ſeveral Reaſons ſhe gave. Upon the 7th of July there was a Noble Lord that was in the Commiſſion for the Adminiſtration of the Government, ſaid, he had had an Application made to him from another Noble Peer, my Lord Carliſle, who deſired that he would go to Sir John Fenwick, for he had been very earneſt to ſpeak with him. That Noble Lord did acquaint the Lords Juſtices with it, who acquieſced in what he thought fit to do in the Matter.

He went the ſame Day to Sir John Fenwick, and the next Day the Lords Juſtices met again; he then then told he had been with Sir John Fenwick, and that Sir John Fenwick had told him, he had ſent to the King; for he did not allow it ſhould be otherwiſe communicated: My Lords then thought it was fit to ſtay for the King's Anſwer. This was the 7th of July, and by what Accident I know not, but no manner of Account came till the 7th of Auguſt, that the Letter was received; but the 7th of Auguſt, the Letter was acknowledged to be received; and the Anſwer that then came to it, was, That the King had not received any great ſatisfaction by the Meſſage; (I know not what it was) but that Sir John Fenwick ſhould be Tryed; but withal, that Noble Lord acquainted my Lords Juſtices, That the King was pleaſed to write to him, That what Sir John Fenwick had to ſay ſhould be ſent him in Writing. It happened at that time, that the Judges were upon their Circuit; and there being the King's Directions to receive what Sir John Fenwick had to ſay, in Writing; that Noble Lord did undertake to go again to Sir John Fenwick; and, I ſuppoſe, he did receive ſomething from Sir John Fenwick, which he ſent to the King: When the Anſwer to that came, it was in September, and that Noble Lord was at the Bath; and ſo it required a little time——Why then it appeared, That the King's Direction was, That what Sir John Fenwick had ſent to the King, he ſhould prove it; and he ſhould likewiſe ſhew his Ingenuity in Confeſſing what he knew of any other Deſings againſt the Government: And the 10th of September, as I take it, I was directed to go to Sir John Fenwick, who was then in the Tower, and to acquaint him with this Meſſage from my Lords Juſtices. Sir John Fenwick's Anſwer was, That he had no more to ſay, or ſome Words to that effect; and then he muſt prepare for his Defence as well as he could; but if he could ſpeak with that Noble Lord, he ſhould be glad to do it; but he was not come from the Bath, and Direction was then given for his Tryal: Again in the mean time, that Noble Lord did come, and he did go to Sir John Fenwick, and he brought an Account from him; That Sir John Fenwick would prove to the King, and make out what he had ſaid; and was ready to give the Lords Juſtices Satisfaction: And upon that, I was ſent to Sir John Fenwick; I carry'd the Meſſage in Writing, which you may ſee when you pleaſe; and it was to ask him, Whether he was willing to make out by Proof, what he had already ſaid to the King; and whether he was ready in Compliance with the King's Directions, to give the Lords an Account of what he knew of any Deſign againſt the Government? I carry'd Sir John Fenwick this Meſſage, and he returned an Anſwer in Writing, That he was ready to make out to the King what he ſaid, and would acquaint the Lords with all the Matter that he had not obſerved to the King; (his Arraignment was then to have come on the 17th) but he did dictate a Paper which was brought to the Lords, which they thought fit to be ſent to the King; and the Tryal was put off as to that time: And before an Anſwer from the King, came, it was (I believe) the beginning of October: And this is the Account I have to give you.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you conſider that this Evidence is given, with Relation to that part of the Bill, that ſets forth, how Sir John Fenwick had delay'd his Tryal by Offers of Confeſſion. You have heard what the Evidence is; if you have any thing to obſerve as to that Point, you may ſpeak before you withdraw.

Sir Tho. Powys. As to this Matter, I can only ſay, That in it ſelf at leaſt, according to our Rules of Law, it is not, in any degree, Treaſon: What you will conſtrue it to be I can't tell. We think it is only what is very uſual when Perſons are under an Accuſation; they will put off their Tryal as long as they can: Perhaps their Witneſſes may be out of the way, or ſomething elſe may be the Reaſon of it, and it does not carry any Crime in it ſelf; at leaſt, not of the Nature that this Bill is of.

Sir Barth. Shower. We do think, with Submiſſion, That conſidering the Nature of the Bill, and the particular Caſe of Sir John Fenwick, will (in ſome meaſure) Anſwer this Fact: I take this ſingly in it ſelf, as it hath been obſerved, not to conſiſt with Honour; but it does not import a Crime, for any Man to uſe little Inſinuations to put off his Tryal: But, ſuppoſe it was unlawful, or that which they call Prevaricating, I hope it is far from making him Guilty of high Treaſon, which is the greateſt Crime this Bill deſigns to paſs Sentence for; and, I hope, you will conſider, if it be an Offence, 'tis ſo at Common Law; and the ſame Evidence will prevail to bring Sir John Fenwick to Condign Puniſhment by the Common Methods. And if it be no Offence, I hope you will not by a Law make it an Offence, ſo as to inflict the greateſt Puniſhment for this Artifice.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, Have you any thing to ſay?

Mr. Serj. Gould. No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker. Then withdraw.

And being withdrawn,

Mr. Sloane. I propoſe it to you, Whether, if the Paper be Evidence, it ſhould not be read in the Preſence of the Priſoner?

Members. No, no.

Then the Queſtion was put for Candles, which paſſed in the Affirmative, and they were brought in.

Ordered, That the Council be diſcharged any further Attendance at this time.

Mr. Methwin. There can be no Debate previous to the reading of your Bill. I deſire the Order of the Day may be read.

Accordingly the Order of the Day for reading of the Bill a ſecond Time, was read by the Clerk.

Then the Bill was read a ſecond Time by the Clerk.

And being afterwards opened by Mr. Speaker, and Mr. Speaker having expected for ſome Time, and no Member riſing up to ſpeak.

Mr. Speaker. Shall I put you the Queſtion of Commitment?

Sir Tho. Dyke. Sir, I hope you will not put the Queſtion of Commitment till ſome Exception is made to the Bill; I am ſure it is as liable to Exceptions as any Bill that hath been brought in a great while: 'Tis a tender Subject to ſpeak of, the Pretence of the Bill being for the Preſervation of the King and Government; and if I thought it was really ſo, I ſhould be heartily for it; for I think there is no Compariſon between the the Value of the King's Life, and that of Private Perſons, but that hath been often ſaid, but not proved; therefore, I think, I may tell you my Reaſons why I am againſt the Bill: That the Parliament hath a power to make ſuch a Law, is Agreed; but I think it ought not to be uſed but upon Extraordinary Occaſions, when great Perſons are concerned, that can't be otherwiſe brought to Juſtice, and when Crimes do not fall under the Denomination of the Law, which is not the preſent Caſe. This Caſe is, That a Gentleman is charged with Treaſon; and 'tis proved but by one Witneſs; though the Council did ſay, That a Conſult to levy War was not Treaſon. Now either it will not be the Crime that is alledged, or it is not proved. Here you are Judges, Proſecutors, Witneſſes and Jury: I would know in what Country it is ſo? Beſides, the Witneſſes are produced here, and not Sworn; and upon the whole, there is but one Witneſs. Sir, I am againſt the Bill, and againſt it as being of dangerous Conſequence.

Mr. Pultney. This Matter before you, is of ſuch a Nature, that as a Debate is riſing upon it, I hope all Gentlemen will hear one another with the greateſt Attention that may be.

The worthy Member admits you have a Power to paſs the Bill, and I do not find that conteſted by any Body; though (with Submiſſion) the latter part of what he ſaid, contradicted what he admitted at firſt; but ſince that is ſo much Agreed, I ſhall ſay but little to it, and that is this, That without ſuch a Power as this, any Government would be imperfect, and would want a ſufficient Power for its own Preſervation, upon extraordinary Occaſions. You have been told, this hath been an untrodden Path; but, I believe, Gentlemen are pretty well ſatisfied it hath not been ſo untrodden, and many Precedents of that kind have been quoted; and the Council againſt the Bill have admitted, That there have been frequent Precedents. An Objection hath been made to ſome of them, That they were made in ill Reigns: but I take it to be no Objection, That the Precedent was made at one Time or another, ſince 'tis Agreed, that we have ſuch a Power, and that that Power hath been Executed.

The chief Matter before you is, Whether in the preſent Caſe, there is ſufficient Ground for you to exert that Power? And upon that, give me leave to obſerve the Nature of the Crime of this Gentleman, and the Evidence that hath been brought to prove him Guilty of that Crime. His Crime his high Treaſon, the higheſt Crime in the Law: 'Tis for Conſpiring the Deſtruction of the King, and the Overthrowing of the Government. The Overt-Act which the Bill tells you (and which is mentioned in the Indictment) is his inviting in a French Force, in order to accompliſh his Deſign. If this Crime would admit of Aggravation, ſome other Parts of the Bill would aggravate it; but I think it will admit of none. The Council at the Bar made a Doubt, Whether or no, that which was laid in the Indictment, did amount to a ſufficient Overt-Act of High-Treaſon? And his Argument he drew from a Book that hath been put out by a learned Gentleman of the Houſe; but the Gentleman could eaſily have anſwered himſelf; and, I preſume, did not ſpeak his own Opinion. For ——— Gentleman did write a Book, called, His Majeſty and Government vindicated: By which he endeavoured to overthrow the Arguments in the other Book of the other Gentleman.

As to the Proof before you, you have had the Teſtimony of Mr. Porter, whoſe Evidence hath been juſtified by the ſeveral Convictions grounded upon it; and by the Confeſſion of ſeveral Gentlemen, that have owned the Fact at the very Time when they have been going out of the World: And there hath been no Evidence brought by the Priſoner at the Bar, that ſhould invalidate the Teſtimony of this Gentleman. And ſo (with Submiſſion) you have one undoubted Evidence, that does charge the Priſoner with the Fact mentioned in the Bill: You have other Proof that does not come up within the Letter of the Law; but you have ſtrong circumſtantial Proof, that every Gentleman will apply to his Conſcience in the Judgment he ſhall give in this Matter. One of the Allegations in the Bill is, That he did, by repeated Promiſes of making a Confeſſion, from Time to Time, gain a Delay of his Tryal. It is a great Preſumption, that That was in order to a Deſign that he had of ſeducing Mr. Goodman, that was one of the Witneſſes; for it was obſerved to you, what Practice there was in the Caſe, with the other Evidence, Mr. Porter.

Sir, Gentlemen have objected the Conſequences of making a Precedent: You were very well told by a worthy Gentleman that ſpoke the other Day, near the Place where I am, That in the Caſe of a good Parliament, 'tis not to be imagined that they will make uſe of this Precedent, but upon as good a Ground as you have now; and an ill Parliament, they will have the ſame Reaſon, for they will Copy after the ſame Precedents that have been made before, and will not ſtick at doing of it.

Beſides, let Gentlemen conſider the Way of Arguing: I have a Power to do ſuch a Thing, and yet if I have ſuch a Ground as is ſufficient, I ſhall not make uſe of it: To ſay you have a Power, but ſhall not exert it, is as good as to ſay, you have no Power at all.

There were ſome Precedents cited by a learned Gentleman that ſpoke againſt the Bill, and he particularly quoted that of my Lord Strafford; and the Act of Parliament that repeals that Attainder, was in Part read to you: But, Sir, the Reaſons given in that Bill of Repeal of my Lord Strafford's Attainder, are, That it was obtained in a tumultuous Manner, which influenced the Parliament in doing of it; and that it paſſed in the Houſe of Lords, when moſt of the Lords were abſent: And at laſt, the King, when he gave his Conſent, by Commiſſion, to the Paſſing of the Bill, it was with great Reluctancy. 'Tis certain, all theſe are Reaſons that are given; but there is not One that queſtions the Parliament's Power of doing it; tho' upon the Tryal, Gentlemen may remember, there was a Doubt in the Law, Whether the Evidence was ſufficient?

Sir, It hath been urged to you, of what ill Conſequence it would be, and how much Injuſtice to make a Law to puniſh a Man, ex poſt facto; but that the Parliament may declare That to be a Crime, which was not ſo before, no Body doubts; and without That, the Clauſe in the 25th of Ed. III. ſignifies nothing; and I don't imagine it is a greater Injuſtice to ſupply in Point of Form, as to Matter of Evidence, when the Fact committed by the Priſoner, was againſt a known Law, at the Time when it was committed: And the rather, if I think that Defect of Form in the Courts below, was occaſioned by the Priſoner. 'Tis a Matter of Blood, 'tis true; but I do not aim at this Gentleman's Life in it; but any Man must believe he must be concerned in great Matters, to bring to pass this great Design; therefore, all I propose by it, is to get his Confession, which in all Probability we might have had, if the other Witness had remained here.

Sir, upon the whole Matter, I do think we have Power to do this: I do think here is good Evidence (I speak with respect to my self) to think him guilty of this Crime. I do think, if this Bill does miscarry, there is the greatest Blow that can be given to your Constitution. And give me leave to use this Expression; I think, if this Bill miscarry, it not only turns this Plot upon you, but makes it impossible ever to come to the Depth of any other: And for these Reasons, I am for committing of this Bill.

Mr. Newport. Sir, I am unwilling to trouble you at any Time, but more especially at this Time, when I am afraid I am like to speak against the Opinion of the Majority of the House; for I see Gentlemen are in great haste for the Commitment of this Bill.

Sir, in this Matter I look upon my self, as every Gentleman here, to be a Judge; and therefore, I will in this Case, as in all others, go according to the Dictates of my own Conscience: I must be saved by my own Faith, and never will pin my Faith upon another Man's Sleeve: Perhaps it may be a Weakness in my Nature, that I am very tender in the Matter of Blood; but I hope Gentlemen will not be in so much haste to commit the Bill; for De Morte hominis, nulla est cunctatio longa. A Gentleman below said, the other Day, it was possible in his own private Opinion, he might believe the Prisoner Guilty; and some notice was taken of those Words; But, Sir, I would put a Case for Argument's sake, and would have it taken no otherwise; and I would go a little farther than that Honourable Gentleman: and suppose that I knew, of my own private Knowledge, that Sir John Fenwick was Guilty; yet, Sir, with humble Submission, as a Judge, I do not think it ought to weigh one Way or another with me, and I will give you my Reason for it; for as a Judge, I am to go according to my judicial Knowledge, and not according to my private Knowledge. 'Tis a Maxim, Nil refert quid notat Judex, si non notat forma judicii; and it puts me in mind of a Case in H. 4 Reign. Two Men travelled together, and One killed the Other, and the Judge saw it: Afterwards that Judge went the same Circuit, and an innocent Man came to be Tryed before him for it; and yet the Judge, in that Case, was obliged to go according to his judicial Knowledge; all the Judge could do (the Man being found Guilty) in that Case, says the Book, was to respit the Judgement, and Execution; and to make application to the King for the poor Man's Pardon.

The Evidence that is produced, is first a living Witness; the next Evidence, was the Confession of Goodman, taken before a Justice of Peace; for that, truly I did nor think Yesterday, it was a legal Evidence: I am sure in a Court of Law, it would not be admitted; but the House was pleased to read it, and Gentlemen, when they pressed it, told us, read it: Valeat quantum valere potest. Then if you strike this Paper out of the Case, with humble Submission, there is nothing left but the Testimony of Capt. Porter; and so then in that Case, you have but one Witness. It would seem a little strange, that the Commons of England, that lately were so very careful of the Lives of the Subject, and were so desirous of passing a Bill, that did provide, That where there were two Species of Treason in one Indictment, and one Witness to one Species, and another Witness to another Species, that That should not be good Evidence to convict a Person of High Treason; that they should be Attainting a Man for Treason upon one single Evidence! Surely they will say, we have mightily changed our Opinions since last Sessions. I speak not this upon the Account of Sir John Fenwick; I know him not, though I am not a Stranger to his Character, and I hear that is none of the Best: I speak it as it may be my Case, or any Man's whatsoever. God knows we live in an unsettled Time, and how soon a Precedent of this Nature may turn upon any Man whatsoever.

Amongst the great Irregularities committed in the late Reign, I thought that of Mr. Algernoon Sidney, one of the greatest Strains I saw in Westminster Hall; for there was my Lord Howard a Witness against him, and the next Evidence was a Book that he had wrote against Sir Robert Filmore, which, I think, is printed since this Revolution, and I have it in my Study; and I hope, I shall not be hanged for it. That was construed to be calculated for a Treason that had not been committed above two Months, and was the second Witness to convict him; but that Attainder was reversed, and it was fit it should be so; for I thought it a hard Strain to convict him upon that Evidence.

I am very sorry this Bill is brought into this House; nor can I imagine, after all that hath been said by the learned Gentleman, why this Man was not Tryed when there were two positive Witnesses against him? All the Reason this Gentleman has told you, is, That he promised to make an ingenuous Confession: But any Man might have easily seen through this Confession, That it was only an Artifice to abuse the King's best Friends; nay, the rather, when this Gentleman's Brother had served this very Government, but two or three Years ago, the same Trick. We know my Lord Preston was Attainted of High Treason, and then he must do something for his Pardon; and he made an ingenuous Confession, as he called it, whereby he accused most of the great Men; and when he had a Pardon, though his Confession was under his own Hand, and delivered to the King, he denied every Word of it; and what he told, was to save his own Life. My Neighbour cited you several Precedents, I have looked into a great many of them, they are mentioned in Rushworth's Collections, in the great Argument that ——— made for passing the Bill against my Lord Strafford; and as to those Precedents, all I can say, is, I could not have come up to them, if I had lived in those Times. The last Precedent was of a Cook that put Poyson into the Pot of the Bishop of Rochester: And what did they do? They did Enact that he should be boiled alive. I have a great Honour for the present Bishop, but if it had happened in his Family, I should hardly have consented to the like. Judicandum est legibus non Exemplis. I should be glad this Gentleman, might suffer his due Punishment; but I am not, by any Means, satisfied in the Passing of this Bill: And as to what Gentlemen say, is the Reason why this Man was not Tryed; because it was thought he would have made an ingenuous Confession: Sir, if they have made any Mistake, I will not help it, by the Passing this Bill of Attainder. I ask your Par-

Pardon for troubling you ſo long: I am a Judge in this Matter, and ought to deliver my Opinion. I hope no Man doubts but I am as zealous for this Government as any Man whatſoever; but let what will come of it, I can't give my Vote for paſſing of this Bill.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is a Bill for Attainting Sir John Fenwick of High Treaſon: 'Tis the greateſt Crime we know in the Law; and, I think, the greateſt Crime known in a Government. It is much greater than Murther, or any Thing elſe; becauſe it ſubverts the Government, and the Law whereby theſe Crimes are puniſhed; and Perſons ſhould be deterred from committing theſe Crimes.

It hath been made a Queſtion by the Gentlemen at the Bar, (I think Two of them) Whether this Matter that Sir John Fenwick is indicted and accuſed of, is High Treaſon or not? I muſt confeſs I heard ſomething of it without Doors; and that they would make it out, That if he was guilty of the Matter charged, it was not High Treaſon. I thought it ſomewhat a bold Matter, but did not think they would have undertaken it in this Place, though they might have pretended ſome Flaw in the Indictment: But it ſeems they have the Authority of a good Lawyer in it; and they have quoted one learned Author, as they pleaſe to call him, though I take that for a great Compliment: I believe they may mean my ſelf; and they have done me ſome Honour; for they ſay, my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales was of the ſame Opinion; and then ſaid ſomething of Dyer. Now he hath read ſomething at large out of that Author he ſpeaks, and challenges any one to ſhew any Opinion, That ever a Conſpiracy to levy War, was High Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. Now, I would give a Challenge on the other Side, That he would ſhew me any Opinion before that Time, or ſince, That a Deſign to depoſe the King is not High Treaſon within that Statute? The Author that he ſpeaks of, ſays that expreſly in the Matter of my Lord Ruſſel, and tells you particularly; and in The Government vindicated, which was only an Anſwer as to the Proſecution of my Lord Ruſſel, there are ſeveral Caſes cited, That a Deſign to depoſe the King, was High Treaſon, and agreed to by that very Perſon; and it always was agreed to be High Treaſon. Then take the State of this Caſe, and that of my Lord Ruſſel: The great Matter was, That he ſent ſome Perſons to view the Guards (it was ſaid, in order to ſeize the King) this was Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel, for a Conſpiracy to levy War; but it was ſaid, That this was not ſo much a Conſpiracy to levy War againſt the King, as againſt the Guards: But this is of a quite different Nature: Captain Porter hath given you an Account of it, (and I think Goodman's Examination is to the ſame Purpoſe;) That they met in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and conſulted how to bring King James back again; and the only Method they could think of, was to ſend Charnock over to King James, that he might prevail with the French King to ſend them 10000 Men, and they would meet him here with 2000 Horſe; and for what Purpoſe was this? It was to bring back King James again: I would be glad to hear if thoſe Gentlemen that were at the Bar, or any Body elſe, could ſay this was any Thing elſe but a Deſign to depoſe King William? And they can't ſhew me one Lawyer's Opinion, but that Deſigning to depoſe the King, was ever called, Imagining the Death of the King, within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. The firſt Reſolution of this Matter was pretty early; I think it was H. 4*th*'s Time, and that was pretending Richard 2. was alive, and that he was the lawful King: So that the Matter is Treaſon, as it is charged in the Indictment.

Then, as to the Precedent, That 'tis an ill Precedent; I muſt confeſs I am not afraid of a Precedent of this Kind: I ſhould be glad if theſe Gentlemen ſhould turn back, and ſee how many Attainders have been by Act of Parliament? But I dare ſay, there have been more Men deſtroy'd by the irregular Judgment of a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, than by all the Acts of Parliament, whether Legal or Illegal.

As to what they ſay of my Lord Coke, who mentions the Attainder of my Lord Cromwell, and Sir J. Mortimer; the Gentleman pretends to repeat my Lord Coke's Words at large, but he did not deal ſo well as he ought to do by you, for he ſhould have told you all my Lord Coke tells you; That Cromwell was never brought to Anſwer, never permitted to ſay any Thing for himſelf, neither in Parliament, nor where he was. Now, pray Sir, is this the preſent Caſe? Hath not Sir John Fenwick been heard by you? I would be glad that Gentleman, or any Body could ſhew me, that any Perſon hath had ſo fair an Hearing before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, as Sir John Fenwick hath had before you? As to Sir John Mortimer, 'tis much of the ſame Nature: My Lord Coke ſays, there was a Jealouſy of Sir John Mortimer's pretending to the Crown; and becauſe they ſuſpected him, they did give out, that he ſaid, That the Earl of March, was Heir to the Crown; and if he did not, he would pretend to it himſelf, &c. Now, ſays my Lord Coke, this was but a bare Pretence, and nothing elſe: He ſpeaks as if he did not ever think him guilty of thoſe Words; and ſays, having indicted him, they not being able to proceed that Way, they made it good by Act of Parliament, and he was condemned: So that what my Lord Coke complains of, is, That theſe Perſons ſo condemned, were never heard; and if this be the Truth of the Matter, theſe Precedents (with Submiſſion) have no Affinity with yours: But I believe this may be ſaid in this Caſe, Sir John Fenwick hath been heard, and that more than ever any one in Parliament was before, in a capital Matter.

As to the Caſe of my Lord Strafford, he had Council aſſigned him to ſtand by and hear, but not to Prompt him: If there aroſe any Point of Law, he was to propoſe the Matter to the Lords, and the Council was to aſſiſt him by their Direction: And in the Caſe here before you, you have allowed Sir John Fenwick Council; not only to aſſiſt him in Point of Law, but to aſſiſt him in Point of Fact too. They have made Anſwer for him; ſo that I ſay, he hath been Tryed fairer than any Man ever was in Parliament, be it upon Bill, or upon Impeachment; That is, as to the Matter of Precedent. Then it hath been ſaid, this would not be good before the Judges. I muſt confeſs it; but the Evidence Capt. Porter gave of his own Knowledge of Sir John Fenwick, every body will agree, is what the Law will allow. But he is but a ſingle Witneſs, and you ought not to proceed upon the Evidence of a ſingle Witneſs. Let us ſee how the Law ſtands upon the whole Matter? you have made an Act of Parliament laſt Seſſions, and I own the Law was before that, that there ſhould be two Witneſſes in Caſe of Treaſon; but all that goes no farther than to Tryals in the King's-Bench, and Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal Delivery. And if you look upon thoſe Acts, 'tis very plain, for they refer moſtly unto the Judges, what they ſhall do in ſuch and ſuch Caſes: But then you will ſee what is the Reaſon of making thoſe Rules; I think there was good Reaſon that you ſhould not put that Power in Perſons below, that you have in your ſelves: you give them Rules to proceed by, and they are to keep up ſtrictly to them; you may Act by other Rules. 'Tis one thing when I command my Servant to do ſuch a thing, and another thing when I Act my ſelf: And there is a difference when a Judicature is by Few, and when 'tis by Many; the Law puts a greater confidence in Many, than in a Few. The ordinary Tryal is by twelve Jurors; but if it be a Matter of an high Nature, as an Attaint, then it ſhall be by Twenty four; and you do prefer a greater Number in every Thing to a Few: 'Tis ſaid, though a Judge do think in his Conſcience a Perſon guilty; yet he ought not to make uſe of that private Knowledge, and a Caſe was Quoted out of H. 4. but I think that Judge might have behaved himſelf ſomething better than he did; and ſure I am, now he would he blamed. I do not ſay, that a Judge upon his private Knowledge ought to Judge, he ought not; but if a Judge upon the Bench knows any Thing, whereby the Priſoner might be Accquitted or Convicted (not generally known) then I do ſay, he ought to be called from the Place were he ſate, and go to the Bar and give Evidence of his Knowledge; and ſo the Judge in H. 4. Time ought to have done, and not to have ſuffered the Priſoner to have been Convicted, and then get a Pardon for him; for a Pardon will not always do the Buſineſs, for there may be a Forfeiture that the King's Pardon does not reſtore. But though we Act as Judges here, do we Act only as Judges? I thought we were as well Tryers of the Fact as Judges. There is this difference between the Judicature of Weſtminſter-Hall and this Court; They are to judge upon a Fact found by a Jury; but we Act both the Part of a Jury in Trying, and alſo of Judges in judging what the Fact amounts to: So that if a Jury-Man may make uſe of his private Knowledge to Acquit a Priſoner, as (I think) no body doubts but 'tis his Duty to do; then every Gentleman in this Houſe, may make uſe of his private Knowledge, to acquit the Priſoner, or convict him.

I confeſs, for my part, I am ſatisfied, that Sir John Fenwick is Guilty of this Crime for which he ſtands Accuſed: I do think this Crime is high Treaſon; I think there is no danger of a Precedent in this Caſe, if you Convict him, being convinced upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is Guilty; I do own, if any Gentleman think he is not Guilty of meeting at the King's Head in Leaden-Hall-Street, or at Mrs. Mountjoys, for the purpoſe given in Evidence, he ought to be againſt the Bill: But I think every Man that is of that Opinion, ought to be for the Bill. I am one of thoſe that think he is Guilty; and therefore am for Committing the Bill.

Mr. Harcourt. I can readily agree with the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt, that high Treaſon is the higheſt Crime in the Law; and further, That the Matter of the Indictment that is mentioned in the Recital of the Act, is undoubtedly high Treaſon; and I am ſure he will agree with me in one Thing alſo, That the greater the Crime is that any Perſon is Accuſed of, the clearer the Proof ought to be, by which he is Convicted.

Some Gentlemen have begun their Diſcourſe in relation to the Power; but ſure 'tis no Argument becauſe I can do a Thing, therefore I will do it; becauſe we have Power to repeal Magna Charta, and all other ſubſequent Laws which have been made in Favour of Life and Liberty, and Property, by the ſame Conſequence we ought to do it: A better Reaſon muſt be given me, before I conſent to this Bill.

Then for the Precedents, 'tis ſaid, There have been many, and many have been mentioned; And if I thought it worth while, I would mention many more you have not heard of; as for Precedents in general, they are ſo far imitable as they are grounded upon true Reaſon, and agreeable to Juſtice; but I don't remember any one Precedent of this Nature, for a Perſon in Cuſtody, forthcoming to be Tryed, yet to be Attainted without a Tryal at Law, but what has been Univerſally Branded; and they all ſeem to be Reproaches even to thoſe ill Reigns in which they were uſually made; and rather to be marked out as Rocks for us to avoid, than Patterns for our Imitation.

Before I particularly mention the Facts how they ſtand before you, I would beg leave to obſerve upon the general Method of your Proceedings, and tell you what ſtaggers me in it.

I have often heard this called a Tryal, and that we are the Judges; the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt gave us another Title, and told us we were the Jury alſo: I know no Tryal for Treaſon, but what is confirmed by Magna Charta, per Judicium Parium, by a Jury, which is every Engliſh Man's Birth-right, and is always eſteemed one of our darling Priviledges; or per Legem Terræ, which includes Impeachments in Parliament; but if it be a Tryal, 'tis a pretty ſtrange One; where the Perſon that ſtands upon his Tryal, hath a Chance to be hanged, but none to be ſaved. I can't tell under what Character to conſider our ſelves, whether we are Judges or Jury-men? I never heard of a Judge, I am ſure not of a Jury-man before, but he was always upon his Oath: I never heard yet of a Judge, but had Power to examin Witneſſes upon Oath, to come to a clear Sight and Knowledge of the Fact: I never heard of a Judge, but if a Priſoner came before him, the Priſoner was always told, he ſtood upon his Deliverance, and had not only a Power to condemn the Guilty, but to ſave the Innocent. Have we this Power? Suppoſe upon ſuch a Tryal as this (if it muſt be called ſo) it may ſo happen, that a Perſon that comes before us, ſhould be the innoceneſt Man in the World; what Judgment is it that we can give, for ſo much as ſuch a Perſon hath made his Innocency fully appear? Is the Speaker, by his Warrant, to ſend him back again to Newgate? You can't diſpoſe of him otherwiſe, though you were ſatisfied of his Innocency: But in ſuch a Caſe, the Party muſt undergo a double Tryal, which is contrary to all the Rules I have heard of. If I am a Judge in the Caſe, I beg leave to tell you, for my own Juſtification only, what a Definition I have met with of a Judge's Diſcretion: My Lord Chief Juſtice Coke ſays, 'tis Diſcernere per Legem; and by that Diſcretion I beg leave to conſider this Caſe, if Judges make the Law their Rule, they can never err; but if the uncertain arbitrary Dictates of their own Fancies, which my Lord Coke calls the crooked Cord of Diſcretion, be the Rules they go by, endleſs Errors muſt be the Effect of ſuch Judgments.

As

As to this particular Caſe, I did expect from the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt, that he would have told you there was a plain Evidence, why you ſhould go on to the Paſſing of this Bill; but inſtead of that, I am ſurprized to hear a Thing mentioned, that in parliamentary Proceedings, a Man may be hanged by one Witneſs, certainly that is not to be taken for granted.

As to this particular Caſe, I would take Captain Porter as upon his Oath, for Suppoſition: You have one Witneſs againſt Sir John Fenwick of High Treaſon, and with your Leave, I deſire to examine what you have more in this Caſe.

Yeſterday you voted a Paper to be read, Goodman's Narrative, or Examination; 'tis a different Caſe now, you have it before you to determine upon. Yeſterday the Queſtion was only for hearing; but, Gentlemen now conſider how far they ought to believe it, and the other Evidence we heard. And firſt, there is ſome Evidence that Clancy tampered with Porter, and gave him a Sum of 300 l. and ſo they would infer, becauſe Porter was tampered with to be gone, therefore Goodman was. It was told us further (and I deſire I may be informed if I am miſtaken) That Clancy ſaid, he came from Sir John Fenwick, and afterwards my Lady Mary Fenwick ſaid ſhe would make good what Clancy had ſaid; and from theſe Arguments they preſume, that Sir John Fenwick knew of it. Give me leave to tell you a Rule I never heard contradicted, That Preſumption is to be made in favour of Life; but to preſume a Man guilty becauſe Porter was tampered with by another, becauſe he ſaid it was by Sir John Fenwick's Order; ſhall we preſume Sir John Fenwick did it? Is Hearſay to be Evidence? Or is a Man to be had to the Gallows upon Preſumption? How often, and with how much Reaſon have we heard Examinations againſt Judgments, upon Preſumptions, Innuendoes, conſtructive and accumulative Treaſon? &c.

Gentlemen, there is ſome further Evidence; and that is, of what was ſworn at Cook's Tryal, and ſome Gentlemen thought fit to have the Record read, and an Examination of what was ſworn there. I can never go ſo far as to think it reaſonable, That what Evidence hath been given in one Caſe ſhould affect another Man; but all this is to be anſwered, by calling it parliamentary Proceedings. We doubt 'tis no Evidence in the Courts below, but they are mentioned with ſome kind of diſdain, as very inconſiderable. In this Caſe, I beg leave to ſay this in their Vindication, That whatever the Rules in Weſtminſter-Hall are, 'tis not therefore Reaſon becauſe 'tis a Rule; but becauſe 'tis Reaſon, and Reaſon approved of by long Experience, therefore 'tis a Rule, and if they make their Rules for that Cauſe, I hope that is a Cauſe why we ſhould imitate them: But I would not have thoſe Rules thought Matters of Form, but Subſtauce, or more properly part of the Law it ſelf.

Upon the whole Matter; if no Gentleman will give us a Reaſon why this is Evidence, but one Witneſs, and that not upon Oath; and if we are to come to our Parliamentary Diſcretion to ſupply that Defect, the Want of the other, 'tis a Diſcretion I will diſclaim all the Days of my Life. And I hope you will reject the Bill.

Lord Cutts. If, Sir, the Gentleman that ſpake laſt had been ſpeaking to Weſtminſter-Hall, I ſhould think that he had ſhewed a great deal of Reaſon, and ſpoke with a great deal of Judgment: But ſince I think you are here, upon a quite different Foot, I ſhall not follow him (becauſe I will not unneceſſarily detain you) to anſwer every particular.

I remember when the Council for the Priſoner firſt ſpake, they took notice to you, That Precedents were procreative, and one begat another, and they are apt to multiply; therefore, I do think, 'tis of the higheſt Moment to you, what Precedent you make to night: And if any Gentleman can be ſatisfied, That the Precedent of not paſſing this Bill, will be of worſe conſequence than the Precedent of paſſing it, I ſhall humbly ſubmit. I do think, Sir, the Matter before you is of the higheſt Importance; and I muſt confeſs, 'tis with a great deal of Satisfaction to my ſelf, that I do ſee Genelemen ſeem to apply themſelves with a great deal of ſeriouſneſs to this Debate. Sir, I ſhall not pretend to make a particular Anſwer to what the Council for rhe Priſoner did ſay; as to the Precedents of Acts of Parliament, I think this Anſwer is ſufficient at preſent for that, That if we have no Precedent, we are under a neceſſity of making one. It is told us, That of all the Precedents none will juſtify us in this proceeding; but at the ſame Time it muſt be conſidered, That we are in a Caſe, the like to which never yet happened in England.

The firſt Thing I ſhall apply my ſelf to, is the Juriſdiction of Parliaments; and truly, I think, it will be very neceſſary to ſay a little upon that. I have heard none call this Power in queſtion, the Thing ſpeaks it ſelf; 'tis the legiſlative Power. and the Etymology of the Word tells you what it is: 'Tis a Power that can make Laws, and aboliſh them; a Power that is ſuperiour to all other Powers whatſoever, and we are part of that legiſlative Power; and therefore I ſhall ſay no more to that, it being a Matter agreed, That we have a Power to proceed in this Matter. Now I will take leave to obſerve ſomething as to the particular Caſe before you.

Though a Gentleman that ſpoke ſome Time ſince, did ſpeak to you of the Nature of the Crime; yet, with Submiſſion, I think there remains ſomething to be added to what he ſaid. The Conſpiracy of which Sir John Fenwick to me appears guilty, is not only againſt the Life of the King, not only to depoſe the King, not only a Conſpiracy to raiſe a Rebellion; but at the ſame Time to contrive an Invaſion from France, and bring in a foreign Power. I know not what better Expreſſion to tell my Thoughts in, than by uſing a Term which Phyſicians uſe in ſome deſperate Caſes; they tell you, there is a Complication of Diſtempers, and I think this is a Complication of Treaſons: This is the higheſt Crime, and it is attended with all the aggravating Circumſtances this Crime can admit of. Now, in giving our Opinion, and paſſing our Judgment upon this Matter, I think there are two Conſiderations ought to guide us: There is a Conſideration we owe to the Priſoner that is brought before us; and another Conſideration which we owe to the common Security. As to the Firſt of theſe, It being a Matter of Blood, wherein the Life of an Engliſhman, the Life of a Man of his Quality and Figure is at ſtake, we ought to proceed with all the Calmneſs that is poſſible; and I do agree, if there was nothing but Preſumption, that ought to be in favour of Life; but pray let us conſider how this Matter ſtands: Let me deſire thoſe Gentlemen that are of Opinion we ought to have ſo much Tenderneſs for the Priſoner, to lay before them another Scene, and Sort of Conſideration, at the ſame Time. I do conſider the Hardſhip (if I may uſe that Expreſſion) of paſſing this Sentence; I do conſider what a Condition we had been in, if the Contrivance that was laid, had taken Effect; that is the weightieſt Part of the Matter before you: And tho' it was diſappointed then, I know not how far off 'tis at preſent; this ought really to weigh with you. And I hope I may take leave upon this Occaſion, to obſerve to you, what one of the wiſeſt and beſt of the Romans ſaid, upon an Occaſion of this Nature; he tells you, That a Man that would conſider his Duty aright, muſt conſider the Matter in all its Parts and Circumſtances; and when that is done, muſt act adequate, as well to the Community, as to himſelf and his Neighbour. I would apply That to the preſent Caſe; and would deſire thoſe Gentlemen that expreſs ſo much Tenderneſs in this Caſe, to have ſome for the Government, and themſelves.

It was told you, That the Priſoner before you does not ſtand convicted of any Crime: It was told you at the Bar, That the moſt we ought to pretend to, is no further than to leave him in the Condition we found him: I think, with Submiſſion, the Priſoner ſtands convicted of High Treaſon, with the higheſt Conviction upon Earth, and that is, the general Conſent of all Mankind; for I will be bold to ſay, I do verily believe, that there is not one Gentleman within theſe Walls, nor that walks the Streets, not a living Soul, that doubts of his Crime. But, Sir, I would put this Matter yet further; I am not only ſatisfied in my own Conſcience and Reaſon of the Juſtice of your Proceedings, which ought indeed to be the Foundation of every Man's Opinion: But I am ſatisfied, that in this Way, there is no Hardſhip impoſed upon Sir John Fenwick, if he will be his own Friend: For I doubt not, upon what hath paſſed in this Proceeding, that before Things are brought to the laſt Extremity, if Sir John Fenwick be his own Friend, if he be ſo much a Penitent and Friend to the Government, and to Poſterity, to tell Truth, and leave off his Diſſembling, and be Plain; I doubt not but he will find Favour. Now, Sir, I would beg leave only to anſwer one or two Objections; for ſome Things that have been ſaid againſt the Paſſing of this Bill, I do not think material.

One Objection that ſeems to me to carry the greateſt Appearance of Weight, was made by one of the Council for the Priſoner; he ſaid, It would look ſtrange in after Ages, that the ſame Parliament ſhould paſs the Bill for regulating of Tryals in Treaſon, and this Bill of Attainder. Sir, I deſire you will pleaſe to obſerve how this Matter ſtands; and in the firſt Place, as previous to that, I take leave to obſerve a few Things: 'Tis a Propoſal generally agreed to, and not to be denied, that That which is deſigned for the Preſervation of any Creature, ought not to be made uſe of to their Deſtruction. Now this Treaſon-Bill was deſigned for your Preſervation, to skreen you againſt the Danger of arbitrary Power, and the Malice of falſe Witneſſes; and this Bill of Attainder is brought to skreen both you and the Government from your Enemies, both abroad and at home. And I think the Treaſon-Bill is no Objection upon theſe Conſiderations: Beſides, the Treaſon-Bill was only made to be a Rule to inferior Courts. The learned Gentleman that ſpake laſt, told you, The Rules of Weſtminſter-hall were not Rules, becauſe they were obſerved there; but becauſe they were grounded upon Reaſon. Why, Sir, in anſwer to that, I will only take leave to tell him, that That which is Reaſon in Weſtminſter-hall, does not carry the ſame Weight here. I think that Matter was ſo well explained by the learned Gentleman at the Bar, that there need nothing be added to it. He told you very well, 'Tis one Thing what I truſt to do by my Servant, and another Thing what I do by my ſelf. It is very obvious to any Man's Underſtanding, if this Power were lodged in the Judges, what Uſe they might make of this unlimited Power; but no Gentleman can miſtruſt any Thing that ſhall be done by this Houſe.

Another Objection that was made by the Council for the Priſoner was; ſays he, This is Evidence, or it is no Evidence; if it be Evidence, then, ſays he, Why do you not Try him at Law? If it be no Evidence, Why do you admit it here? Now, Sir, with Submiſſion, this carries the Face and Form of an Argument, but if you take it to pieces, I think there is no convincing Weight in it: For, Sir, the Reaſon why this Matter comes before you, is, becauſe by the Abſence of one of the Witneſſes, according to the formal Part of the Law, Sir John Fenwick will be acquitted; but it is generally agreed, that the Conſequence of ſo great a Crime going unpuniſhed, may be dangerous to your Poſterity. This Bill of Attainder is brought into the Houſe, that you may ſupply that Want of Form, you being convinced of the Reality of his Crime.

Another Objection made by the Council at the Bar was, as to Capt. Porter, whom he reflected upon; ſays he, Shall a Man that hath owned hemſelf guilty of ſuch a Villany as the Murther of the King, of a ſuddain have ſuch Credit as to ſway with you? I would take leave upon this Occaſion, to repeat to you what my Lord Chief Juſtice upon the Bench did obſerve at Charnock's Tryal, this ſame Thing was urged and preſſed home by Charnock; and my Lord Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to take notice, That it conſiſted with the Wiſdom and Juſtice of all States and Governments to allow of ſuch Evidence, becauſe without it they could never come to the Knowledge of any Treaſon or Conſpiracy: For he added, Whom will you have an Account of theſe Things from, but the Actors of them?

And therefore when they are Penitent, and willing to atone for their Crime, by doing all the Service they can to the State, and Juſtice to Mankind, we ought not only to receive, but encourage them.

When the Danger the Government would be in, if you did not paſs this Bill, was urged; it was anſwered, But what Danger will you and your Poſterity run in not paſſing of it? I think the Matter appears ſo plain and clear before you, that when all the other Parts of the Queſtion are paſſed over, that I ſhould think it a Reflection upon the Houſe, to enter upon a particular Anſwer to it. I have not ſaid what I have ſaid, that I think any Part deciſive, but to clear my ſelf to the World for the Opinion I am going to give, and perhaps what I have ſaid, may give occaſion to ſome others to ſay ſomething that may be much more to the purpoſe; but for the Reaſons I have given, I am for the Bill.

Mr. Sloane. Sir, I as little care for meddling in Matters of Blood, as any Man, and ſhould be glad to avoid giving my Opinion in this Caſe; but I think 'tis incumbent upon every Gentleman that that hath the Honour to ſit here in Point of Truſt; I think 'tis his Duty to them whom he Repreſents, to the King and Kingdom in general, to give his Opinion when he is clear and ſatisfied in it; and if I was in the leaſt diſſatisfied, I ſhould venture the Diſpleaſure of the Houſe to abſent; but upon the whole Caſe, and the Proof that hath been given, I am very clear that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of this Treaſon that he is Accuſed of; and that it is Treaſon without any ſtrain, and well Warranted by Precedents.

I would firſt take notice of what is ſaid to your Juriſdiction in general; I remember it was ſaid, this was an Incroachment upon Magna Charta; for by that, no Perſon is to be Tryed for his Life, but by the Judgment of his Peers. Thoſe Gentlemen that have made that Objection, have intirely forgot the other part, which is the next Sentence; Nec ſuper eum ibimus, nec ſuper eum mittimus, niſi per regulrae Judicium parium ſuorum vel per legem Terræ. What do they make that to be? 'Tis true, in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, Perſons muſt be Tryed; a Commoner by a Commoner, and a Peer by a Peer; but there are ſeveral ſorts of Tryals and Laws in the Land: And when you come to conſider what is meant by per legem terræ, you have the Commons lex terræ; you have the Statute Law, and lex loci, the Laws of particular Manners: And there are ſeveral ſorts of Tryals beſides that by Jury; there is Tryals by Battle: The Defendant in Caſe of Appeal may try it by Battle, and he that is killed loſes the Cauſe. Then there is a Law above all theſe Laws, and that is the Law of Parliament, which my Lord Coke calls, Lex Parliamenti, & Lex Parliamentaria in another Place, which he ſays is, ab omnibus inquirenda, but â paucis nota; and 'tis not fit it ſhould be known how far they can go (and ſo 'tis in Chancery) and that is a Law that is unlimitted, and that is one of the Laws ſaved by Magna Charta: I ſay therefore, that without any Incroachment upon Magna Charta, or any Law whatſoever, you enter regularly upon this Tryal.

I would Anſwer another Thing that was ſaid againſt a Tryal in Parliament, and I muſt confeſs I did wonder to hear it from that Honourable ancient Member; That if he was to be Tryed, he ſhould rather chuſe to be Tryed in Weſtminſter-Hall. Why, Sir, before I ſhould have given ſo ſuddain a Judgment as that, I would have conſidered what my Caſe was: If I had had ſuch a Caſe as Count Conningſmark, a bad Cauſe and a great deal of Money, I would rather be Tryed there; or if I could be Tryed as Sir George Wakeman was; but if I had a good Cauſe, and would uſe no Corruption, inſtead of twelve Men that might be Corrupted, I had rather be Tryed by four or five hundred Gentlemen that are beyond it. You ſee how Tryals went below, the Tryal of my Lady Liſle, that could neither ſee nor hear: and there came a Perſon to her Houſe that was proved to be in Monmouth's Rebellion, and ſhe was burned for it.

Then as to the Caſe before you, I would offer my Reaſons why I believe this Gentleman to be guilty; here is Capt. Porter, he hath poſitively ſworn, that he had another Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoys, and there they did conſult, and agree to ſend Charnock over to France; and Charnock was directed to go with a Meſſage to invite a foreign Power over here. Now the Queſtion is, Whether he is to be believed? And I would go upon the ſame Reaſons for believing a Witneſs, as they do in Weſtminſter-Hall; and will go as far along with thoſe Gentlemen, as to the Credibility of a Witneſs: But if he be to be credited in Weſtminſter-Hall, why is he not ſo here? And therefore, if they had brought any Teſtimony againſt his Credit, as made him guilty of Perjury, or Forgery, it had been an Objection againſt his Teſtimony; but it was ſo far from that, That they did not offer to prove one Word of that; but what was ſaid, was ſaid from the Council, and that is to go for no Evidence. The Council indeed did alledge againſt his Credit ſeveral Things, but did not prove any; and if they had, they would not have taken away his Teſtimony in Weſtminſter-Hall, That is, that he was concerned in the late intended Aſſaſſination, and Treaſon; this was the ſame Objection that was made below; and they brought Witneſſes to prove that and ſome other Things, but they did not weigh any Thing; for if it ſhould be an Objection that he was in the Conſpiracy, then you can have no Evidence of any Villany, for they will never truſt honeſt Men with it. Therefore I do take it, That Porter ſtands before you as a very credible good Witneſs, without any Imputation whatſoever. Then, Sir, ſay they, he is not upon his Oath: that is an Objection to your Juriſdiction; and though they ſay they own your Juriſdiction, yet when they ſay ſo, they ſpeak againſt your Juriſdiction; and by the ſame Reaſon you can go upon no Impeachment whatſoever; for you can in no Caſe give an Oath. Then, Sir, they tell you, he is but one Witneſs, and that 'tis in the Caſe of Treaſon, and there ought to be two Witneſſes, and therefore tho' you have Juriſdiction to do any Thing whatſoever, yet you have no Juriſdiction to go upon this Cauſe. Now Sir, becauſe this ſeems to be the moſt formidable Objection that is inſiſted on againſt the Proceedings in this Caſe, I beg your leave that I may fully anſwer it.

And taking it to de true, that the Fact is proved but by one Witneſs, I conceive we may proceed in this Cauſe, though they can't in Weſtminſter-Hall; and I do take it, that there is a great deal of difference between one and the other; and I do not take your proceedings upon this Bill, being there is but one Witneſs, to be any Strain, but what you may extend the Legiſlative to, without going beyond what hath been done. I therefore beg you to conſider what the Law originally was as to Treaſon, and how it came to be altered. Before the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. it was uncertain what was Treaſon, and what was not; then the Statute came and reduced it, that as to all inferior Courts, theſe are your Treaſons, and no other ſhall be adjudged ſo; but the Parliament reſerved to themſelves a Power, that if any Caſe ſhould happen like them, they were to determine it themſelves. So, Sir, that at that Time, and after that Time, one Witneſs was good in Caſe of Treaſon; as now 'tis at this Day for Robbery, Felony, or any other Fact but Treaſon. And till 1 Ed. 6. one Witneſs, was good in all Treaſons: Then comes two Statutes in Ed. 6. Time, and the firſt takes notice, That ſince the 25. Ed. 3. by ſeveral Statutes Treaſons had been made which were unſeaſonable, and therefore repeals them, and makes ſeveral new Treaſons. Then comes a Proviſo at the end of it; Provided always, that no Perſon whatſoever, after the firſt of February then next coming, ſhall be indicted, arraignarraigned, condemned or convicted for any offence of Treason, &c. unless the Offender be accused by two sufficient and lawful Witnesses, or shall willingly, without violence confess the same. Now that Proviso relates only to the Treasons particularly mentioned in that Statute. Then comes the next Statute 5 Ed. 6. and pursues the same Words: But now this did not mean any Facts whatsoever that were left to the Judgment of the Parliament, because those Facts were not within there cognizance. They are not parliamentary Words; indicted, arraigned, convicted, but only used by the Courts below. Why, Sir, if it be so that one Witness is sufficient, here you have not only one credible Witness, but he is propt up extreamly well by collateral Circumstances; and though I do not allow that below they can proceed upon one Witness with pregnant Circumstances; yet for the Reasons given, considering how this Evidence is propt up, I think it is sufficient before you. For there was another Witness against him, and it hath been proved what that Witness could have said if he was here; and 'tis plain that Men have died upon the same Testimony: I must confess, when I was for reading of Goodman's Examination, &c. I was not for reading them as conclusive Evidence, nor do I think them so in any sort, either the Conviction of Cook, or Goodman's Examination before a Justice of Peace; but it is a stronger Evidence in this Case than any other, because the Witness is not dead, nor is he withdrawn by the means of any body but the Prisoner, or his Friends; which, as I take it, appears upon the Evidence; and if so, I think it comes to the Case, That if any one gets my Deeds, if he will not produce them, they shall be presumed to be what I say they are: I must confess, the Acting of his Wife or any Agent, might not be Evidence, if it appeared they did it officiously without his Knowledge; but being Clancy said he came from Sir John Fenwick, and it was for Sir John Fenwick's advantage, I will believe it was by his Privity: And for my self, I think it no Strain, if in this Case we take him to be a good Second to Captain Porter, though it ought not to be admitted in Westminster-hall.

Then 'tis said, That you have no Jurisdiction to proceed by Attainder in this Case, where the Person does appear, and he is in the Hands of the Law, and ready to take his Tryal: I quoted you an Instance the other Day, 12 Car. 2. where they attainted Persons that were dead, without examining one Witness; and I have viewed all the Books since, and there's nothing appears, but the Bill ordered to be brought in, one Reading, and another, and some Petitions for making of Savings: There is one Rank of People that were dead, a second Rank, which, as you were told from the Bar, were the King's Judges; some of which, it is true, were Tryed by the Law; but how? Not by the Direction of the Parliament: It was before they came into the Hands of the Parliament, and the Parliament takes notice they had been Tryed. There was another Sort that was never Tryed, but absented, and though they might have come into the Hands of the Law and been Out law'd; the Parliament took cognizance of them, and attainted them of Treason. Sir, I do take notice, that there was a fourth Sort of People convicted at that Time; (for if we were confined to the Rules of Westminster-hall, no doubt we could not give a lesser Judgment than that for Treason.) There was the Lord Mounson, Sir John Danvers, and others; and the Statute recites that they were concerned in the Murther of the King, yet in regard so many had actually suffered, they did not give them the Judgment of Treason, but to forfeit their Estates, &c.

This is to shew you the Jurisdiction the Parliament have over Offences, and how they can alleviate the Punishment according to the Circumstances as they appear before them; therefore I think this is a plain Proof that we have a Jurisdiction to go on with the Bill, and at the same Time, I say this, I would put it out of the Case, whether the Prisoner be a little Man or a great Man, that is now in Judgment before us; and I would put it out of the Case, what a good Thing his Discovery would be; I do not think that a good Argument: Neither do I think it any Argument if this Man escape, what Danger we shall be in? But I do give my Judgment from the Argument of his Guilt, and our Jurisdiction.

Mr. Pelham. Sir, the learned Gentleman that spake last, seemed so very clear in his Opinion, when he began to speak, that I was in hopes he would have given me and every Body satisfaction in this great Point; especially when he began with Magna Charta, which says, That every Man shall be Tryed by his Peers, or by the Law of the Land; I do take it to be Part of the Law of the Land, that no Man should be condemned for Treason, without two Witnesses; but after that he did lay his Finger upon the Sore, he told you, the great Objection was, That the Courts of Westminster-hall are so governed and ty'd down, that they can't pass any Sentence for Treason, but upon two Witnesses; and he told you, they ought to be ty'd so; indeed he did say we were not ty'd so: But I own to you, he did not give me any satisfactory Reason why we should not be ty'd so. 'Tis said, we are not ty'd, and 'tis impossible we should, for no Act can tye the Legislative Power; and several Gentlemen have said, That though there are several Statutes that declare there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of Treason, yet they do say, That in Case of Attainder by Parliament, one Witness may be sufficient. Why may it not be thought, that these Acts extend to the Legislative, as well as the Statute of Edw. 3. by which it is presumed, That the Parliament may proceed upon one Witness? And I take it, That there being no such Hint, 'tis a Presumption that the Lex Terræ does crave an Observation of it by the Legislative Power.

I did presume yesterday to tell you, That Mr. Algernoon Sidney did stand upon it as his natural Right, that they could not proceed against him, there being but one Witness; I did not bring his Case as parallel to this, or think that his Authority should influence you; but he was a Man that had that Love to Liberty, and the Good of his Country, that he would not have said so, even to save his Life, if he had thought it inconsistent with either of them: But I have looked upon his Tryal since, and there he does declare, That the being condemned by two Witnesses, is the Law of God and the Law of Man; the just Law that is observed by all Men, and in all Places; 'tis certain he reached even by these Words, the Power of Parliament; when I do say Power, I do not mean, but that when such a Law is passed, all are bound by it; but in some Sense we may say, you cannot do what is not just for you to do: You can do but what is just and capable to the Trust reposed in you.

The

The Gentleman ſays, he thinks it a ſtrange Opinion of him that ſaid, He had rather be Try'd by a Jury, than the Houſe of Commons; indeed, if he could be ſure of ſuch a Houſe of Commons as this, he might retract what he had ſaid: But I have ſeen that done in the Houſe of Commons, which hath not made me extreamly fond of that Tryal. I have ſat here when ſix or ſeven Noblemen have been declared Enemies to the Kingdom without any Evidence at all, and the Reaſon was ſomewhat like what it is now. The Power of Parliaments was brought in as an Argument then; and it was ſaid, it was only in order to an Impeachment, but no Impeachment followed; yet theſe Noblemen went with that Brand in their Foreheads, and if any Diſturbance had been, they had been expoſed to the Fury of the People: And though we are ſure of this Houſe of Commons, and may be of all in this Reign, yet I know not how Facts may ariſe, and what Parliaments we may have, and upon that Account I am very unwilling a Precedent ſhould be made, at leaſt contrary to the Uſage in all manner of Courts whatſoever.

Sir Thomas Littleton. Sir, I ſhall not trouble you long in this Debate, that hath taken up ſo much of your Time already, in the Conſideration of ſome Matters we have been upon; though I did think your Time not very regularly ſpent, till this Occaſion offered it ſelf: I hope therefore, now it will take up leſs of your Time; I ſee the great Matter that was inſiſted on before, is inſiſted upon ſtill; and I do think we may ſay it among our ſelves, though we would not let the Council, That we are ty'd up in this Caſe, by the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall; but I believe if that was the Caſe, and the Queſtion was no otherwiſe, than whether or no we are ty'd up by the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall, I believe it would receive a Determination that we are not bound up to thoſe Rules.

But I will take leave to tell you what I think is proper for us to ground our Judgment on: I think the great Reaſon, even of thoſe that are againſt the Precedent, why they did admit Sir John Fenwick to have Council, and to examine Witneſſes, if he had any, and to croſs-examine the Witneſſes, and why they were willing to hear Evidence on both Sides in the Nature of a Tryal; the great Reaſon was, becauſe that in a Caſe of ſo great Conſequence as this is, they would have the beſt Information they could obtain. Why did they deſire to be informed, but that afterwards they could lay their Hands upon their Hearts, and give their Judgment upon their private Opinion, Whether he was guilty or no? They ſay, we are not to give our Judgment upon our private Opinion; I always will. (It was not long ago we were not to have our Religion upon our private Opinion neither.) And when I am juſtified in that, I will rely upon it: Whether this be ſtrictly legal Evidence, I do not lay ſo much Weight upon it, as whether it hath ſatisfied my Conſcience; and I believe there is not a Man in the Houſe but is ſo, (upon what he hath heard) and doth believe that Sir John Fenwick is guilty; and if we believe he is guilty, I would be glad to know by what Rules in the World any Man can give his Vote againſt this Bill, being of that Belief. And I tell you why I think every Man believes ſo; becauſe every Man in the Kingdom that hath not heard ſo much as we have heard, does believe him to be ſo; and I can't think that their Repreſentatives only ſhould be of another Opinion.

What Evidence have you had? You have had Captain Porter's Evidence, and that would be good even in inferior Courts; and beſides that, you have the Evidence of what Goodman did ſwear before the Grand Jury; you have heard what he did ſwear, and the Grand Jury did believe him; you have heard likewiſe what he did ſwear in another Cauſe to the Petit Jury, and they believed him, and convicted the Priſoner upon it; and though this be not legal Proof, ſtrictly ſpeaking, will any Body ſay that I have Reaſon to disbelieve this Man, and think he hath ſworn falſe?

Ay, but here is but one Witneſs, Gentlemen tell you: I will put you a Caſe where I believe this Houſe would Attaint a Man without any Witneſs. Suppoſe two Perſons had ſeen Sir John Fenwick kill the King, (I believe we ſhould not have pulled him in Pieces in a barbarous Manner, but he would have had a Tryal:) and ſuppoſe before his Tryal they had been conveyed away, if before they had ſworn this to a Grand Jury, and they had found the Bill, I believe this Houſe would have Attainted him for it.

Sir, I do not think that we ſhould ſtand upon theſe little Niceties, nor be bound by the little formal Proceedings of other Courts, when the Government is at Stake. We are ſent hither to take care that the publick Safety do not ſuffer any Miſchief from the Enemies of it: We have had Plot upon Plot, and I have heard ſo much ſaid on behalf of the Lancaſhire Plot without Doors, that I wiſh we do not get an ill Name upon our ſelves before we have done. We have this Power to exert upon extraordinary Occaſions, and here is a Man that hath endeavoured to ſubvert the Government, and Well-being of them that ſent you hither. I hope you will uſe it now; and if they knew who were not of that Opinion, I believe thoſe that ſent them would hardly ſend them any more.

Mr. How. Sir, as to the Argument that if it was known how we gave our Opinion, thoſe that are againſt this Bill, the People would not chuſe them again: I am not afraid of that. I have been told ſo often, and yet I find the People I live amongſt, uſe me better and better every Day; and I believe, Sir, they will deſire to uſe me, when they will lay other Men aſide. I muſt in ſome meaſure ſupport what was ſeemed to be reflected on an Honourable Gentleman, in that he ſaid, he had rather be tried by 12 than 400. I am of his Opinion, and this is my Reaſon for it; I have my lawful Challenge in Caſe of the 12, and if there be any on the Pannel I have offended, I can deſire they may be withdrawn, and that can't be done in any Caſe here.

But Gentlemen put the ſtreſs of their Argument upon that which no Body denies, and prove it handſomely, and well they may; for it is ſelf-evident the Power of Parliament they inſiſt on, when no Body pretends but we have a Power to do what we pleaſe: But I muſt ſay of their Power what Bracton ſays of the King's Power; Hoc tamen non poteſt facere, quod non poteſt juſte facere. It is ſaid, We are not ty'd up to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, we are not ſo; but I beg leave to tell them, That what is Reaſon and Juſtice in Weſtminſter-Hall, is ſo every where. And I do take theſe particular Points we ſpeak of, to be grounded upon Reaſon and Juſtice, and ſo far we are to purſue them.

Two Evidences was not given as a Reſtraint upon Weſtminſter-Hall, for fear they ſhould do ſomething that is ill, for they are anſwerable for every every Thing they do ill; but they were allowed to the People of England, that they might have a fair Trial, and it was thought conformable to the Laws of God, the Law of Reaſon, and the Law of all Countries, That no Man's Life ſhall be taken away upon any particular Occaſion. And for to ſay, That a Man's Life may be taken away by two Witneſſes in one Place, and by one in another, is to ſay, That there is no certain Rule to prove a Man guilty of a Crime that may forfeit his Life, which is not admitted in any Country whatever.

But truly Sir, we are going a little further; for the Gentleman before told you, there was no need of two Witneſſes, one would ſerve; but now they go a little further, for they tell you, there needs never a one at all: For I do ſay, if every Gentleman here is to be guided by his private Opinion, there is no Man but before he heard this Cauſe did conceive in their Opinion ſome Judgment of his Guilt. And, Sir, I think no Man, but would have told you, that would have been an unjuſt Judgment.

But they do ſay, That the Bill of Treaſon that was made laſt Seſſions of Parliament was to limit Weſtminſter-Hall; and that I will truſt that with my ſelf, which I will not truſt with my Servant. Why truly, if I, or my Servant, was to commit an Error, or a great Crime, I had rather my Servant did it, than my ſelf: But I do not think that my Servant ſhould be bound up from doing an unjuſt Thing, and my ſelf ſhould have the Liberty to do it. Another Thing that Law provided againſt was, the People ſhould not be hanged without ſufficient Evidence, and theſe Things have been long complained of: But I never thought that the Evidence of one Witneſs, and one Witneſs would be ſupported in theſe Days.

But, Sir, what have you done? We have prevented People being Executed by an Arbitrary Power, and in an unlawful Way in Weſtminſter-Hall; but if you give this Example, you have brought the ſame Proceedings into this Houſe, and that they may be perpetually Executed here, and ſo the Subject will be never the Safer for the Bill of Treaſon.

And I do believe likewiſe, That it is better that a very heinous Fault, or a Miſtake, ſhould be committed in Weſtminſter-Hall for ten Years together, than once perpetrated in this Houſe. And my Reaſon is this, Becauſe Weſtminſter-Hall have a Law to be tried by, if they trangreſs that Law; and there is a Way by turning out of Judges, and other Things; and this Houſe hath no Superior Power, and when they do a Thing they make it a Law: So that this Houſe (as it hath often been obſerved) can make this Nation unhappy; becauſe this Houſe can only eſtabliſh Arbitrary Power and Miſery upon this Nation by a Law.

Sir, as to the Evidence, to ſay ſomething to it ſince every Body hath ſpoke to it; for my Part, I do confeſs to you, the longer I ſit here, and the more I have heard of this Trial, the leſs I have been convinced within my ſelf, that theſe Witneſſes can know any Thing of Sir John Fenwick's Guilt. I have heard Captain Porter give his Evidence, but that is no ſufficient Proof to me: I have heard what Evidence Goodman did give to the Grand-Jury, but whether they did ask ſuch Queſtions as I ſhould, if I had been of the Grand-Jury; or whether they did confront him with Evidence, I can't tell? Therefore tho' the Grand-Jury was convinced by it, it is no Reaſon to convince us; becauſe we might not be convinced by the ſame Evidence.

But to go further: There is very great Reaſon to believe that Goodman was not then at this Place, and that not one Word that Goodman ſays is true. I have ſuch Reaſon for what I ſay, That if Cook's Tryal had been before this Houſe, (not to Arraign Weſtminſter-Hall, though I think we are a ſuperior Power, and I may ſay what I pleaſe of that Tryal;) I ſay, if Cook's Tryal had been before this Houſe, and what I have heard, be true, I do think they would hardly have found Cook Guilty upon Goodman's Evidence: For there were three as poſitive Evidence as could be, that he was not at the Place when he ſwore he was. And I obſerve a little Failure in Captain Porter's Evidence in that Point; for I don't think it proved by Captain Porter, that Goodman was by when this Diſcourſe was: For he ſays he ſpake of this Thing at Mrs. Mountjoy's and Dined there.

Members. No, no; It was at the King's-Head.

Mr. How. Well, there was but one Place where it was. Now whether Captain Porter heard them talk of it before Goodman came in, or whether Goodman be a good Witneſs, he having been there but the latter Part of the Time, which ſeemed to me to be the Time they ſhould have given over their Talk of the Buſineſs; they having been ſo long together before: But it does not appear to me that Goodman can be a good Witneſs.

But I take it, That it is not juſt nor reaſonable to find a Man guilty upon one Witneſs, and Circumſtantial Evidence. I did mention a Caſe where there was a poſitive Witneſs, and a Circumſtantial Witneſs, it was in my Lord Delamere's Tryal; and yet that was not thought a convincing Argument by the Lords to find him Guilty; and I hope no Conſideration will oblige us to do that, which I am ſure we ſhould blame them for doing.

The Conſequence of this, Gentlemen ſay, they do not fear: I believe if Sir John Fenwick had been told, when he was Major-General of King James's Army, that I ſhould come here to ſit upon his Life, he would have laughed at it, and thought it impoſſible; but the contrary has happened. And I have ſeen Parties hang one another with ſuch Violence, I pray God we may keep from it: I do not know, we are all concerned in ſome Meaſure; it having been the Unhappineſs of this Nation, that at one Time or another, every Body hath been concerned, that they may have a Proceeding of this Sort againſt them, and this ſurmounts all that at preſent Gentlemen can do: For it extends beyond all Pardons, and will reach beyond the Act of Indempnity. God knows who may be ſerved ſo, notwithſtanding all the Act of Indempnity.

Sir, there is one Thing that is ſaid further, which the Gentlemen at the Bar conclude with as a ſubſtantial Argument that we do not aim at Sir John Fenwick's Blood, (God forbid we ſhould) but at his Confeſſion: You will here read the Bill once, and twice will commit and paſs the Bill, (Sir John Fenwick not confeſſing) and ſtill this is not to aim at his Blood: But it happens perhaps that this Man knows no more of this Matter; and this Man is racked in a Manner to Death, from Reading to Reading, becauſe he does not confeſs; and at laſt he comes to be Hanged, Drawn and Quartered (inſtead of High-Treaſon) for not Confeſſing it.

This

This I take to be the dangerouſeſt Part of all the Arguments that have been urged: For this I muſt tell you, That according to my private Opinion, I do believe that Sir John Fenwick does know of no more Perſons concerned (nor do I believe that he knows all that he ſays) than he tells you. He hath not been a Man that hath kept Company with great Men: He hath generally relieved the poor Jacobite Officers: There are five People, as I take it, he hath told you he did converſe with: I would fain know in what Plot any Man converſes with above Five of the Plotters? There may be a Plot that may be moſt Dangerous, and yet a Perſon that knows of this Plot, may not know above Two or Three others that are concerned in it.

But the great Argument is, Take care of your Government. In the firſt Place, they muſt ſuppoſe the Safety of the Government depends upon his Execution, or why do they uſe it as an Argument? But I wiſh they would ſhew me the Government would be one Penny the worſe, if this Bill does not paſs. Do you want Examples of Puniſhment to deter Men? No; you have had lawful Proof againſt Four or Five Perſons, and they have been executed: Here are Examples made, that no Body for the future may preſume to Plot together, and not to be executed.

What is the Reaſon of this Bill then? Why, there is a Plot going on; Sir John Fenwick hath been impriſoned this ſix Months and more, and will you hang him becauſe there is a Plot now going on? What Conſequence is that! Do you think that he knows any Thing of it, or that he can diſcover it? It hath been ſtarted ſince his Confinement, it may be, and he knows nothing of it: So that as to what is preſſed of his Confeſſion, I know no one Thing would be gained by it, that could be uſeful to the Government; for I believe all hath been diſcovered already that he knows, and that Plot hath been utterly diſappointed, and they have been fain to make a new one. Will you proceed in a Bill of Attainder, unleſs the Matter be of the greateſt Conſequence? The Preamble of the Bill for Attainting the Duke of Monmouth, gave a ſubſtantial Reaſon for it; That he was in Arms, and could not be brought to Juſtice. That implied, That if he could have been brought to Juſtice they would not have Attainted him.

I think I need not give you more Arguments in this Matter, I wiſh I could hear thoſe that have been given, well anſwered. I ſhall ſay no more; but I know this, that my private Opinion ſhall never guide me in this Caſe; 'tis not the ſame Thing with the Caſe my worthy Country-man put: In the Caſe of Religion, my private Opinion does not affect other Perſons; indeed it does the Papiſts, where they will murther others that are not of that Religion.

Mr. Norris. This is a very ſolemn Debate, and 'tis upon a very ſolemn Occaſion. 'Tis a Caſe of Blood; 'tis a Caſe that in my Life-time, I thank God, I never had to do with yet; and in this Matter wherein I am now to be a Judge, I will uſe as much Caution as any Gentleman within theſe Walls.

I am ſo conſcious to my own Inability in what I have to ſay, that I can't expect to convince any Body; but what I ſay, is to diſcharge my own Duty, and ſatisfie my Conſcience in that.

I doubt not, but every Gentleman conſiders the Station that he is in, and the Truſt repoſed in him by thoſe that ſent him hither: We are intruſted with the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of every Man in England; and we are anſwerable for them to thoſe that ſent us hither; to our Poſterity, and to our ſelves.

In this Matter, many Things of great Weight and Importance are before you; here is the Life of a Man, the Preſervation of the King and Government, and the Power of Parliaments to be conſidered. Sir, as I ſhall be cautious of taking away the Life of a Man, ſo I ſhall be careful of the Preſervation of the King and Government, and the Power of Parliaments; and though I do not think it requiſite, nor never will give my Conſent to Support the Government, or Honour of this Houſe, at the Expence of Innocent Blood; ſo I ſhall not be afraid of giving my Opinion in this Matter to bring a Criminal to Puniſhment; beſides, the Treaſon he hath committed, he hath Crimes of a Nature almoſt equal to Treaſon; and for which, becauſe he hath evaded the Cognizance of Weſtminſter-Hall, he is now brought before you; and there are ſeveral Inſtances, where this Houſe hath taken notice of Offences of a leſs Nature, and for a leſs Reaſon than this is brought before you.

To quote Pecedents, is a little dry Subject; but however, I will inſtance in one, that (I think) does aſſert the Power of Parliaments in this Caſe, which has not been mentioned yet; and that was (as I remember) in the 3 Rich II. of an Agent that came from Genoua, who was (by a misfortune) killed upon a Quarrel that happened in the Streets; he that killed him was brought to his Tryal; it could not be brought within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. but he was brought to his Tryal, and it was found only ſe defendendo; but he being a Publick Miniſter, it was thought fit that the Nation ſhould take more notice of it; and he was attainted afterwards by Parliament, and there is a Record of it: They did not think fit to make a General Law, but they made an Example of the Man that committed this Fact.

A great many Gentlemen have ſuppoſed this, and ſuppoſed that, and what ought not to be ſuppoſed; but I will make an eaſy Suppoſition; I will ſuppoſe that we are the Commons of England in Parliament Aſſembled; and if ſo, Sir, we have a Diſcretionary Power to do whatſoever we ſee is for the Good of the Kingdom; and if we are to be circumſcribed by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, and we are to do nothing but what they would do, to what Purpoſe do we ſit here? If we are intruſted with this Power, and may exert it, I think here is a fit Occaſion for you to exert this Authority.

Sir, give me leave to take notice, That the Strain of Argument that was uſed ſome Years ago, is very much altered by the ſame Gentlemen; (I will mention it) I think it was in 78, when the Bill of Excluſion was brought within theſe Walls, the Arguments ran then (for I have ſeen them in Print.) Thoſe that were againſt that Bill; What will you do? Say they; Will you do this Thing? Paſs a Judgment againſt a Man without hearing of him? Hath he been brought to your Bar, to anſwer what you have to ſay againſt him? How do you underſtand that he is guilty of the Crimes you accuſe him of? And they did uſe thoſe Arguments againſt them that were for diſinheriting the Duke of York; but the Anſwer then was, Do you diſpute the Power of Parliaments?

ments? Is there not a diſcretionary Power in the Parliament? I do take notice, That thoſe Gentlemen that uſed that Argument for the Bill of Excluſion, now uſe it a quite contrary Way. Sir, I think the Power of Parliaments is not to be trifled with.

It hath been urged and ſaid, a little while ago, by a Gentleman, That he does not believe Captain Porter is a good Witneſs. I will give you a good Reaſon why I do think he is a very good one, and they at the Bar think ſo too, becauſe they would have given a great Reward to have taken him off; and for the ſame Reaſon, I believe Goodman to be a good Witneſs too: Sir John Fenwick was ſatisfied, that Goodman did know how far he was concerned, and he hath been prevailed with to be out of the Way.

Sir, here are a great many Circumſtances that agree ſo well together, That (I think) no Perſon can doubt of Sir John Fenwick's guilt; and (I think) 'tis in this Caſe in the Body Politick, as in the Body Natural, when a Man is almoſt paſt the Cure of Phyſicians; when a Man hath a Gangrene, a rotten Member, which the Phyſicians by the ordinary Means can't Cure, the Remedy the College of Phyſicians themſelves, in that Caſe would uſe, they would ſay, Immedicabile vulnus Enſe recidendum eſt.

I am of Opinion, That the Legiſlative hath this Power, and that this is a proper Occaſion to exert it; and to compare ſmall Things with great, 'tis like Thunder and Vengeance in the Hands of Providence, that is not uſed, but upon extraordinary Occaſions; and then it ought not to fail, for that makes a Man trifle and deſpiſe that Power that is not effectually able to exert it ſelf; and if the Sword of Juſtice be drawn, if they find it ruſty, and will not cut, they will have a mean Opinion of your Power for the future.

Gentlemen are afraid of Precedents in this Caſe; for that Reaſon I am for committing this Bill, becauſe I would make this a Precedent; and I will tell you why: Becauſe it may happen in future Ages, that Miniſters of State, and Perſons concerned in the Government, may be faulty (I think I may ſuppoſe that) and as the Law ſtands now, he is but a bungling Politician that can't ruin the Government, and yet not come within the Bill of Treaſon to be hanged for it; and therefore for the keeping an Awe upon Miniſters of State, and becauſe I would have this Houſe always have it in their Power to puniſh future Offenders, as they ſhall ſee cauſe, as well as this unfortunate Gentleman at the Bar, I am for committing this Bill.

Mr. Finch. Sir, the Queſtion now before you, ariſes upon a Caſe wherein you have a Man accuſed of High-Treaſon, and for that there is but one Witneſs, which by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, is confeſſed by every Gentleman, is not Legal Evidence.

I remember the other Day, when this Evidence was offered, and an Objection made to it, the Anſwer was, That we ought to hear it (though in Weſtminſter-Hall, they could not do it) becauſe we ſit here as Judges, and we can diſtinguiſh what is Legal Evidence, and what is not Legal Evidence, and can give its juſt Weight to every Part of it: I do obſerve now, in this Debate, ſome Part of the Evidence, which no Man can ſay could have been given according to the Rules of Law, is inſiſted upon, and Weight laid upon it.

And here they have taken into Conſideration the Power of Parliaments; and the Method of Parliaments has been inſiſted upon; as to the Power of Parliament, Whether the Parliament can do it? And whether if the Parliament pleaſes to do it, they are tied up (as Gentlemen are pleaſed to expreſs it) to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall? That the Parliament can do it, 'tis a hard Matter to gain-ſay, That any Thing is out of the reach of the Supream Power of a Nation; the Legiſlative Authority can do every Thing: Yet though Gentlemen have ſaid this, and others have obſerved, That there wanted no Authority to prove this, being Self-evident; yet give me leave to Inſtance in ſome Particulars in this Caſe, with the Authority of the Judges upon it, where the Parliament have proceeded according to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall.

We read in Hen. 8th's Time, That the Lord Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, was attainted in Parliament; and Hiſtory tells us, That he was attainted by a Law of his own making. Now, ſays my Lord Coke, That ſeems ſtrange; but enquiring of an Antient Perſon that lived in thoſe Days, he told him the Meaning of it; That Lord had conſulted with the Judges, Whether or no, if a Man was Attainted by Parliament, and was not brought to be heard, ſuch Attainder would be good in Law? The Judges ſtarted at the Queſtion, but could give no other Anſwer than this; Truly, if ſuch Attainder be made, we know no Law to find fault with it, for 'tis done by the Legiſlative Authority. It fell out, That the Inſtance of Condemning a Perſon in Parliament (not according to the Rules in Weſtminſter-Hall) fell out to be the Noble-man's Caſe; for he himſelf was ſo Attainted immediately after.

Give me leave to Inſtance in another kind of Authority; the Authority of Parliament touching theſe Attainders, and what has been the Conſequence of them; if you will look into the Record of Rich. II. Time, I do not mean the Record that hath been quoted, nor the Caſe of John Imperiall, for killing the Genoua Embaſſador, which was declared Treaſon in Parliament, Ten Years after the Man had been tryed in Weſtminſter-Hall for it; but I mean the 11 Rich. II. how many were Attainted by the Proceedings of thoſe Times; I do not mean by Acts of Parliament, but thoſe Attainders were in an extraordinary manner, not according to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall: And 21 Rich. II. the whole Parliament and its whole Proceedings were reverſed, and the Parliament annulled: In that Year were the Proſecutors of the 11th Year themſelves Attainted: And 21 Year of Rich. II. the Act that Repealed that Parliament, repealed the Pardon too; but in order to come to the Attainder of thoſe Perſons: That being done, was not enough; for the Lord Arundel had a Pardon the 17 of Rich. II. upon that they made a Law to repeal his Pardon by Patent, that they might come to the Attainder of that Lord; and that Lord was Attainted by Act of Parliament: But I muſt obſerve one Thing a little further, That that very Parliament, that doubtleſs knew their own Power well enough, and that their Attainders were firm, being made by the Legiſlative Power; yet they had a little Jealouſie themſelves of their Proceedings; for they paſſed an Act to make it Capital to go about to reverſe any of thoſe Laws;

Laws; and another Act, that all the Lords and Biſhops ſhould be ſworn. Now ſee what fell out after; Rich. II. was depoſed, for conſenting to thoſe Laws; and Henry IVth, in the firſt Year of his Reign, abrogated the whole Parliament, and repealed all thoſe Laws: Theſe Turns have been upon theſe extraordinary Proceedings of Parliaments.

Give me leave to give you another Inſtance, and that in another Caſe, as odious as poſſible could be. In the Murther of Edw. II. there was Roger Mortimer Attainted in the firſt Year of Edward III. and the Record ſays, That it was notorious to them all; and what then? They adjudged him to be Attainted in Parliament: When Time had a little worn off that extraordinary Zeal (which truly was commendable, though it had tranſported them a little too far beyond the Rules of Juſtice;) and they came to conſider what Precedent they had made for Poſterity, it had another Face; for in 28 Edw. III. was that Attainder reverſed, becauſe he was not brought to anſwer as he ought to have been: There was alſo an Act for Attainting the Earl of Arundel, which in the ſame 28 Edw. III. was reverſed, becauſe he was not brought to Judgment by due Proceſs of Law.

But now we are told, we are not tied here to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, Gentlemen do not enough diſtinguiſh in this Matter; the Forms of Weſtminſter-Hall, ſay ſome, the Rules ſay others; and others ſay there is no difference between the Form of Proceedings, and the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; but I hope no Gentlemen do think but the Parliament though they have a Power to act as they think fit (as Inſtances have been given) yet the Parliament it ſelf are tied by the Rules of Common Juſtice. Now I would have Gentlemen that ſay we are not tied by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, a little to conſider the Matter. Are the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall no other than what are neceſſary for the executing of Juſtice? If they are no other, how can we be ſaid to go according to Juſtice, when we go beſide thoſe Rules? I deſire them to conſider of the Conſequence of this Proceeding; there is no danger, I hope, of this Parliament: But if we ſhall ſay, that the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall are not ſuch as are neceſſary for the Proceedings in a Courſe of Juſtice, we ſhall ſhake thoſe Barriers of our Liberty and Property, I am afraid, a little more than Gentlemen think of at preſent; and ſhall we declare they are not neceſſary, when our Anceſtors have thought them ſo, and their Wiſdom have derived them to us, and the Wiſdom of the Nation in Parliament have eſtabliſhed theſe Rules?

I can't ſay what Conſequence may follow upon this. This Parliament can never do any Thing to endanger the Lives of the People of England; but heretofore Parliaments have been Damned with ſeveral Brands, ſet upon them by ſucceeding Parliaments. As for Inſtance; One, I think, in the 38 H. VI. 39, That Parliament was wholly repealed as packed, and paſſing Laws through Rancour and Malice, and having paſſed no good ones. Now, ſuppoſe a Parliament ſhould come, that ſhould not be ſo tender of the Liberties of the People as this; and they ſhould be ſo bold as to ſhake thoſe Laws that are made for the Rules of Juſtice, if they have ſo good a Parliament to guide them in it; Will not this be an Inducement to ſuch a Parliament as that, to ſhake all our Laws and Liberties? But I can't trouble you any longer, my Head will not give me leave: I am againſt the Bill, and have offered you my Reaſons.

Coll. Wharton. I hope, Gentlemen, in a Matter of this Moment, will have Patience to hear one another; and ſince every Gentleman is to give his Vote in this Matter, I deſire to give my Reaſons for my Vote; I am of the Opinion of another Gentleman, That we have not touched the Sore yet; yet I do not think that the Rules for Weſtminſter-Hall, are Rules for us. The Gentleman that ſpake laſt, as he always does, made a very Florid and Elegant Speech, and brought you ſeveral Examples of Attainders that have been condemned from one Parliament to another, in ſeveral Reigns. But I do not wonder at that, when the Crown went from one to another. An Inſtance was given in the Caſe of the Lord Cromwell, which was ſpoke too from the Bar; and Sir Thomas Powys laid a great Streſs upon it, That this was condemned as a wrong Judgment, becauſe he was not heard: I believe that may be a Reaſon why many of thoſe Attainders were condemned; perhaps it might be a Cuſtom of our Anceſtors to paſs Bills of Attainder without hearing the Party: This Perſon hath been heard, and fully heard; and I believe no Perſon that hath been Attainted, hath had ſo fair a Trial; and therefore Parliaments having condemned Bills of Attainder, becauſe the Perſons have not been heard, that will be no Reaſon why any Parliament ſhould condemn us. A Gentleman told you, That the Law of God and Man was not to condemn a Man, but upon two Witneſſes; but there are many Inſtances to the contrary.

It is told you, That Porter here before you, is not a good Evidence, becauſe he is not Sworn; and that you are to go by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall. Says the Gentleman that ſpake laſt, you are to go by their Rules, but not by their Forms: I muſt confeſs there is a great Difference between them two; for a Form is only the Manner and Method by which we proceed in doing of any Thing; but the Rule is the Foundation we are not to err from; but I can't agree, we are upon the ſame Rules as Weſtminſter-Hall is. The Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall are, when a Man is brought upon his Tryal, the Jury are all to be upon their Oaths; by which Oath they are to make a true Judgment according to Law: This is not the Caſe here; if I was a Jury-Man, and was to Try a Man, and one Witneſs ſwore againſt this Man, and no other Witneſs, though I did in my Conſcience believe him to be guilty, yet in that Caſe my Conſcience is diſcharged, and I muſt find him not guilty: But no Man can ſay this is the Caſe here.

What are we now a doing? Here is a Bill to Attaint Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon, if I reject the Bill, I do declare him not guilty; and if I do think him guilty, I do declare againſt my own Judgment; for my Judgment here, is not bound up as a Man's Judgment upon a Jury; for his Judgment is bound up to Proof, according to Law; and my Judgment is bound up by my own Belief: This is the Proof I muſt go by; and I think every Man is bound in Juſtice and Duty to his Country, as he believes Sir John Fenwick to be guilty, to be for the Commitment of this Bill; and till any Gentleman will convince me, that this is not a Rule I am to go by, I muſt continue in this Opinion.

Mr. Boyle. The Diſorder that worthy Gentleman was in, makes me the more concerned for fear of falling into it my ſelf.

I hope in this Debate, Gentlemen will be very cautious of uſing it as an Argument: what Application our Votes ſhall have without Doors, and with thoſe we repreſent, when we are to give Judgment, as far as in us lies, for the Life and Death of a Man; and therefore I muſt obſerve, that the eagerneſs that is juſtifiable upon Impeachments, may not look ſo well now we are Judges upon a Bill of Attainder. You have gone over the whole Courſe of the Evidence, and I believe that this Debate will ſhew you pretty plainly, what is to be the Fate of this Bill; for I believe all the Arguments will now be uſed that can be; as to what hath been ſaid of extorting a Confeſſion, I take it to be quite out of the Caſe.

I am ſorry to be ingaged one way or another, I would not, if I could help it, out of the Houſe, be upon a Jury of Life and Death; yet in that Caſe, I ſhould know the Law, or be told it by the Judges; but in this Caſe, we are both Jury-Men, and Judges, and know not what Rules we are to go by; but ſet up a Court of Equity which hath no Bounds, but our own Conſciences.

As to Sir John Fenwick, I know him not; as to his Cauſe, I am ſure, I am againſt it; but how far I think him guilty or not, I think is not the ſingle Point to be conſidered; I muſt confeſs, there have been ſeveral People accuſed of this Conſpiracy, and have been named by the Evidence at the Tryals; and I believe they are much alike guilty, being upon the ſame Evidence; but as to all that hath been opened before you, and proved, it can amount to no more than this; there is but one Evidence, which by the Law would be a good Evidence to Convict him in another Place; and therefore I do agree with the Gentleman that ſpake under the Gallery, that this is a very extraordinary Caſe; for one Witneſs is not ſufficient at Law to convict him, and the Law would be very different hereof. I am to Judge according to my own Opinion, and not by the Rules preſcribed by the Law; but though this Proceeding is not ſtrictly according to the Law of the Land, yet if it was ſuch an extraordinary Caſe that required you to diſpenſe with thoſe Forms, and come to this extraordinary Manner of Proceeding; I think, for my own Part, it might be ſupported by the Neceſſity of it, for 'tis impoſſible that it ſhould be otherwiſe in Practice: Thus, when the Government is at Stake, and nothing will preſerve it, but the breaking through the ſettled Forms; then the Government will break through them, and whatever Rule you preſcribe, it will always happen ſo.

There is a very extraordinary Caſe, and that was in the Conſpiracy of the State of Venice, above a hundred Years ago, I think, ſet on Foot by the Spaniards; then the State, to get the whole Matter out, promiſed a Pardon to as many as were concerned in it; and after they had promiſed it, and treated with them about it, they thought it neceſſary, for the Preſervation of the Whole, to break their Faith, and they were all put to Death. This was upon Point of Preſervation of the Government.

But, Sir, as to Precedents, give me leave to ſay; I do not give that Authority to them, unleſs I know all the Springs, and ſecret Hiſtory, and Tranſactions, that were their Guide in making thoſe Precedents; and as to Precedents that have been quoted, when the Parliament has declared what was Treaſon, and what was not Treaſon, or have declared Conſtructive Treaſon, they may be grounded upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. But I think there is no Statute upon which they can ground the Condemnation of a Man upon one Witneſs.

In the Caſe of my Lord Strafford, upon Conſtructive Treaſons, it was there ſaid, That it was a Fire that had lain hid for 240 Years; and that it never broke out before, but to conſume him, and his Poſterity. It was anſwered by Pym, if that was the Caſe, it was not for want of Law to juſtify ſuch a Proceeding, but all that Time had not produced ſuch an Offender.

I do not doubt, but if any one will conſider the late Conſpiracy; and if that was the Queſtion, but it was as Extraordinary as any Thing can happen: For it was to ſubject their Country to a Foreign Power, which is very Extraordinary, and ſeveral Perſons were concerned in it: But there is one extraordinary Part which I do not remember this Gentleman is accuſed of; and that is, the Aſſaſſination. Treaſon it ſelf is a very extraordinary Crime; but give me leave to ſay, that Extraordinary Part is not alledged againſt this Gentleman, and this Bill does not ſeem to be brought in for that, wherein he is concerned in common with ſome others, but for the ſubſequent Matter alledged in the Bill. This Bill is grounded, not ſo much upon that he is guilty, as a great many more are, as upon ſeveral Circumſtances which have happened to no Body elſe. Give me leave to inſtance in a Caſe, now in my Head; (I beg your Pardon that I ramble, 'tis from the Awe I have upon me from this Aſſembly.) In Catelin's Conſpiracy, and if that was our Caſe, no doubt there would be another ſort of Argument for it; there they conſulted what to do with Cethegus, and the other Conſpirators; he was at the Head of an Army, which only expected his Orders to lay Rome in Aſhes; the Queſtion was, Whether they ſhould break the Porcian Law; and for the Safety of the Senate, they were put to Death before the Aſſembly roſe.

Now to come to this Part of it, though Sir John Fenwick is a great Offender, yet I think his Caſe is not ſo extraordinary, as to make you proceed upon this Bill. I do take his living or dying not to be of that Conſequence as this Bill of Attainder: I know not how he comes to be ſo conſiderable when in Hold; for when he walked about Town, I never heard he was feared or regarded at that Time.

But to come to the Allegations in your Bill, upon which you are to ground your Judgment; The firſt Part is a new Conſpiracy, that is for intending to create a Jealouſie between the King and theſe Noble Perſons: As to them, you have already paſſed a Vote in their Juſtification; and I think their Actions may juſtifie them to the World, as much as any Vote of the Houſe of Commons; but whatever that may be, I think it was a fooliſh Piece of Conſpiracy, as well an as ill One; for one when he was in danger of being hang'd for one Plot, to venture upon another; and, I think, there was at that Time two Witneſſes to bring him to his Trial, and that is an Allegation in the Bill. And as to the Protracting of his Trial, 'tis natural, and ſo juſtifiable, whether Innocent or no, and what every Body attempts; and no Body can wonder at it, but in one Caſe or the other, it can be no ſufficient Ground to Attaint him.

The

The next Thing that is ſaid, is that he hath been the Occaſion of the withdrawing of the Evidence. Now I muſt obſerve, That is not alledged in the Bill, and is proved but by Hear-ſay; but ſuppoſe it was true, and alledged; if any Man concerned in Treaſon, ſhall endeavour by Friends, or otherwiſe, to get off an Evidence; Can that amount to that which is deſigned to be puniſhed by this Bill? To High-Treaſon? 'Tis the Part of thoſe that are intruſted with thoſe Matters, to be in Expectation of ſuch Practices. What are Goals for, but to keep them in Cuſtody? And the People employed in thoſe Buſineſſes, are to take care of it. Are we to ſupply a Defect of what ought to have been done in another Place?

So that I do ſay, That a Precedent in an extraordinary Caſe, is no Precedent to be uſed in a little Caſe; it may be urged, but 'tis but a Pretence; when you have paſſed this Bill, which is the Record, the Matter will appear no otherwiſe than are the Suggeſtions of your Bill: A Man hath aſperſed great Perſons, which is a great Fault indeed, (for he is not charged with the withdrawing of the Evidence,) therefore attaint him upon one Evidence; I think by this Bill, you will open a Door for a Precedent of all Treaſons of the ſame Nature. Sir, there have been many Precedents mentioned, I will trouble you with none, becauſe moſt Gentlemen have read the Argument of Mr. St. John's in this Caſe: I muſt confeſs, unleſs there was that Neceſſity as is pretended, which I do not ſee; I do not ſee how you can juſtifie paſſing this Bill of Attainder, either by the Law of God or Man, in any Nation allowed.

I muſt confeſs, I have no manner of Concern how this Queſtion goes; what I have ſaid, is more to ſatisfie my own Judgment, than work upon other People; I am not ſatisfied there is that Neceſſity that is pretended; and therefore as my Judgment is now informed, I can't give my Vote for Committing of this Bill.

Mr. Smith. Sir, I own my ſelf to be very unfit to ſpeak in this Argument, but ſince I am to give my Vote in a Matter of this Conſequence, I beg leave to give my Reaſon why I give my Vote, as I intend to do; I know the Matter before us, both in the Nature of the Crime and Puniſhment, as well as the Conſequence of it, requires a very deliberate Conſideration; but at the ſame Time, I do take the Hazard and Danger of this Government to be a Matter of great Conſequence too.

Though there have been ſeveral Precedents inſtanced in Relation to Attainders; and though I have obſerved, that moſt have acknowledged, That they might be juſtified upon extraordinary Occaſions; yet when they have aſſerted that, they have told you, they were upon a wrong Foundation, and ſo were laid aſide. Now I think it no great Matter to ſay, That thoſe Attainders that were made in Rancour upon contended Titles, were reverſed when the oppoſite Party got the Power: no more than if any Action, be it never ſo juſtifiable, ſhould be Reverſed when King James comes again, which I hope never will be. Is it any Argument, that when H. IV. came to the Crown, and depoſed King Richard, that he reverſed all the Attainders in his Time? There might be Reaſons might ſway with Perſons for reverſing particular Acts of Parliament, which might be very good, or might be not ſo: There was ſuch a Change of Government at that Time; but they take notice it was made a particular Article againſt Richard II. as if when the Power was come to other Hands, they would not have depoſed him if they had not had that Argument: Neither do I take that Argument to be of any Weight; That Attainders have been reverſed, becauſe the People have not been heard; when this Gentleman hath had as full a Hearing as ever any Perſon had upon any Bill of Attainder, or Impeachment whatſoever. And he hath had the Advantage of Council in this Caſe; which, as has been told you, was excepted out of the late Act of Parliament, and of the moſt able Council too.

'Tis ſaid this is a Matter of no great Conſequence, becauſe it concerns Sir John Fenwick's Life ſingly; and he is not thought to be ſo conſiderable, as by his Eſcape to bring the Publick in danger. Now it hath been always one Principle I have laid down, That if a Plot be diſcovered, and not throughly proſecuted, it ſtrengthens and grows upon you, and ten to one if it does not ſubvert the Government.

Now, God be thanked, that we have prevented the Deſign upon the King's Perſon, and ſeveral have been puniſhed for it; but I think we are not gone to the Bottom of it, and that we ought to provide againſt it in a much other Manner. Can any one think that Sir William Perkins, or Sir John Freind, and the reſt that are diſcovered were the only Perſons concerned in this Conſpiracy: I take it, that there have been much greater Men in it; and when I ſee ſuch a Struggle both to get People out of Goal, and ſend People out of the Way, and all Arts uſed that can be; I muſt ſuppoſe, when ſuch extraordinary Courſes are taken, that there is ſomething extraordinary ſtill to be done; and I would not have Men by bribing of Witneſſes think to ſecure themſelves: It hath been uſed as an Argument to leſſen the Matter, That this was a little after the Act of Indempnity: Can any Thing aggravate a Thing more? Sir, theſe very Arguments turn againſt them.

We are told here, that we muſt not conſult our own private Judgments in the Matter; and we are told at the ſame Time, if there were two Witneſſes that we did not believe, we muſt not find him guilty. We are told of a Judge that though he knew a Perſon to be not guilty; yet it was a commendable Action in him that he condemned the Man, but that hath been very well anſwered already, and I ſhall not meddle with it further; only this I will ſay, That I never will in any Caſe be a Jury-man or a Judge, where the Convictions of my own Conſcience ſhall not govern me; but an Evidence that I do not believe. And becauſe that Story was told you, I will tell you another, that I think more commendable: And that was a Man was Try'd for a Murther, and there was poſitive Evidence againſt him; the Jury went out, and ſtaid a great while: There was Eleven againſt One for finding him guilty; but at laſt the One almoſt ſtarved them, and they brought the Man in not Guilty: The Judge ſent for the Gentleman, and deſired to know his Reaſons for differing with the reſt: And at laſt, upon Aſſurance that nothing ſhould be done to him, Why, ſays he; Would you have me find the Man guilty, when I was he that killed the Man, and he was innocent?

Then, Sir, if you take the Evidence as it is; I think, firſt, here is Capt. Porter: I do not find any Body excepts to him; and his Evidence hath been approved of by ſeveral Juries, and ſeveral Perſons executed upon it; and nothing Material hath been objected againſt it. I will not ſay, That Sir John Fenwick hath owned a great deal of this himſelf: He hath given every body ſatisfaction, how far he ſtands guilty in his Opinion; but it is brought ſo far home, that there was Sir John Fenwick's own Letter was to convey him abroad. Here hath been attempts upon other Perſons; you hear what hath been done by the Sollicitor. They ſay, he was not his Sollicitor at that Time. Here are very pregnant Circumſtances; one Gentleman ſaid, you ought not to make uſe of Goodman's Evidence here; and yet he could make uſe of every Thing to diſparage him; for he could ſay, there were three poſitive Witneſſes againſt him.

Now when 'tis ſo notorious what Parties there are for King James? and we find Perſons plotting in every Part of the Kingdom: When you have an open Invaſion before you, and when Deſigns are laid againſt the King's Life every Day; if this be not a Time to exert an extraordinary Power, I ſubmit it to you.

Sir Rich. Temple. Sir, I ſhall not trouble you with any Thing that hath been offered to Day. That which calls me up is the Danger of the Precedent you are about to make, and the Arguments that have been uſed to ſupport it; which I think, are more dangerous than that. I muſt confeſs 'tis a new Doctrine to me, That the Laws that are made by the Parliament, are to be no rule and guide to this Houſe. Sir, the Birth-right we have, is in our Laws; and I did ever think till now, That the Laws were not only made for Weſtminſter-hall, but for all the Subjects of England; and eſpecially, that they were to be a Rule to the Parliament that made them, till they ſhould think fit to alter them.

Here have been great Miſtakes between the Power of Parliament and the Juriſdiction of it; the Power of Parliament is to make any Law, but the Juriſdiction of Parliament is to govern it ſelf by the Law; and this, give me leave to ſay it to you, hath been the Opinion of all your Anceſtors, and the Method they ever uſed: Shall we make a Law here in a particular Caſe againſt all the Laws of England? 'Tis ultimum remedium & peſſimum; you may uſe it in a Caſe of abſolute neceſſity, but otherwiſe it may be a Precedent to overturn all.

There are ſeveral Things in making this Precedent, that overthrow all the Laws and Liberties of England. Firſt, you are paſſing Judgment upon a Man upon one Witneſs; I have heard a ſtrange Debate to Day, That there was but one Witneſs in Treaſon, before the Statute of Ed. 6. you know, that in Caſe of Treaſon, there was by the common Law required two Witneſſes; for if there was but one, the Party might demand Tryal by Battle, and that was the common Law of England.

There is another Thing that is extraordinary; here you are going to paſs an Act without any Tryal at all? for to ſay this is a Tryal before you the Commons, is a miſtake, you never did aſſume a Juriſdiction of Trying any Perſon, nor can you: You may for your own Information hear what can be offered, but 'tis not a Tryal where Witneſſes are not upon their Oaths. There is no manner of Power or Juriſdiction can be pretended for you to Try; in that is a ſecond Thing. All the Bills of Attainder you have had, have been in three Caſes, where the Perſons have been either Dead or Fled, or have been without the Compaſs of the Law, and could not be brought to anſwer: And you have had ſome Bills of Attainder after Tryals had in Weſtminſter-hall; but never a one of thoſe have been called Tryals, but they have been generally reverſed; and for what? They tell you, That they have been reverſed by one Party and another Party: It was in the ſame King's Reign, in Rich. 2d's Reign; they were forward and backward, as the Court Party or the Country Party were uppermoſt.

There is another Thing in this, that I think of a moſt dangerous Conſequence; and that is, that you are for making way, for what I know, by this Precedent, for a Rack, for ſo 'tis ſaid; this is to force a Man to be an Evidence. Why, give me leave to ſay to you, 'tis a new Way not known in England, that you will hang a Man unleſs he will Confeſs or give Evidence; but I think 'tis ſomething more than a Rack, for here is hanging, drawing and quartering in the Caſe; and I do not think this Proceeding will make him an Evidence with any Credit or Reputation to this Houſe; nor am I of Opinion that he can diſcover any Thing worth ſuch a Precedent.

Now give me leave to ſay one Thing as to the Juriſdiction of Parliament. It hath paſſed here for Current, That the Parliament hath a Power to declare what they will Treaſon, though ſo by no other Law; 'tis the greateſt Miſtake in the World; I heard a great Debate upon this, upon my Lord Clarendon's Caſe, and 'tis plain, that Statute relates only to Caſes brought from inferiour Courts to Parliament; for it ſays, That if any other Caſe ſuppoſed Treaſon, which is not in that Statute ſpecefied, doth happen before any Juſtices, the Juſtices ſhall tarry without going to Judgment of the Treaſon, till the Cauſe be ſhewed and declared before the King and his Parliament; Whether it ought to be judged Treaſon, or other Felony, I ſpeak to the Juriſdiction that the Parliament has by that Statute. 'Tis, that if the like Treaſon (for at common Law there was a great many Treaſons) ſhould fall out, and be brought before inferiour Courts, of which they doubted, whether they were Treaſons or no; then they ſhould be brought before the Parliament to judge whether they were Treaſons or Felony: But how ſhall they judge? By the Laws in being. And who is this judgment in? Not in the Parliament by Bill, but only in the Houſe of Lords: Much leſs is it' That you may judge that to be Treaſon in this Houſe, that was not ſo by the common Law before. So that give me leave to ſay, therefore there is no ſuch Power reſerved to the Parliament, to declare any Thihg Treaſon that is not Treaſon before.

I muſt ſay, 'tis of the laſt Conſequence, that we ſhould make a Law in a particnlar Caſe to take away from him all the Liberty that belongs to a Subject: Some Gentlemen talk of the great Favour he hath had at this Bar; I know not what to think of it; I am ſure you allowed the King's Council ſuch Priviledges as I never ſee before, and that was to offer that for Evidence, that every body acknowledged was not ſo; and I do not think any body would think it a great Favour to be heard in this manner, eſpecially to Things not in the Bill.

'Tis ſaid every Man muſt go according to his private Opinion, 'tis not ſaid Judgment neither; the Inſtances that have been given, are of a quite different Nature: A Man is not to give his Judgment againſt his Kuowledge; I think that Judge ought

ought rather not to have try'd the Cauſe at all, but if we ſit here to judge, we ſit to judge him according to the Law of England, and then we muſt judge him according to legal Proof: Will you ſit upon a Judgment that is not only not tyed to the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall, but is not tyed to the Laws of the Land; and attaint a Man without a legal Tryal, without legal Evidence, and upon one Witneſs, when the Law ſays you ſhall have two; and after all, ſay 'tis a reaſonable Proceeding? I know not how it came about, that the Act of Grace was paſſed, it did not riſe from this Houſe; if it hath any ill Conſequence, let them anſwer for it that were the Cauſe of it.

They ſay the Government is at Stake, becauſe the Plot hath not been found out to the Bottom: That is not our fault, this Man hath been long enough in Cuſtody; if he hath trifled with the Government, I am ſorry he hath impoſed upon them; but if it be ſo, I think there is nothing in this Caſe of that Conſequence, as to make you make this Precedent.

Sir Will. Strickland. Mr. Speaker, I would not make uſe of any ill Precedent: and yet if the preſent Occaſion, and the Neceſſity of the Kingdom required it, I would make a Precedent; I am glad the ſeveral ill Precedents are avoided in this Caſe, and I would be bold to ſay, whether this Gentleman ſuffers or no, no Man can ſay that he hath been hared to Death by Council.

Sir, I ſhould be as tender in Point of Blood as any Man; but I do think, if the ſafety of the King and Kingdom is concerned, 'tis not one private Man that we muſt have reſpect for, ſo as to let the Publick ſuffer by it: I do think, that upon this Occaſion there have ſo extraordinary Things happened as have hardly happened in former Ages; that One who is known to be in a Conſpiracy to bring over a French Power with a popiſh Army, to deſtroy our Lives and Liberties, after his Tryal has been deferred by his Equivocations and Pretences to make a great Diſcovery; when he comes to make it out, he accuſes the beſt of your Friends; and this is only an Artifice to get Time till they could get the Evidence out of the Way. I think, if you do not take notice of it, and let the Legiſlative ſupply that Defect, it may be of ill Conſequence, and may encourage any one to commit the worſt of Miſchiefs, upon hopes, that if they can get the Evidence out of the Way, they ſhall go unpuniſhed.

Sir Francis Winnington. I ſhall trouble you but a little while, it being late; but Gentlemen ſaying 'tis an extraordinary Caſe, I ſhall give my Reaſons why this Bill ought not to be committed; for every Member here now, is a Judge, and he muſt take the Blood of this Gentleman upon him in Judgment, either to condemn or acquit him; and I muſt confeſs, I have very much admired, to hear that Doctrine preach'd that every Man, as he is ſatisfied in his private Conſcience, ought to judge this Man guilty. I deſire to know by what Authority we ſit here? We ſit here and have a legiſlative Authority, and 'tis by the King's Command we come together; but at this Time we are judicially trying this Man for his Life, and therefore I humbly conceive, That we ought to proceed ſecundum allegata & probata, and for any Man in his private Opinion, to ſay he his guilty, he does not act by the Commiſſion he ſits here: for to tell you of the Lancaſhire Plot, or that a Man ſhall not be choſen hereafter, ſeems to be Arguments to inflame, but nothing to the Queſtion.

Now, Sir, I will humbly offer to your Conſideration, and the Judgment of the Houſe, why I think we cannot judicially condemn this Man, for I think the Queſtion of Commitment to be the ſame as of his Life and Death.

I do agree upon all the Precedents good and bad that have been cited, and doubt not but in extraordinary Caſes, 'tis in the legiſlative Power of the Parliament to look after the Safety of the Kingdom, but I ſhall offer why this does not come to that Caſe.

I humbly conceive in this Caſe, for I will not ſpeak to the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall, but upon the right Reaſon of the Thing; for if it be Reaſon in Weſtminſter-hall, it may be ſo here, and that ought to overcome every Thing: But whereas Gentlemen ſay you have one Witneſs; I do not apprehend you have one good Witneſs, and I will give you my Reaſon for it; for you muſt take Capt. Porter upon his Parole, and conſider what he ſays upon his Word; and then I do appeal, if you take what he ſays upon his Word, Whether ever they did know that a Bill of Attainder proceeded againſt any Man upon bare Affirmation? No; in that Caſe you ſhould have turned it into an Impeachment, if the Thing looked probable, and then you had the Witneſs upon Oath; and the ancient Method of Bills of Attainder uſe to be firſt by Impeachment of the Perſon, and then to turn it into a Bill of Attainder.

Then ſee what is it that is inſiſted on by the King's Council, and recited in the Bill, That there was a Bill of Indictment found by the Oath of two Witneſſes, that is Porter and Goodman: Under favour, I think they are not to be counted as Witneſſes in the Point; and I offer this as a Reaſon; and, I think, 'tis natural Juſtice in all Courts of the World, That if a Man be accuſed as a Malefactor, he hath the Liberty to croſs-examine the Perſon that accuſes him. Now we very well know, that in Caſe of Bills of Indictment, when they are found by the Grand-Jury, they never admit the Priſoner to put croſs Queſtions, becauſe the Bill of Indictment is but the Accuſation; and if an Accuſation be enough, who can be Innocent? Why, then if it be ſo, then this Oath that was given to the Grand-Jury, is not ſuch an Oath upon which you can put ſuch a Value.

Then, Sir, go to the Paper of Goodman, which you would read, and conſider the validity of that; Goodman being now abſent, the Priſoner hath no opportunity to croſs-examine him; and I beſeech the Houſe to conſider the ill Conſequence of it; any Miniſter of State may come and get an Examination before a Juſtice of Peace, or Secretary of State, and the Man is conveyed away, and a Bill of Attainder is clapped upon his back, and this ſhall be read as Evidence againſt him. He is but half a Witneſs, and a Witneſs upon an Accuſation, not upon a Tryal.

Then come to Sir John Fenwick's particular Caſe; Sir John Fenwick is indicted, Iſſue is joyned, and he hath notice of his Tryal: and one of the Witneſſes goes away, no Man can tell upon what account he went; I may believe why, in my private Opinion, but that is not our judicial Knowledge: Then if that be ſo, was it ever known, that when any Man was indicted, and iſſue joyned, becauſe his Tryal was deferred, therefore a Bill of Attainder muſt be brought againſt him? Here are Plots againſt the Government, and it may be forty may be taken up for it; and as to twenty, there there may be two Witneſſes, and the others may have the good luck to have but a ſingle Witneſs againſt them; will you have Acts of Attainder againſt all the reſt? If this had been an extraordinary Caſe, wherein the Government had been particularly concerned, it might have weighed with you; for no Man can ſhew me any Precedent of a Bill of Attainder, but where there was open Act of Hoſtility, or Men of great Relation and Power were concerned to Subvert the Government: But what is Sir John Fenwick's Caſe? He is in Cuſtody, and the Plot is detected; if he was run away, you might ſtill ſuppoſe he was plotting againſt the Government, becauſe he was fled from Juſtice: Gentlemen ſay the Government is concerned, ſo it is in every Felony and particular Treaſon, but muſt there therefore be a Bill of Attainder to puniſh it? When there is a Bill of Attainder, it muſt be from an immediate Danger that threatens the Government Eſtabliſhed, that ſuch a Man is Attainted: But I do not ſee that Sir John Fenwick hath any of theſe Circumſtances. All Men agree, That this is an extraordinary Way of Proceeding: Then the Queſtion is, Whether Sir John Fenwick's Caſe be extraordinary? or whether he be more than a common Malefactor that is in a wicked Conſpiracy? I do not ſee that this Caſe of Sir John Fenwick's is ſo extraordinary, that if he be not hanged, the Government muſt fail.

And, under favour, a Precedent when 'tis once made, I know not what Time may produce from it: It may be, after the Death of his Majeſty, that came to reſtore our Liberties, we may have wicked Members, and Members choſen as in H. 6. Time. It may be the Condition of every Subject in England. The Power of Parliament we muſt govern by Reaſon and common Juſtice; and if there be not ſo urgent Neceſſity to uſe this extraordinary Remedy, becauſe it may be dangerous to Poſterity, Therefore I am againſt this Bill.

Sir Tho. Littleton. The worthy Gentleman took notice, That the Lancaſhire Plot, and ſome Words I uſed, were uſed only to inflame: I can't ſo well gueſs at his Thoughts, but I have heard him ſeveral Times bring his Wife and Children into his Speeches, to no purpoſe at all.

Sir Francis Winnington. I have a Wife and Children, and that Gentleman none; therefore I think I may make uſe of that Expreſſion.

Sir Tho. Seymour. Mr. Speaker, I have attended your Debate with the beſt Attention I can; and I have heard a great many Arguments, and ſome very wild Ones too. I hope, how frightful ſoever Things have been opened, they will not lead your Underſtanding out of the Methods and Rules of Juſtice: I will not take upon me to tell you, what is nothing to the Queſtion; as that Treaſon is a very great Crime, or that the Parliament hath an unbounded or unlimitted Power, and are not tied to the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall; I think that is no Part of the ſubject Matter before you.

That nothing bounds or can limit the Parliament is what every Body does admit; but 'tis the right Application of that Power which is now to be conſidered of: For you may Judge the Priſoner, and others will Judge you. The World will Judge you, if you do not apply that Power a-right.

For my part I ſhall avoid, as much as can be, the ſaying of any Thing that hath been ſaid; and therefore I hope you will believe that my Diſcourſe muſt be very ſhort: But that which does move me in this Queſtion is in ſhort this, That I do not give my Judgment to condemn any Man otherwiſe than the Law directs how, and upon what Terms, I muſt give it; If the Law hath ſaid that Treaſon is not to be Treaſon, unleſs it be proved by two Witneſſes, I am never to give my Judgment in that Caſe when there appears but one.

And this I take to be the ſtate of the Caſe, not to enter into Matters of Precedent of Attainders; for thoſe are only Inſtances of ſo many Facts that have been done. And in all thoſe Inſtances that have been urged and quoted, When Times have been ſedate and quiet, Marks have been put upon them; as was hinted by a Gentleman that ſpake very Ingeniouſly upon this Subject at the beginning of this Debate; I ſay, Marks have been put upon them for you to avoid, but not to imitate. I take it, that the Law hath determined that there ſhall be two Witneſſes to the Proof of Treaſon, and there is no Treaſon that hath not two Witneſſes to it. There is but one Attainder that we meet withal in ſacred Hiſtory, and that is the Attainder of Naboth: he was attainted, and we know what induced that Attainder; he had nothing to object as to the Formality of the Proceedings there was ſet up againſt him: And though Jezabel's Letter had diſpoſed the Rulers to deal by him as they did, yet there were two Witneſſes that did appear againſt him.

I take it, that two Witneſſes are requiſite for the Knowledge of the Truth, that you may make a right Judgment whether they ſwear right or no. I will give you but one ſmall Inſtance more; I muſt tell you Suſannah had been but in a bad Condition, if one Witneſs and circumſtantial Evidence would have made her guilty.

A Gentleman here ſays, 'tis Apocrypha: But that which weighs with me is, that there may be Inconveniences on one ſide, and there are no Inconveniences on the other. I know not what may be the Conſequence of this Precedent, nor where it may bring you: I know the Conſequence if Sir John Fenwick be not executed upon a Bill of Attainder: for no Body will believe there is a Neceſſity for this extraordinary Remedy to be applied for an Offence, a Year and half after he hath been Indicted and Arraigned for it, and they might have proceeded to his Tryal. And I know not whether 'tis his Fault that they did not; for it was not in his Power to prevent it: And if you, upon every Occaſion, come to ſupply the Defects of them that are remiſs in the Government, it will make them more ſo.

As to the Matter of Precedents, Why; It may fall out, that by this Precedent an innocent Man may be puniſhed, and then we that make this Precedent are guilty of his Blood; and if he ſuffer never ſo remotely, it will be required of us, if they proceed from this Precedent. Now, if Sir John Fenwick be not Executed, unleſs in a legal Way, What is the Conſequence of That? Is it that Sir John Fenwick ſhall go unpuniſhed? Though they are deprived of one Evidence that would make it Treaſon, he may be puniſhed for a Miſdemeanour and impriſoned for his Life; and I had much rather he did languiſh in that Condition, and I am ſure it is much ſafer for you, for no Inconveniency can ariſe that Way; and I take it, That when thoſe that are our Guides diſpute which is the Way, we are to take that which is ſafeſt.

The Learned have diſputed, Whether this Matter, as now it is charged upon Sir John Fenwick, be Treaſon? I will not take upon me to determine it, they differ about it; and when they can't determine termine it, will you by a Queſtion determine it abſolutely?

Upon the Whole, there hath been ſo much ſaid by the Council for the Priſoner, and ſo little ſaid by the Council againſt him, and ſo few Arguments urged againſt him, that I muſt ſtill retain the Opinion I had, That there is not Evidence enough for you to proceed upon this Bill of Attainder.

Mr. Boſcawen. Sir, I deſire to give my Reaſons for my Opinion in this Matter. I have no perſonal Diſguſt againſt Sir John Fenwick; the great Argument for Sir John Fenwick againſt this Bill is, That this is an extraordinary Proceeding, and therefore ſhould be againſt an extraordinary Perſon; and in the next Place, that it is againſt the Rules of Law. The Rule of the Law is, That there muſt be two living Witneſſes: As to that Matter, Gentlemen generally agree, That 'tis within the Law of Parliament to attaint People by Bill of Attainder; but they ſay they have been often miſapplied, which I do eaſily believe, becauſe ſome have been Attainted and have not been heard; and ſome have been in tumultuous Times; but this Gentleman hath had a fair Tryal, and a Debate in this Houſe; but I would fain know, though they confeſs Bills of Attainder may be, how it can poſſibly be, if the Lawyers at the Bar ſay true, That it muſt be upon Oath, and you give no Oath?

To ſay it may begin in the Houſe of Lords; under Favour, I take it, That a Bill againſt a Commoner can't begin in the Houſe of Lords. And if you can't have Witneſſes upon Oath, you muſt have as much Evidence as the Nature of the Thing will afford; that is, you muſt have Witneſſes to convince your Conſciences in the Thing; for if all this great Aſſembly are ſatisfied in their Conſciences, that he is guilty of inviting an Army of French to come into England, I am aſtoniſhed to think that you ſhould not paſs this Bill againſt him: I think, as to this Witneſs Porter, they have not endeavoured to blemiſh him, but their Argument ſeems to run more upon Goodman's not being preſent. I would know if there are two Witneſſes, and I do not believe them in my Conſcience, Whether I can paſs this Bill? But I appeal in this Caſe, res ipſa loquitur. The Thing is ſo plain, How many have been attainted and ſuffered for the ſame Crime, that have acknowledged Sir John Fenwick to have been preſent. There were ſeveral Members of the Houſe ſent to examine Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns, in Newgate; and they were ſent with this Intention, That the Houſe would interceed with the King for a Pardon for them, if they diſcovered the Full of the Plot; (it was not the Death of Sir William Parkyns and Sir John Freind that was aimed at, but the Preſervation of the Publick) and when they were examined, they did acknowledge, that they were privy to the Calling in of the French, and that Sir William Parkyns was to have a Troop of Horſe; there was to be 2000 Horſe; but he would not redeem his own Life with the Blood of others. Now I do take it, that there is Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick ſufficient, in a Parliamentary Way, to attaint him.

The Gentleman ſays, the Conſequence of throwing out this Bill, would be nothing, and that Sir John Fenwick is a little Man; I agree he is, but 'tis the Conſequence of bringing in a French Army that is to be conſidered: Would you pave the Way for them to come over, and make their Entrance eaſie? I hope the People of England are concerned in the Caſe, as well as their Wives and Children: If you let him go, what will be ſaid? I have not heard one ſay, That he believes he is not guilty; there is none but think him guilty, and yet will you let him eſcape? What Encouragement will this be to your Enemies? He hath not denied the Matter himſelf. Nay, he hath not brought one Gentleman to vindicate him, That he is a Man of a Behaviour, not to be believed to be guilty of ſuch a Thing, which was done in other Tryals.

I deſire you would conſider what the French King ſaid of his Brother King James; how could he think to bring in Popery with a Proteſtant Army? I am ſure the Bringing in of a French Army muſt be for the Deſtruction of the People of England, and the Proteſtant Religion, and will bring your People to go in wooden Shoes: 'Tis the Example of this Thing you are to conſider. It was ſaid at the Deſtruction of Carthage, That the Commonwealth was always to be minded: I think you ought always to be mindful for the Preſervation of England; and I believe he is guilty, and I am therefore for the Bill.

Lord Digby. I ſhall trouble you but with a Word or two: I ſuppoſe as long as we act by the known Rules of Juſtice, and the Laws of our Land, we ſhall not need to fear any Cenſure in our own Kingdom, or any where elſe; but 'tis a very uncertain Thing for Gentlemen to be Judges in the Caſe of Life and Death, without any Rule to walk by; a great many will not allow us any Rule at all: I always took our Rule to be the Law of the Land, and that even our ſelves are bound by the Laws our Anceſtors have made, till we think fit to repeal them; and I am confirmed in this Caſe by one particular Argument from the Bill of Treaſon that paſſed laſt Seſſions; in which there is a Clauſe, That it ſhould not extend to future Parliaments. The only Argument for exerciſing of this Power, is the extraordinary Caſe of this Gentleman. When a Gentleman ſpeaks of the Power of Parliament, I take it to be the juſt Power of Parliament; I think a Man may ſay a Parliament can't do what they can't juſtly do. But all Gentlemen allow, that this Power ought not to be exerciſed but in an extraordinary Caſe, wherein the Government is nearly concerned: I believe very few but think, that if it had not been for the Vindication of ſome particular Gentlemen, we never had had this Matter before us; and then I will leave it to Gentlemen to conſider, if the Government can be in ſo much Danger if Sir John Fenwick does eſcape.

Mr. Brotherton. Mr. Speaker, I perceive the Queſtion whether this Bill ſhall be Committed, ariſes very much upon a Suppoſition that ſeems to be granted, That there is no other Law to try this Perſon by; and it hath been hinted, That before the Statute of Ed. 6. one Witneſs was ſufficient: Now, if I ſhew you that here is a Law in being, and hath continued for ſeveral hundred Years, whereby a Man may be tryed, and that by one Witneſs, I think it is ſomething that hath not been ſpoke to yet.

Sir, I ground my Reaſon and Opinion upon the Authority of the Law, and upon the Hiſtorians of all Times, who agree in the Thing, and come down to my Lord Coke, which is Printed by Authority; and he is expreſs, That where there is but one Witneſs, he treats of what Witneſſes are neceſſary, and he tells you two Witneſſes were required by the common Law for Treaſon, if the Perſon was tryed by a Jury; but ſays he, if there be but one Witneſs in Caſe of Treaſon, he ſhall be tryed before the Conſtable and Marſhal. And in treating of the Statute of H. 8. which does appoint how Treaſon beyond Sea ſhall be tryed; ſays he, that is only where there are only two Witneſſes; but if there is but one Witneſs, he ſhall be tryed before the Conſtable and Marſhal; becauſe, ſays he, the Statute of Hen. 8. does not take away that Tryal before the Conſtable and Marſhal; and for that, Sir, there are ſeveral Precedents in this Caſe, of Perſons that have been attainted by a Court Marſhal: And if the Accuſer was vanquiſhed, he was to ſuffer the ſame Judgment the Defendant was, if he was found guilty. I am upon a Gentleman's Life, and never was ſo before, and deſire to be never ſo again; there have been ſeveral Precedents I ſay in this Caſe, and my Lord Coke is expreſs in the Point; and I deſire any Gentleman to ſhew me any Law that hath repealed this.

In Caſe of Murther; ſuppoſe a Man be wounded upon the Land, and die upon the Sea, and I could ſhew ſeveral Caſes where the common Law can't try a Man by Jury, but he ſhall be tryed by the Cuſtom of Merchants before the Statute of Ed. 6. If a Man was wounded in one Countrey, and died in another, he could not be tryed. That which I aim at, is to ſhew you, that though the common Law ſhould fail, yet they need not come with a Bill in this Caſe: If two Engliſh Men beyond Sea fight, and one kill the other, it can't be tryed by the common Law; How then ſhall it be tryed? It muſt be tryed by the Court Marſhal. It was Sir John Ameſley's Caſe in Rich. 2d's Time; and Wells's Caſe, and Lord Herbert's Caſe, in H. 6. Time, who (there being but one Witneſs) was Accuſed before the Conſtable and Marſhal.

Memorandum. [Mr. Brotherton was here interrupted by the great Noiſe the Houſe made upon the Novelty of the Argument, and did not go on further with it]

Mr. Paget. Sir, I attended to the Debate of this Day, and have not hitherto troubled you my ſelf, becauſe I did expect to be better informed by this Debate.

I think the Subſtance of the Debate of this Day, hath been not ſo much to ſhew us by what Rule we are to go, as to ſhew us that we have no Rule to go by but our Judgments. Sir, I never had the Honour to ſit in Parliament before this Time, and therefore can't quote Precedents of what hath been done in former Parliaments; others have taken a great deal of Pains to ſhew you, that it is in the Diſcretion of Gentlemen, and they are only to be ſatisfied in their Conſciences; I am not fond to hear my ſelf ſpeak, and therefore I hope I ſhall be favourably heard at this Time, and I do think I have the more Reaſon to ſpeak at this Time, from ſomething that fell from a very honourable Gentleman at the Bar: If I do miſrepeat him, I hope he will excuſe me, for I do not do it with an ill Deſign; but I think his Words were to this Effect, That he did not know, but if it was known in the Country that Gentlemen did give their Judgment againſt paſſing of this Bill, it might hinder their Election in future Parliaments. Sir, ſince there ſeems to be ſo great ſtreſs upon our determination in this Matter, I hope I may at this Time ſhew you my Reaſons why I can't come up to agree in this Bill; and I ſhall ſubmit it to them, whether they will do me the Honour to chuſe me again. I muſt confeſs, I do think this is as nice a Caſe as I can pretend to give my Opinion in; and as it is ſo, I ſhall deſire the beſt Aſſurance of the Truth of this Matter, before I give my Opinion for the paſſing of this Bill.

Sir, you have had before you one Evidence, I will admit him to be as much as a ſingle Evidence can be; as to the Paper of Goodman's Examination, I have heard that, and other Matters too, which I ſhall not repeat: But I do remember, that in the Debate of Yeſterday, it was not inſiſted on to be Evidence: and if not ſo, I ſhall only take the Matter as depending before you upon one Evidence only.

Sir, it is true, I believe this Houſe, as to its Legiſlative Proceeding, is not tied by the Methods of inferior Courts: But I hope I ſhall be excuſed, if in the Methods of Proſecution and Conviction of Offenders, after they have been preſcribed by the Wiſdom of the Parliament, I hope I ſhall be excuſed, if I believe this Houſe can't take away any Perſon's Life upon leſs Evidence than inferiour Courts could do.

And, Sir, I ſhall not enter into any very long Vindication of my ſelf, and my Zeal and Willingneſs to ſerve the Government; I never was imployed in any other Government, and I think my Actions have been ſuch, that no Body can inſtance in any one Thing that hath looked otherwiſe; and when I have ſaid this, I ſhall trouble you no further about that; But there hath been ſo much ſtreſs laid upon this Bill, that whoſoever ſpeaks againſt it ſeems to ſpeak againſt the Government; becauſe it is ſaid, the paſſing of it is ſo neceſſary for the Support of the Government. And I was the more willing to offer you my Reaſons, becauſe, as the Nature of this Debate has been, I can't ſatisfy my ſelf where my Judgment and Opinion ſhall reſt: For if it be ſo, that you are not tied to have as much Evidence as inferior Courts, and, as they ſay, one Evidence is enough, and my Judgment is to be guided by Papers; then they, without any Evidence, may be enough to ſatisfie: And if you take up with leſs Evidence than inferiour Courts, I can't come to declare how little Evidence may take away a Man's Life.

As to the Priſoner I know him not; but I think this Bill is for all that he hath to loſe, and is for all the beſt Engliſh-man can loſe upon the like Occaſion.

Sir, I ſhall be very tender in giving my Opinion for the Bill, unleſs it was very clear to me that it was reaſonable. Truly I have heard very little of the whole Plot, or of this Matter that hath been examined, or for which others have been executed; my Life has been generally in the Country, and I have not had the Curioſity to buy the Tryals; and as this is the firſt Perſon that hath been called before me, to give my Judgment on, I hope I may be excuſed for taking this Liberty, upon ſuch Evidence as appears before us, to tell you, I can't give my Conſent to this Bill.

Sir William Lowther. Sir, you have had a very long Debate in the Houſe, and long Diſcourſe from the Bar; and though the Council was directed that they ſhould not diſpute the Priviledges and Authority of this Houſe, yet, as far as my Judgment carries me, their whole Diſcourſe was againſt it: And moſt of the Gentlemen that have ſpake againſt the Bill, it hath been becauſe it hath not been adequate to the Proceedings in Weſtminſter-Hall, becauſe there hath been but one Witneſs. Sir, if there had been two Witneſſes this Houſe had not been troubled with it: It is a Caſe of a very extraordinary Nature, ture, and ſo required an extraordinary Proceeding.

It hath been queſtioned by ſome Gentlemen, Whether one Witneſs be ſufficient in this Caſe, or no? Which I wonder at, ſince a great many have been Convicted upon his Evidence, and every one of them has Confeſſed, which ſhews it to be a notorious Truth.

There is another Inference they draw from the Proceedings here; becauſe a great many of thoſe Precedents of Attainders have been reverſed, and thoſe with Notes of Ignominy. If they did conſider the Times they were made in, and the Times they were reverſed in, there might be a great deal of Cauſe for it: We find that it was contrary Factions that reverſed them, and that makes it never the worſe. And truly, Sir, I do not know but where Circumſtances are ſo notorious, but they are tantamount to a ſecond Witneſs, as I have heard in Weſtminſter-Hall, and in Caſes of Life too. If a Man be murthered, and two in a Room, and one comes out with a bloody Sword, the Law does preſume that Man murthered him, though there is no particular Evidence that he murthered him, but only this Circumſtance; and yet the Man's Life is concerned in that Caſe. So that upon the Whole, it appears to me that he is guilty, and, I think, nothing can be plainer.

There is another Circumſtance, That he fled for it; and that is a Preſumption of a Man's guilt: For a Man loſes his Goods if he flies for Felony.

Mr. Harley. It would be very unreaſonable and impertinent to trouble you long after ſuch a Debate; I ſhall avoid Repitition of what hath been ſuggeſted to you, much better from other Perſons than would have been from me.

I own 'tis a Caſe of great Concern, and 'tis my Misfortune that I ſhould ever ſit upon a Thing of this Nature; but I will diſcharge my Conſcience always, and give what Arguments occur to me, why I am againſt this Bill.

Gentlemen have been pleaſed in their Arguments to enter upon the Debate of your Power and Authority, and have made that a part of their Argument; but I think, with ſubmiſſion, we need not diſpute that at all. It is admitted, that there have been Bills of Attainder paſſed formerly, and your Authority is not under Diſpute; for the Legiſlative in all Nations have a Power lodged in them, for the Safety of the whole.

But your proper Enquiry is, Whether this is ſuch a Caſe as you ought to exerciſe this extraordinary Power; omne regnum ſub graviore regno: Though you have this abſolute Authority, yet 'tis to be executed by the Rules of Reaſon, and by the Rules (for ſuch there are) of Eternal Juſtice; and I look upon this as one that is inviolable, That no Man can forfeit his Life, in ſuch a Caſe as this is, without two Witneſſes. I muſt adhere to that, becauſe I have heard nothing in this Debate that can make me quit that Maxim: And 'tis ſuch an Antient Land-mark, that I will never draw a Curſe upon me, and my Poſterity, for removing of it. I beg leave that I ſpeak with this Earneſtneſs to you.

Gentlemen have been pleaſed to make it part of their Arguments, The great Danger the Government is in, if this Bill does not ſucceed. I will not uſe many Words, but I think that Argument ought not to be taken in the Groſs, but to be examined, Whether this Argument, of the Hazard of the Government, is of equal Poize for you to break the Eternal Rules of Juſtice. I won't quote the Caſe before, every Gentleman knows it, (though there was two Witneſſes in that Caſe to put an innocent Perſon to Death) where it is urged, the Romans will come and take our State and Nation. But with how much Reaſon that was urged, every Body knows; and how far Government is now in Danger. Let us conſider, Is this Gentleman out of your Power? Is the Government in Danger of a Man that is your Priſoner? Is he in open Rebellion againſt you, if this Law does not paſs? If you have not your Hands in this Blood? Is he not under the Power of the Law? Did not he tell you ſo himſelf.

Every Gentleman ought to have a Zeal for the Government, and I wiſh it was as viſible in every Thing elſe; but if that be ſo, give us leave alſo to ſpeak with Zeal for our Liberty, and Antient Conſtitution. The Argument is turned two Ways; on one Side you are told, That this probably may make him Confeſs ſomething; and by others, he is to be made an Example of Puniſhment. This is the firſt beginning of a Bill of this Nature; but the ſame Reaſon that leads you to this, muſt lead you to all the reſt: The ſame Reaſon that is urged for this Bill to make him confeſs, will lead you to bring in a Bill to make him a good Evidence; this every Body muſt allow to be the Conſequence of it.

How does this Bill come before you? It comes before you upon a Villainous, Scandalous Aſperſion of ſome great Men; though I know them not all, yet I have a great Value for them, and I would make their Caſe my own: But if they were the neareſt Relation I had, I would be againſt this Bill upon their Account; and let any one examine the Reaſon of it.

Sir, I won't run into Precedents; but only becauſe it hath been told you, That the Precedents were made in one Reign by one Faction, and then the Attainders were reverſed in another Reign by another Faction. There is one occurs to my Mind, which hath been touched at, and is at leaſt of Inſtruction to me: There was a Caſe in Ed. IIId's Time; there was the Depoſition of a King, a King barbarouſly murthered, and his Son upon the Throne; and there was the Notoriety of the Fact, for which a great Man was Attainted in his Son's Reign, and no different Title; and four Years after a Bill was brought in againſt the Earl of March: And one of the Articles againſt him was, That he had procured that Attainder of that Noble Lord, under Pretence of ſome Letter, or Paper, that was ſigned by him; which, if it was ſo, ſays the Record, was no Evidence.

I lay this before Gentlemen, to ſhew them how Things have turned, and Precedents that have been made very unanimouſly; but in bad Times have been turned to ſhed the beſt Blood in England. It grieves me to my Soul to hear of Mr. Corniſh, whoſe Attainder you have reverſed, to hear that quoted as a Precedent in this Houſe: 'Tis not whether two Witneſſes be the Rule of Weſtminſter-Hall, 'tis the Rule of right Reaſon; and 'tis a Maxim in your Law, Make what Law you will againſt the Law of God, 'tis void: And this is the Law of God, and right Reaſon.

You muſt provide for the Government, and when you can't do it by Courſe of Law, then Armies muſt do it, when the Courts are ſhut. I hope Gentlemen will not put a hard Conſtruction upon what I have ſaid, I have done it to diſcharge a good Conſcience.

Mr. Chancellor of Exchequer. Sir, I am for the Commitment of this Bill, becauſe in my Conſcience I think Sir John Fenwick is guilty; and becauſe I think the Power of Parliaments may interpoſe in this Matter: And if they have ſuch a Power, I think they may juſtly exerciſe it in this Caſe.

Gentlemen ſay, they will not diſpute the Power of Parliament; and yet in their Arguments they tells us, we are not to proceed otherwiſe than according to the Forms of inferior Courts. And if the Parliament is not to proceed without two Witneſſes in the Caſe of Treaſon, give me leave to ſay, there is no room left for a Bill of Attainder, unleſs you will take the Buſineſs of inferior Courts upon your ſelves: And I am confident ſeveral Gentlemen, if there were two Witneſſes, would uſe it as an Argument, What have you to do with it, refer it to the ordinary Courts of Juſtice; And I am ſure that would be very reaſonable. But I do think that Parliaments have this Power, and they have always uſed it; and I believe 'tis for the Advantage of your Conſtitution. The inferior Courts are to go by the Letter of the Law, and whoever can avoid that, is to eſcape Puniſhment there; but the Legiſlative is not to be dallied with: And if the Offence be of that Nature that inferior Courts can't reach it, they can go beyond all Forms to preſerve the Government. This they have done, and upon that Principle you ſit here. Was it by the Forms of common Juſtice below, that you declared the Throne to be vacant, and King William to be Lawful King? Is it upon the ordinary Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall that his Title does depend? No, it depends upon this Maxim, That the Parliament of England are intruſted for the Whole, and may Conſtitute a Government for the Preſervation of the Whole. And upon the ſame right Principle that I gave my Vote to declare him Rightful and Lawful King, by the ſame Principle I declare his Enemies to be Traytors.

You are told here, 'tis according to the Law of God and Nature, that there muſt be two Witneſſes in Caſes of Treaſon: I do not pretend much Skill in other Parts of the World, I think 'tis our particular Happineſs to have this Way of Tryal; I think in any other Part of the World, if he had dealt thus with the Government, he would have had another manner of Proceeding againſt him, than to be Condemned by King, Lords, and Commons: But that is your Conſtitution, but it does not hold in other Parts of the World.

Some Gentlemen lay the Streſs of their Argument upon the ill Conſequence it may have in another Reign; I would avoid ill Conſequences in another Reign as much as I could, but our immediate Care is the preſerving of the preſent Conſtitution.

But if Gentlemen are apprehenſive, that by ſuch an Example, if King James ſhould return, others may be puniſhed; if we may judge what he would do, by what he hath done, he would go another way to work: If he came to London he would proceed as his Party did at Dublin, and attaint all the Proteſtants in one common Bill; that is the Precedent he hath ſet, and he will follow. And therefore in order to prevent that, and in order to puniſh our Enemies, and to preſerve our Conſtitution and Prerogative of Parliament in all Points; and becauſe I am convinced in my Conſcience he is guilty, I ſhall give my Concurrence for Commitment of this Bill.

Coll. Granvil. Sir, I would not preſume to trouble you at this time of Night, was the Debate upon a leſs Subject than it is; but ſince you are going to pronounce Judgment in a Caſe of Life and Death, and that this Houſe is above any Rules, and we have no Precedent for it, but every Gentleman is to find out private Rules to walk by; the Rule that I ſhall take to is, That I would deal with Sir John Fenwick as I would have Mankind to deal with me, If I was in Sir John Fenwick's Place, and were Indicted of High-Treaſon, and were not allowed any Tryal, nor the Benefit of making my Defence, according to the known Laws of the Land; I ſhould think my Blood unjuſtly ſpilt, let me be never ſo guilty.

The Laws are what are ſet up for the Defence of every Man; and when once we break through them, whatever our End may be at that Time, and tho' it may in ſome manner ſeem to juſtifie us, becauſe 'tis to come at an ill Man; yet pray conſider, the beſt of Men may be come at as eaſily as the worſt of Men: And what makes me cautious is, That my Hands are guiltleſs of Blood yet, and I will take care how I begin to dip them in it. And that which will make me cautious in any Caſe of this Nature is, when I read in the Story of the late Time, That when once a Set of People had begun to dip their Hands in the Blood of my Lord Strafford, nothing would quiet them till they had ſtained their Hands with Royal Blood. The Lords are the common Defence between the King and the People; but the King is ſafeſt when the Laws are moſt ſtrictly obſerved.

I ſhall not pretend to talk of your Power, which hath no other Bounds but your Juſtice and Diſcretion; and what you think ſo, will, I hope, meet with Approbation abroad. And in this Caſe I ſhall always be againſt what is called a Tryal to Day: But I do not think it any; for I do think we are an unfit Court to determine this Matter. We ſit in ſo many Capacities, 'tis hard to diſtinguiſh in what Capacity we are here: Some are accuſed, 'tis hard to be accuſed, and to be a Judge at the ſame Time. I am ſure I am as much concerned as if I was accuſed my ſelf; and 'tis for my Innocence and Honour that I think my ſelf bound to ſpeak againſt this Bill. For as no Reſentment ſhall make me do any Thing that is unjuſt, ſo I fear nothing that he can ſay: And I will never go about to ſtop his Evidence, by cramming a Bill of Attainder down his Throat.

Beſides, 'tis an unfit Thing for any Gentleman who is obliged to be of Council for the King; 'tis hard for him to be ſo, and ſit here as a Judge: I think alſo to proceed in this Manner, is a diſreſpectful Thing to the King himſelf; for in this Caſe you turn the Throne of Mercy into the Seat of Judgment. The King, who ſhould have all the Ways to ingratiate himſelf with his Subjects, you make him, by this Proceeding, to pronounce the Sentence himſelf upon the Life of a Subject; and 'tis hard to offer a Bill to the King in ſuch a Manner, by which you oblige him either to reject it, (which was always look'd upon as an Hardſhip) or to paſs Sentence upon this Gentleman, which perhaps his Gracious Temper and his Mercy make him averſe to.

Sir,

Sir, 'tis too late to give you other Arguments, you have heard a great many better than I can give: But I think this Bill is unjuſt in it ſelf, and dangerous in its Conſequence, and therefore I hope you will not commit it.

Sir Herbert Croſts. Sir, I did not think to trouble you in this Debate, but only for the Arguments that have been uſed by ſome that ſpake lately, who ſeem to lay a great Load upon Men, according as they give their Vote in this Matter; becauſe 'tis in relation to the Blood of a Man. I have conſidered the Point, I hope, with as much Caution as any Man within theſe Walls, and hope to act with as ſtrict a Conſcience as any Man whatſoever; and ſhall be glad to be informed from thoſe Gentlemen, that have laid the Streſs ſo hard upon Religion, how they can ſhew me, that I do not as ſtrictly, as to all Points of Religion, give my Vote for paſſing of this Bill, as they would excuſe themſelves from it. I muſt agree with thoſe Gentlemen, That you are no ways bound, or limited, to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; and therefore what was ſaid upon that, I did not think worth taking notice of: But when we are told, we are bound up by the Laws of Nature and Religion, and the Law of God in this Matter, this touches me ſo nearly, that I muſt deſire thoſe Gentlemen to ſhew me in Scripture the Law that they quote.

If it be the Law of Nature, and the Law of God, that every Man that dies muſt be convicted by two Witneſſes, as an honourable Perſon obſerved, I wonder it is not obſerved by all Chriſtian Nations and Governments, That they are not all governed by this Law; if there be any Direction from the Law of God, that no Man is to die for Treaſon without two Witneſſes, but he may ſuffer for Murther and Felony with one Witneſs. Now, I ſay, I muſt deſire the Gentleman that aſſerts it, That he would be pleaſed to ſhew me it in Scripture, and I will be entirely of his Opinion: But till I hear that very plainly proved, 'tis not within my Reading nor Remembrance; and therefore I deſire it may have no Weight. And now I am up, I ſhall give you my Reaſons why I ſhall give my Vote for this Bill.

The Reaſon that governs me, is the Preſervation of the Government, and the Common-wealth under which I live; and which I think I am in the Station wherein I ſtand bound to preſerve, by all the Rules of Juſtice imaginable. Now if your Law hath bounded inferior Courts, but have not bounded you in this Matter, though you have ſaid inferior Courts ſhall not determine and give Judgment in ſuch a Caſe; yet, I think, you are not bound up ſo here: But if the Matter be proved to my Satisfaction, I may give my Judgment according to the Evidence that comes before me, without that Reſtriction.

But, Sir, this ought not to be done, 'tis ſaid but upon extraordinary Occaſions. You were told, ſome time ſince, of the Caſe of the Duke of Monmouth; but it was ſaid, that he was attainted becauſe he was in Arms, and could not be come at otherwiſe: But I think this is a parallel Caſe to that, if not much ſtronger; for here is a Perſon that hath been accuſed, and fully proved to have been in Rebellion, and in Treaſonable Practices with your Enemies, to bring an Invaſion upon you, and to ſubvert your Government; and though he hath not been proved to have been in that ſingle Act of the Aſſaſſination, yet there is ſuch a Correſpondency between one and the other, that I do look upon him as equally guilty of both. Therefore this having been ſo fully proved, and the Perſon that ſtands accuſed being out of the reach of the common Courſe of the Law; What Remedy have you, but to fly to your Legiſlative Power, to attaint him upon the Grounds and Allegations of your Bill, that one Witneſs is withdrawn? And I am very well ſatisfied, and I think we may preſume 'tis by his own, or his Friends Incouragement and Procurement. And I do take this to be as reaſonable a Ground for your Bill, as any Thing in the other Caſe: And I know not what is an extraordinary Caſe, if this be not one. Is it not an extraordinary Caſe, for a Plot to be laid for the total Subverſion of this Conſtitution, and our Religion for ever, and we can't come at it to puniſh it another Way? But it hath been ſaid, the Safety of the Government does not depend upon him: If we acquit him, we are to acquit every one alike: I hope the Government does not depend upon him alone; but if you clear him, there is the ſame Right to clear any Criminal whatſoever. Sir, ſince I am brought up upon giving my Judgment in this Matter, (though I come as unwillingly as any Body to it) I muſt go according to my Conſcience; and till I can ſee ſomewhat of the Law of God, that has been hinted at, made out, I muſt go according to the Law of my Reaſon; and that is, that I muſt be for the Bill.

Lord Norrys. I will not pretend to tell you what the Authority of this Houſe is, 'tis what they pleaſe to make it: But I am ſure they will ground it upon good Reaſon; but I think the Reaſon chiefly given for the Commitment of this Bill, leaves you a Latitude to do what you pleaſe, and give no Reaſon at all; for it is only to ſay, I am convinced in my Conſcience this Man is guilty; no Matter upon what Proof, no Matter whether any Proof or not, you may believe it from his Life and Converſation, and the Company he keeps, or from his Intereſt; and that may be Argument enough to find a Man guilty. But till I know a Reaſon better grounded than this, I cannot be for the Commitment of this Bill.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave. I am ſure at this Time of Night I am unfit to ſpeak in ſo great a Matter; I muſt confeſs I ſhould not have troubled you, if it had not been in the Caſe of Blood.

You have had a great Debate before you of the Power of Parliaments, and that hath been ſufficiently argued; and I have not Learning enough to give you any Precedents that have not been already quoted: But every Body does agree in this, That what Power you have of this kind, is not to be exerciſed but upon extraordinary Occaſions. Now I would be glad to know, What this extraordinary Occaſion is?

Every Body allows, That Treaſon is the greateſt Crime a Man can be guilty of; and the Charge of this Gentleman is High-Treaſon: But therefore in this Caſe, muſt you exerciſe this Authority? Pray wherein does this Caſe differ from any other Caſe of High-Treaſon, that any other Perſon will be practiſing againſt the Government? All the Difference I can make of it, conſiſts in two Points; the One is, that he hath prevaricated with the Government; and the other, That Gentlemen ſay he hath been a Means of Procraſtinating his Tryal, in which Time an Evidence hath made his Eſcape. I will allow you, that 'tis a very great Crime for any one to aſperſe ſo great Men as he hath done; but I would be glad to know, whether there being ſuch an Ingredient, it be ſufficient to attaint him upon High-Treaſon upon that Account.

Then as to that of a Witneſs being gone, Gentlemen have ſaid, They are apt to believe, and there is great Preſumption that he hath been the Occaſion of this Witneſs being gone. Is that an Ingredient ſufficient, though at preſent it hath not been proved to you? But if it had been proved, I ſhould not however think that is Treaſon; then if this be the only difference between this Gentleman, and any other Perſon that ſhall be practiſing to ſubvert the Government, I would know, if there be but one Witneſs againſt any Man, for Conſpiring againſt the King, if they may not have recourſe to this Precedent, to proceed againſt him by Bill of Attainder? For the Argument is, Whoſoever is endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, provided there be but one Witneſs, you are obliged, by virtue of your Legiſlative Power, to bring a Bill of Attainder againſt him. And what then? Of what Uſe is the great Care and Wiſdom of your Anceſtors, and your ſelves, that where a Crime is ſo great, and the Puniſhment ſo great, there ſhould be two Witneſſes;

I was mightily ſurprized to hear Gentlemen tell you, That two Witneſſes is a Form in your Law, and a Form in inferior Courts: I never could believe that was a Form; for according to your Law, no Man ſhall be declared guilty of Treaſon, unleſs there be two Witneſſes againſt him; ſo that it gives in a manner, a Determination to the Crime; that I take to be the Caſe.

A Gentleman told you, That he was fully ſatisfied by the Proof, that this Gentleman is guilty: But how can a Man ſatisfie his own Conſcience, to condemn any Man by a Law that is ſubſequent to the Fact? For that is the Caſe; and pray ſee the danger of Precedents: It now will appear upon your Journals that you have cauſed to be read, a Depoſition of a Perſon that was abſent, taken before a Juſtice of Peace, when the Perſon accuſed, had no opportunity to interrogate him; and likewiſe that you have heard a Witneſs as to what a Man ſwore in the Tryal of another Man: All this will appear upon your Books.

And truly, I would be glad to know if another Age may not be apt to think that you took theſe to make good the Defect of another Witneſs; and then I muſt appeal to you, if you have not admitted of a Teſtimony, which according to no Law is admitted.

They ſay you are not tied to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, nor their Forms: Is there any Law in Being, that ſays a Judge may hear a Witneſs as to what was ſworn upon the Tryal of another Perſon, to condemn him that was not Party to that Tryal. If there be no ſuch Law, then the Rule is founded upon Juſtice and common Right, that nothing ſhall be brought againſt a Man when a Man was not a Party when the Oath was made, and he had no Opportunity to examine him.

I thought it my Duty to tell you, That when you have made this Precedent, if any Perſon ſhall be accuſed of Treaſon but by one Witneſs, there will be the ſame Reaſon to proceed thus againſt him.

Then (being a little before Eleven a Clock at Night) the Queſtion was put, Whether the Bill ſhould be Committed? And the Houſe divided.

Ayes 182. Noes 128.

So it paſſed in the Affirmative, and the Bill was Committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe.

Veneris 20 die Novembris 1696.

The Houſe reſolved into a Committee of the whole Houſe upon the ſaid Bill, and ſeveral Words being offered as an Amendment to the ſaid Bill, to Import Sir John Fenwick's being Guilty; at laſt the Words that were agreed on, were theſe (Of which Treaſon the ſaid Sir John Fenwick is Guilty:) It was alſo propoſed to the Conſideration of the ſaid Committee, Whether the Lords Spiritual ſhould ſtand in the enacting Part? But upon looking into the ſeveral Acts of Attainder, it appeared they were unconcerned in all thoſe Acts of Attainder, in the Enacting Part, and ſo the Committee was ſatisfied in that Point; and they were left to ſtand in the Bill by general Conſent; and the Bill was ordered to be reported to the Houſe; and afterwards upon the Report, the Houſe agreeed with the Committee in the aforeſaid Amendment of the Words, Importing Sir John Fenwick's being Guilty.

Mercurii 25 die Novembris 1696.

The ſaid Bill againſt Sir John Fenwick was read the third Time.

Mr. Methwin. Mr. Speaker, I have not troubled you in any of this long Debate, and do it unwillingly now; but I do think it every Man's Duty, in a Caſe of this great Importance, freely to own his Opinion, and give his Reaſons for it.

The greateſt part of the Debate hath run upon two Things; the Inconveniency of Bills of Attainder, and the having them too frequent. That it is neceſſary to have them ſometimes, that any Perſon might not think they are not out of reach, if they could evade the Laws that were made to protect the People.

I think, in general, That this Bill, as every other, ought to have its Fate upon the particular Circumſtances before you; and whoever gives his Affirmative to this Bill, ought to be convinced, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High-Treaſon; and alſo, that there are extraordinary Reaſons why the Nation does proſecute him in ſo extraordinary Manner; and I do think one of theſe is not ſufficient alone.

If between the Indictment and Arraignment, or Tryal, Goodman ſhould have died, and there had been no other Reaſon for Attainting Sir John Fenwick, only the defect of his Evidence, I ſhould not have thought it a ſufficient Reaſon, though we ſhould have had an Opportunity of being informed of his particular Evidence, and believed him guilty; and if Sir John Fenwick does not appear guilty, I do not think any Reaſon of State, though he hath prevaricated, and behaved himſelf to the diſatisfaction of every Body; therefore, I think, there muſt be both theſe.

You

You have heard the Evidence, I ſhall not repeat it, but rather come to theſe Things that diſtinguiſh Sir John Fenwick's Caſe; only thus, you have received the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, and given him Liberty to make his Defence, and have fully heard him; which I think hath altered the Reaſon of a great many Precedents cited from my Lord Coke, and other Authors.

That which diſtinguiſhes this Caſe, is the great Danger the Nation was in from this Conſpiracy, and the Senſe the Nation hath had of it; and I find, by the general Opinion of all Perſons, this Danger is not at an end.

There ſeems likewiſe to be an Opinion as general, That Sir John Fenwick could have contributed to your Safety by a Diſcovery.

The next Circumſtance, that Sir John Fenwick knowing of this, and the Expectation the Nation had from him, for that he could have contributed to your Safety, hath made uſe of that to put off his Tryal; and at laſt, has made ſuch a Paper as does ſhew an Inclination to do you all the Prejudice he can, and tended to the creating of New Dangers; and by this means Sir John Fenwick, againſt whom there was two Witneſſes when he was Indicted, hath delayed his Tryal, ſo that now there is but one; and there is a violent Preſumption, That this Perſon is withdrawn by the Practice of Sir John Fenwick's Friends.

There remains yet with me, as great a Conſideration as any of theſe; the Publick Reſentment of the Nation for ſuch his Behaviour, is the only Means his Practice has left you; and it ſeems neceſſary for your Safety, to come the next beſt Way to what he could have done.

Againſt the Evidence that hath been given, there have been great doubts raiſed, not ſo much whether it be ſuch Evidence as may incline us to believe him to be guilty: But whether it be ſuch as you ſhould hear in the Capacity you are in; and whether after it is found ſuch as it is, That is not ſuch as would convict him upon another Tryal. Whether you ought to credit it, and that ſhould influence you to give your Vote for this Bill of Attainder; This is a Doubt that I find weighs generally with them that differ from me in Opinion about this Bill; and therefore I deſire leave to ſpeak to that particular.

'Tis ſaid, That you are trying of Sir John Fenwick; That you are Judges; and that you are both Judges and Jury; and that you are obliged to proceed according to the ſame Rule, though not the Methods of Weſtminſter-Hall; Secundum allegata & probata.

But the State of the Matter, as it appears to me, is, That you are here in your Legiſlative Power, making a new Law for the Attainting of Sir John Fenwick; and for exempting his particular Caſe, and trying of it; (if you will uſe that Word though improperly) in which Caſe the Methods differ from what the Law requires in other Caſes; for this is never to be a Law for any other afterwards.

Methinks this being the State of the Caſe, it quite puts us out of the Method of Tryals; and all the Laws that are for limiting Rules for Evidence at Tryals in Weſtminſter-Hall, and other Judicatures: For it muſt be agreed, the ſame Rule of Evidence muſt be obſerved in other Places, as well as Weſtminſter-Hall; I mean in Impeachments, and it has always been ſo taken.

This Notion of two Witneſſes, has ſo much gained upon ſome Gentlemen, that we have had ſome Gentlemen ſay, That this is required by the Law of Nature; the Univerſal Law of Nature: Nay, by the Law of God. And I think, if it was ſo, there would be no doubt but it will oblige us.

But therefore I go to the bottom of the Matter: That any Man deſerves to be Puniſhed, is becauſe he is Criminal. That this or that Man deſerves it, is becauſe he is guilty of a Crime, let his Crime be made evident any Way whatſoever; for whatſoever makes the Truth Evident is, and is accounted in all Laws to be Evidence.

Now as to the Rules for examining any Perſon, whether he isguilty or not, and the Evidence that is allowed in all Nations, no two Nations agree in the ſame Evidence for the Tryal of Criminals, nor in the Manner of giving the Evidence againſt them.

Your Tryals differ from all other Nations; not only that you are tryed by a Jury, which is particular to you, but that the Witneſſes are to be produced Face to Face before the Offender; and you have made Laws that there ſhall be two Witneſſes in Caſes of High-Treaſon, and herein you are the Envy of all other Nations.

Sir, the Evidence that is to be given againſt Criminals, differs in the ſame Nation where the Offences differ; there is a difference between the Evidence that will Convict a Man of Felony, and the Evidence that is to convict a Man of Treaſon; and the Evidence to convict a Man of the ſame Crime, hath been different in the ſame Nation, according to the Reaſon of the Law No doubt, by the common Law of England, that Evidence was ſufficient, which was ſufficient to incline the Jury to believe the Perſon guilty. This before the Statute of Edward 6. though that was made upon great Reaſon, and appears to be for the Publick Good, by the general Approbation it hath received; but I don't think in your Proceedings here, you are bound by it.

But, Sir, it is ſaid, Shall we that are the Supream Authority (as we are part of it) go upon leſs Evidence to ſatisfie our ſelves of Sir John Fenwick's Guilt, than the other Courts; and ſhall we reſort to this Extraordinary Way in this Caſe?

Truly, if it did ſhake the Manner of Tryals below, I ſhould be very unwilling to do it; but I do take it clearly that it cannot; but on the contrary, I think there is no ſtronger Argument for your reſorting to this extraordinary Way, like to that of the Caution which your Law hath provided for the Innocency of all Perſons. For if we conſider all thoſe Laws that have been made, 'tis plain it muſt be in the view of our Anceſtors, That Criminals might eſcape; and the Laws are made for your ordinary Tryals, and for thoſe Things that happen uſually; and your Government hath this Advantage, That they can keep to that which others cannot: For in a very wiſe Government (as was obſerved by a Perſon that ſat in this Houſe the laſt time this was debated) the Ways of puniſhing Crimes of this Nature, are extraordinary when Perſons are condemned: They are not only unheard, but they are condemned demned before they are accuſed; and that is thought neceſſary there which will not be indured here: And yet that Government hath continued ſo long, and no Endeavours have been to alter it, though ſo many Noble Families have ſuffered by it, becauſe they are convinced as to their Conſtitution 'tis neceſſary.

The next Argument is from the Precedent we are about to make; and whatever the other Precedents have been, what you do now will be a Precedent for you and your Poſterity; and whilſt that is uſed to make you cautious, and tends to make you conſider well; whether it is according to the Duty to your Country to paſs this Vote; (which no doubt is the only Queſtion before you) 'tis a good Argument.

Sir, if this Precedent ſhall appear to Poſterity to be a Precedent, concerning an Innocent Man, or a Perſon whoſe Guilt was doubted of, or one whoſe Guilt did not appear, and this Bill ſhould be carried by a prevailing Party; I do agree it was a very ill Precedent: But if the Caſe be, that this Precedent will appear to Poſterity upon the Truth of the Thing, to be a Precedent made of a Man notoriouſly guilty; of a Man that had deſerved this extraordinary Way of Proceeding, this extraordinary Reſentment of the Nation, and that nothing could have hindered this Man from the common Juſtice of the Nation; but his having endeavoured to elude it in this Matter; and if it appears that you would not be put off ſo, but made an Example of this Man, I ſhall not be ſorry it ſhould appear to Poſterity; but I believe Poſterity will (as I think they ought) thank you for it.

Sir, I do ſay for my own particular, while I am Innocent, I ſhould not think my Life in danger to be judged by 400 Engliſh Gentlemen, and the Peerage of England, with the Royal Aſſent; and when I reflect, I can't be of Opinion, That the Government could have procured a Parliament to have paſſed a Bill of Attainder againſt my Lord Ruſſel, or Mr. Corniſh, or Mr. Colledge: I don't think all the Power of the Government, could have prevailed with the Parliament to have done it; and here I ſee that a great many Gentlemen have oppoſed every Step of this Bill, for fear of making an ill Precedent; yet thoſe Gentlemen do believe in their own private Conſciences, that he is guilty; and I can't think, that any Perſon can be in danger by ſuch a Bill, when Gentlemen oppoſe this Bill only upon the Prudential Part, though they ſtill confeſs him to be guilty.

All the Concluſion I make to my ſelf is, that I do believe, I am convinced in my Conſcience (which I think is ſufficient, when I act in the Capacity I now do) that Sir John Fenwick is guilty: But there are Reaſons ſo extraordinary to ſupport this Bill of Attainder, that I do not ſee how any Perſon that is ſo convinced, can refuſe to give his Affirmative to this Bill.

Sir Godfrey Copley. Sir, I am very ſenſible a great deal hath been ſaid upon this Subject; but I think there is ſomething in Duty incumbent upon every Man, eſpecially upon me, who can't concur with the general Senſe of the Houſe, to give my Reaſons for my diſagreement; and I will make no uſe of Arguments but ſuch as I can't Anſwer my ſelf: A great deal hath been ſaid upon this Debate, by Gentlemen Learned in the Law; and many of theſe, though they have ſaid they would not ſpeak as to the Power of Parliaments, yet the greateſt part of their Arguments have touched upon your Method of Proceedings; and to ſhew you how they interfere with the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, ſo great is the force of Cuſtom and Education; but I acknowledge ſome have brought us Arguments quite of another ſtrain.

This is a Matter of ſo extraordinary Importance, that I think it proper to conſider what Rules we have to go by; but I take the Puniſhment of Offenders and Criminals to be the neceſſary ſupport of all Governments whatſoever, without which no Government can continue; but all Societies of Men have ſuppoſed to themſelves ſome Rules, whereby it may be known, whether Offenders are guilty or no.

It is the Cuſtom of our Nation to have two poſitive Witneſſes to prove Treaſon; now it may be imagined, that I make uſe of this as an Argument, that we are tied up to theſe Rules: No, I am not of that Opinion, that we are bound by the Rules of any Society whatſoever. The Parliament have a Power to abrogate all Laws that they have paſſed, if they think good, and ſo certainly cannot be tyed up by any Rules now in being. But, Sir, there are the eternal Rules of Equity, and Juſtice, and right Reaſon, and Conſcience; and theſe I think are unalterable, and never to be ſwerv'd from; and therefore I ſhall take the Liberty to ſee how far agreeable our Proceedings are to theſe Rules.

Sir, I do look upon it, that 'tis no Rule agreeable to what I ſpeak of; that no Man ſhall be accuſed by he knows not whom; and that no Man ſhall be accuſed, but that the Evidence againſt him, and he ſhould be confronted and brought Face to Face.

I am one of thoſe that believe Sir John Fenwick to be guilty, and there is clear Proof of it by one Witneſs; and you have added to this an Indictment that is found: But I muſt needs own, That I think that to be ſo far from giving any Addition or Strength to the Evidence; that when that is brought in, I look upon the Scales to be lighter than they were before; for if any Record or Writing that is ſworn to behind a Man's Back, ſhall be brought here to ſupply another Part of the Evidence (and if not ſo, why is it brought here?) And if that be to be interpreted to make up a Part of the Evidence, I do, by parallel Reaſon argue, that the like may make up the Whole at one time or another; and may be ſo far made uſe of, That any profligate Knave, that gives Information before a Juſtice of Peace, or a Secretary of State, this may riſe againſt any Man whatſoever, when he is obnoxious to the Government; or a Perſon may be accuſed for his good Service in this Reign, and this may be ſet up againſt him, and he run the hazard of his Life.

Then, Sir, as to the Neceſſity of this Matter; I muſt confeſs, that thoſe that brought this Matter before us, are much wiſer than I, and therefore I will not examine what Reaſon they had to do it: But it is ſo little agreeable to me, I wiſh it had not come here. But is it to be ſuppoſed, That your Government is in hazard of any Man that is faſt in Newgate? Can any Man think, That Sir John Fenwick can do any thing in his Condition to hazard it? Can you expect that a Man that hath been ſix Months in Priſon, and no Body came at him, that he may make ſuch a Diſcovery as may be worth your while? But ſuppoſe you had a Man of Invention and Practice, what a Spur do you put to it? May not a Man of Parts, when he hath no other Way to ſave himſelf; may not he frame ſuch a Plot as may make the beſt Subjects in England tremble? Why

Why then, Sir, I do ſay, by this you are in a very dangerous Way to ſuffer by the Invention of any Man; and ſuppoſe he ſhould be ſo ignorant as to know nothing, or ſo great a Block-head to be able to invent nothing, Would you hang him either for Ignorance or Inſufficiency? I muſt confeſs, I read the Conſequence of this for the Nation in general, and for our Poſterity: 'Tis not Sir John Fenwick's Life I argue for; I do not think it worth a Debate in this Houſe, nor the Conſideration of ſo great an Aſſembly; but I do ſay, if this Method of Proceeding be warranted by an Engliſh Parliament, there is an End to the Defence of any Man living, be he never ſo Innocent.

Sir, I remember I heard it mentioned on the other ſide of the Way, by an honourable Perſon, who never lets any Argument want its Weight; That King James Attainted a great number of Perſons in a Catalogue, in a Lump. Sir, I am not afraid of what Arbitrary Princes do, nor an Iriſh Parliament; but I am afraid of what ſhall be done here; I am concerned for the Honour of your Proceedings, that it may be a Precedent to a future Parliament in an ill Reign, which I am ſatisfied you would not do. I had ſome other Thoughts which I cannot recollect, &c.

Mr. Foley, the Speaker's Son. Sir, the Worthy Gentleman that ſpake firſt upon this Debate, calls me up: He ſaid, That he thought in this Matter, every one ought to give the Reaſons of his Opinion; and in giving the Reaſons of my Opinion, I do ſolemnly proteſt, I do it with the ſame Sincerity as I would do, if I was upon my Oath, and of a Jury.

The worthy Gentleman ſaid, That if there could be any Danger from this Precedent, that an Innocent Man might loſe his Life, he would not be for it; I deſire that he would conſider, whether there be almoſt any Inſtances of any innocent Men that have loſt their Lives, but what has proceeded from Precedents that have begun upon guilty Men. The ſame Gentleman told you, That if we did not believe Sir John Fenwick to be guilty, no other Conſideration ought to move us to be for this Bill. Now the Reaſon I am againſt this Bill, is, becauſe it does not appear to me from the Evidence that hath been given at the Bar, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty. And I do think, that which is not legal Evidence, is no Evidence; and I do think, That all the Lawyers that have ſpoke in this Matter, have allowed it to be no legal Evidence. And I deſire Gentlemen will conſider, if it has not been thought reaſonable that Men ſhould be convicted upon ſuch Evidence, Why now it ſhould be ſaid to be neceſſary? I think the Saying of my Lord Strafford upon his Tryal was this; If the Pilot was to direct a Ship in a dangerous Sea, and there was no Buoy to direct his Courſe, if he there ſplit his Ship it was excuſable; but if there was a Buoy up, then he was accountable for it. Now comparing our Government to the Sea; there have been many Rocks and Sands, and many Men have loſt their Lives by them; but the Treaſon Bill ſeems to be ſet as a Buoy to avoid that Miſchief for the future. Now if we ſplit upon theſe Rocks, I ſhall think we are but ill Pilots.

Upon a former Debate we were told, we are not tied up to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, and it was ſufficient to juſtify a Man in giving his Vote for this Bill, That he was ſatisfied that Sir John Fenwick was guilty: See the Conſequence of that, In Things that I have as much believed as I do this, I have found my ſelf miſtaken.

When a Jury acts according to Legal Evidence, that they have no Reaſon to miſtruſt; when a Jury finds according to Legal Evidence, they are in no manner of Blame: And if this Man be innocent, when you have taken away his Life, and his Eſtate, and ruined his Family, all that you have to ſay for it is, That you have acted according to the beſt of your own Underſtandings, guided by your own private Opinion.

Were this the Caſe of Sir John Fenwick only, and I not to give my Vote; I reckon him ſo deſpicable, and becauſe I believe him to be a Traytor, and I think the worſe of him for the Part he hath acted ſince he was in Cuſtody, I ſhould not concern my ſelf about it. But when I ſpeak againſt this Bill, I ſpeak on the Behalf of all thoſe that may hereafter ſuffer by ſuch a Precedent as this. Thoſe Precedents that have been urged, don't come near this Point. And though the Power of the Parliament is above that of other Courts; yet there hath been no Precedent that comes up to this, That we ſhould paſs a Bill to attaint Sir John Fenwick, becauſe he will not give Evidence, or there is no Evidence againſt him. If Sir John Fenwick be to be hanged, becauſe there is but one Evidence againſt him, any Man in the World may; and then I think every Man's Life depends upon it, Whether this Houſe do like him or not. Conſider what a Reverſe of Opinion this will be, to what former Parliaments have given in Caſes of the like Nature: I think if this Bill does Paſs, every Man's Life will be as precarious as his Election.

We have been told, how much Danger the Government will be in, if this Bill does not Paſs: I have as much Zeal for this Government as any Man; but all the Government is concerned is, That a Man that you think a Traytor, ſhould live. And I do think the Government is no more concerned in this Life, than in the Living of any Jacobite in England. But, on the other Hand, I think the Lives and Liberties of the Subjects of England are concerned; and, by this Bill, you will make all their Lives and Liberties precarious.

I am not for bringing the Blood of Sir John Fenwick upon me, or my Poſterity; nor can I conſent for to make a Precedent that a Man may be hanged without Evidence.

Lord Cutts. The worthy Member that ſpake laſt but one, told you, That he thought the Life of Sir John Fenwick was not worth the Conſideration of this Aſſembly; I do differ from him in That. If the Scripture tells us, That the moſt inſignificant Creature does not fall without God Almighty's Conſideration, I think the Life of a Gentleman may be thought worth ours.

The worthy Gentleman that ſpake laſt, told us, That he did believe in his Conſcience Sir John Fenwick to be guilty: But becauſe he hath found himſelf miſtaken formerly, when he believed Things with the ſame appearing Certainty, therefore he may be miſtaken now. I hope Gentlemen will not preſs an Argument upon our Judgments, from Precedents that are only Miſtakes: I do agree, That any Man may be miſtaken in a Thing which at that Time he thinks himſelf moſt certain of; but till that Miſtake appears, I ſay, it ought not to make him doubt of any Thing that he does clearly and diſtinctly perceive: If otherwiſe, there is an End of all Religion and Law; and it ſhakes the Foundation of the moſt certain Belief a Man can entertain.

As it appears to me, ſome Gentlemen ſeem to lay a greater Streſs on ſome Things than they deſerve, and are not pleaſed to anſwer ſome Arguments; and therefore I deſire leave to ſpeak to two or three Points in ſhort. I ſhall not ſay any Thing of the Authority of Parliaments, it ſpeaks it ſelf; nor of the different Conſideration of our Proceedings, and that of inferior Courts, that ſeems to be agreed: But I ſhall apply my ſelf particularly to mention ſome Things upon Sir John Fenwick's Caſe, and in that take Care, as near as I can, not to trouble you with any Thing I have ſaid upon this Subject.

I can't but obſerve, That every Gentleman that ſpeaks againſt this Bill, begins with an Introduction that he believes him Criminal, which does ſomewhat aſtoniſh me; I hope they will explain themſelves a little. But to the Point, as to Sir John Fenwick's Caſe; I did take the Liberty in a former Debate to obſerve, That it was not only a Conſpiracy againſt the lawful King of England, and had ſuch Parts in it, but alſo in bringing in a Tyrannical and foreign Power upon you. But there is one Conſideration I did not mention then, becauſe I thought what I ſaid carried ſo great Weight it needed it not; I do ſay, not only as a Chriſtian, as an Engliſh-man, and as a Subject of this Government, againſt which he hath committed a Crime of the higheſt Nature: But I will ſay, as a Man of Honour, that he hath acted contrary to the Rules of Honour; I think Sir John Fenwick had made a much better Figure, if he had appeared in Arms in Flanders, where he might have charged this Prince at the Head of his Troops, than baſely have contrived his Death in this Manner.

Sir, I have only one Thing more that I deſire to ſpeak to; for what I ſay, is more for my own Information than to deſire any Man's Opinion further than he agrees with it: I ſay, moſt Gentlemen have likewiſe owned, That if they thought this an extraordinary Caſe, they would be for this Bill. I do ſay, as it appears to me, I do think, if ever there was an extraordinary Caſe, this is one; and if ever any Government was in Danger, this is, or may be, upon your Reſolution to Day. A great deal of Streſs hath been laid upon this Argument, That Sir John Fenwick is in Hold: I take that to be nothing; for they keep a Combination together ſtill: 'Tis by Rewards and Puniſhments that all Governments are ſupported. Robberies, that were ſo common in France, that you could not walk after it was dark, by Puniſhments they have been brought to that, That you may ride from one end of it to another, with a Purſe of Gold in your hand. And if you think it a trifling Matter, That wicked Men that have ſuch Inclinations ſhould eſcape, I don't doubt but you may have Plots every Day.

I don't doubt but this Gentleman knows a great deal that he hath never laid before you; I would not be thought to preſs it as an Argument that he ſhould be condemned, becauſe he won't Confeſs; but I will be bold to ſay, If he does know of a great many Perſons that have been concerned in this Buſineſs; if he knows of a Riſing that was deſigned, when this Conſpiracy was to be Executed; (and it may be Executed ſtill, if Things ſhall be ripe for it) I ſay, though you keep him in hold, it will be an Incouragement to them to go on in their Cabals, in buying of Arms, &c. I think the Matter before you is no leſs than the Fate of England, and the Fate of Europe, and of all your Poſterity; I am ſure it is: And give me leave to ſay to you one Thing that is Matter of Fact, There are thoſe Stories inſinuated abroad, and thoſe Matters of Fact aſſerted, with relation to a Conſpiracy, and reviling this Houſe, that are not fit for me to repeat. But your Enemies laſt Year, before the breaking out of this Conſpiracy, had the ſame ſort of Meetings, and the ſame ſort of Diſcourſe, as they have now. I will end with proteſting to you, That I deal with Sir John Fenwick with the ſame Candour and Honour, as I ſhall always deſire to be dealt with my ſelf.

Sir Godfrey Copley. That Noble Lord miſunderſtood what I ſaid, as to the ſmall Value I put upon Sir John Fenwick: I did ſay, That Sir John Fenwick, conſidered in his ſingle Capacity, I did not think it was worth the while of this Houſe to act in their legiſlative Capacity upon him.

Sir Charles Cartwright. I think this Bill is of very great Moment, and ought well to be conſidered before it paſſes; for when it is paſſed, it will be too late to retrieve the ill Conſequence which may attend it: There is ſo much Roguery in the World, I think it a hard Matter to arrive at the Truth. 'Tis not long ago there was a Plot contrived by one Young, and others, againſt the Biſhop of Rocheſter; and ſo cunningly contrived, That if a Bill of Attainder had been brought in againſt the Biſhop of Rocheſter, before the Truth had been diſcovered, I do not know what might have been the Conſequence of it. I ſuppoſe no Body queſtions the Truth of this Plot; but God forbid that every Body that hath been named for it ſhould be guilty. It may be true, That there was ſuch a Meeting that Sir John Fenwick is Accuſed of being at, and yet Sir John Fenwick might not be there; and I do not think it ſufficiently proved, and therefore I can't give my conſent to this Bill.

Mr. Manley. Sir, I have, as well as I could, attended to this Debate in this Matter; and I did not trouble you in the laſt Debate, becauſe I was willing to take all the Opportunities I could to inform my ſelf.

'Tis to me an extraordinary Thing, not only for the Matter, but Manner of your Proceedings; which, conſidering all Circumſtances, appears to me to be not only not Common but Unprecedented; and as we are all in this Matter Judges, ſo I hope we ſhall apply our ſelves to conſider of it with that Temper, as may lead us to give a right Judgment. And if I had never ſo great Obligations upon me, and Dependencies, though from the Crown, I would lay them by, at leaſt they ſhould not influence my Judgment in this Matter. We are to paſs Judgment in a Matter of Life and Death upon this Perſon, and 'tis urged we ſhould do it, becauſe the common Courſe of Juſtice will not reach him for the Crime objected againſt him, which is high Treaſon; and the Species of that Treaſon as it is laid in the Indictment is, &c.

Sir, the Evidence that hath been given to ſupport it, hath been the Affirmation of a ſingle Witneſs at the Bar: Indeed other Things have been alledged in the Bill: but as hath been ſaid in Weſtminſter-hall upon another Occaſion, They look like Pepper and Salt to me; for in themſelves they are not Crimes (I ſpeak with ſubmiſſion to your Judgments) at leaſt to bear Company with an Accuſation of high Treaſon.

As to the Evidence; firſt Captain Porter tells you, That Sir John Fenwick was at a Meeting at the King's Head, and at Mrs. Mountjoys afterwards, when there were treaſonable Diſcourſes amongſt them them, and Charnock was directed to go into France; but the End of that is not proved; For the Witneſs that told you of thoſe Meetings, did not tell you, as I obſerved, that Charnock did go to France; and what he ſaid upon other Occaſions is no Evidence to me. And though we are not tyed up to the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall, I am ſo Young a Member, I know not what Methods are obſerved in Parliament, that I may in ſome Meaſure make them a Rule to me.

The Law of England requires two Witneſſes upon the greateſt Reaſon; and 'tis not only the Policy of England, but the general Conſent (in this Caſe) of the whole World, and it is grounded upon the Law of God. It was objected by an honourable Gentleman the other Day, to a Gentleman, that he ſaid the Law of God required two Witneſſes. A Gentleman who is very near allied to one, from whom he might have early informed himſelf, made us a Challenge, to ſhew him where it was to be found: If he will look into Numbers and Deuteronomy, there are three particular Texts very plain in it. The Reaſon of this is illuſtrated in the Story of Suſannah, her ſafety depended upon it; and the Jews, when they proſecuted our Saviour, though they wanted no Malice, nor nothing to animate them, to put him to Death; yet, St. Matthew tells us at laſt, there was two Witneſſes found againſt him; and this being the Law of the Land, and the Law of God, muſt be my Rule; I muſt have this Matter proved againſt Sir John Fenwick, as full as the Law of the Land, and the Law of God requires. The other Evidence brought to mantain this Bill, is what is ſworn by Goodman before a Juſtice of Peace, and the Account of the Evidence given by Goodman to the Grand-Jury, which I muſt confeſs I declare I am very far from being convinced ought to have Weight with us: But, I think, they muſt lay a great Weight upon it, who give their Vote for this Bill, or otherwiſe they muſt give their Vote upon the Teſtimony of one Witneſs.

The Reaſon for this extraordinary Proceeding is, 'tis urged, There is a Neceſſity for it; The Plot will be loſt elſe, ſay ſome; Sir John Fenwick, ſays others, will eſcape elſe. As for the Plot, I wiſh to God there was no ſuch Thing; but 'tis probable the beſt Way of ending this Plot would be, if his Majeſty in his Wiſdom thought fit, to interpoſe with his Mercy and Grace at this Time; and better than for the legiſlative Power, in an extraordinary Manner, to take off a Perſon againſt whom there is not a legal Evidence. Gentlemen ſay they are convinced in their Conſciences; but I will appeal to their Conſciences, Whether there be legal Proof againſt him: And ſhall we then interpoſe, in an extraordinary Manner, to take away his Life?

No Man pretends to anſwer, but that this Proceeding may be dangerous to Poſterity? if we had any Security this might be done without that Danger, it might be ſome Incouragement to Gentlemen to come into it; But ſince it may be dangerous, are not we, who are intruſted by the People, to have an equal Care of the Liberty of the People? We are to take Care of his Majeſty's Life and Government; and the Reaſon is, becauſe upon him, and his Government, the Publick Safety does depend. 'Tis Salus Populi, is the great Reaſon that the Law takes ſuch Care of the King; and as we are to do nothing to the Detriment of the King, ſo we are to do nothing for the King that may be of detriment to the People.

An honourable Lord hath been pleaſed to ſay, We are not yet out of Danger; I am ſorry to hear it, and could not think it, when ſo noble a Lord is ſo near the King, and hath ſo great a Share in taking Care of the publick Safety. But ſure nothing can happen from this Perſon; there hath been Care taken he ſhould have no Converſation with any Body: If I thought there was a Hazard to the Government, or to the King, and no Way to ſecure us, but taking away this Gentleman's Life; ſuch a Reaſon as That would make me go Counter to my own Reaſon and Judgment. But I can't be of Opinion, That a Man of Sir John Fenwick's Size, who in his beſt Circumſtances indeed, is a Gentleman by Birth, and hath a Gentleman's Fortune, but is now in a great Meaſure without his Eſtate; ſo his Fortune can't do any hurt, and his Alliance I ſuppoſe is not Conſiderable enough to do any neither.

Then as his Circumſtances do not make him ſo Conſiderable, as to do us any Hurt; let us take Care that we do not in any Caſe, by his Blood, wound our ſelves.

Gentlemen lay but little Streſs upon the Dangerouſneſs of the Precedent; I do lay more; and 'tis chiefly upon that Reaſon I can't come up to be for this Bill. I would not that ſo good a Parliament ſhould lay the Foundation of any, by which, in after Ages, the leaſt Men in England may ſuffer: 'Tis ſaid, an ill Parliament will not want a Precedent, but will make uſe of their Power: But they will fall ſooner into it, if led by a good Parliament.

Sir, This is a Matter I would not have preſumed to have troubled you in; for I can't think any Thing I can ſay, will have any Weight with any one that is not of my Opinion: But as an Engliſhman, and as I have the Honour to be of this Houſe, when a Thing of this Nature comes before us, and I am to give my Opinion as a Judge in it, I was willing to give my Reaſons for my Opinion. I think this Bill is unprecedented; and you will give me leave to ſay, it appears to me to be unreaſonable. I think it contrary to the fundamental Rules of Reaſon and Juſtice; I doubt it may be dangerous to our Conſtitution; and I fear future Ages may have Reaſon to repent what we do. And therefore I am againſt this Bill, and I hope it will not Paſs.

Sir William Strickland. Sir, I do aſſure you I ſhall not in any Thing of this Bill, or any Thing elſe, run counter to my Conſcience or Judgment: But I do think, and I think few deny it, I do think in my Conſcience that Sir John Fenwick is guilty; and thinking him ſo, I ought to condemn him. I do think if we ſhould ſpare this Gentleman for Want of Form, as they call it, now we are in our Legiſlative Capacity, and there ſhould be any ill Effects of it; and other People, by thinking they might avoid Puniſhment by the Forms of Weſtminſter-hall, ſhould have the like Imaginations againſt his Majeſty, and they ſhould take Effect, I ſhould think my ſelf in a great Meaſure guilty of that Misfortune. I think the Kingdom is concerned, and the King's Preſervation, in this Bill; and I hope you will Paſs it.

Mr. Dolben. Mr. Speaker, I am againſt paſſing of this Bill; and I ſhall, with as much brevity as I can, lay before you my Reaſons, why I am againſt it; and probably I ſhould not have troubled the Houſe with them, but that I think it neceſſary to juſtify my Opinion in a Caſe of this Importance.

I do admit that the Fact that is charged upon Sir John Fenwick is an Overt-Act of High Treaſon, within the 25th of Edw. 3. though I muſt take leave to ſay, That a Judgment upon a Caſe, at leaſt as ſtrong as this, has lately been very much arraigned and controverted; but 'tis not my Intent to diſpute the Nature of this Fact; for I am perſuaded, That to conſult how to procure an Invaſion of this Kingdom with foreign Forces, is an Overt-Act of compaſſing the Death of the King; and I do think this Charge does amount to ſuch an Overt-Act. But I beg leave to reflect, How far Overt-Acts of this Nature, which fall directly within any Species of Treaſon mentioned in the 25th of Edw. 3. how far ſuch Treaſons are cognizable in Parliament, and within the Intention of that Statute: Indeed, that they are cognizable by the abſolute Power of Parliament, there is no doubt.

Sir, That Statute doth firſt enumerate ſeveral Species or Branches of Facts, which it ſays ſhall be adjudged Treaſon, that is, in the Courts of Judicature; and then afterwards it goes on, and ſays, If any other Caſe, ſuppoſed Treaſon, not ſpecified in that Act, doth happen before any Juſtices, the Juſtices ſhall tarry without any going to Judgment of the Treaſon till the Cauſe be ſhewed and declared before the King and his Parliament, whether it ought to be judged Treaſon or Felony. Now, Sir, with Submiſſion, this is a great Argument that the Intention of thoſe that made this Law was, That theſe Treaſons, which were directly under any of theſe Particulars enumerated by the Statute, that they ſhould be left and be appropriated to the Deciſion of the inferior Courts: But that Facts of another Nature, which did not come under the Particulars enumerated in the Act, as extraordinary Offences, and misbehaviour of Magiſtrates and great Men, and the like; theſe indeed ſhould be reſerved for the Conſideration and Judgment of the Parliament, who are only a Match for powerful Offenders, whom the common Juſtice of the Kingdom can't grapple with. And as this ſeems to be the Intention of the Makers of the Act, ſo I think the Inſtances generally have been purſuant to that Inſtitution; for I know of but one ſingle Inſtance of any one that ever was attainted by Bill for any Treaſon that is contained under any Species enumerated in the 25th Edw. 3. 'Tis true, where Perſons have been out of the reach of the Law, in open Rebellion, or fled from Juſtice; in theſe Caſes the Parliament have thought fit to Attaint them, as in the Caſe of Sir John Mortimer, and others who made an eſcape out of the Tower: And the Caſe of the Regicides; and likewiſe the Caſe of the Duke of Monmouth, who was in open Rebellion. But I ſay, that I have not found in my Reading, upon the beſt Search I could make, where any that were in Cuſtody were Attainted by Bill for any Treaſon within 25 Edw. 3. and that was the Caſe of Ferham; but I think there is no Precedent of any Man, who is not only in Cuſtody, but hath been indicted, arraigned, and Iſſue joyned; and he hath put himſelf upon his Country for his Tryal; And the Perſon Accuſed was to be convicted, or acquitted, by the Verdict of twelve Men: I never heard of any Inſtance, when after all this Proceeding a Perſon was taken off from this Tryal, and debarr'd the Benefit of the Judgment of his Peers, and the Benefit of his Challenges; and deſtroyed, and cut of extrajudicially, by an Act made on purpoſe, ex poſt facto. I never met with any Inſtance like it, unleſs it be that of my Lord Strafford: And I believe no Body will cite that, if they reflect upon the Preamble of the Act for reverſing his Attainder: For in the Preamble, 'tis ſaid, That the turbulent Party did attempt the procuring of that Act, on purpoſe to Condemn him. This ſhews the Opinion of our Predeceſſors in relation to proceedings of this ſort; they eſteem it contrary to the fundamental Rules of Juſtice and Right, which Parliaments, as well as other Courts muſt be governed by.

Roger Mortimer was attainted, and afterwards his Attainder was reverſed; and the Reaſon declared, becauſe he was attainted againſt the good Laws and Cuſtoms of the Kingdom.

Ferham's, that I mentioned before, and declared for the Future, That it ſhould be, &c.

Another Attainder there was of Sir Thomas Haxey; but that was reverſed, and declared to be againſt all Law. Then there are the Attainders of H. 8's Time, I ſhall not particularize them; but beſides that, all the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and Law-Books condemned them, as Proceedings againſt all Law and Juſtice, There is the Statute of 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. ſeems directly levelled againſt thoſe Attainders in the preceeding Reign; for it ſays, That the Proceedings in King H. 8th's Time, were grounded upon Laws that were extream and terrible; and therefore that there might be no Proceedings of that kind for the future, it reduces all Treaſons to the antient Standard of 25 Edw. 3. and goes on, and enacts, That no Man ſhall be convicted or condemned for Treaſon, but upon the Teſtimony of two lawful Witneſſes.

Now I take that to be a general Law, and to extend to all convictions and condemnations for Treaſon, and can't but declare my Opinion of it, That it muſt extend to Bills of Attainder, ſince theſe are the Principal and moſt powerful Convictions and Condemnations; and if that Statute does extend to Bills of Attainder, then pray conſider, whether this Bill of Attainder now be ſupported by ſuch Evidence as the Statute requires? There was indeed one lawful Witneſs produced; but inſtead of the other, they have only produced a Record between Parties not concerned in this Bill, and the Depoſitions of a Perſon whether living or dead, Non conſtat; and I believe no Body will ſay theſe Depoſitions will be equivalent to a ſecond Witneſs.

I do believe a great many Gentlemen are of Opinion, That thoſe Rules of Evidence are not to guide you here; but I beg Pardon that I can't poſſibly be of that Opinion, I rather incline to my Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan's Notion, That though we are not bonnd by the Forms of Law, yet we are bound by the Rules of Law; every Body allows we are bound as to the Nature of the Fact: every Body will take himſelf bound by the Statute of 25. Edw. 3. to form his Judgment as to the Fact: Why are not we then bound by theſe Acts? Likewiſe as to the Evidence, and the Proof of the Fact. If 25. Edw, 3. be binding to us, ſo as to preſcribe us a Rule to judge the Fact by; Why are not the Statutes of Edw. 6. binding to us as to the Evidence of that Fact?

But ſay ſome Gentlemen, if there be not two Witneſſes that is from Sir John Fenwick or his Agents: Sir, no Gentlemen will ſay that there hath been any Proof of that; the very Bill does not charge him with it, but taking it for granted, what ſhall follow upon that? Shall it therefore follow, that Sir John Fenwick ſhall immediately be put to Death? No, God forbid; I think there is no no Parity between the Crime of ſeducing away a Witneſs, and the Judgment of Death; but I think this a more reaſonable and natural Inference to be made, that becauſe Sir John Fenwick hath ſeduced away a Witneſs, therefore it is juſt to make a Law that the Depoſitions of that Witneſs ſhould be of as good Force and effect, as if Goodman was here, to give it Viva Voce; for then you will not take from him the Benefit of his Tryal, nor the Benefit of his Challenges, which is the Birth-right of every Engliſh Man.

And one Thing I will ſay further, Theſe Bills of Attainder are like Siſyphus's Stone, they have rolled back upon thoſe that have been the Promoters of them. 'Tis known that my Lord Cromwell was the firſt Man that promoted them in H. 8. Time, and the Advice that he gave his Maſter for the Ruine of others, proved fatal to himſelf.

Sir, this is the laſt Time we ſhall have the Opportunity of conſidering this Matter; I muſt take leave to declare, That my Opinion is, that if I conſent to the paſſing of this Bill againſt Sir John Fenwick's Life, upon any other grounds than ſuch as are intirely agreeable and juſtifiable by the Laws of God and Man, I am guilty of the Death of Sir John Fenwick. I am not ſatisfied that I can give my conſent to this Bill upon thoſe grounds, and therefore I beg leave to be againſt it.

Sir Edw. Seymour, Mr. Speaker, you all know I have born my Teſtimony againſt this Bill, being not perſuaded that it is juſt, now we are come to the finiſhing Part of it; And I ſhall lay before you thoſe Reaſons that prevail with me, and ſubmit them to the Judgment of the Houſe; and if I am more tedious than I uſed to be, I hope the Occaſion is ſuch, that you will Pardon me; for I will endeavour to contract my ſelf into as near a Compaſs as I can.

I ſhall not trouble you with any Arguments that have been laid before you already; nor ſhall I enter into the Examination of Precedents; a great many have been laid before you, and a great many of them have been reverſed, moſt of them; and the Reaſons why they have been reverſed, becauſe the Perſons condemned, have not had the due Benefit of the Law: And if that be a good Reaſon for reverſing of ſuch an Attainder, 'tis a good Reaſon why you ſhould not do it.

I can't but take Notice, That the beginning of this Bill in the Houſe of Commons is the firſt ſtep of this kind, that hath been made in Parliament, except that of the Duke of Monmouth; and the Reaſon of it, I take to be this, becauſe you hear not upon Oath; you condemn not upon Oath: You, nor the Party under Accuſation have that advantage againſt a forſworn Evidence, as there is in the other Houſe; the Method has been to paſs ſuch Bills in the Houſe of Lords, and tranſmit them hither, upon which you then Judge.

I think, in this Caſe, you have no Evidence; and inſtead of two Witneſſes, yon have no Witneſs at all; for as to Goodman, De non apparentibus, & non exiſtentibus eadem eſt ratio. As to Porter, he hath been examined; but when you conſider that he was a Perſon engaged in this Conſpiracy, and that he had no repentance of his Crime till he was diſcovered, and then he comes to be an Evidence; how far that ſhall ſway, every Man muſt allow that I muſt ſubmit to you; but thus much I may ſay, every Man muſt allow me, that in far leſs Caſes no Man that does ſwear for himſelf, or upon his own Account, is to admitted as an Evidence. If a Robbery be committed in an Hundred, though a Man be but to pay a Groat towards it, he ſhall not be an Evidence; how much more then in Caſe, when a Man comes to ſwear to take away another Man's Life to ſave his own; for he is not in the Condition of a Freeman, who gives his Evidence without check or controle, but he is drudging on for his Pardon, as the Council told you, which depends according to the Evidence he does give or not give.

For my part, I can't go ſo far as ſome Gentlemen have done, to ſay Sir John Fenwick is guilty; for where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion; a Man that is guilty, muſt be guilty according to the Law: And the Law hath required and ſaid, That there ſhall be no Treaſon but what is proved by two Witneſſes, and here it appears that you have not one. The ſame Law that calls it Treaſon, ſays it ſhall be ſo proved; then if you paſs this Bill, you make that Treaſon which before was not Treaſon.

Sir, the Law does require two Witneſſes, and there is divine Authority for it too: It hath been hinted at, the Place in Numbers, No Man is to die upon ſingle Evidence; and it ſays, Theſe are the Statutes you ſhall obſerve throughout your Generations and Dwellings: But I will go a little further, becauſe a worthy Gentleman declared, there was no ſuch Law of God. He will find in the 19th of Deuteronomy, a Caſe juſt as 'tis here; for the Caſe of high Treaſon was Idolatry at that Time, and the Law ſays, Whoſoever ſhall ſet up Idols ſhall be ſtoned to Death; but it ſays; no Man ſhall be condemned to die by the Mouth of one Witneſs, but by two or three Witneſſes he ſhall ſuffer; I think this is poſitive enough. I ſhall not trouble you with more Inſtances, though I could repeat ſeveral.

Sir, the Law enjoyns Forms ſtrictly, even to the leaſt Circumſtance; if a Man be condemned to die, and after he is condemned to die, another take away the Life of that Man, 'tis Murther. I will go further; If the Officer that is to do Execution, if a Man be condemned to be hanged, drawn and quartered; if the Officer ſhoot him, it is Murther in him; ſo that Men are not left to a diſcretionary Power to act according to their Conſciences.

I take the Reaſon by which this Bill is ſupported, to be deſtructive to all human Society; for if that be admitted, that a Man ſhall act according to his Conſcience, and not according to the Rules that are preſcribed him, I know not who is ſafe; for how can an innocent Man make his defence upon that Principle? It is a ſafe Conſideration for them that take upon them that Way of Judging, becauſe they are bound by no Rules; but what hath not that done almoſt within Memory; Felton that killed the Duke of Buckingham what was his Juſtification, but he was perſuaded in Conſcience he did well in ſo doing. Ravillack that killed H. 4. in France, he juſtified the ſame by his Conſcience, and ſaid he had done a good Thing; and I may ſay this Argument of Conſcience hath acted all the Villany of the laſt Age, and I am afraid hath gone a great Way to diſturb the happineſs of this.

For if this be a Rule to this Houſe, How is the King bound? I thought he had been bound by Law; but if this ſhall be admitted as an Argument, 'tis enough to ſay, if this Houſe be Arbitrary, the King is. I do not reflect upon this Reign; but it will be enough to ſay, tho' he act againſt Law, and turn twenty Colledges out of Doors, his Conſcience perſuades him to it. We ſee how unbounded Liberty the Lords take, is, they are become Maſters of all our Eſtates; and I would be very loth for my Eſtate to depend upon the feeble Tenure of a Lord's Conſcience.

If then this be the Caſe, as it is, according to this Method, I deſire to know into what Condition we ſhall bring our ſelves?

You have been told, it is expected from you by your Country, that you ſhould exert this Authority and Power: Sir, I would have been glad that in Caſes more reaſonable, we had exerted this Authority and Power of Parliament; I wiſh it had gone to the preventing the debaſing and abuſing your Coin; I wiſh it could be exerted, that we might not ſee our ſelves cheated under countenance of an Act of Parliament; but contrary to that, you are fond of being ſprinkled with the Blood of Sir John Fenwick: As long as the Government is not in danger, I believe the Country would be glad that their Blood might run ſecure in their Veins, and not be tapt upon every Occaſion to ſerve a Turn, for if you break the Laws, what Man can promiſe himſelf ſecurity?

We know the Conſequence, if this Bill does not paſs; Sir John Fenwick may live in miſery all his Time.

But what this Precedent may make, no Man can foreſee. This Bill is againſt the Law of God; againſt the Law of the Land; it does contribute to the Subverſion of the Conſtitution, and to the Subverſion of all Government; for if there be Rules to be obſerved in all Governments, and no Government can be without them, if you ſubvert thoſe Rules, you deſtroy the Government; and therefore for theſe Conſiderations no Body will think it ſtrange, if I give my Negative to this Bill.

Mr. Chancel. of the Excheq. Sir, the Gentleman that ſpake laſt, hath carried the Reaſon againſt this Bill a little further than ſome others; for it ſeems now, we are not to reject the Bill for want of one Witneſs that is legal in Weſtminſter-hall, but it ſeems there is no Evidence at all; and by Capt. Porter's not being pardoned, and yet drudging for his Pardon; as to all that have been condemned upon his Teſtimony, he hath arraigned the Evidence as not ſufficient, and hopes that will be the Judgment of the Houſe upon this Bill. I think if the Houſe reject this Bill upon that Argument, it will go further than many mean that oppoſe it.

Another Thing he ſays; he compares the Convictions that I have upon my Judgment, and of every Body elſe that ſpeaks from the Proofs that are made, that he is guilty of the Whymſy of two or three mad Men, whereas we go according to the Evidence brought at the Bar; we don't go upon the Whymſies of Ravillack nor Felton, but upon the Proofs that have been made here; and though there are not two Witneſſes, yet upon what appears in Proof, I am convinced that he is guilty; and upon that Conviction, I think, acccording to the Duty I owe my Country, and the Conſtitution of England, when a Bill does come to puniſh the Man whom I think guilty, I think I ought to be for the Bill. As to what is ſaid out of Deuteronomy, That the Law of God was againſt it, if you will argue à Fortiori, 'tis literally true, in the Caſe of Murther; but whether Murther or Treaſon, there is the Life of a Man concerned, and 'tis not the Puniſhment whether to be hanged, or hanged, drawn, and quartered that makes any great Difference; and give me leave to ſay, if you go to make Precedents from the Jewiſh Law, then I ſay, the Law of England is againſt that Law, in Caſe of Murther; and by the ſame Reaſon you may deſire leave to bring in a Bill to repeal all thoſe Laws.

Sir, if this was the eternal Law of God and Man, where was this eternal Law in England before Edward 6. Time? If it be the eternal Law that there muſt be two Witneſſes, why does it not hold in England even in ſome Caſes of Treaſon to this Day; I mean the Treaſon of Clipping and Coining; ſo that if Gentlemen will argue, the Nature of theſe Faults are what the Law of every Country Ordains, and that is the Law.

And the Way of Evidence and Proof too differs in every Country; and I may affirm, That there never was any Government in which there was not a Power lodged ſomewhere to be exerted upon extraordinary Occaſions, beyond the Legal Way of Proſecution.

I don't care to travel into the ſeveral Countries to ſee how their Conſtitution is, but I believe there is not one Place in Europe in which it is ſtrictly neceſſary there ſhould be two Witneſſes to take away the Life of a Man; but it is generally ſo, as it is here in all ordinary Caſes, but in this very Law; this laſt Law does not go upon two Witneſſes, but you have a Proviſo in it does abſolutely exempt Proceedings in Parliament: I do not infer from thence, that you ſhould not have two Witneſſes, if you proceed by way of Impeachment, I think you ought; and ſo for having Witneſſes upon Oath, &c. When theſe Proceedings are in Parliament, there is a direct Proviſo by which the Parliament is exempted from thoſe Rules: Upon the whole Matter, I think this Man is guilty; I think the Precedent would be more fatal, to ſay, that a Parliament can't proceed in ſuch a Caſe, than that a guilty Man ſhould ſuffer. I think this Bill comes before you with more Circumſtances, and Reaſon to juſtifie it, than any that hath been brought here before; here is a Bill found againſt him by his Country, the Evidence of his Friends having tampered with one of the Witneſſes, confirmed by a Jury, &c.

A Learned Gentleman ſays, he would come up to make this Paper Evidence; but can't come up to make ſuch a Law by which every Man that is concerned in that Depoſition would be affected; but here is ſomething particular in this Caſe, a Man that hath been abroad, and hath not uſed the like Artifice, I think you ought not to uſe the like Power to puniſh him that is not Guilty of the like Crime. And therefore I ſhall conclude, but I muſt take notice of one Thing; it was ſaid, That this was the firſt Precedent of this kind begun in this Houſe, but that of the Duke of Monmouth; but I believe, if this Bill of Attainder is not to be begun in this Houſe, 'tis not to be brought in at all; for I believe there is a Statute, That the Life of a Commoner is never to be meddled with by the Lords originally. I will not trouble you any further, I do in my Conſcience think that Sir John Fenwick is guilty, and therefore I am for this Bill.

Mr. Pelham. I did not think to have troubled you this Day; I did rather intend to have left it to others that can ſpeak better, or have not ſpoken upon this Subject; but that which hath been mentioned by ſeveral, as if they did think that we who mentioned the Law of God upon this Occaſion, did it as if we did think the Law of God was binding to you at this Day; I never thought any ſuch Thing otherwiſe than as to the Morality of it, ſo far forth as it is grounded upon Reaſon and Juſtice, and tends to the clearing of an Innocent Man; and ſo far far we and all Mankind are bound by it; and that Law having been afterwards Confirmed in the New-Teſtament by our Saviour and Apoſtles, at leaſt approved of by them; and this having been confirmed by the Law of England; likewiſe I do not think this a fit Occaſion for you to paſs by ſo fundamental a Law as that is: And I conclude with this, That I can't ſatisfie my ſelf in my Conſcience, and ſhould think ſome misfortune might follow me and my Poſterity, if I paſſed Sentence upon Sir John Fenwick's Life, upon leſs Evidence than the Law of England requires.

Sir H. Croſts. I ſhall endeavour as much as I can, to give you little trouble in this Matter; but becauſe it hath been hinted and remarked ſo particularly upon me, I muſt beg leave to diſcharge my Duty as well as my Conſcience, as to what I ſaid here the other Day.
